Though still inadequate, relief programs direct most attention in times of armed conflict to the education of refugee children. This is party because, when children are massed together in camps, it is easier to approximate a classroom situation. In some countries, this reality simply reflects the dominance of inflexible formal education systems that persist despite growing doubts about this quality, relevance and content. Insufficient attention to the education needs of non-refugees during armed conflict is also attributable to the fact that some of the donors most active during conflicts are constrainted by their mandates to work exclusively with refugees. Other donors have been reluctant to use emergency funds for what they interpret as long-term development activities.

When children have been forced to leave their homes and are crowed into displaced camps, re-establishing schooling systems as soon as possible reassures everyone by signaling a degree of stability and a return to normal roles and relationships within the family and the community.

As Chair of the Congressional Children's Caucus, I am always concerned about the welfare of children here and abroad, because children are our future.

World leaders have made a joint commitment and issue an universal appeal to give children a better future. Children's rights are an effective rallying point.

A world fit for children is one in which all children get the best possible start in life and have access to a quality basic education. All children must have an ample opportunity to develop their individual capacities in a safe and supportive environment.

I was always taught that the family is the basic unit of society and as such should be strengthened. The primary responsibility for the protection, upbringing and development of children rests with the family.

War violates every right of a child—the right to life, the right to be with family and community, the right to health, the right to development of personality and the right to be nurtured and protected.

This bill does not specifically address the crisis of children soldiers or the need for basic education for children or their health in Afghanistan.

I have, therefore, proposed four amendments to be added to the bill for the protection and education for children:

(1) prohibit the use of children as soldiers or combatants;

(2) require the President to determine and certify that the Government of Afghanistan is not using children as soldiers or combatants.

(3) would put emphasis on basic education and health care for children who are orphans.

(4) would emphasize basic education for children.

I therefore urge my fellow members to vote for these amendments.

MODIFICATION TO AMENDMENT NOS. 5 AND 6 OFFERED BY MS. JACKSON-LEE OF TEXAS

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Madam Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment, which would mean withdrawing amendment number 6, and that is the amendment that deals with the certification by the President and the limitation of funds.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modification to amendment Nos. 5 and 6 offered by Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas:

Strike the portion of the amendment that was originally printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as amendment No. 6

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the modification offered by the gentlewoman from Texas is accepted.

There was no objection.

Mr. HYDE. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the last word, and I am pleased, on behalf of the majority, to accept the gentlewoman's amendment number 5. It makes a worthy addition to the bill, and I appreciate her withdrawing amendment number 6.

Mr. LANTOS. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and on behalf of the Democratic side I want to accept the gentlewoman's amendment, and I want to commend her for her indefatigable support for children everywhere.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANTOS. I yield to the gentlewoman from Texas.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Madam Chairman, before taking this vote, I just wish to thank both gentlemen very much.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments, as modified, offered by the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Madam Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE) will be postponed.

The point of no quorum is considered withdrawn.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MS. WATERS

Ms. WATERS. Madam Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Ms. WATERS:

Page 30, after line 8, add the following (and conform the table of contents accordingly):

TITLE III—ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENTS WITH RESPECT TO ASSISTANCE FOR AFGHANISTAN

SEC. 301. GENERAL PROHIBITION ON ASSISTANCE.

Notwithstanding any provision contained in title I or II of this Act, assistance authorized by this Act may not be provided to any agency or instrumentality of the Government of Afghanistan, or any other individual (including an individual who exercises civil power by force over a limited region) or organization in Afghanistan, that is engaged in poppy cultivation or illicit narcotics growth, production, or trafficking, unless the agency, instrumentality, individual, or organization (as the case may be) agrees to cease the poppy cultivation or illicit narcotics growth, production, or trafficking (as the case may be).

SEC. 302. PROHIBITION ON UNITED STATES INVOLVEMENT IN POPPY CULTIVATION OR ILLICIT NARCOTICS GROWTH, PRODUCTION, OR TRAFFICKING.

No officer or employee of any Federal department or agency who is involved in the provision of assistance under this Act may knowingly encourage or participate in poppy cultivation or illicit narcotics growth, production, or trafficking in Afghanistan. No United States military or civilian aircraft or other United States vehicle that is used with respect to the provision of assistance under this Act may be used to facilitate the distribution of poppies or illicit narcotics in Afghanistan.

SEC. 303. REQUIREMENT TO REPORT BY CERTAIN UNITED STATES OFFICIALS.

(a) REQUIREMENT.—An officer or employee of any Federal department or agency involved in the provision of assistance under this Act and having knowledge of facts or circumstances that reasonably indicate that any agency or instrumentality of the Government of Afghanistan, or any other individual (including an individual who exercises civil power by force over a limited region) or organization in Afghanistan, that receives assistance under this Act is involved in poppy cultivation or illicit narcotics growth, production, or trafficking shall, notwithstanding any memorandum of understanding or other agreement to the contrary, report such knowledge or facts to the appropriate official.

(b) DEFINITION.—In this section, the term "appropriate official" means the Attorney General, the Inspector General of the Federal department or agency involved, or the head of such department or agency.

SEC. 304. REPORT BY THE PRESIDENT.

Not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, and annually thereafter, the President shall transmit to Congress a written report on the progress of the Government of Afghanistan toward the eradication of poppy cultivation, the disruption of heroin production, and the reduction of the overall supply and demand for illicit narcotics in Afghanistan in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

Ms. WATERS (during the reading). Madam Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

There was no objection.

Ms. WATERS. Madam Chairman, I rise to speak in favor of my amendment to H.R. 3994, the Afghanistan Freedom Support Act of 2002, but first I would like to thank the chairman, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), and the ranking member, the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), for the work that they have done to bring this comprehensive piece of legislation to the floor. I think it has been well structured and that it speaks well to our intentions. And I think that the people of Afghanistan, for the most part, are going to be very, very pleased to receive the assistance that is so indicated in this bill.

Madam Chairman, my amendment would ensure that the United States government policies in Afghanistan work to eliminate the harmful trafficking and illegal drugs that destroy communities throughout the world. My amendment has been structured so that it is in 4 sections. The amendment would prohibit foreign assistance to any Afghan agency, organization, warlord, or other individual who is engaged in poppy cultivation or the growth, production, or trafficking of illegal drugs unless there is an agreement to cease all poppy cultivation or drug trafficking activities.

I know this portion of my amendment is going to present some concerns, because, on the one hand, how do you uplift this devastated nation and begin to get them out of poppy cultivation; how do you deal with the many factions who have been involved in the cultivation as the only way that they know to earn a living and, at the same time, say to them that we will not help them if they are involved? This portion of the amendment would simply say that we raise it as a concern and have people respond to say, okay, I will not do it any more. And that allows them to get the assistance that we would like to give them.

This does not prohibit this country from exercising its assistance, but it simply gets all of those agencies and individuals understanding that this is a top priority of this government; that we would like to stop the cultivation and trafficking of illegal drugs. That is section 301.

Section 302 would prohibit Federal officers and employees who are involved in the provision of assistance under this bill from encouraging or participating in drug trafficking activities in Afghanistan. It would also prohibit the use of American aircraft and any other vehicles to facilitate the distribution of poppies and illegal drugs.

There are some people who would look at this portion of my amendment and say, well, no one representing our country would be involved in assisting with drug trafficking, no one would use our aircraft, no one would be involved in distribution. Let me just say to my colleagues, we all know enough now about trafficking and illegal drugs to know that many innocent people get caught up in drug trafficking because it is so lucrative. Many folks just lose their sense of what they are all about when they get thrown into situations where there is drug trafficking all around them, and some are tempted to take a chance, to try something. We want to send the message that we do not want anybody that we are putting on the ground in Afghanistan to take a chance, to be tempted to get involved.

The other portion of the amendment would require all Federal officers and employees who are involved in the provision of assistance under this bill to report known or suspected drug trafficking activities by recipients of foreign assistance in Afghanistan to the appropriate authorities.

Why am I doing this? Because I try and learn from our experiences. I spent almost 3 years dealing with the drug trafficking aspect of the war that we were engaged in when the Contras were fighting the Sandinistas down in Nicaragua. We discovered several things: We discovered that the warring factions on both sides, the Contras and the Sandinistas, were involved in drug trafficking, and we kind of turned a blind eye. It was just a way of doing things.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATERS) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Ms. WATERS was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Ms. WATERS. So, Madam Chairman, we want to discourage that.

And, finally, the amendment would require the President to submit an annual report toward the eradication of poppy cultivation and the elimination of drug trafficking activities in Afghanistan.

Let me just say that with all of the information that we have about what went on down in Nicaragua, too many people were involved. There was a Memorandum of Understanding between the CIA and the Justice Department that they did not have to support drug trafficking. We think we have done away with that, but we want to assure that we do not make the same kinds of mistakes as we move in to help this devastated country.

They need us and we need to do the right thing.

I think that we can change this country. We can change the direction. We can help very, very poor people in a devastated country. We can improve education. We can improve the infrastructure. But let us do it without drugs and drug trafficking being a part of it. We do not need the assistance of drugs in doing all of this.

I would ask for an "aye" vote on my amendment.

Mr. HYDE. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

If I might address the gentlewoman from California, I believe she understands that we support the gentlewoman's amendment, except section 301 as originally offered because of difficulties in interpretation and implementation. We are prepared to accept the remainder of the gentlewoman's amendment and praise it as a worthy addition to the bill. But I cannot accept 301 as originally offered. If the gentlewoman has a modification of that, we would be pleased to accept that.

Ms. WATERS. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HYDE. I yield to the gentlewoman from California.

Ms. WATERS. Yes. Let me just say that 301 as originally authored did not have the proviso in it that said unless there is an agreement to seize all poppy cultivation or drug trafficking activities, which modifies the original 301 which did not have that in there. This would simply say that they could get assistance if they simply agree that they will not continue the activities as we know it. Is that what the gentleman is referring to?

Mr. HYDE. Does the gentlewoman have a modification she wishes to offer in lieu of section 301 as originally filed? A modified amendment?

Ms. WATERS. Yes, I do.

Mr. HYDE. Very well. If the gentlewoman will offer it.

I thank the Gentlewoman from California for her remarks. As you know, the underlying bill recognizes that local authorities in various regions of Afghanistan need incentives to cooperate in illicit narcotics eradication and provides assistance to opium growing regions. Such assistance, other than for humanitarian purposes, is to be transferred away from these opium-growing regions where the authorities don't cooperate in narcotics suppression activities.

I agree with the provisions in the Gentlewoman's amendment that require United States officials to report knowledge of any involvement in illicit narcotics growth, production or trafficking by beneficiaries of this Act. Similarly, I support the report requirement on the Afghanistan government's progress in the eradication and reduction of supply of illicit narcotics. It also goes without saying that the prohibition of United States' involvement in the illicit narcotics trade is a measure that we all support vigorously.

I do not support Section 301 of the amendment, however. This section provides, without qualification, that all assistance would be cut off to any official entity in Afghanistan that is involved in the illicit drug trade. Arguably, aid would be ceased to any entity if one person within that organization is determined to be involved in the drug trade. All innocent beneficiaries of the aid would then be prohibited from receiving assistance.

Additionally, while this section raises a valid concern on its face, it is impossible to monitor. It virtually would require that each individual involved in the aid process would have to be certified as to not being involved in the drug trade. There is no standard or process outlined for determining who is involved in illicit narcotics and to what extent. As written, it could also cut off humanitarian and counternarcotics aid—which is contrary to the intent of the bill. I also believe that the amendment does not provide for the flexibility that the President needs in this effort.

The people of Afghanistan need to be rewarded for the progress that has been made in this effort—not punished. Certainly, we don't want to give aid to anyone involved in the drug trade, and this legislation has already been crafted with several mechanisms that would divert the aid in the event that it is determined to be going to an area which is not cooperating with these eradication efforts.

I am happy to support the Gentlewoman on the remaining portion of her amendment.

In no way in accepting this modified amendment do we concede there has been any evidence that the federal government here or anywhere else around the globe has ever been engaged in drug trafficking.

MODIFICATION TO AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MS. WATERS

Ms. WATERS. Madam Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be modified in the form at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the modification.

The Clerk read as follows:

Modification to amendment offered by Ms. WATERS:

Page 30, after line 8, add the following (and conform the table of contents accordingly):

TITLE III—ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENTS WITH RESPECT TO ASSISTANCE FOR AFGHANISTAN

SEC. 301. PROHIBITION ON UNITED STATES INVOLVEMENT IN POPPY CULTIVATION OR ILLICIT NARCOTICS GROWTH, PRODUCTION, OR TRAFFICKING.

No officer or employee of any Federal department or agency who is involved in the provision of assistance under this Act may knowingly encourage or participate in poppy cultivation or illicit narcotics growth, production, or trafficking in Afghanistan. No United States military or civilian aircraft or other United States vehicle that is used with respect to the provision of assistance under this Act may be used to facilitate the distribution of poppies or illicit narcotics in Afghanistan.

SEC. 302. REQUIREMENT TO REPORT BY CERTAIN UNITED STATES OFFICIALS.

(a) REQUIREMENT.—An officer or employee of any Federal department or agency involved in the provision of assistance under this Act and having knowledge of facts or circumstances that reasonably indicate that any agency or instrumentality of the Government of Afghanistan, or any other individual (including an individual who exercises civil power by force over a limited region) or organization in Afghanistan, that receives assistance under this Act is involved in poppy cultivation or illicit narcotics growth, production, or trafficking shall, notwithstanding any memorandum of understanding or other agreement to the contrary, report such knowledge or facts to the appropriate official.

(b) DEFINITION.—In this section, the term "appropriate official" means the Attorney General, the Inspector General of the Federal department or agency involved, or the head of such department or agency.

SEC. 303. REPORT BY THE PRESIDENT.

Not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, and annually thereafter, the President shall transmit to Congress a written report on the progress of the Government of Afghanistan toward the eradication of poppy cultivation, the disruption of heroin production, and the reduction of the overall supply and demand for illicit narcotics in Afghanistan in accordance with the provisions of this Act.

Ms. WATERS (during the reading). Madam Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment, as modified, be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from California?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment is modified.

There was no objection.

Mr. LANTOS. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I want to thank the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATERS) for her interest and concern on this issue and for her tireless efforts on behalf of the poor and disenfranchised not only in Afghanistan but around the world, and on our side we strongly support her modified amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment, as modified, offered by the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATERS).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Ms. WATERS. Madam Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, further proceedings on the amendment, as modified, offered by the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATERS) will be postponed.

Mr. LANTOS. Madam Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

I want to take this opportunity to highlight one of the most important aspects of this legislation, which is that it creates a separate account and authorizes additional funds for Afghanistan. Until now, Madam Chairman, funding for Afghanistan has been carved out of existing programs with cuts in important programs in other parts of the world.

What this legislation has done, and I want to commend our distinguished chairman for his idea, is to establish a new account with new money to fund the relief, rehabilitation, and reconstruction of Afghanistan. So we do not have to dip into child survival funds or other accounts to fund health or education or reconstruction programs in Afghanistan.

With Chairman HYDE's bill, we no longer have to rob Peter to pay Paul; or more appropriately, we do not have to take funds from health programs in India or elsewhere in the world to provide health services for women in Afghanistan. We do not have to choose between HIV/AIDS in Honduras or education in Afghanistan.

I want to commend my friend, Chairman HYDE, for his foresight and his leadership in bringing new ideas and new resources to this important undertaking. I will work closely with him and with the other body to ensure that this additional provision is included in their version of the legislation.

Mr. HYDE. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANTOS. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. Madam Chairman, I just want to say two things: number one, I want to thank the gentleman for his superb cooperation and concede that so much would not be done in our committee without the gentleman's cooperation and enlightened farsightedness.

Let me say, number two, your staff and my staff are superbly qualified people who make this place work, and I salute all of them.

Mr. LANTOS. I thank my good friend for his very generous statement.

Madam Chairman, I would be remiss if I did not take this opportunity to thank all of the staff who have worked on the Afghanistan Freedom Support Act. Their efforts have been truly bipartisan in the best tradition of this body.

I want to acknowledge the work of Peter Smith, Hillel Weinberg, Steve Rademaker, and Walker Roberts on the staff of Chairman HYDE. On the Democratic staff of the Subcommittee on the Middle East and South Asia, David Adams has made many contributions to this legislation. In particular, I want to thank the members of my own staff who have worked so tirelessly on this important bill. Nisha Desai has been creatively and actively engaged on this legislation from the very beginning. I want to pay special tribute to her efforts. Our Democratic chief counsel, David Abramowitz, has shown his usual careful attention to detail and made important contributions to the quality of our legislation. I also want to acknowledge the efforts of Peter Yeo, David Fite, Carol Doherty, Keith O'Neil, and Matt Gobush of the Democratic staff. I want to express my personal appreciation to our extraordinary chief of staff, Dr. Bob King.

It is not often that a piece of legislation involves so many staff on both sides, but I think in this instance it is an indication of the importance of this issue and it is reflected in the quality of the legislation we have produced which would not have been possible without Chairman HYDE's leadership.

SEQUENTIAL VOTES POSTPONED IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to clause 6 of rule XVIII, proceedings will now resume on those amendments on which proceedings were postponed in the following order: the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS); amendment Nos. 5 and 6 offered en bloc, as modified to consist of amendment No. 5 offered by the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE); and the amendment, as modified, offered by the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATERS).

The Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the time for any electronic vote after the first vote in this series.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. LANTOS

The CHAIRMAN. The pending business is the demand for a recorded vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS) on which further proceedings were postponed and on which the ayes prevailed by voice vote.

The Clerk will designate the amendment.

The Clerk designated the amendment.

RECORDED VOTE

The CHAIRMAN. A recorded vote has been demanded.

A recorded vote was ordered.

☐ 1805

So the amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to the bill? If not, the question is on the Committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON) having assumed the chair, Mrs. BIGGERT, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3994) to authorize economic and democratic development assistance for Afghanistan and to authorize military assistance for Afghanistan and certain other foreign countries, pursuant to House Resolution 419, she reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole? If not, the question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, this vote will be followed by three 5-minute votes on motions to suspend the rules on which further proceedings were postponed yesterday.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 390, noes 22, not voting 22, as follows:

□ 1850

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof), the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read:

"A bill to amend title 38, United States Code, to provide a cost-of-living increase in the rates of compensation for veterans with service-connected disability and dependency and indemnity compensation for surviving spouses of such veterans, to expand certain benefits for veterans and their survivors, and for other purposes.".

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. WATTS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably called back to my district and missed Recorded Votes on Tuesday, May 21, 2002. I would like the RECORD to reflect that, had I been present, I would have cast the following votes:

On the Lantos Amendment to H.R. 3994, Roll Call Vote #179, I would have voted YEA;

On the Jackson-Lee Amendment to H.R. 3994, Roll Call Vote #180, I would have voted YEA;

On the Waters Amendment to H.R. 3994, Roll Call Vote #181, I would have voted YEA;

On Passage of H.R. 3994, Roll Call #182, I would have voted YEA;

On Passage of H.R. 4514, Roll Call #183, I would have voted YEA;

On Passage of H.R. 4015, Roll Call #184, I would have voted YEA;

On Passage of H.R. 4085, Roll Call #185, I would have voted YEA;

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair will postpone further proceedings today on the remaining motions to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the ayes and nays are ordered, or on which a vote is objected to under clause 6 of rule XX.

Any record votes on postponed questions will be taken tomorrow.

BOB HOPE VETERANS CHAPEL

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4592) to name the chapel located in the national cemetery in Los Angeles, California, as the "Bob Hope Veterans Chapel."

H.R. 4592

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. NAME OF CHAPEL LOCATED IN THE NATIONAL CEMETERY IN LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA.

Notwithstanding section 531 of title 38, United States Code, the chapel located in the national cemetery located in Los Angeles, California, shall after the date of the enactment of this Act be known and designated as the "Bob Hope Veterans Chapel". Any reference to such chapel in any law, regulation, map, document, record, or other paper of the United States shall be considered to be a reference to the Bob Hope Veterans Chapel.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. EVANS) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. COX), the prime sponsor of this bill.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I rise today to thank my colleagues for bringing this legislation immediately to the floor to name the chapel at the national cemetery in Los Angeles as the Bob Hope Veterans Chapel.

This national cemetery, for those who have so faithfully served their country, is sometimes called the Arlington Cemetery of the West. It is fitting to name the chapel there in honor of the Armed Services' best friend, a man who has served America's veterans proudly for over 60 years.

Before I extol the virtues of the man we intend to honor with this legislation, I would like first to thank my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN), with whom I have jointly authored this bill. It has been a pleasure working with the gentleman from California. He has worked actively to gather support for this important legislation as well.

I would like also to thank the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. BONO) for her active support of Bob Hope and his family, who have long been her constituents in Palm Springs, California. And again I thank the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) as well as the members of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs for their strong support and for allowing this bill to come straight to the floor today.

I would be remiss, Mr. Speaker, if I did not also thank the Secretary of Veterans Affairs, the Honorable Anthony Principi, as well as the many veterans' service organizations who have worked across the country in support of this legislation.

I am also extremely grateful to my good friend from Southern California, Tom Saltarelli, the former mayor of Tustin, California, who now serves as chairman of the Veterans Park Conservancy, the group that first proposed to name the chapel after Mr. Hope.

Last, but certainly not least, I want to thank Bob and his loving family, especially his wife Dolores, and their children, Linda, Tony, Nora, and Kelly, and his granddaughter Miranda, who is with us here in the Chamber today.

Mr. Speaker, we are here to honor Leslie Townes Hope or, as he is better known to people around the world, Bob Hope. He was born on May 29, 1903 in Eltham, England. He moved with his family to Cleveland, Ohio, in 1907 and shortly thereafter became a naturalized U.S. citizen in 1920.

It was while he was making his start in entertainment on vaudeville that he first met the woman he would soon marry, his wife of 68 years, Dolores. They now have 4 children, as well as 4 grandchildren. Throughout his illustrious and prolific career, Mr. Hope made over 700 television programs, he wrote 7 best-selling books, starred in 60 motion pictures, and he is cited in the Guinness Book of World Records as the most honored entertainer. And with good reason.

His talent has always appealed to Americans of all ages, across many generations. Without a doubt, Bob Hope is best known as GI Bob, a man whose life was dedicated to honoring and raising the spirits of our men and women in uniform. Through an act of Congress in 1997, Bob Hope became the Nation's first and still only honorary veteran for his lifetime of service to America's soldiers. Whether the United States was at war or at peace, Bob Hope was always there.

After nearly 60 years boosting the morale of U.S. armed forces through goodwill tours, USO shows, and his world-famous Christmas specials, Mr. Hope's status among American servicemen and women is now legendary. His globe-trotting spirit and his zeal for entertainment earned him worldwide status as the Ambassador of Goodwill. From his very first performance, for U.S. soldiers during World War II in May 1941, to his Christmas show in Saudi Arabia during the Persian Gulf War in 1990, Mr. Hope has performed before an estimated 10 million American GIs.

Mr. Speaker, Memorial Day is this weekend. Two days later, Bob Hope will celebrate his 99th birthday, on Wednesday of next week. I do not think there could be a better time to bring forward this act of Congress honoring a man whom our veterans and our Nation owe so much. H.R. 4592 permits us to honor Bob Hope in a way that will endure, even when he is no longer with us.

The Los Angeles National Cemetery is dedicated solely to veterans and their families. Through this act of Congress we will officially name the chapel at the national cemetery where over 85,000 veterans are buried. I will submit for the Record, Mr. Speaker, letters of endorsement from many veterans' service organizations across the country. These endorsements include the California chapters of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Vietnam Veterans of America, the Military Order of the Purple Heart, the American GI Forum, the American Legion, Paralyzed Veterans, Jewish War Veterans, Disabled American Veterans, AMVETS, and the California Association of County Veteran Service Officers.

Bob Hope has become such an institution that across the street from this Capitol, in the original Jefferson Building of the Library of Congress, he is the subject of an exhibit, the "Bob Hope Gallery of American Entertainment." This gallery, described in this brochure which I brought with me to the floor, shows visitors to Washington, D.C. Bob Hope's early life, his career on vaudeville, in motion pictures, television, and radio, his USO shows, and his public service.

In so many ways Bob Hope is an American institution, and with this act of Congress we will memorialize it in such a fitting way for those men and women of our armed services who have already passed. I know all my colleagues will join with me in bestowing on our country's most beloved supporter of America's armed forces this valuable and important honor.

Mr. Speaker, the letters of support I referred to earlier are as follows:

The Secretary of Veterans Affairs,
Washington, March 29, 2002.
Hon. Christopher H. Smith,
Chairman, Committee on Veterans' Affairs,
House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

Dear Mr. Chairman: In a February 22, 2002, letter, Congressman Christopher Cox requested the views of the Department of Veterans Affairs (VA) on legislation to be introduced that would name the chapel at the national cemetery in Los Angeles, California, as the Bob Hope Veterans Chapel. VA supports this bill.

The bill would name the chapel at the national cemetery in Los Angeles, California, as the Bob Hope Veterans Chapel. Leslie Townes (Bob) Hope tirelessly served America's servicemembers for 50 years. Beginning in May 1941, when he performed his radio show for airmen at March Field, California, and continuing through his Christmas show in Saudi Arabia in 1990 during Operation Desert Storm, Mr. Hope has taken to the road to entertain U.S. troops, no matter where they were located, and through laughter helped them to forget for a brief period their distance from home. This legislation would honor Mr. Hope's selfless devotion to America's protectors.

There would be no significant costs associated with enactment of this legislation.

The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection to the submission of this report from the standpoint of the Administration's program.

Sincerely yours,
Anthony J. Principi.

The Bob and Dolores Hope
Charitable Foundations,
North Hollywood, CA, October 23, 2001.
Ms. Mary Jane Wick,
Veterans Park Conservancy,
Los Angeles, CA.

Dear Mary Jane, Though I know that you have spoken with my mother and you and I have talked, I wanted to let you know "officially" on behalf of The Bob and Dolores Hope Charitable Foundation and the entire Hope family how very proud and honored we are that you want to name the chapel at the West Los Angeles Veterans Cemetery for Bob Hope. What a wonderful and meaningful tribute to a man who has found strength and inspiration in the courage and selflessness of the American GI. To be there with those he admires most is a special accolade indeed. We all want to thank you for making this possible.

We will try to set a time for my mother to visit the cemetery just as soon as she is feeling better. Thanks again for everything.

Sincerely,
Linda Hope.

Bob Hope,
November 16, 2001.
Ms. Susan C. Young,
Executive Director, Veterans Park Conservancy,
Los Angeles, CA.

Dear Ms. Young. This letter will serve as confirmation that Mr. Bob Hope agrees to the use of his name for the Veterans Chapel (the "Chapel") located on the premises of the National Cemetery in Westwood, with the understanding that the Chapel will be renamed as "The Bob Hope Veterans Chapel."

The permission granted herein is conditioned on the following:

1. Mr. Hope's name will be used only as the name of the Chapel and in publicity regarding the Chapel and the renaming thereof.
2. Your organization agrees that there shall be no use of his name, logo or likeness or material concerning him for any other purposes whatsoever, except with the prior written consent of Mr. Hope or his authorized attorney-in-fact or successors in interest. Any authorization received by your organization from the federal government, or any agency thereof, to rename the Chapel shall be conditioned on this limitation.

Your proceeding with the securing of Federal authorization for the renaming of the Chapel as permitted hereunder will constitute your agreement with the foregoing.

Sincerely,
Bob Hope
(by Dolores Hope, attorney in fact).

Disabled American Veterans,
Santa Fe Springs, CA, May 14, 2002.
Hon. Christopher Cox,
Congressman,
California 47th District.

Dear Congressman Cox, The Disabled American Veterans—Department of California proudly supports the naming of the Chapel in the National Cemetery in Los Angeles as the "Bob Hope Veterans Chapel". This recognition is over due for a man that has devoted his entire adult life supporting the men and women in the military. Bob Hopes' efforts to bring happiness and joy to those stationed far from home can never be repaid, however, this Chapel will be a reminder for years to come of what he did for those who served.

Sincerely,

GARY CROSSLAND,
State Commander.

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS
OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington DC, March 6, 2002.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER COX,
Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE COX: It is our understanding that you are going to introduce legislation that would honor Bob Hope by designating the chapel located in the National Cemetery of Los Angeles, California, as the "Bob Hope Veterans Chapel". On behalf of the 2.7 million members of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, I would like to take this opportunity to express our enthusiastic support for this measure.

For more than fifty years, Bob Hope toured with the U.S.O. giving our troops a supportive reminder of home wherever they were stationed. He has earned the honor of being designated "an honorary veteran" for his humanitarian services to the United States Armed Forces by Congress. He has also received the VFW's prestigious Eisenhower Distinguished Service Award for individual contributions to the cause of American security, unity, and world peace. All those who visit the chapel will once again be reminded of his tireless service to our military and our veterans.

We look forward to working with you and your staff on this legislation. Thank you for your continued support on behalf of all America's veterans.

Sincerely,

DENNIS M. CULLINAN,
Director, National Legislative Service.

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
San Francisco, CA, May 7, 2002.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER COX,
House of Representatives, Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN COX: On behalf of The American Legion, Department of California it gives me great pleasure to support HR 4592 to rename the Chapel at the Los Angeles National Cemetery the "Bob Hope Veterans Chapel."

What a wonderful tribute to a Great American who has provided so much support to the veterans of this great Nation, both during periods of war and during peacetime.

You are to be commended for your vision and leadership in sponsoring this legislation to express the gratitude and deep regard felt for Bob Hope by the veterans of this Country.

Sincerely,

RONALD J. HANSON,
State Commander, Department of California, The American Legion.

THE RETIRED OFFICERS ASSOCIATION,
Riverside, CA, May 10, 2002.

Representative C. CHRISTOPHER COX,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN COX, I have been asked by Colonel Jay Vargas, USMC, (Ret) if my organization would write to you in support of the renaming of the Chapel on the grounds of the West Los Angeles Veterans Administration Hospital in honor of Bob Hope. I believe the name he proposed to me was "The Bob Hope Memorial Chapel."

I have discussed this proposal with members of my Board of Directors and we are unanimously in favor of memorializing this edifice to honor this great Patriot and great American. Bob Hope has given so much of his life to bring humor and a bit of home to American G.I. wherever we have been stationed in defense of Liberty around the world. We strongly support this proposal and find it a fitting tribute to Bob Hope and the hundreds of thousands of American service members whose lives he has enhanced.

I was in Danang in the winter of 1965 66 when Bob and his USO troop came and performed at the base of I Iill 327 in the pouring rain on the west side of the Danang Air Base runway. Bob was great and Joey Heatherton looked pretty good all wet, too.

I speak for the 49,460 members of TROA who live in California plus their spouses and families and can tell you that without reservation we endorse this proposal.

Thank you for carrying the ball on this project.

Respectfully,

WILLIAM F. GAVITT, Col., USAF (Ret),
President.

CALIFORNIA PARALYZED
VETERANS ASSOCIATION,
Long Beach, CA, May 8, 2002.

Re: Naming Chapel.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER COX,
Rayburn House Office Bldg.,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN COX: California Paralyzed Veterans Association supports the chapel at Greater Los Angeles VA Healthcare System being named "The Bob Hope Chapel".

Thank you for your consideration. California Paralyzed Veterans Association 1100 members thank you in advance.

Sincerely,

RONALD P. AMADOR,
President, National Director.

DEPARTMENT OF CALIFORNIA
JEWISH WAR VETERANS, USA,
Los Angeles, CA.

Congressman CHRIS COX,

DEAR CONGRESSMAN COX: The Jewish War Veterans Department of California wholeheartedly supports HR 4952. The naming of the Chapel at the National Los Angeles Cemetery in Honor of "Bob Hope" to be named the Bob Hope Veterans Chapel and urge the Congress to unanimously pass HR 4952.

Sincerely,

RALPH LEVENTHAL,
Commander.
STEVE ROSMARIN,
PDC National Executive Committee,
ALVIN SELNICK,
PDC National Executive Committee.

CALIFORNIA ASSOCIATION OF COUNTY
VETERANS SERVICE OFFICERS, INC.,
Fairfield, CA, May 8, 2002.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER COX,
House of Representatives, Rayburn Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN COX: I am writing on behalf of the California Association of County Veterans Service Officers (CACVSO). The CACVSO is an organization of professional veterans advocates. In California, the County Veterans Service Officer plays a critical role in the veteran's advocacy system and is often the initial contact in the community for veterans' services. Through the County Veterans Service Officer the CACVSO is committed to provide a vital and efficient system of services and advocacy to veterans, their dependents, and survivors.

I would like to express our enthusiastic support of your recently introduced legislation, H.R. 4592. This legislation to honor Mr. Bob Hope by naming the chapel located at the National Cemetery in Los Angeles, California is a fitting way to honor a life-long friend and supporter of the men and women who have served and are currently serving in the Armed Forces of the United States.

Mr. Hope's service to this country by his many years of providing entertainment and moral support to the troops has always been held in the highest regard by the veterans who had the opportunity to see or hear him in some of the most far flung places on the earth. From his first benefit in 1941 at March Field in California, to his first foray into a combat zone in 1943 during World War II when he and a small USO troupe performed for battle-weary troops in England, Africa, Sicily and Iceland, and for the nearly forty years thereafter when he would spend Christmas entertaining military men and women somewhere in the world, Bob Hope had a way of bringing a little bit of home to troops in faraway places.

Congress has previously acknowledged Bob Hope's invaluable service to the men and women of the US Armed Forces by honoring him with the title "Honorary Veteran of the United States Armed Forces" during a 1997 tribute and by dedicating the USNS Bob Hope (T-AKR300)—lead ship in a new class of Strategic Sealift vessels—in the comedian's honor. Your legislation is one more way to recognize a truly great American and to say "Thanks for the Memories."

Sincerely,

WILLIAM P. REARDON,
President, CACVSO.

MILITARY ORDER OF THE PURPLE HEART, DEPARTMENT OF CALIFORNIA,
May 8, 2002.

Congressman CHRISTOPHER COX,
Rayburn Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CHRISTOPHER COX: There are approximately 68,000 combat wounded veterans located in the State of California. They are Purple Heart Medal recipients from bygone wars. Those that are members of the Military Order of the Purple Heart, want to endorse your House bill H.R. 4592, Bob Hope legislation dedication of a chapel in the West Los Angeles area.

Thank you for introducing H.R. 4592 before the U.S. Congress for a special person as Bob Hope.

Yours in patriotism,

CHARLES L. LINDEN,
Department Commander, Department of California, Military Order of the Purple Heart.

AMVETS,
DEPARTMENT OF CALIFORNIA,
Tulare, CA, May 14, 2002.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER COX,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SIR: The Department of California AMVETS are supportive of the House Bill naming the chapel located in the National Cemetery in Los Angeles as the "Bob Hope Veterans Chapel".

Sincerely yours,

DONALD G. MCDONALD,
State Commander.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation would name the chapel in the national cemetery located in Los Angeles, California as the Bob Hope Veterans Chapel.

Bob Hope has entertained American servicemen and women throughout the world. During the nearly 60 years of goodwill tours and USO shows, Bob Hope entertained an estimated 10 million members in the armed forces. In recognition for his support for America's armed forces in 1997, he was designated an honorary veteran. With the passage of this legislation, Bob Hope will receive another well-earned recognition.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this measure and I commend the gentleman from California (Mr. COX) and the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN) for their bipartisan leadership on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. And first I want to thank the gentleman from California (Mr. COX) for his very eloquent remarks and for his sponsorship of this very important and, I think, very timely recognition of the great work that Bob Hope has done.

Mr. Speaker, Bob Hope is famous for entertaining all Americans, but we all know his most significant contribution to the United States has been in improving the morale of members of our armed forces by entertaining our troops overseas, especially during the holidays.

Leslie Townes, also known as Bob Hope, was born in Eltham, England on May 29, 1903. In 1907, he moved to Cleveland, Ohio, and became a naturalized U.S. citizen in 1920. During World War II, Bob Hope attempted to enlist in the armed forces, so he could serve his adopted country, but was informed that his greatest service would be as a civilian entertainer for the troops.

□ 1900

Whether at war or at peace, from World War II through the Persian Gulf War, Bob Hope committed himself for nearly 60 years to boosting the morale of the U.S. Armed Forces. It began in 1941 when Mr. Hope and a group of performers went to March Field in California to do a radio show for the troops in training there. During World War II, his weekly radio show was broadcast from Armed Forces installations around the United States and at U.S. bases overseas. During this period he developed a rapport that led the United Service Organization, USO, to ask him to lead 45 tours in more than 40 countries to entertain American servicemen and women. His spirit of selflessness was especially notable during his annual Christmas specials which began in 1948 and kept him on the road during this Christian holiday for more than 20 years in a row. He has entertained, as the gentleman from California (Mr. COX) pointed out, an estimated 10 million American GIs.

Mr. Speaker, here is a quote from a lonely sailor in France who had received a letter and some photos from a recent Bob Hope visit during World War II. His words portray the feelings of so many Americans fighting at that time:

"Your programs are the kind that make us think of home but they also make us feel that home is much closer than it really is. It is people like you and Mr. Colona and Miss Langford besides the one we love back home that makes it worth winning this war and believe me we are going to do it. I want to say thanks from the bottom of my heart for all the trouble you have gone through to make this strange sailor have a pleasant time for being so far away from home."

Mr. Speaker, Bob Hope made over 700 television appearances. As we all know, he is a best-selling author, he starred in 60 motion pictures, and the "Guinness Book of Records" cites him as the most honored entertainer in the world. Mr. Hope has received more than 50 honorary doctorates and is the recipient of innumerable awards, including prestigious honors from the major veterans service organizations. His humanitarian work, Mr. Speaker, was recognized, and fittingly, with the Congressional Gold Medal.

Public Law 105-67, Mr. Speaker, bestowed on Mr. Hope status as an honorary veteran of the United States Armed Forces. As we know, he resides in California with his bride of 68 years, Delores.

Mr. Hope, what an appropriate name for all that he has done to boost the morale of American fighting men and women. We say to him, "Thanks for the memories."

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN).

Mr. WAXMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4592, which would designate the chapel in Los Angeles National Cemetery located in the congressional district I represent as the Bob Hope Veterans Chapel. I want to thank the gentleman from California (Mr. COX) for his assistance with this legislation and the Committee on Veterans' Affairs for allowing it to reach the floor in time for the chapel naming to coincide with Bob Hope's 99th birthday on May 29.

Bob Hope has been named the most honored entertainer of all time with more than 1,500 awards and citations. His career in vaudeville, Broadway, radio, motion pictures, and television has made him an icon of American entertainment. But he will forever be loved for traveling the globe to entertain American GIs.

Starting with his World War II radio broadcast for the Armed Forces, Bob Hope dedicated more than 50 years to the USO, delivering holiday cheer and raising the morale of servicemen and women serving throughout the world. He made his first trip to a combat area in 1943 when he and a small USO troupe visited U.S. military facilities in England, Africa, Sicily and Iceland. His commitment to those in uniform is legendary; and he set an example that inspired his peers, his fans and the entertainers who have followed in his path.

As many of my colleagues know, Bob Hope and his wife, Delores, recently donated the Bob Hope Collection to the Library of Congress to preserve his invaluable joke files, sound recordings, films, photos and other memorabilia. Now exhibited through the Bob Hope Gallery of American Entertainment, the collection is truly a national treasure. Naming this veterans chapel in his honor is a special way for Congress to express the deep gratitude that all Americans have for Bob Hope. He is the man we awarded the Congressional Gold Medal in 1962 and designated in 1997 as the only person in history to become an honorary veteran.

I appreciate the opportunity to pay tribute once again when we ascribe his name to this historic chapel, which is being restored with the help of the Veterans Park conservancy. It will also be a tribute to the 85,000 brave soldiers who are buried at the L.A. National Cemetery.

It is a great privilege for me to represent Bob and Delores Hope in Congress. I know other Members of Congress claim them as well; but they live, as Delores Hope told me, and vote in my congressional district and to me that has always been a great honor for me to have them as constituents. I want to take this opportunity to congratulate them on this special honor and to extend my best wishes to them and their family.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN), the chairman emeritus of the Committee on International Relations.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, permit me to thank our good friend, the gentleman from New Jersey, the distinguished chairman of our Committee on Veterans' Affairs; the gentleman from California (Mr. COX); the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN); and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. EVANS) for affording us this opportunity to pay tribute to a dedicated patriot, a man who has devoted his life to providing laughter to our Nation, and, most notably, to our troops overseas, Bob Hope.

Bob Hope's lifelong commitment to public service has made him one of the most honored and esteemed performers in our Nation's history. He spent nearly 60 years boosting the morale of our servicemen and women through goodwill tours, USO shows, and his world famous Christmas specials. Bob Hope's status among our Armed Forces as GI Bob is legendary. Through an act of Congress in 1997, he has the distinction of being the Nation's first and only honorary veteran, a fitting tribute to his life and service.

His charitable work and his tours on behalf of our Armed Forces have brought him the admiration and the gratitude of millions and the friendship of every U.S. President since President Roosevelt.

In a recent act of generosity, Bob donated his personal papers, radio and television programs, his scripts and his treasured joke file to the Library of Congress and the people of the United States. Preserved at the library is the full record of Bob Hope's extraordinary creativity, his unselfish contributions to his Nation, and the testimonials and thanks he has received from those whose lives he has enriched.

Bob Hope is a role model, a patriot, a man who used his gift to lift the spirits of our Nation and of our Nation's troops. This measure, H.R. 4592, names the chapel located at the national cemetery in Los Angeles as the Bob Hope Veterans Chapel. While this is only a small symbol of our thanks, I know that our Nation will forever extend its gratitude to Bob Hope, an entertainer, a patriot and a friend and to his devoted wife, Delores.

Accordingly, I urge all of our colleagues to support this measure. I thank the gentlemen from New Jersey and from California for this opportunity to pay tribute to GI Bob.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH).

Mr. KUCINICH. Mr. Speaker, as a Representative of Cleveland, Ohio, I am proud to join with my colleagues from across the country in this well-deserved tribute to Bob Hope for his service to the veterans of our country, to the servicepersons who for generations put themselves on the line to protect America and Bob Hope was there time after time whenever his country called him. And so now his country is prepared to honor him in a very special way by showing its appreciation for the years of work, the years of his own life he put into celebrating the work of our servicemen and women.

As a Representative from Cleveland, Ohio, I take great pride in the fact that the first city that Bob Hope moved to, his family moved to, when he came to the United States was the city of Cleveland. The city of Cleveland claims him as one of their favorite sons and has named a major bridge after him and celebrated his whole career during our bicentennial. We recognize that his contribution, though, belongs to the Nation as well as to our community. It is that way, I think, with Bob Hope's life in that so many parts of our Nation are grateful to the service that he has given to, to the joy he has brought into people's lives, through his unselfish approach, through his dedication to our country, and to the men and women who have served.

Mr. Speaker, when I was mayor of Cleveland, I had the privilege of meeting Bob Hope on many occasions, having had the opportunity to share very special moments with him and to see that this person whom we honor here this evening was warm, and is warm, and funny and is someone who had a view of life, and has a view of life, which really appreciates the beauty of life and the humor in life.

To Bob and Delores Hope, this is an important moment for both of you, because you have shared your marriage with this country and with the servicemen and women who have served America. In this moment when through the work of our colleagues your name is going to be on this special veterans memorial chapel, through this moment we show that we have not forgotten what you have done for our country and that you will always be remembered and that we join, each Member of this Congress, in celebrating your life as you look towards your 99th year.

In the Polish community in Cleveland, there is a phrase called stolot which, translated, is "May you live a hundred years and more." Bob, keep going strong. We love you. Thanks to you and Delores. Cleveland is glad to join in this special honor.

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4592.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SMALL BUSINESS ADVOCACY IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 2002

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4231) to improve small business advocacy, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4231

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Small Business Advocacy Improvement Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following:

(1) Excessive regulations continue to burden the Nation's small businesses.

(2) Federal agencies continue to propose regulations that impose disproportionate burdens on small businesses.

(3) An independent office of small business advocacy will help to ensure that Federal agencies are responsive to small businesses and that those agencies comply with their statutory obligations with respect to small businesses.

(4) The independence of an office that acts as an advocate for small businesses is essential to ensure that it can serve as an effective advocate without being restricted by the views or policies of the Small Business Administration or any other Federal executive branch agency.

(5) To be effective an office that acts as an advocate for small businesses needs sufficient resources to conduct creditable economic studies and research which are necessary for the maintenance of small business databases and for the accurate assessment of the impact of regulations on small businesses, the role of small business in the Nation's economy, and the barriers to the growth of small businesses.

(6) The research, information, and expertise provided by an independent office of small business advocacy will be a valuable source of information and advice for Congress and Federal agencies with which the office will work on behalf of small businesses.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to ensure that there exists an entity that has the statutory independence and adequate financial resources to effectively advocate for and on behalf of small business;

(2) to require that such an entity report to the Chairmen and Ranking Members of the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate, and to the Administrator of the Small Business Administration in order to keep them fully and currently informed about issues and regulations affecting small business concerns and the necessity for corrective action by the regulatory agency or Congress;

(3) to provide a separate authorization for appropriations for such an entity; and

(4) to strengthen the role of the Small Business and Agriculture Regulatory Enforcement Ombudsman by ensuring greater cooperation between the Ombudsman and the Office of Advocacy of the Small Business Administration.

SEC. 3. APPOINTMENT OF CHIEF COUNSEL OF ADVOCACY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 201 of Public Law 94–305 (15 U.S.C. 634a) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" before "There is established";

(2) by striking the second sentence; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

"(b) The management of the Office shall be vested in a Chief Counsel for Advocacy who shall be appointed from civilian life by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who should be appointed without regard to political affiliation and on the basis of fitness to perform the duties of the office.

"(c) No individual may be appointed under subsection (b) if such individual has served as an officer or employee of the Small Business Administration during the 5-year period preceding the date of such individual's appointment.

"(d) Any Chief Counsel appointed after the date of the enactment of this subsection shall be paid at a rate not to exceed the rate of basic pay for level III of the Executive Schedule.

"(e) After the expiration of the term of a President, the Chief Counsel may continue to serve at the pleasure of the President for a period of not to exceed one year until such date as a successor to the Chief Counsel is nominated.".

(b) INCUMBENT CHIEF COUNSEL FOR ADVOCACY.—The individual serving as the Chief Counsel for Advocacy of the Small Business Administration on the date of the enactment of this Act shall continue to serve in that position after such date in accordance with section 201 of Public Law 94–305 (15 U.S.C. 634a), as amended by this section.

SEC. 4. PRIMARY FUNCTIONS OF OFFICE OF ADVOCACY.

Section 202 of Public Law 94–305 (15 U.S.C. 634b) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (6) by striking "to minority enterprises" and inserting "to small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals, to small business concerns owned and controlled by women, and to small business concerns owned and controlled by veterans";

(2) in paragraph (7) by striking "minority enterprises" and inserting "small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals, small business concerns owned and controlled by women, and small business concerns owned and controlled by veterans";

(3) in paragraph (8) by striking "minority and other small business enterprises" and inserting "small business concerns owned and controlled by socially and economically disadvantaged individuals, small business concerns owned and controlled by women, small business concerns owned and controlled by veterans, and other small businesses";

(4) in paragraph (9) by striking "complete" and inserting "compete";

(5) by striking paragraph (11);

(6) by redesignating paragraph (12) as paragraph (11);

(7) in paragraph (11) (as so redesignated)—

(A) by striking "serviced-disabled" and inserting "service-disabled"; and

(B) by striking the period at the end and inserting "; and"; and

(8) by adding at the end the following:

"(12) make such recommendations and submit such reports as the Chief Counsel determines appropriate to the President, to the Chairmen and Ranking Members of the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate, and to the Administrator of the Small Business Administration, with respect to issues and regulations affecting small businesses and the necessity for corrective action by any Federal agency or by Congress.".

SEC. 5. ADDITIONAL FUNCTIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 203 of Public Law 94–305 (15 U.S.C. 634c) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" before "The Office of Advocacy shall also perform"; and

(2) in subsection (a) (as so designated)—

(A) in paragraph (4) by striking "and" at the end;

(B) in paragraph (5) by striking the period at the end and inserting a semicolon; and

"(8) enter into a memorandum of understanding with the Small Business and Agriculture Regulatory Enforcement Ombudsman regarding methods and procedures for cooperation between the Ombudsman and the Office of Advocacy and transmit a copy of such memorandum to the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate.".

(b) APPROPRIATION REQUEST.—Section 203 of Public Law 94–305 (15 U.S.C. 634c) is further amended by adding at the end the following:

"(b)(1) For each fiscal year, the Chief Counsel shall transmit the Office of Advocacy's appropriation estimate and request to the Office of Management and Budget, the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate, and the Committees on Appropriations of the House of Representatives and the Senate.

"(2) Each budget of the United States Government submitted by the President shall include a separate statement of the amount of appropriations requested for the Office of Advocacy.".

SEC. 6. DEPUTY CHIEF COUNSELS AND REGIONAL ADVOCATES.

Section 204 of Public Law 94–305 (15 U.S.C. 634d) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(a)" before "In carrying out"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"(b)(1) The Chief Counsel may appoint 2 individuals to serve as Deputy Chief Counsels.

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the pay rate for each Deputy Chief Counsel may not exceed the rate of basic pay for level III of the Senior Executive Service.

"(3) Individuals appointed to positions under this subsection shall not be counted toward the limitation contained in subsection (a)(1) regarding the number of individuals who may be compensated at a rate in excess of the lowest rate for GS–15 of the General Schedule.

"(c) The Chief Counsel may appoint regional advocates within each Standard Federal Region as appropriate. Such regional advocates shall—

"(1) assist in examining the role of small business in the economy of the United States by identifying academic and other research institutions that focus on small business concerns and linking these research resources to research activities conducted by the Office of Advocacy;

"(2) assist in representing the views and interests of small business concerns before Federal agencies whose policies and activities may affect small business;

"(3) in coordination with the Small Business and Agriculture Regulatory Enforcement Ombudsman, assist the functioning of regional small business fairness boards;

"(4) assist in enlisting the cooperation and assistance of public and private agencies, businesses, and other organizations in disseminating information about the programs and services provided by the Federal Government that are of benefit to small business concerns and the means by which small business concerns can participate in or make use of such programs and services; and

"(5) carry out such duties pursuant to the mission of the Office of Advocacy as the Chief Counsel may assign.".

SEC. 7. OVERHEAD AND ADMINISTRATIVE SUPPORT.

Section 205 of Public Law 94–305 (15 U.S.C. 634e) is amended by inserting before "Each department" the following:

"(a) The Administrator of the Small Business Administration shall provide the Office of Advocacy with appropriate and adequate office space at central and field office locations of the Administration, together with such equipment, office supplies, communications facilities, and personnel and maintenance services as may be necessary for the operation of such offices.

SEC. 8. REPORTS.

Section 206 of Public Law 94–305 (15 U.S.C. 634f) is amended by striking "The Chief Counsel may" and all that follows through "on his activities." and inserting the following:

"(a) Not less than annually, the Chief Counsel shall submit to the President, the Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate, the Committee on Government Affairs of the Senate, the Committee on Government Reform of the House of Representatives, and the Committees on the Judiciary of the Senate and the House of Representatives, and the Administrator of the Small Business Administration a report on agency compliance with chapter 6 of title 5, United States Code.

"(b) In addition to the reports required by this title, the Chief Counsel may prepare and publish such other reports as the Chief Counsel determines appropriate.

SEC. 9. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Section 207 of Public Law 94–305 (15 U.S.C. 634g) is amended by striking "not to exceed $1,000,000" and inserting "$10,000,000 for fiscal year 2003, $12,000,000 for fiscal year 2004, and $14,000,000 for fiscal year 2005".

(2) in subparagraph (E), by striking the period and inserting "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

"(F) enter into a memorandum of understanding with the Office of Advocacy regarding methods and procedures for cooperation between the Ombudsman and the Office of Advocacy.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO) and the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELÁZQUEZ) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on this legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, 2 weeks ago we celebrated National Small Business Week and the entrepreneurial spirit that makes this Nation great. Small business drives our Nation's economy and the heart of our communities. Small businesses account for 99.7 percent of the Nation's employers. Small businesses employ 53 percent of the private workforce and are responsible for over 50 percent of the private gross domestic product. During this time of economic uncertainty, it is important to remember that small businesses have pulled this Nation out of every downturn. Small businesses create about three-fourths of the new jobs in this country.

That is why it is critically important that we in Congress do all we can to foster the entrepreneurial spirit in America.

After all the festivities are over, it is especially important that we carry on the legacy of National Small Business Week throughout the year by strengthening and making the Office of Advocacy at the Small Business Administration more independent. Advocacy is a very small, but unique and dynamic, government office. Mr. Speaker, I encourage my colleagues that if you do not know too much about this office, it is time you became more familiar with its mission and its hard-working personnel.

Advocacy is staffed with public servants who truly have a heart for small business. It is a great resource, particularly for caseworkers that may not know to whom to turn in order to resolve a complex small business problem. It is one of the few offices in the executive branch that can take positions contrary to the administration on behalf of small business. Advocacy serves as an internal government watchdog in our regulatory process to make sure that the interests of small businesses are not ignored as agencies develop, propose and finalize their regulations.

Advocacy has concluded that Federal regulations cost small businesses about 60 percent more per employee than it costs large businesses. Compliance with regulations averages about $7,000 per employee. That is a huge burden. The Regulatory Flexibility Act was passed in 1980 to require agencies to factor into their analysis the impact of proposed regulations on small businesses prior to their implementation, and, if necessary, modify the proposal to soften the impact on small businesses.

Last March the President gave a historic address before our Nation's women entrepreneurs. The President said, "Every agency is required to analyze the impact of new regulations on small businesses before issuing them. That is an important law. The problem is it is oftentimes being ignored. The law is on the books; the regulators don't care that the law is on the books. From this day forward, they will care that the law is on the books."

The main mission of the Office of Advocacy is to carry out the President's vision by making sure that all regulators finally take seriously the obligations contained in the Regulatory Flexibility Act to respect the interests of small business. Part of the President's small business agenda is to enhance the Office of Advocacy.

The bill before us today strengthens and improves the office to ensure that there is an entity within the executive branch that has the statutory independence and adequate financial resources to be an effective fighter for small business. Many small business groups, including the National Federation of Independent Business, the Small Business Legislative Council, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, National Small Business United and the National Association for the Self-Employed have endorsed this bill.

The Small Business Advocacy Improvement Act raises the rank of the Chief Counsel for Advocacy one level in the executive service schedule to be on par with many of his colleagues in other agencies. The legislation would permit the appointment of two deputy chief counsel, one responsible for regulations, the other for economic research and studies. The bill also defines for the first time the duties of regional advocates, one at each of the 10 Federal regions. The SBA is also required to provide adequate office space, equipment, and personnel to the Office of Advocacy.

In addition, this legislation encourages more cooperation and coordination through a memorandum of understanding between the SBA's Office of Ombudsman, which oversees how Federal agencies implement regulations after they are adopted, and the Office of Advocacy, which aims to make proposed regulations more friendly to small businesses prior to their final adoption.

Most importantly, this bill protects the budget of the Office of Advocacy by allowing Congress to see the chief counsel's initial budget request to the Office of Management and Budget. Unfortunately, Advocacy has been threatened in the past with budget cuts unless the chief counsel changed his policy with respect to small business to be more in line with the administration. This provision is crucial to maintaining the independence of the Office of Advocacy, because, without it, other executive branch agencies could threaten its budget to influence a particular course of action. This bill would shed light on that practice in order to put enough pressure to end it.

Finally, the legislation authorizes modest increases in the budget of the Office of Advocacy over the next 3 years in order to increase its role and visibility within the executive branch to advocate for and on behalf of small businesses.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the ranking minority member, the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. VELÁZQUEZ), for working with me over the past 14 months on this issue. I urge my colleagues to support the Small Business Advocacy Improvement Act.

Mr. Speaker, passage of this bill is particularly appropriate today, shortly after National Small Business Week, because H.R. 4231 will produce untold benefits for our small business constituents for years to come.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. VELÁZQUEZ. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, even though small businesses serve as the engine of the economy, the critical role they play is often overlooked during the development and implementation of Federal policies. This oversight often results in a myriad of problems and regulations that have little benefit, or, in some cases, negative impact on this Nation's small businesses.

To make sure small business has a voice in the Federal Government, Congress created the Small Business Administration Office of Advocacy 25 years ago to defend, strengthen and represent small businesses in the legislative and executive rule-making process. To accomplish this, Advocacy, and in particular the chief counsel, has the unique power to take positions that are contrary to the administration. This ability to "call them as he sees them" allows Advocacy to put aside much of the partisan tone that all too often creeps into policy, and has just one standard: is it good for this Nation's small businesses?

Under this charge, the Office of Advocacy works to reduce legal and regulatory mandates that disproportionately burden small businesses. By bringing together Federal agencies, small businesses and interest groups, Advocacy then attempts to reach a mutually beneficial consensus. The result is an improved regulation that reduces regulatory and paperwork burdens so that small businesses can get back to the work they do best.

In addition, Advocacy highlights policies that support the development and growth of small businesses and produces studies and research aiding legislators and rule-makers in the decisions that affect small businesses.

As the complexity of Federal regulations has increased, so has the need to ensure that Advocacy's independent voice is in no way muffled. To do its job and do it well, Advocacy must point out problems and shortcomings of administration policy, not a particularly popular job to have, but a critical one. This often pits them against agencies and many times opposes the Office of Management and Budget, the very agency that sets Advocacy's funding levels each year.

Criticizing the very entity that holds its fate could compromise Advocacy's ability to be truly independent. Given the recent mishandling by OMB of such matters as the SBA loan program subsidy rates and size standards for disaster assistance, shielding Advocacy from OMB's heavy hand is more important than ever.

To that end, the Committee on Small Business provided the Office of Advocacy the ability to submit its own budget to Congress in our original bill. Unfortunately, this critical guarantee of Advocacy's independence has been removed from the final version under consideration today. I find this curious. The Office of Advocacy already submits testimony, correspondence and reports to Congress without any vetting by the administration. It only makes sense that this independence should be extended to the budget it submits to Congress. The power of a subordinate agency to submit a budget item is not without precedent. Currently, FDIC and the International Trade Commission, among others, submit their budget without change.

Testimony by experts before our hearings, committee reports and surveys of small business interest groups have all influenced the bipartisan proposal to secure Advocacy's independence. In fact, all the business groups supported the bill as it was reported by the committee, not as it was amended. We know that OMB's current budgetary power over the Office of Advocacy can hurt, co-opt or weaken the office, which will be less likely to raise issues with OMB that directly harm small businesses.

We should have retained the original language of this bill. I am afraid today's proposal is not a step forward, but a step back, in the drive to protect small businesses from disproportionate government regulations and compliance burdens. The Office of Advocacy has been successful because we have given it the flexibility to work with agencies to find creative solutions to the problems facing this country's small businesses.

Small businesses are powerful creators of growth and jobs, something to keep in mind as our unemployment rate peaks at 6 percent. The Office of Advocacy is a strong voice for small business, and we can make it stronger so that small businesses can get back to work. We should be strengthening it, not weakening it, as this legislation does today.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MANZULLO. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MANZULLO) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4231, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENDING AUTHORITY OF EXPORT-IMPORT BANK UNTIL JUNE 14, 2002

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4782) to extend the authority of the Export-Import Bank until June 14, 2002.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4782

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. EXTENSION OF EXPORT-IMPORT BANK.

Notwithstanding the dates specified in section 7 of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945 (12 U.S.C. 635f) and section 1(c) of Public Law 103-428, the Export-Import Bank of the United States shall continue to exercise its functions in connection with and in furtherance of its objects and purposes through June 14, 2002.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 4782.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is a simple extension of the authority of the Export-Import Bank until June 14, 2002. Mr. Speaker, this is a rather routine extension. The conference committee is meeting literally as I speak, and we would hope to have a bill to the floor. But in case we do not, it is important that the activities of the Export-Import Bank maintain until June 14. I ask that the House would pass this.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I concur in the remarks of my friend, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY). The conferees are meeting as we speak, but it might be very difficult to come to conclusion and bring a conference report to the floor before there is a recess, especially since I understand we might be recessing tomorrow evening. Since the legislation we passed last time expires on May 31 of this month, I think it is prudent for us to pass this resolution now, extending it until June 14.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

□ 1930

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4782.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE REFORM ACT OF 2002

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 3717) to reform the Federal deposit insurance system, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 3717

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SEC. 3. INCREASE IN DEPOSIT INSURANCE COVERAGE.

(a) In General.—Section 11(a)(1) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1821(a)(1)) is amended—

(1) by striking subparagraph (B) and inserting the following new subparagraph:

"(B) Net amount of insured deposit.—The net amount due to any depositor at an insured depository institution shall not exceed the standard maximum deposit insurance amount as determined in accordance with subparagraphs (C), (D), (E) and (F) and paragraph (3)."; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subparagraphs:

"(E) Standard maximum deposit insurance amount defined.—For purposes of this Act, the term 'standard maximum deposit insurance amount' means—

"(i) until the effective date of final regulations prescribed pursuant to section 9(a)(2) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Reform Act of 2002, $100,000; and

"(ii) on and after such effective date, $130,000, adjusted as provided under subparagraph (F).

"(F) Inflation adjustment.—

"(i) In general.—By April 1 of 2005, and the 1st day of each subsequent 5-year period, the Board of Directors and the National Credit Union Administration Board shall jointly prescribe the amount by which the standard maximum deposit insurance amount and the standard maximum share insurance amount (as defined in section 207(k) of the Federal Credit Union Act) applicable to any depositor at an insured depository institution shall be increased by calculating the product of—

"(I) $130,000; and

"(II) the ratio of the value of the Personal Consumption Expenditures Chain-Type Index (or any successor index thereto), published by the Department of Commerce, as of December 31 of the year preceding the year in which the adjustment is calculated under this clause, to the value of such index as of the date this subparagraph takes effect.

"(ii) Rounding.—If the amount determined under clause (ii) for any period is not a multiple of $10,000, the amount so determined shall be rounded to the nearest $10,000.

"(iii) Publication and report to the Congress.—Not later than April 5 of any calendar year in which an adjustment is required to be calculated under clause (i) to the standard maximum deposit insurance amount and the standard maximum share insurance amount under such clause, the Board of Directors and the National Credit Union Administration Board shall—

"(I) publish in the Federal Register the standard maximum deposit insurance amount, the standard maximum share insurance amount, and the amount of coverage under paragraph (3)(A) and section 207(k)(3) of the Federal Credit Union Act, as so calculated; and

"(II) jointly submit a report to the Congress containing the amounts described in subclause (I).

"(iv) 6-month implementation period.—Unless an Act of Congress enacted before July 1 of the calendar year in which an adjustment is required to be calculated under clause (i) provides otherwise, the increase in the standard maximum deposit insurance amount and the standard maximum share insurance amount shall take effect on January 1 of the year immediately succeeding such calendar year.".

(b) Coverage for Certain Employee Benefit Plan Deposits.—Section 11(a)(1)(D) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1821(a)(1)(D)) is amended to read as follows:

"(D) Coverage for certain employee benefit plan deposits.—

"(i) Pass-through insurance.—The Corporation shall provide pass-through deposit insurance for the deposits of any employee benefit plan.

"(ii) Prohibition on acceptance of benefit plan deposits.—An insured depository institution that is not well capitalized or adequately capitalized may not accept employee benefit plan deposits.

"(iii) Definitions.—For purposes of this subparagraph, the following definitions shall apply:

"(I) Capital standards.—The terms 'well capitalized' and 'adequately capitalized' have the same meanings as in section 38.

"(II) Employee benefit plan.—The term 'employee benefit plan' has the same meaning as in paragraph (8)(B)(ii), and includes any eligible deferred compensation plan described in section 457 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

"(III) Pass-through deposit insurance.—The term 'pass-through deposit insurance' means, with respect to an employee benefit plan, deposit insurance coverage provided on a pro rata basis to the participants in the plan, in accordance with the interest of each participant.".

(c) Doubling of Deposit Insurance for Certain Retirement Accounts.—Section 11(a)(3)(A) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1821(a)(3)(A)) is amended by striking "$100,000" and inserting "2 times the standard maximum deposit insurance amount (as determined under paragraph (1))".

(d) Increased Insurance Coverage for Municipal Deposits.—Section 11(a)(2) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1821(a)(2)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A)—

(A) by moving the margins of clauses (i) through (v) 4 ems to the right;

(B) by striking, in the matter following clause (v), "such depositor shall" and all that follows through the period; and

"(B) In-state municipal depositors.—In the case of the deposits of an in-State municipal depositor described in clause (ii), (iii), (iv), or (v) of subparagraph (E) at an insured credit union, such deposits shall be insured in an amount equal to the lesser of—

"(i) $2,000,000; or

"(ii) the sum of the standard maximum deposit insurance amount and 80 percent of the amount of any deposits in excess of the standard maximum deposit insurance amount.

"(C) Rule of construction.—No provision of this paragraph shall be construed as authorizing an insured credit union to accept the deposits of a municipal depositor in an amount greater than such credit union is authorized to accept under any other provision of Federal or State law.

"(D) In-state municipal depositor defined.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'in-State municipal depositor' means a municipal depositor that is located in the same State as the office or branch of the insured credit union at which the deposits of that depositor are held.

"(E) Municipal depositor.—In this paragraph, the term 'municipal depositor' means a depositor that is—";

(iii) by striking "(B) The" and inserting the following:

"(F) Authority to limit deposits.—The"; and

(iv) by striking "depositor or member referred to in subparagraph (A)" and inserting "municipal depositor or member"; and

(C) by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

"(4) Coverage for certain employee benefit plan deposits.—

"(A) Pass-through insurance.—The Administration shall provide pass-through share insurance for the deposits or shares of any employee benefit plan.

"(B) Prohibition on acceptance of deposits.—An insured credit union that is not well capitalized or adequately capitalized may not accept employee benefit plan deposits.

"(C) Definitions.—For purposes of this paragraph, the following definitions shall apply:

"(i) Capital standards.—The terms 'well capitalized' and 'adequately capitalized' have the same meanings as in section 216(c).

"(ii) Employee benefit plan.—The term 'employee benefit plan'—

"(I) has the meaning given to such term in section 3(3) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974;

"(II) includes any plan described in section 401(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986; and

"(III) includes any eligible deferred compensation plan described in section 457 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.

"(iii) Pass-through share insurance.—The term 'pass-through share insurance' means, with respect to an employee benefit plan, insurance coverage provided on a pro rata basis to the participants in the plan, in accordance with the interest of each participant.

"(D) Rule of construction.—No provision of this paragraph shall be construed as authorizing an insured credit union to accept the deposits of an employee benefit plan in an amount greater than such credit union is authorized to accept under any other provision of Federal or State law.

"(5) Standard maximum share insurance amount defined.—For purposes of this Act, the term 'standard maximum share insurance amount' means—

"(A) until the effective date of final regulations prescribed pursuant to section 9(a)(2) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Reform Act of 2002, $100,000; and

"(B) on and after such effective date, $130,000, adjusted as provided under section 11(a)(1)(F) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.".

(2) Doubling of share insurance for certain retirement accounts.—Section 207(k)(3) of the Federal Credit Union Act (12 U.S.C. 1787(k)(3)) is amended by striking "$100,000" and inserting "2 times the standard maximum share insurance amount (as determined under paragraph (1))".

(h) Effective Date.—This section and the amendments made by this section shall take effect on the date the final regulations required under section 9(a)(2) take effect.

SEC. 4. SETTING ASSESSMENTS AND REPEAL OF SPECIAL RULES RELATING TO MINIMUM ASSESSMENTS AND FREE DEPOSIT INSURANCE.

(a) Setting Assessments.—Section 7(b)(2) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817(b)(2)) is amended—

(1) by striking subparagraphs (A) and (B) and inserting the following new subparagraphs:

"(A) In general.—The Board of Directors shall set assessments for insured depository institutions in such amounts as the Board of Directors may determine to be necessary or appropriate, subject to subparagraph (D).

"(B) Factors to be considered.—In setting assessments under subparagraph (A), the Board of Directors shall consider the following factors:

"(i) The estimated operating expenses of the Deposit Insurance Fund.

"(ii) The estimated case resolution expenses and income of the Deposit Insurance Fund.

"(iii) The projected effects of the payment of assessments on the capital and earnings of insured depository institutions.

"(iv) the risk factors and other factors taken into account pursuant to paragraph (1) under the risk-based assessment system, including the requirement under such paragraph to maintain a risk-based system.

"(v) Any other factors the Board of Directors may determine to be appropriate."; and

(2) by inserting after subparagraph (C) the following new subparagraph:

"(D) BASE RATE FOR ASSESSMENTS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—In setting assessment rates pursuant to subparagraph (A), the Board of Directors shall establish a base rate of not more than 1 basis point (exclusive of any credit or dividend) for those insured depository institutions in the lowest-risk category under the risk-based assessment system established pursuant to paragraph (1).

"(ii) SUSPENSION.—Clause (i) shall not apply during any period in which the reserve ratio of the Deposit Insurance Fund is less than the amount which is equal to 1.15 percent of the aggregate estimated insured deposits.".

(b) ASSESSMENT RECORDKEEPING PERIOD SHORTENED.—Paragraph (5) of section 7(b) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817(b)) is amended to read as follows:

"(5) DEPOSITORY INSTITUTION REQUIRED TO MAINTAIN ASSESSMENT-RELATED RECORDS.—Each insured depository institution shall maintain all records that the Corporation may require for verifying the correctness of any assessment on the insured depository institution under this subsection until the later of—

"(A) the end of the 3-year period beginning on the due date of the assessment; or

"(B) in the case of a dispute between the insured depository institution and the Corporation with respect to such assessment, the date of a final determination of any such dispute.".

(c) INCREASE IN FEES FOR LATE ASSESSMENT PAYMENTS.—Subsection (h) of section 18 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1828(h)) is amended to read as follows:

"(h) PENALTY FOR FAILURE TO TIMELY PAY ASSESSMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Any insured depository institution which fails or refuses to pay any assessment shall be subject to a penalty in an amount not more than 1 percent of the amount of the assessment due for each day that such violation continues.

"(2) EXCEPTION IN CASE OF DISPUTE.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply if—

"(A) the failure to pay an assessment is due to a dispute between the insured depository institution and the Corporation over the amount of such assessment; and

"(B) the insured depository institution deposits security satisfactory to the Corporation for payment upon final determination of the issue.

"(3) AUTHORITY TO MODIFY OR REMIT PENALTY.—The Corporation, in the sole discretion of the Corporation, may compromise, modify or remit any penalty which the Corporation may assess or has already assessed under paragraph (1) upon a finding that good cause prevented the timely payment of an assessment.".

(d) ASSESSMENTS FOR LIFELINE ACCOUNTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 232 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Improvement Act of 1991 (12 U.S.C. 1834) is amended by striking subsection (c).

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The Board of Directors shall designate, by regulation after notice and opportunity for comment, the reserve ratio applicable with respect to the Deposit Insurance Fund.

"(ii) NOT LESS THAN ANNUAL REDETERMINATION.—A determination under clause (i) shall be made by the Board of Directors at least before the beginning of each calendar year, for such calendar year, and at such other times as the Board of Directors may determine to be appropriate.

"(B) RANGE.—The reserve ratio designated by the Board of Directors for any year—

"(i) may not exceed 1.4 percent of estimated insured deposits; and

"(ii) may not be less than 1.15 percent of estimated insured deposits.

"(C) FACTORS.—In designating a reserve ratio for any year, the Board of Directors shall—

"(i) take into account the risk of losses to the Deposit Insurance Fund in such year and future years, including historic experience and potential and estimated losses from insured depository institutions;

"(ii) take into account economic conditions generally affecting insured depository institutions so as to allow the designated reserve ratio to increase during more favorable economic conditions and to decrease during less favorable economic conditions, notwithstanding the increased risks of loss that may exist during such less favorable conditions, as determined to be appropriate by the Board of Directors;

"(iii) seek to prevent sharp swings in the assessment rates for insured depository institutions; and

"(iv) take into account such other factors as the Board of Directors may determine to be appropriate, consistent with the requirements of this subparagraph.

"(D) PUBLICATION OF PROPOSED CHANGE IN RATIO.—In soliciting comment on any proposed change in the designated reserve ratio in accordance with subparagraph (A), the Board of Directors shall include in the published proposal a thorough analysis of the data and projections on which the proposal is based.".

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 3(y) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1813(y)) is amended—

(1) by striking "(y) The term" and inserting "(y) DEFINITIONS RELATING TO DEPOSIT INSURANCE FUND.—

"(1) DEPOSIT INSURANCE FUND.—The term"; and

(2) by inserting after paragraph (1) (as so designated by paragraph (1) of this subsection) the following new paragraph:

"(2) DESIGNATED RESERVE RATIO.—The term 'designated reserve ratio' means the reserve ratio designated by the Board of Directors in accordance with section 7(b)(3).".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This section and the amendments made by this section shall take effect on the date that the final regulations required under section 9(a)(1) take effect.

SEC. 6. REQUIREMENTS APPLICABLE TO THE RISK-BASED ASSESSMENT SYSTEM.

Section 7(b)(1) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817(b)(1)) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraphs:

"(E) INFORMATION CONCERNING RISK OF LOSS AND ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.—

"(i) SOURCES OF INFORMATION.—For purposes of determining risk of losses at insured depository institutions and economic conditions generally affecting depository institutions, the Corporation shall collect information, as appropriate, from all sources the Board of Directors considers appropriate, such as reports of condition, inspection reports, and other information from all Federal banking agencies, any information available from State bank supervisors, State insurance and securities regulators, the Securities and Exchange Commission (including information described in section 35), the Secretary of the Treasury, the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, the Farm Credit Administration, the Federal Trade Commission, any Federal reserve bank or Federal home loan bank, and other regulators of financial institutions, and any information available from credit rating entities, and other private economic or business analysts.

“(ii) CONSULTATION WITH FEDERAL BANKING AGENCIES.—

“(I) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subclause (II), in assessing the risk of loss to the Deposit Insurance Fund with respect to any insured depository institution, the Corporation shall consult with the appropriate Federal banking agency of such institution.

“(II) TREATMENT ON AGGREGATE BASIS.—In the case of insured depository institutions that are well capitalized (as defined in section 38) and, in the most recent examination, were found to be well managed, the consultation under subclause (I) concerning the assessment of the risk of loss posed by such institutions may be made on an aggregate basis.

“(iii) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—No provision of this paragraph shall be construed as providing any new authority for the Corporation to require submission of information by insured depository institutions to the Corporation.

“(F) MODIFICATIONS TO THE RISK-BASED ASSESSMENT SYSTEM ALLOWED ONLY AFTER NOTICE AND COMMENT.—In revising or modifying the risk-based assessment system at any time after the date of the enactment of the Federal Deposit Insurance Reform Act of 2002, the Board of Directors may implement such revisions or modification in final form only after notice and opportunity for comment.”.

SEC. 7. REFUNDS, DIVIDENDS, AND CREDITS FROM DEPOSIT INSURANCE FUND.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (e) of section 7 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1817(e)) is amended to read as follows:

“(e) REFUNDS, DIVIDENDS, AND CREDITS.—

“(1) REFUNDS OF OVERPAYMENTS.—In the case of any payment of an assessment by an insured depository institution in excess of the amount due to the Corporation, the Corporation may—

“(A) refund the amount of the excess payment to the insured depository institution; or

“(B) credit such excess amount toward the payment of subsequent assessments until such credit is exhausted.

“(2) DIVIDENDS FROM EXCESS AMOUNTS IN DEPOSIT INSURANCE FUND.—

“(A) RESERVE RATIO EQUAL TO OR IN EXCESS OF 1.4 PERCENT OF ESTIMATED INSURED DEPOSITS.—Whenever the reserve ratio of the Deposit Insurance Fund equals or exceeds 1.4 percent of estimated insured deposits, the Corporation shall declare the amount in the Fund in excess of the amount required to maintain the reserve ratio at the designated reserve ratio in effect at such time, as dividends to be paid to insured depository institutions.

“(B) RESERVE RATIO EQUAL TO OR IN EXCESS OF 1.35 PERCENT OF ESTIMATED INSURED DEPOSITS AND LESS THAN 1.4 PERCENT.—Whenever the reserve ratio of the Deposit Insurance Fund equals or exceeds 1.35 percent of estimated insured deposits and is less than 1.4 percent of such deposits, the Corporation shall declare the amount in the Fund that is equal to 50 percent of the amount in excess of the amount required to maintain the reserve ratio at 1.35 percent of the estimated insured deposits as dividends to be paid to insured depository institutions.

“(i) IN GENERAL.—Solely for the purposes of dividend distribution under this paragraph and credit distribution under paragraph (3)(B), the Corporation shall determine each insured depository institution's relative contribution to the Deposit Insurance Fund (or any predecessor deposit insurance fund) for calculating such institution's share of any dividend or credit declared under this paragraph or paragraph (3)(B), taking into account the factors described in clause (ii).

“(ii) FACTORS FOR DISTRIBUTION.—In implementing this paragraph and paragraph (3)(B) in accordance with regulations, the Corporation shall take into account the following factors:

“(I) The ratio of the assessment base of an insured depository institution (including any predecessor) on December 31, 1996, to the assessment base of all eligible insured depository institutions on that date.

“(II) The total amount of assessments paid on or after January 1, 1997, by an insured depository institution (including any predecessor) to the Deposit Insurance Fund (and any predecessor deposit insurance fund).

“(III) That portion of assessments paid by an insured depository institution (including any predecessor) that reflects higher levels of risk assumed by such institution.

“(IV) Such other factors as the Corporation may determine to be appropriate.

“(D) NOTICE AND OPPORTUNITY FOR COMMENT.—The calculation, declaration, and payment of dividends under this paragraph shall be made at such times, in such manner, and on such conditions as the Corporation shall prescribe by regulation, after notice and opportunity for comment.

“(3) CREDIT POOL.—

“(A) ONE-TIME CREDIT BASED ON TOTAL ASSESSMENT BASE AT YEAR-END 1996.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—Before the end of the 270-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of the Federal Deposit Insurance Reform Act of 2002, the Board of Directors shall, by regulation, provide for a credit to each eligible insured depository institution, based on the assessment base of the institution (including any predecessor institution) on December 31, 1996, as compared to the combined aggregate assessment base of all eligible insured depository institutions, taking into account such factors as the Board of Directors may determine to be appropriate.

“(ii) CREDIT LIMIT.—The aggregate amount of credits available under clause (i) to all eligible insured depository institutions shall equal the amount that the Corporation could collect if the Corporation imposed an assessment of 12 basis points on the combined assessment base of the Bank Insurance Fund and the Savings Association Insurance Fund as of December 31, 2001.

“(iii) ELIGIBLE INSURED DEPOSITORY INSTITUTION DEFINED.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term ‘eligible insured depository institution’ means any insured depository institution that—

“(I) was in existence on December 31, 1996, and paid a deposit insurance assessment prior to that date; or “(II) is a successor to any insured depository institution described in subclause (II).

“(iv) APPLICATION OF CREDITS.—

“(I) IN GENERAL.—The amount of a credit to any eligible insured depository institution under this paragraph may be applied by the Corporation to those portions of the assessments imposed on such institution under subsection (b) that become due for assessment periods beginning after the effective date of regulations prescribed under clause (i).

“(II) REGULATIONS.—The regulations prescribed under clause (i) shall establish the qualifications and procedures governing the application of assessment credits pursuant to subclause (I).

“(v) CRITERIA FOR DETERMINATION.—In determining whether to provide assessment credits under this paragraph and the amounts of any such credits, the Board of Directors shall take into account the factors for designating the reserve ratio under subsection (b)(3) and the factors for setting assessments under subsection (b)(2)(B).

“(vi) LIMITATION ON AMOUNT OF CREDIT FOR CERTAIN DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS.—In the case of an insured depository institution that exhibits financial, operational, or compliance weaknesses ranging from moderately severe to unsatisfactory, or is not adequately capitalized (as defined in section 38) at the beginning of an assessment period, the amount of any credit allowed under this paragraph against the assessment on that depository institution for such period may not exceed the amount calculated by applying to that depository institution the average assessment rate on all insured depository institutions for such assessment period.

“(vii) PREDECESSOR DEFINED.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term ‘predecessor’, when used with respect to any insured depository institution, includes any other insured depository institution acquired by or merged with such insured depository institution.

“(B) ON-GOING CREDIT POOL.—

“(i) IN GENERAL.—In addition to the credit provided pursuant to subparagraph (A) and subject to the limitation contained in clause (vi) of such subparagraph, the Corporation shall, by regulation, establish an on-going system of credits to be applied against future assessments under subsection (b)(1) on the same basis as the dividends provided under paragraph (2)(C).

“(ii) LIMITATION ON CREDITS UNDER CERTAIN CIRCUMSTANCES.—No credits may be allowed by the Corporation under this subparagraph during any period in which—

“(I) the reserve ratio of the Deposit Insurance Fund is less than the designated reserve ratio of such Fund; or “(II) the designated reserve ratio of the Fund is less than 1.25 percent of the amount of estimated insured deposits.

“(4) ADMINISTRATIVE REVIEW.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The regulations prescribed under paragraph (2)(D) and subparagraphs (A) and (B) of paragraph (3) shall include provisions allowing an insured depository institution a reasonable opportunity to challenge administratively the amount of the credit or dividend determined under paragraph (2) or (3) for such institution.

“(B) ADMINISTRATIVE REVIEW.—Any review under subparagraph (A) of any determination of the Corporation under paragraph (2) or (3) shall be final and not subject to judicial review.”.

(b) DEFINITION OF RESERVE RATIO.—Section 3(y) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12

U.S.C. 1813(y)) (as amended by section 5(b) of this Act) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(3) Reserve ratio.—The term 'reserve ratio', when used with regard to the Deposit Insurance Fund other than in connection with a reference to the designated reserve ratio, means the ratio of the net worth of the Deposit Insurance Fund to the value of the aggregate estimated insured deposits.".

SEC. 8. DEPOSIT INSURANCE FUND RESTORATION PLANS.

Section 7(b)(3) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (12 U.S.C. 1917(b)(3)) (as amended by section 5(a) of this Act) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(E) DIF restoration plans.—

"(i) In general.—Whenever—

"(I) the Corporation projects that the reserve ratio of the Deposit Insurance Fund will fall below the designated reserve ratio within 6 months of such determination; or

"(II) the reserve ratio of the Deposit Insurance Fund actually falls below the designated reserve ratio without any determination under subclause (I) having been made, the Corporation shall establish and implement a Deposit Insurance Fund restoration plan within 30 days that meets the requirements of clause (ii) or (iii), as the case may be, and such other conditions as the Corporation determines to be appropriate.

"(ii) Requirements of plan if reserve ratio does not fall below 1.0 percent.—If the reserve ratio of the Deposit Insurance Fund is not projected to or has not fallen below an amount equal to 1.0 percent of the aggregate estimated insured deposits, a Deposit Insurance Fund restoration plan meets the requirements of this clause if the plan provides that the reserve ratio of the Fund will meet or exceed the designated reserve ratio that was in effect before the occurrence of the event described in subclause (I) or (II) of clause (i) before the end of the 3-year period beginning upon implementation of the plan.

"(iii) Requirements of plan if reserve ratio falls below 1.0 percent.—If the reserve ratio of the Deposit Insurance Fund has fallen below an amount equal to 1.0 percent of the aggregate estimated insured deposits, a Deposit Insurance Fund restoration plan meets the requirements of this clause if the plan provides that the reserve ratio of the Fund—

"(I) will meet or exceed an amount equal to 1.0 percent of the aggregate estimated insured deposits before the end of the 2-year period beginning upon implementation of the plan; and

"(II) will meet or exceed the designated reserve ratio that was in effect before the occurrence of the event described in subclause (I) or (II) of clause (i) before the end of the 3-year period beginning on the date the reserve ratio first meets or exceeds an amount equal to 1.0 percent of the aggregate estimated insured deposits after the implementation of the plan.

"(iv) Transparency.—Not more than 90 days after the Corporation establishes and implements a restoration plan under clause (i), the Corporation shall publish in the Federal Register a detailed analysis of the factors considered and the basis for the actions taken with regard to the plan.".

SEC. 9. REGULATIONS REQUIRED.

(a) In General.—Not later than 270 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall prescribe final regulations, after notice and opportunity for comment—

(1) designating the reserve ratio for the Deposit Insurance Fund in accordance with section 7(b)(3) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (as amended by section 5 of this Act);

(2) implementing increases in deposit insurance coverage in accordance with the amendments made by section 3 of this Act;

(3) implementing the dividend requirement under section 7(e)(2) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (as amended by section 7 of this Act).

(4) implementing the 1-time assessment credit to certain insured depository institutions in accordance with section 7(e)(3) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as amended by section 7 of this Act, including the qualifications and procedures under which the Corporation would apply assessment credits; and

(5) providing for assessments under section 7(b) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, as amended by this Act.

(b) Rule of Construction.—No provision of this Act or any amendment made by this Act shall be construed as affecting the authority of the Corporation to set or collect deposit insurance assessments before the effective date of the final regulation prescribed under subsection (a).

SEC. 10. STUDIES OF FDIC STRUCTURE AND EXPENSES AND CERTAIN ACTIVITIES AND FURTHER POSSIBLE CHANGES TO DEPOSIT INSURANCE SYSTEM.

(a) Study by Comptroller General.—

(1) Study required.—The Comptroller General shall conduct a study of the following issues:

(A) The efficiency and effectiveness of the administration of the prompt corrective action program under section 38 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act by the Federal banking agencies (as defined in section 3 of such Act), including the degree of effectiveness of such agencies in identifying troubled depository institutions and taking effective action with respect to such institutions, and the degree of accuracy of the risk assessments made by the Corporation.

(B) The appropriateness of the organizational structure of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation for the mission of the Corporation taking into account—

(i) the current size and complexity of the business of insured depository institutions (as such term is defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act);

(ii) the extent to which the organizational structure contributes to or reduces operational inefficiencies that increase operational costs; and

(iii) the effectiveness of internal controls.

(2) Report to the congress.—The Comptroller General shall submit a report to the Congress before the end of the 1-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act containing the findings and conclusions of the Comptroller General with respect to the study required under paragraph (1) together with such recommendations for legislative or administrative action as the Comptroller General may determine to be appropriate.

(b) Internal Study by the FDIC.—

(1) Study required.—Concurrently with the study required to be conducted by the Comptroller General under subsection (a), the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall conduct an internal study of the same conditions and factors included in the study under subsection (a).

(2) Report to the congress.—The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall submit a report to the Congress before the end of the 1-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act containing the findings and conclusions of the Corporation with respect to the study required under paragraph (1) together with such recommendations for legislative or administrative action as the Board of Directors of the Corporation may determine to be appropriate.

(c) Study of Further Possible Changes to Deposit Insurance System.—

(1) Study required.—The Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the National Credit Union Administration Board shall each conduct a study of the following:

(A) The feasibility of establishing a voluntary deposit insurance system for deposits in excess of the maximum amount of deposit insurance for any depositor and the potential benefits and the potential adverse consequences that may result from the establishment of any such system.

(B) The feasibility of privatizing all deposit insurance at insured depository institutions and insured credit unions.

(2) Report.—Before the end of the 1-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act, the Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation and the National Credit Union Administration Board shall each submit a report to the Congress on the study required under paragraph (1) containing the findings and conclusions of the reporting agency together with such recommendations for legislative or administrative changes as the agency may determine to be appropriate.

(d) Study Regarding Appropriate Deposit Base in Designating Reserve Ratio.—

(1) Study required.—The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall conduct a study of the feasibility of using actual domestic deposits rather than estimated insured deposits in calculating the reserve ratio of the Deposit Insurance Fund and designating a reserve ratio for such Fund.

(2) Report.—The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall submit a report to the Congress before the end of the 1-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act containing the findings and conclusions of the Corporation with respect to the study required under paragraph (1) together with such recommendations for legislative or administrative action as the Board of Directors of the Corporation may determine to be appropriate.

(e) Study of Reserve Methodology and Accounting for Loss.—

(1) Study required.—The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, in consultation with the Comptroller General, shall conduct a study of the reserve methodology and loss accounting used by the Corporation during the period beginning on January 1, 1992, and ending December 31, 2002, with respect to insured depository institutions in a troubled condition (as defined in the regulations prescribed pursuant to section 32(f) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act).

(2) Factors to be included.—In conducting the study pursuant to paragraph (1), the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall—

(A) consider the overall effectiveness and accuracy of the methodology used by the Corporation for establishing and maintaining reserves and estimating and accounting for losses at insured depository institutions, during the period described in such paragraph;

(B) consider the appropriateness and reliability of information and criteria used by the Corporation in determining—

(i) whether an insured depository institution was in a troubled condition; and

(ii) the amount of any loss anticipated at such institution;

(C) analyze the actual historical loss experience over the period described in paragraph (1) and the causes of the exceptionally high rate of losses experienced by the Corporation in the final 3 years of that period; and

(D) rate the Corporation's efforts of the Corporation to reduce losses in such 3-year period to minimally acceptable levels and to historical levels.

(3) REPORT REQUIRED.—The Board of Directors of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall submit a report to the Congress before June 30, 2003, containing the findings and conclusions of the Corporation, in consultation with the Comptroller General, with respect to the study required under paragraph (1), together with such recommendations for legislative or administrative action as the Board of Directors may determine to be appropriate.

SEC. 11. TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS TO THE FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE ACT RELATING TO THE MERGER OF THE BIF AND SAIF.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on this legislation, and to insert extraneous material on the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. OSE. Mr. Speaker, I am in opposition to the bill, and I have a procedural question to ask as to who would claim the time in opposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE) opposed to the motion?

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I am not opposed to the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. OSE) will control 20 minutes in opposition to the motion.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 3717, the Federal Deposit Insurance Reform Act of 2002. The U.S. has the largest, most complex, most stable banking system in the world. Deposit insurance is one of the major reasons for this stability. Today we will strengthen this system so that it continues to serve as a model for the world.

Depositors, taxpayers, and depository institutions will be well served by this legislation which will modernize the Federal deposit insurance system. Federal deposit insurance was created by Congress in 1934 and it has successfully served the American people for 68 years. Public confidence has been maintained and the stability of the Nation's banking system has been preserved during periods of financial uncertainty.

The deposit insurance system has been significantly modified only twice since 1934, both times in response to the savings and loan crisis of the late 1980s and early 1990s. During this crisis, the FDIC and the RTC resolved 2,363 failures of insured institutions involving more than $700 billion in assets. As FDIC Chairman Powell stated, "There were no bank runs, no panics, no disruptions to financial markets, and no debilitating impact on overall economic activity." The existence of Federal deposit insurance was a critical factor in the financial markets remaining relatively stable.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3717, though technical in nature, seeks to apply the experiences of the last decade to today's banking marketplace. It is 21st century legislation for a 21st century banking industry. While the purpose of deposit insurance remains the same, industry growth, bank expansion from new powers, and the integration of banking and securities activities require that the scope and coverage of deposit insurance evolve so as to reflect the realities of a modern financial services industry.

Moreover, the presence of Federal deposit insurance continues to be a key consideration for consumers in their decisions about where they do their banking and what level of deposit risk they are willing to assume.

Mr. Speaker, there is broad consensus in this body. The Bush administration and the Federal banking and thrift regulators and business and consumer groups are in favor of improving and strengthening the deposit insurance system and making it more responsive to the cyclical nature of banking activities in the post-Gramm-Leach-Bliley financial and economic environment. This legislation fulfills our commitment to the American public. Indeed, H.R. 3717 was reported out of the committee on a bipartisan vote of 52 to 2, a testimony to its responsiveness and timeliness.

This legislation is both responsive and responsible. It recognizes that depositors, savers, and investors have integrated financial needs, and that the deposit insurance system must be stronger, more flexible, and adaptable to changing depositor behaviors in "real time."

This bill allows the FDIC to do just that. It provides the FDIC with the necessary authority and supervisory tools to manage the deposit insurance fund in a way that balances all affected interests. It recognizes that all financial institutions present some type of risk, and that deposit insurance benefits all stakeholders, consumers, institutions and taxpayers, and that its associated benefit and costs should be allocated evenly and fairly. It expands benefits for depositors based upon their current needs and ensures premiums are assessed on insured financial institutions based upon their applicable risks.

Finally, this bill has mechanisms to ensure that the deposit insurance fund grows responsibly, that it remains at a more than adequate level during good and bad times, and that excess funds are returned to communities for loans and other economic growth programs.

I want to thank the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions and Consumer Credit of the Committee on Financial Services, for taking on this challenging, highly technical legislative project and for engaging all of the major stakeholders in developing a bipartisan piece of well-balanced, highly effective 21st century legislation. I also want to thank all of the bipartisan cosponsors of this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge my colleagues to support this bill. By doing so we ensure the public continues to maintain its confidence in the U.S. financial services industry, by far the most stable in the world.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS) be permitted to control the remainder of my time for consideration of this legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OSE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to oppose this legislation, and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Much of this bill is useful, and it is needed reform, and I do want to commend the chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY), and the chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS) for their hard work. In fact, I fully support most of the reforms in this bill that will provide needed flexibility and stability to the insurance corporation and the deposit insurance fund. I support merging the Bank Insurance Fund and the Savings Association Insurance Fund. I support the flexibility provided to adjust reserve ratios to reflect risk, and I support the increases in protection that are provided for retirement fund accounts.

However, there is something here that I cannot support, and it, frankly, in balance, outweighs the rest of the bill. That is that I cannot support a bill that places the taxpayers at greater risk without any benefit for consumers.

This bill, in part, would increase the insured levels of individual accounts from $100,000 per account to $130,000 per account, and also it includes future automatic increases that would result from inflation. The fact of the matter is I do not understand why this particular provision was included when every expert has testified or written that this is, in fact, a bad idea.

Let me just highlight a few quotes from some of our Nation's top experts on fiscal policy.

The first I would cite is Alan Greenspan, the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, who testified in opposition to these particular increases in deposit insurance coverages in front of both the House and Senate committees and followed up his testimony with a written letter. In his most recent testimony, Chairman Greenspan said, "In the Board's judgment, it is unlikely that increased coverage, even by indexing, would add measurably to the stability of the banking system today. Macroeconomic policy and other elements of the safety net, combined with the current, still significant level of deposit insurance, continue to be an important bulwark against bank runs. Thus, the problem that increased coverage is designed to solve must be related to either the individual depositor, the party originally intended to be protected, or to the individual bank or thrift. Clearly, both groups would prefer higher coverage if it costs them nothing, but Congress needs to be clear about the nature of a specific problem for which increased coverage would be the solution."

Clearly he is suggesting in no uncertain terms that this is a solution in search of a problem.

The Bush administration also opposes increases in the coverage. Both Secretary of the Treasury Paul O'Neill and Under Secretary of the Treasury for Domestic Monetary Policy Peter R. Fisher have testified on this issue. Secretary O'Neill also wrote to the committee noting that, "However, the administration continues to believe that the deposit insurance coverage level should remain unchanged. There is no evidence that an increase in the coverage level would promote competition or materially improve the ability of community banks to obtain funds. Moreover, raising coverage could weaken market discipline and increase risk to the FDIC and, ultimately, the taxpayers."

Under Secretary Fisher said just 2 weeks ago, "Given the lack of potential benefits for consumers or of potential improvement in banking system competition, we cannot justify the increase in the government's off-balance sheet liabilities that would result from higher deposit insurance coverage limits. These higher contingent liabilities enlarge the exposure of the insurance fund and ultimately of taxpayers to potential future losses. Moreover, increasing the overall coverage limit could weaken market discipline and further increase the level of risk to the FDIC and taxpayers."

My colleagues will note the similarity between that last piece of quote of Mr. Fisher and Mr. O'Neill, Secretary O'Neill's. Again, I repeat, Secretary O'Neill said, "Raising coverage could weaken market discipline and increase risk." Mr. Fisher said, "Increasing the overall coverage limit could weaken market discipline and further increase the level of risk."

However, this is not all of the people who have testified. Other leaders have also spoken up. The Comptroller of the Currency, John D. Hawke, Jr. testified, "We see no compelling evidence that increased coverage levels would offer depositors substantial benefits. Anyone who wants to use insured bank deposits as a means of holding their wealth can do so virtually without limits, subject only to the minor inconvenience of having to open accounts at multiple banks. Despite the ability of depositors to achieve almost unlimited coverage at banks, money market mutual funds, which have some of the same features as bank transactions accounts and generally offer higher returns than bank deposits, today hold over $2 trillion. Because these funds could easily be placed in insured accounts, these facts suggest that many depositors are not concerned about the additional risk involved in holding their liquid funds in uninsured form, and that households are comfortable with the status quo."

The Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision, Mr. James Gilleran, also testified on this subject saying, "While I applaud efforts to increase the ability of institutions, particularly small community-based depositories, to attract more deposits, I am not convinced that increasing the insurance cap will achieve this result. I do not think this approach can be supported from a cost-benefit standpoint. Increasing the current insurance coverage level to $130,000 would incur significant costs for insured institutions, since premiums would necessarily be increased. The benefits of an increase are unclear. I have heard from many of our institutions that they see no merit to bumping up the current limit for standard accounts. In their view, projected increases in insured deposits would not lead to a substantive increase in new accounts. Moreover, individuals with amounts in excess of $100,000 already have numerous opportunities to invest their funds in one or more depository institutions and obtain full insurance coverage for their funds."

Mr. Speaker, I want to again just repeat, the Comptroller of the Currency John Hawke says people have the ability to open multiple accounts to hold their money, and that, in fact, they seem to have personally gotten comfortable with the level of risk in excess of $100,000; and Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision James Gilleran says people have significant and ample opportunities to open accounts at multiple depository institutions and provide themselves with the insurance coverage that they might otherwise seek.

Now, interestingly enough, it is not just the administration officials who are speaking out. The Financial Services Roundtable wrote to the chairman, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY), with their concerns noting, "We are writing in opposition to the provisions of H.R. 3717 that would raise deposit insurance coverage levels and increase premiums on all institutions. Raising coverage could weaken market discipline and increase risk to the FDIC, all insured institutions and, ultimately, taxpayers. The FDIC has said that these coverage increases could dilute the fund by as much as 13.6 basis points or $6.1 billion," $6.1 billion. "We believe that this is too high a price to pay for something that could yield minimal, if any, benefit." This letter was signed by a former Congressman, Steve Bartlett.

In addition, the Association for Financial Professionals, which represents many of the men and women in the business community who deal with finances every day, wrote just this week that, "The deposit insurance coverage level should remain unchanged. It is not clear to us that a higher coverage limit would address funding concerns at smaller institutions. But, more importantly, we do not believe that the use of the deposit insurance system for the competitive purpose of trying to help some banks with their funding is an appropriate public policy position. Deposit insurance coverage is not a competitive issue. Coverage is intended to benefit the depositors, not banks."

The Association of Financial Professionals chair also testified before the subcommittee of the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS) on this very issue. George Kauffman, a professor of banking and finance at Loyola University in Chicago, Illinois, also wrote on the issue, noting that an increase in coverage "is likely to encourage some depositors to become less concerned about the financial health of their banks, and banks to take more risks, which would increase the chances of bank losses and failures."

Many of the expert witnesses who testified before the subcommittee of the gentleman from Alabama spoke at great detail in opposition to an increase in coverage. I do not know why Members disregarded the advice they solicited.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BACHUS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. LaFALCE), the ranking member of the Committee.

Mr. LaFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions and Consumer Credit for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, our Federal deposit insurance system is a critically important element in our economic stability, and it has served our people quite well for almost 70 years. I do believe that H.R. 3717 makes some very important improvements to that system.

Among the bill's strong points: it would merge the bank insurance fund, the BIF, and the savings association insurance fund, the SAIF. It would make the system less pro-cyclical by permitting the FDIC to charge risk-based assessments at all times, and it would eliminate the so-called "cliff" of extremely high required assessments should the fund fall below the Designated Reserve Ratio for an extended period.

It also deals with the so-called "free rider" problem. It also provides the FDIC with enhanced flexibility to manage the fund.

Now, for years I and a number of other Members and industry leaders and regulators have been calling for these reforms; and I am pleased, very pleased, that these reforms are included in this legislation that we consider today.

I am also very pleased that the long-standing law encouraging life-line banking that the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATERS) has promoted since she has been in Congress will be made operational by a provision in this bill that she drafted. All those factors persuaded me to support going forward on this bill.

On the other hand, there are some provisions of the bill, most of them articulated by the gentleman from California (Mr. OSE), that do give me some concern. I hope we will be able to give closer attention to them in conference, should we ever get to a conference. These are features that could result in increased risk to the Federal deposit insurance funds and the banking system.

Specifically, I am concerned that the increase in the coverage limits for standard bank deposits and the increase in the limits for municipal deposits, especially, could create increased incentives for risk-taking by banks, thrifts, and credit unions without an appropriate compensating benefit for depositors, and without any assurance that the increased limits will result in a net increase in deposit in the institutions that claim these increases are needed to fund loans to their customers.

My concerns are not isolated. They are shared by Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, by the FDIC chairman, by the former Secretary of the Treasury, Larry Summers, and by the present Secretary of the Treasury, Paul O'Neill. Mr. O'Neill points out that "an increase in coverage would primarily benefit high net worth individuals, and do little for the great majority of savers who have deposit balances far below the current coverage limit."

To raise the general coverage level to $130,000 would, the FDIC estimates, reduce the fund balance by almost four basis points immediately, and more than an additional four basis points in the future. Now, eight basis points may not seem like much, but it would be the difference today between a combined fund ratio of 1.29 above today's statutory designated reserve ratio and 1.21, which is below the current DRR of 1.25.

Under current law, a fund ratio at that level would definitely result in increased premiums and under this legislation would likely prompt the FDIC to begin to assess higher insurance premiums.

Every basis point of premiums takes money out of the banking system and away from lending to communities. The CBO predicts that the bill will result in a net premium increase to banks, thrifts, and credit unions of $3.5 billion over 10 years. That is $3.5 billion that could be used for community lending.

I am encouraged that the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman OXLEY) and the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS), have been willing to address some of my concerns about the increased coverage by agreeing to reduce the maximum municipal deposit insurance limit from $5 million to $2 million. The lower limit reduces risk to the deposit insurance fund and the banking system, but it still permits more than 80 percent of the Nation's local governments to place all their cash in their local community banks, while enjoying the maximum FDIC protection provided by the bill.

On balance, however, especially because of the merger of the BIF and the SAIF, the Federal Deposit Insurance Reform Act of 2002 represents a serious effort to reform our current deposit insurance system, and it should be taken to the next step in the legislative process.

I look forward to working with the chairman of the full committee, the subcommittee, the ranking members, and the Members of the other body to reduce the legislation's potential increased risk to the Federal insured deposit system, and hence, the American taxpayer.

Mr. OSE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY).

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague and friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. OSE), for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, today we are considering one of the most important reforms to our Nation's banking system that Congress will vote on for many years. It was at our Nation's darkest economic hour that the deposit insurance system was founded to save our country's banking system. The bill we are considering on the floor today makes many positive changes to the system, but also includes one provision that in my opinion is seriously damaging.

As other Members have stated, the underlying bill takes some very important steps forward. We increase the long-term stability of the deposit insurance funds by combining the BIF and the SAIF. This merger is long past due.

We also eliminate the 23 basis point "cliff" that mandated a massive potential charge to the system at the worst possible time. Additionally, the bill contains language added during the full committee markup in the amendment in the nature of a substitute dealing with calculating dividends and credits that I authored with the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER).

Minor changes to the language of this provision have been made, in full agreement with the FDIC and the bill on the floor before us today.

At its heart, the provision ensures that any excess funds that are returned to financial institutions under the bill, either through assessment credits or dividends, be given in proportion to the contributions these institutions have made to capitalize the insurance funds. Banks and thrifts have made sizeable contributions to the deposit insurance funds over the years. Those contributions should be given great weight when determining what proportion of any excess in the deposit insurance fund those institutions are entitled to.

Importantly, not only do these provisions recognize the contributions of those institutions that originally capitalized insurance funds, but they also recognize the new capital put in by institutions now and in the future. In this way, a fair distribution of any excess capital in the insurance fund will occur. This is a very positive step, and I thank the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. BEREUTER) and his staff for working with me and my staff on this language.

Unfortunately, this bill also plays a dangerous game by increasing deposit insurance coverage by 30 percent, and increasing risk to the deposit insurance fund.

I sat through many hearings on this issue and listened to all the testimony. Today, I am in general agreement with statements by FDIC Chairman Don Powell, Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, Treasury Secretary Paul O'Neill, and many if not most in the banking industry itself who do not see a reason for a major increase in basic insurance coverage.

As Secretary O'Neill wrote to the committee, and I quote, "An increase in coverage would primarily benefit high net worth individuals and do little for the great majority of savers."

Alan Greenspan weighed in writing that "The FDIC's recent projections of losses suggest that any expansion in coverage would have to be matched by increases in premiums in order to raise the reserve coverage of the fund."

Accordingly, I had planned to offer an amendment with my good friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. OSE), to keep the coverage level at the $100,000 level. This is a huge issue that Congress should have to decide on the record, and I would have preferred that this bill come to the floor under such a rule.

While I strongly oppose this increase in coverage, I am supporting the bill on the floor today because I believe it improves the system overall. I am truly hopeful that the Senate is able to fix the coverage level as the process moves forward; and I want to thank the ranking member, the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE), and the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATERS) and the gentleman from Ohio (Chairman OXLEY) and the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS) for moving this very important bill forward. I hope the final product that returns from the Senate repairs the flaws with the legislation we are voting on today.

Mr. BACHUS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. KELLY) to speak in support of the legislation.

Mrs. KELLY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Alabama for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support for H.R. 3717, the Federal Deposit Insurance Reform Act. This legislation should be supported for two important reasons: first, it increases deposit insurance coverage for the first time since 1980; and, second, the bill introduces flexibility into the designated reserve ratio.

As we are all aware, the FDIC insurance plays a critical role in our Nation's financial system, ensuring both consumer confidence in banks and stability in the system. Today, community banks are facing serious funding challenges due to the lack of core deposits, which is why an increase in the deposit insurance coverage levels is such an important issue.

While I support higher deposit insurance levels, I also support the increase in the bill which raises the Federal deposit coverage to $130,000. It provides for automatic inflation adjustments and provides for up to $2 million in municipal deposit coverage.

Increasing coverage levels would benefit communities, retirees, consumers, farmers, the economy, and small business customers by enabling depositors to keep more of their money in local banks where it can be reinvested for community projects and local lending.

In addition, the legislation removes the current hard target of the designated reserve ratio and replaces it with a flexible range. This change will allow banks to do their job and provide credit when it is most important: when the economy is struggling.

This is an acknowledgment of the harsh effect these assessments can have on the economy and allows the FDIC to coordinate the imposition of such assessments with the Federal Reserve. This legislation enjoys strong bipartisan support, having passed the Committee on Financial Services by a vote of 52 to 2.

I ask all my colleagues to join me in support of strong legislation which will enhance the effectiveness of the FDIC and help consumers and our communities.

Mr. OSE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I feel like Churchill up here when I hear the 52 to 2 vote.

Mr. Speaker, I do want to say, one of the things that the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. KELLY) mentioned was the impact on, in particular, rural communities, where we have such trouble keeping deposits in the community because of the ability to go get higher returns outside.

Representing a rural community, we could have dealt with this particular issue by crafting, in my opinion, some sort of vehicle whereby banks in rural communities, under some set of conditions, could have addressed that. I regret that this idea only came to me late in the process, but I would hope that the conference committee would at least consider that in their deliberations.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. ROHRABACHER).

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. BACHUS. Mr. Speaker, parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman consumed about a minute on that explanation, and that does go towards his time, does it not?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). It does.

Mr. OSE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. ROHRABACHER).

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to H.R. 3717. The last speaker, my colleague, the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. KELLY), mentioned that this proposal would be the first major increase in the Federal deposit insurance in 20 years. Well, let us take a look at what happened 20 years ago when we had a major increase in federal deposit insurance. What happened? Let us think about it.

What happened 20 years ago when there was a major increase? There was a complete meltdown of the savings and loan industry and it ended up costing us, the taxpayers, tens of billions, if not hundreds of billions, of dollars. I am not sure exactly what it was, but it was one of the worst economic catastrophes this country has had to deal with.

So here we are again. We want to have a major increase in Federal deposit insurance. Now, let us make this clear, what Federal deposit insurance is supposed to be all about. Federal deposit insurance came about in the 1930s as a way of trying to protect the little guy and give the little guy some confidence to put his or her money into a small bank so that that person would have some confidence and their savings would be protected. I think it started out at $3,500. For a long time it stayed at $10,000. It stayed there for a long time at $10,000 because that is how much regular Americans could expect to try to save.

Well, guess what? Back in 1980 they took it up to $100,000 for a deposit insurance; and then on top of that, it is not just one account of $100,000 we are talking about.

Now, we are talking about not just protecting the little guy who wants to save 5 or $10,000 in an account, we are talking about rich people taking advantage of a program that was established to help little guys, so you have multiple accounts. As the gentleman from California (Mr. OSE) pointed out, rich people can take $100,000 and just pour it into account after account after being in various different banks. And, in fact, your own bank, one bank can sort of manipulate the system so that an individual, a wealthy individual, can have seven individual accounts in one bank.

Now, this was not set up to try to protect people who are multi, multimillionaires, but that is what it has turned into. And, by the way, this increase, this increase in the level will only make that matter worse. What we could do is we should be going in the opposite direction. What this has evolved into and what this continues to evolve into is the little guys now are being taxed in order to take away the risk for the big guys.

So what we now have is a Federal deposit insurance program that taxes the little guy in order to protect the fat cats from any risk. That is not the way it was supposed to be. And by increasing that deposit insurance, we are making that even worse.

And by the way, the gentleman from California (Mr. OSE) quoted expert after expert after expert saying that this would have the same destabilizing effect that it had in 1980, to increase this deposit insurance. It takes away from people's consideration of where they are placing their money. It takes risk off their shoulders so it makes them more irresponsible even to a certain degree. We do not want to put more irresponsibilities into our system. Let us do the opposite. Let us decrease Federal deposit insurance so it only protects the little guy instead of opening up our system to be exploited by a bunch of fat cats at the expense of the little guy.

I would ask all of my colleagues to oppose this dramatic increase in Federal deposit insurance even though there are some reforms that were part of this legislation that are certainly good reforms.

Mr. BACHUS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota (Mr. THUNE) in support of the legislation.

Mr. THUNE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the Deposit Insurance Reform Act and I am pleased that it has been brought to the floor. I credit the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS) for his hard work and leadership as well as colleagues on both sides of the aisle and the Committee on Financial Services for getting this bill to the House floor for a vote.

Deposit insurance helps banks keep local deposits at work in local communities. In the communities of South Dakota, deposit insurance helps banks attract deposits to fund consumer and small business loans, community development projects, mortgages, education assistance and small business start-ups.

As we know, this legislation increases deposit insurance coverage to $130,000 and that indexes it for inflation. This will be helpful to rural communities as it helps to mitigate the impact of the declining rural population and fewer depositors. I believe that local dollars should be invested locally and this bill will make that happen. Rural banks often find depositors see the current $100,000 insurance limit as a deposit cap, limiting their ability to grow, thrive and serve their communities. Additional deposits over $100,000 often force rural residents to send deposits to other banks outside of their area. Rural residents, oftentimes elderly, should not have to send their deposits elsewhere. They ought to feel safe and secure depositing their funds in the local banks where the money can be used to support local lending and local economies.

If it stays in the community, this money can serve as lendable funds for local projects in development in a small community. When depositors send their money to other communities, the cycle of reduced investment and opportunity and increased population flights only continues.

This legislation will also help farmers keep on pace with the dynamically changing agricultural economy. As production input costs and technology increase, local banks are constrained by artificially low deposit insurance caps, while at the same time being asked to make loans for increasingly costly farming operations. These loans can easily exceed what the business or farming operation can have insured at that banking institution.

Mr. Speaker, I believe H.R. 3717 is common-sense legislation. It will provide security for bank customers and diversify the economies of small communities. I ask my colleagues to vote yes. This reform will be good for rural communities across this country that many of us represent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS) has 6½ minutes remaining. The gentleman from California (Mr. OSE) has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. OSE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BACHUS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATERS) to speak in support of the legislation.

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3717. Deposit insurance has served America well for over 65 years. It has maintained public confidence in our banking system throughout times of prosperity and times that were not so good.

The bill we reported out of the Committee on Financial Services is designed to maintain and strengthen today's system for tomorrow's consumers so that we can ensure that we have a deposit insurance system that will serve us well throughout the new millennium. I am particularly concerned about our small independent community banks and I believe they will benefit from this legislation.

Not everyone agrees with this increase in FDIC. However, the Senate will continue to reconcile some of the differences that have been articulated, but I believe we should vote to pass this bill off the floor. This legislation merges the bank insurance funds and the savings association insurance funds into one deposit insurance fund. It also grants the FDIC increased flexibility to manage the funds, particularly in replacing the hard trigger designated reserve ratio with a range which will permit the FDIC to respond to economic conditions in setting the designated reserve ratio.

I am particularly pleased that the legislation includes an amendment that I offered during subcommittee consideration. This amendment represents a small but important change that will implement a law that has been on the books since 1991. During the consideration of the FDIC Improvement Act, then-Congressman Tom Ridge and Floyd Flake sponsored legislation to provide for a discount in deposit insurance assessment for deposits attributable to lifeline for basic banking accounts.

Basic banking is just what it sounds like. At least one quarter of low income families are currently unbanked, that is, they exist outside of the traditional banking system, often relying on check-cashing services or notorious payday lenders to facilitate basic transactions, generally paying exorbitant fees in the process.

We all take for granted the ease and convenience of having a checking account, but many families lack that luxury because they are unable to maintain large minimum balances in these accounts. These lifeline accounts, by their very nature, do not hold large deposits.

Furthermore, the FDIC concedes that any effect on the fund would be negligible. However, implementation of the Flake/Ridge provision was wholly dependent on appropriated funds which never materialized.

My amendment simply removes the requirement for appropriated funds so that this provision, after more than a decade on the books, can finally be implemented. My amendment was adopted by voice vote at subcommittee and upheld at full committee by a bipartisan vote. It attracted the support of both industry and consumer groups, including AARP, the Independent Community Bankers of America, the New Jersey League of Community Bankers, the Consumer Federation of America, U.S. Public Interest Research Group, Consumers Union and the National Consumer Law Center.

I would like to thank all of my colleagues on the Committee on Financial Services who supported the amendment, especially the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS). He has worked tirelessly in support of this provision because he truly understands that providing a small incentive for banks to offer these accounts can make all the difference in the world for millions of American families. I thank him once again.

Mr. BACHUS. Mr. Speaker, we had several speakers that wanted to speak out in favor of this measure and we have only got a limited amount of time. I ask unanimous consent that both sides be given an additional 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS) now has 13 minutes remaining. The gentleman from California (Mr. OSE) has 11 minutes remaining.

Mr. BACHUS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to stress the great consensus of opinion on most aspects of this deposit insurance legislation, and I mean that sincerely. There is broad support from the administration. There is broad support from the regulatory agencies. There is broad support from Members of the House and members of the Senate, from those of the Democratic party and the Republican party for most aspects of this bill. And as I think this debate has pretty clearly identified, it is 10 percent of this bill that has caused 90 percent of the problems for certain members of the committee.

What I want to address, first of all, is that 90 percent of the bill which I find really no opposition for, and I want to stress those things because I think they are the heart of this bill. The first one is that we merge the bank and thrift insurance funds. That would not only diversify the risk, and everyone agrees on that, the Treasury, the Federal Reserve, both the Senate and the House, because the BIF reserve ratio has recently declined to 1.26. So by combining these funds it reduces the risk that any of our financial institutions will have to pay any premiums in the future. It reduces that risk. So whatever else happens, this legislation will reduce the risk of paying premiums to the majority of our institutions.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there are certain rapid insured deposit growth, well, what I am saying is sweep programs have caused a reduction of four basis points in the BIF program or the BIF reserve ratio funds.

This is from a very few financial institutions that have set up multiple subsidiary banks and they are using sweep accounts, and they are sweeping all that money into FDIC, and they are not compensating the FDIC and the Federal Reserve, the Treasury, the administration; and I think every Member of our committee agrees that this should not go on. We have addressed this.

We have reforms in this bill that compensate banks for the adverse effect of these so-called free riders. We give transition assessment credits, recognizing the contribution of those banks to the insurance reserves that they made during the early and mid-1990s, and those credits will offset future premiums for all but the newest and the most recent new institutions and also those fast-growing institutions.

The premium-setting reforms prevent future free rider inequity, and there is consensus on this and there is consensus that that ought to be done.

Finally, we have eliminated the hard trigger in the current system that can force banks to pay significantly higher premiums during economic downturns. That promotes economic stability and the well-being of the financial system. I have not heard a dissenting voice from us doing that. So those are the main components of the bill.

Where the disagreement is is the coverage rates; and Mr. Speaker, let me simply point out these things about the coverage rates, and I am going to go back for a minute to those few large institutions, financial institutions that have established sweep accounts and have established multiple subsidiary banks.

What those institutions are doing is they are going out and they are advertising $700,000, $800,000, $1 million worth of coverage, and my colleagues have heard testimony from those who oppose a coverage increase, that the people do not want an increase of coverage, they do not need an increase of coverage. The same Treasury Department that says people do not want it have also come to us and said these very institutions that are offering $700,000 worth of coverage or $800,000 worth of coverage, "that they have reduced these large financial companies controlling multiple industry banks, have reduced the BIF reserve ratio by four basis points to an alarming level without compensating the FDIC."

Now, I ask all the Members this question: If they are sweeping all this money into these accounts by offering additional coverage, where is the money coming from if it is not coming from people who want additional coverage? How can the Treasury and how can the Federal Reserve and how can certain Members of the House and Senate say that people do not need additional coverage, they will not use additional coverage, and yet at the same time agree that these, really a couple of financial institutions mainly, are sweeping millions and millions and millions of dollars into these accounts? Well, obviously the people are using these accounts, and obviously they feel the need for this protection; and that is why we need additional coverage.

In 1974, we increased coverage. We over-doubled coverage. Was there a crisis then? No, there was no crisis then. So increasing it 150 percent did not cause any crisis then. In 1980 we increased the coverage for all the banks in this country. Did banks fail? No, banks did not fail. It was savings and loans that fell. Yes, we increased it for savings and loans; but if it was because of increase of coverage, do my colleagues not think banks would have failed, along with the savings and loans? Of course they would have, but it was only the savings and loans.

Yes, we got a lot of testimony about, oh, the last time we did this there was the savings and loans, several of them failed, but they do not say the banks did not fail and we increased it for banks. It just does not fly.

In 1974, the coverage was at $40,000. If we went back to 1974 and we increased it allowing for inflation, we would have gone to $140,000. We only go to $130,000. So we are not even keeping pace with 1974 when the chairman of the Federal Reserve said we had a safe amount and it was at a safe level. Well, if that is the case, then I guess he is advocating for $140,000, not $130,000. When we increased it to $100,000, if we only adjusted for that inflation today, it would be $200,000, not $130,000. What we do in this bill is increase it to $130,000, which is less coverage than the people of the United States had enjoyed in 1974, in 1980 and at any time.

We do not take care of all the inflationary loss, and we hear a lot of strange talk up here in Washington. We hear talk that the people do not need this coverage, but Mr. Speaker, we heard that every time there was a bank failure, there were people who lost a great amount of their retirement funds because the coverage was not there. Five thousand Americans every day sell their home, and the vast majority of them deposit the proceeds from those sales in their bank account.

The gentleman from California would tell us, and the Federal Reserve and the Treasury would tell us, that people have an opportunity to open multiple accounts and establish that money in multiple accounts. Well, I ask my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, I ask the Members of this body, When people sell their home, how many of them go out and establish three bank accounts and deposit that money in three different accounts? Experience tells us that almost no one does that, and when they deposit it, when they deposit that $200,000 or $300,000 in a bank account and that bank fails, they lose two-thirds of their life savings.

Retirement accounts, $150,000, $200,000, not unusual. How many people go out and establish multiple IRA accounts? Well, I think we know the answer to that. The AARP has strongly, in fact, they have urged a greater increase in coverage than we give, because people do not run around all over town establishing one account here, another account there, another account there; and they should not have to do that.

They should not have to rely on a couple of large financial institutions of this country that have come in here and battled against this bill, and they have said we do not need over $100,000; but those same companies and the financial services roundtable that has represented their interests have come up here and told them they do not need $100,000. Those same companies that were on this hill lobbying against an increase were going out and buying six or eight banks and advertising $800,000 worth of coverage, bankrupting the funds; and then they had the audacity to come up here and oppose this bill and oppose our efforts to stop their raid on the FDIC.

Thank goodness in committee, thank goodness in subcommittee and thank goodness in the morning when we vote on this legislation we will pass it, and we will stop the abuse that we have seen in the last couple of years on free riders who not only free ride on the FDIC, they come to the Members of this body and lobby against our efforts to stop their efforts to, as Peter Fisher said, to reduce the BIF reserve ratio by four basis points without compensating the fund.

That is what they have done. Certainly they have gimmicked the system. They are getting a free ride. They are paying nothing; and they are going to communities like the communities in South Dakota, like communities in Alabama, communities all over the Nation, and they are saying we will offer $700,000 worth of coverage; and then they and friends and supporters that they have at the Federal Reserve and the Treasury are coming over here and telling us to do something about these free riders but do not do anything about the free riders which would interfere with a free ride, do not do anything which allows the community banks to increase coverage, we do not need an increase of coverage.

Well, the marketplace is demanding it. The marketplace is getting it. The free riders have gone out and gotten an increase in coverage, and it is absolutely ludicrous for us to let this continue to go on.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OSE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Lacking any other speakers, I do want to make a few remarks. I think the gentleman from Alabama started out very accurately reflecting the broad consensus on 90 percent of this bill, and I think he closed here just this moment with a very eloquent case as to why we need to stop the free rider practice from continuing, but the free rider issue is not related to the deposit insurance level issue. They are two separate issues, and they need to be considered separately.

I would just for clarification, I think the gentleman from Alabama did say that few, if any, banks had failed; and I will say that to my recollection that Continental Bank failed and that there were a lot of banks in agricultural areas around this country that failed. Manufactures Hanover I think had its doors closed, related to the risk that they undertook in taking the increase in deposits, they received subsequent to the jump up in 1982 and trying to put them to work to defray the added costs that they bore from carrying those deposits.

So I agree with him on the free rider thing. But the free rider issue is separate from the deposit insurance increase issue, and I want to be clear about that.

The average size in a deposit account, a demand account across this country is about $10,000, $10,000, not $100,000, not $130,000. The market sector that the gentleman from Alabama referred to as "known as a high income sector," they get a lot of preferential treatment from many financial institutions. It is a marketing aspect of what those institutions do, and it works very well; but this is not about the free rider issue. This is about the added risk that comes by increasing deposit insurance levels and the cost that goes with that that a bank would have to confront.

I do think, going back to the gentleman from Alabama's (Mr. BACHUS) point about the retirement accounts, absolutely concur about increasing the level of coverage for retirement accounts. That money is very conservatively managed. It is a very stable source of funds. The fact of the matter is the bill takes it to a certain level I would actually advocate for taking it even further, if I had thought to put an amendment in at the committee. So I concur with the gentleman that 10 percent of the bill is causing 90 percent of the heartache here.

I do want to complete my statement from earlier, and then I would be happy to reserve the balance of my time after that. Mr. Speaker, let me just point out two witnesses who presented extensive, in addition to all these others that I cited earlier, presented extensive scholarly materials to the subcommittee in opposition to an increase in the coverage levels.

First was Mr. Richard Carnell who is an associate professor of law at Fordham University School of Law who testified: "I urge Members to take a skeptical view of proposals to index or otherwise increase the $100,000 limit on deposit insurance coverage. Proponents of increasing the coverage limits stress the effects of inflation since 1980. But the 1980 level was by no means normal; adjusted for inflation, it amounted to an all-time high."

Professor Carnell was joined by Dr. Kenneth Thomas who is a lecturer in finance at the Wharton School at the University of Pennsylvania, who listed 21 major reasons, I will not cite all 21, Mr. Speaker, but 21 major reasons to oppose an increase in the coverage limit. Among those reasons were, Dr. Thomas spoke at length on the savings and loan bailout and how increases in 1980 in the deposit insurance coverage levels led to risky behavior and even larger bailouts.

Dr. Thomas highlighted the historical perspective from former FDIC and Resolution Trust Corporation chairman, and if my colleagues will recall, the Resolution Trust Corporation was the entity the Federal Government used to solve the early 1980s problem in the financial industry, the Resolution Trust Corporation Chairman Seidman, who said, "The original intent of deposit insurance, which began with a $2,500 insurance limit, was to protect 'small savers.' The primary beneficiaries of the 1980 increase to $100,000 were Wall Street firms and deposit brokers. The currently proposed increase to $200,000," which is not what we are talking about today, we are talking about $130,000, but the premise still holds, "the currently proposed increase to 200,000 has nothing to do with small or even midsized savers. Besides Wall Street and other money brokers, the only beneficiaries would be very wealthy and high net worth depositors, a far cry from the small savers originally envisioned by the FDIC."

This speaks directly to the comments of the gentleman from Alabama a moment ago about the sweeps. Dr. Thomas also noted that, "Considering the present environment's increased level of risk exposure for the deposit insurance funds, good public policy dictates consideration of proposals that reduce, not increase, risk exposure. Any increase in the deposits covered by the FDIC will increase risk exposure to the funds."

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). The gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS) has three-quarters of 1 minute remaining and the gentleman from California (Mr. OSE) has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. BACHUS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. GILLMOR).

Mr. GILLMOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the bill, particularly the municipal deposit part.

I rise today in strong support of H.R. 3717, the Federal Deposit Insurance Reform Act of 2002. I am very proud to be an original cosponsor of this legislation and commend Chairman OXLEY and Subcommittee Chairman BACHUS for their diligent work and dedication in crafting this reform package and delivering it to the full House for consideration. Significant reform of the Federal Deposit Insurance system is long overdue, specifically with regard to municipal deposit coverage.

I have worked hard with the cooperation of several other members of the Financial Services Committee to see a meaningful increase in FDIC coverage for public deposits included in HR 3717. The Federal Deposit Insurance Reform Act will provide full FDIC coverage for 80% of all in-state municipal deposits at an FDIC insured institution up to two million dollars. This is a vast improvement from the current coverage cap of 100,000 dollars on each account.

Providing this essential coverage will help local communities keep public moneys in their area, which will improve the economic climate by enabling local banks to offer more loans for cars, homes, education and community needs.

Currently, municipalities are faced with a hard choice when deciding where to place their deposits. Local officials care about their communities and would like to foster economic development by putting their funds in local banks. However, without the guarantee of FDIC coverage, they are often instead forced to put the money in large out of state institutions.

It may also be the case that small banks are not even in a position to accept such deposits. Many states require institutions to collateralize municipal deposits. This makes it harder for community and small banks to compete for these funds with larger banks. Many community banks are so loaned-up that they do not have the available securities to use as collateral.

Just a few months ago, the FDIC closed a bank in my congressional district: the Oakwood Deposit Bank in Oakwood, OH. Local municipalities and other public entities that held deposits at this institution are now put at risk due to the $100,000 cap in FDIC coverage. In cases of fraud such as this one, securitization may not have been adequate insurance as many bonds and securities appearing on the bank's balance sheet may not still be held. The expansion of FDIC coverage is the only way to truly alleviate this risk to local public entities.

Again, I would like to thank Chairman OXLEY and Chairman BACHUS for their leadership on this important issue and ask all my colleagues to strongly support this legislation.

Mr. BACHUS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. FORD).

Mr. OSE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute as well to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. FORD).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. FORD. Mr. Speaker, there is nothing like bringing your colleagues together. I appreciate both the gentleman from California (Mr. OSE) and the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS) for yielding me this time, and I thank my friend, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATERS), and certainly the ranking member, the gentleman from New York (Mr. LAFALCE), for all their hard work. I stand here in support of this legislation and thankful the subcommittee decided to take up the issue concerning the FDIC's treatment of loss reserves in its calculation of its reserve ratio, Mr. Speaker. With that issue resolved, I think many of us feel more comfortable in supporting this legislation.

I want to take this opportunity to discuss one final issue, and I hope that at some point we can take this up. As enthusiastic as I am about supporting the legislation, I am disappointed in one decision the FDIC has made in recent weeks involving a proposed reorganization of the regional office structure. In particular, the FDIC has proposed to fold the Memphis regional office, which is in my district, and the Boston regional office, which is represented by many of my colleagues here in the Congress. The Memphis office would be folded into the Dallas region and Boston into New York. I believe this proposed change would lessen the FDIC's responsiveness to the concerns of financial institutions presently within the region of the country in which I live.

Moreover, it would not save much money at all. I think it is estimated to save somewhere around $100,000 to $150,000, which is a decent chunk of change, but when you consider the relationship that has developed over the years between bankers in the Mississippi, Arkansas, Kentucky, and Tennessee area, and then having to move that office to Dallas, I do not think the benefits outweigh the cost to those in this area of the country.

It is my hope that my colleagues in the New England area, as well as in those 4 or 5 States covered in my region, can work together to persuade Chairman Powell and those in the FDIC that this is not the right move nor is it the right time to make this move.

With that, Mr. Speaker, I again wish to thank both the gentleman from California (Mr. OSE) and the gentlemen from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS), and would close by saying that I do think this increase of $130,000 is fair, though I hear some of the concerns being raised by the gentleman from California.

And I might add, the University of Pennsylvania professor, I think I had him when I was there. He did not give me a good grade, so he may not be right all the time.

Mr. OSE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and I want to go back, finally, to Dr. Thomas' 21 citations. Again, I am not going to cite the remaining 18 or 19 of them, but I do want to run through his testimony here.

Dr. Thomas raises the issue that "There is absolutely no public outcry over or even widespread interest in the proposal to," he says, "double the FDIC insurance limit. Most people know or should know from their banks that any couple can get multiple account coverage, and singles need only open another account at any bank via a personal visit, a telephone call, or even the Internet. There is no shortage of $100,000 insured deposit investment opportunities. Some seniors may have a preference to keep their jumbo CDs spread out among several banks in $100,000 or less amounts, even if they have the opportunity to keep $200,000 at one bank."

This speaks directly to what the current situation is. The current situation allows people to protect themselves under the current $100,000 limit. The testimony we have had at the subcommittee from high ranking government officials, from people in the business to academia, is that increasing this limit significantly increases the risk to the insurance funds.

Speaking from personal experience, I actually weathered the last time we went through this. Many of my colleagues in the real estate business did not. The fact of the matter is, it was a wholesale winnowing of the real estate business in California and it took us years to recover. My colleagues, increasing the deposit insurance coverage limit will lead to a potential for repeating that.

California leads this country's economy up and down. If we increase the risk to the insurance fund by placing on our bankers the requirement to put more money to work in a quick or hasty fashion, we are going to replay the nightmare of the early 1980s and pay billions more the next time this occurs. This body does not need to fund additional billion dollar bailouts.

I am in favor of 90 percent of this bill. There are good things in this bill. But when we look at the hands of Lady Justice balancing, in her case justice, in this case we are talking about the security and sanctity of the economy and deposits across this country, if we look at how that is balanced, in Lady Justice's case her hands are even. In the case of today's bill, the increase in deposit insurance skews that balance. We do not need to do this, my colleagues. This is unnecessary.

Unfortunately, I am forced to go against my chairman, and I ask my colleagues to oppose this bill in its current form.

Mr. Speaker, how much time do I have remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California has 45 seconds remaining.

Mr. OSE. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS).

Mr. BACHUS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and let me just close by saying that there has been a rapid insurance deposit growth. In other words, people are putting a lot of money in accounts, in 2 or 3 financial institutions in this country, which have gone out and bought multiple subsidiaries and are advertising $500,000, $600,000, and $700,000 worth of coverage.

Now, where is that money coming from, those hundreds of millions of dollars? It is coming from community banks in small towns and mainstream banks. People ought to have an option not to put that money in a Wall Street financial institution. A small business that has $300,000 or $400,000 deposited, they ought to have the option of putting that in their hometown bank.

We talk about $100,000. Yes, $10,000 may be the average account, but there are a lot of small businesses in this country that maintain one bank account in their local bank. They ought to have more coverage.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 3717, the Federal Deposit Insurance Reform Act of 2002, legislation that will reform our federal deposit insurance programs. As a member of the Financial Services Committee, I am pleased that the House of Representatives is now acting to consider this legislation.

H.R. 3717 would combine the Bank Insurance Fund (BIF) and the Savings Association Insurance Fund (SAIF) into one insurance Fund. This legislation would also permit the Federal Deposit Insurance Fund greater flexibility in setting the designated reserve ratio (DRR). Under current law, the BIF and SAIF have target DRR ratios of 1.25 percent. Today, both the BIF and SAIF have DRR levels which are higher than this target rate with the DRR for BIF at 1.26 percent and the DRR for SAIF at 1.37 percent. I believe another important part of this bill would allow the FDIC to set the DRR between the range of 1.15 percent to 1.4 percent in order to ensure that the new insurance fund is counter cyclical and avoid sharp rate swings. When the insurance fund is in distress under current law, it is likely that premiums would be increased on those institutions which may be facing increased costs and financial pressures. By charging premiums when institutions are healthy, they will be better prepared to deal with any unforeseen financial hardships.

Finally, this bill increases the maximum deposit insurance coverage for an individual from $100,000 to $130,000. I believe that this higher insurance coverage is long overdue. The deposit insurance coverage limit has not been changed since 1980. I believe that this higher coverage will help smaller financial institutions to compete for customers. Another important provision in this bill would permit consumers to get insurance coverage of $260,000 for their Individual Retirement Accounts (IRAs). In this time when we are working to encourage consumers to save for their futures, I believe that this higher IRA coverage will ensure that consumers have several options for where to keep their IRAs.

I am also pleased that this legislation includes a provision to increase the number of "lifeline" accounts for underserved consumers. This provision is based upon an amendment offered by Rep. MAXINE WATERS (D–CA) to ensure that the underserved consumers have access to low-cost accounts. Many poor elderly do not currently have checking accounts and may be able to use this lifeline accounts to receive electronic transfers of their social security and other direct deposits.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 3717, legislation to improve our federal deposit insurance program.

Mrs. ROUKEMA. I rise in strong support of HR 3717, the Federal Deposit Insurance Reform Act of 2002. This is an important bill and I want to commend the Chairman OXLEY of the Full Committee and Chairman BACHUS of the Subcommittee for pushing this bill forward. This is the most opportune time for Congress to implement these changes—when the industry is still strong and healthy.

There is no doubt that the passage of Gramm-Leach-Bliley created a brave new financial world—with new challenges for the regulators and our deposit insurance fund. This legislation makes adjustments that will not only enhance the safety and soundness of the entire financial service industry by preserving the value of insured deposits, advancing the national priority of enhancing retirement savings for all Americans, and ensuring that the value, benefit and cost of deposit insurance is fair to consumers and institutions alike.

Many of the provisions in HR 3717 are provisions that I have long supported. In fact, I introduced legislation including many of these provisions in the last Congress. For example, HR 3717 mergers the two insurance funds. Merging the funds will create a more stable, actuarially strong insurance fund, and reduce the risk of fund insolvency.

Second, the bill increases the standard maximum deposit insurance limit from $100,000 to $130,000 and indexes future coverage limits to inflation. The $100,000 coverage limit was set in 1980 and it is time to increase that coverage for consumers. In addition, Federal Credit Unions are provided with parity in general standard maximum deposit insurance coverage, coverage for retirement accounts and municipal deposits.

This bill provides double coverage limits for certain types of IRAs & 401(k)s—up to $260,000. Finally, this bill provides rebates requiring that ½ of the excess funds be returned to banks when the DRR is above 1.35 percent, and all of the excess reserves when the DRR reaches 1.4 percent. With the current fund balances, much above the 1.2 designated reserve ratio, certainly this is appropriate.

This is important legislation that deserves our support. The Federal Deposit Insurance Fund has served this Nation well for the last 68 years—public confidence and stability in the Nation's banking system were preserved through one of the largest banking crises—the 1980 Savings and Loan crisis. HR 3717 makes the necessary changes that will protect not only depositors but our financial system in times of crisis.

Mr. PAUL. Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3717, the Federal Deposit Insurance Reform Act, expands the federal government's unconstitutional control over the financial services industry and raises taxes on all financial institutions. Furthermore, this legislation could increase the possibility of future bank failures. Therefore, I must oppose this bill.

I primarily object to the provisions in H.R. 3717 which may increase the premiums assessed on participating financial institutions. These "premiums," which are actually taxes, are the premier sources of funds for the Deposit Insurance Fund. This fund is used to bail out banks who experience difficulties meeting their commitments to their depositors. Thus, the deposit insurance system transfers liability for poor management decisions from those who made the decisions, to their competitors. This system punishes those financial institutions which follow sound practices, as they are forced to absorb the losses of their competitors. This also compounds the moral hazard problem created whenever government socializes business losses.

In the event of a severe banking crisis, Congress will likely transfer funds from the general revenue into the Deposit Insurance Fund, which could make all taxpayers liable for the mistakes of a few. Of course, such a bailout would require separate authorization from Congress, but can anyone imagine Congress saying "No" to banking lobbyists pleading for relief from the costs of bailing out their weaker competitors?

Government subsidies lead to government control, as regulations are imposed on the recipients of the subsidies in order to address the moral hazard problem. This is certainly the case in banking, which is one of the most heavily regulated industries in America. However, as George Kaufman, the John Smith Professor of Banking and Finance at Loyola University in Chicago, and co-chair of the Shadow Financial Regulatory Committee, pointed out in a study for the CATO Institutes, the FDIC's history of poor management exacerbated the banking crisis of the eighties and nineties. Professor Kaufman properly identifies a key reason for the FDIC's poor track record in protecting individual depositors: regulators have incentives to downplay or even cover-up problems in the financial system such as banking facilities. Banking failures are black marks on the regulators' records. In addition, regulators may be subject to political pressure to delay imposing sanctions on failing institutions, thus increasing the magnitude of the loss.

Immediately after a problem in the banking industry comes to light, the media and Congress will inevitably blame it on regulators who were "asleep at the switch." Yet, most politicians continue to believe that giving the very regulators whose incompetence (or worst) either caused or contributed to the problem will somehow prevent future crises!

The presence of deposit insurance and government regulations removes incentives for individuals to act on their own to protect their deposits or even inquire as to the health of their financial institutions. After all, why should individuals be concerned with the health of their financial institutions when the federal government is insuring banks following sound practices and has insured their deposits?

Finally, I would remind my colleagues that the federal deposit insurance program lacks constitutional authority. Congress' only mandate in the area of money, and banking is to maintain the value of the money. Unfortunately, Congress abdicated its responsibility over monetary policy with the passage of the Federal Reserve Act of 1913, which allows the federal government to erode the value of the currency at the will of the central bank. Congress' embrace of fiat money is directly responsible for the instability in the banking system that created the justification for deposit insurance.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, H.R. 3717 imposes new taxes on financial institutions, forces sound institutions to pay for the mistakes of their reckless competitors, increases the chances of taxpayers being forced to bail out unsound financial institutions, reduces individual depositors' incentives to take action to protect their deposits, and exceeds Congress' constitutional authority. I therefore urge my colleagues to reject this bill. Instead of extending this federal program, Congress should work to prevent the crises which justify government programs like deposit insurance, by fulfilling our constitutional responsibility to pursue sound monetary policies.

Mr. NEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3717, the "Federal Deposit Insurance Reform Act of 2002."

I want to commend my colleagues, MIKE OXLEY, the chairman of the House Financial Services Committee and SPENCER BACHUS, the chairman of the House Financial Institutes Subcommittee, for crafting sound legislation to improve the federal deposit insurance system. This bill will reform the FDIC so that it can continue to provide the stability that Americans have depended on for years.

Last year, I introduced H.R. 1293, the "Deposit Insurance Stabilization Act." This bipartisan piece of legislation addressed three of the most pressing needs of the deposit insurance system. My legislation merged the Bank Insurance Fund and the Savings Association Insurance Fund into a single sounder deposit insurance fund. My legislation also eliminated the 23 basis point cliff facing FDIC-insured institutions if the deposit insurance fund were required by law to be recapitalized. I am pleased that both of these provisions are included in the bill before us today.

My legislation included a third important component, commonly referred to as the "free rider" provision. This provision would give the FDIC statutory authority to assess a special premium on any insured institution with excessive net deposit growth. It was drafted to address the possible dilution of the deposit insurance fund by a handful of institutions. It was not meant to serve as a penalty or impediment to legitimate growth, but rather as an equitable to ensure that the cost of doing the business of deposit insurance is borne by those who benefit from that business.

I was pleased that the Ney free rider provision was included as part of this bill, as reported by the Financial Services Committee. It represented a good faith effort to fairly resolve a problem first brought to my attention by bankers in my state and across the country.

Unfortunately, because of the controversy it generated, this provision is not part of the managers' amendment before us today. While other provisions of the managers' amendment address the free rider problem, the absence of statutory authority for the FDIC to deal with prospective free riding could remain a problem. I am anxious to work with my colleagues in Congress and organizations like America's Community Bankers to adequately address this problem as this bill moves forward.

Again, I would like to commend the sponsors of this bill for addressing the challenges facing the federal deposit insurance system, and urge my colleagues to support this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3717, as amended.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have not voted in the affirmative.

Mr. BACHUS. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 3448, PUBLIC HEALTH SECURITY AND BIOTERRORISM PREPAREDNESS AND RESPONSE ACT OF 2002

Mr. TAUZIN (during consideration of H.R. 3717) submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H.R. 3448) to improve the ability of the United States to prevent, prepare for, and respond to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies.

See pages H2691 of the RECORD of May 21, 2002.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO WORKERS IN NEW YORK CITY FOR RESCUE, RECOVERY, AND CLEAN-UP EFFORTS AT SITE OF WORLD TRADE CENTER

Mr. OSE. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the resolution (H. Res. 424) paying tribute to the workers in New York City for their rescue, recovery, and clean-up efforts at the site of the World Trade Center.

H. RES. 424

Whereas on September 11, 2001, terrorists hijacked four civilian aircraft, crashing two of them into the towers of the World Trade Center in New York City;

Whereas these attacks were by far the deadliest terrorist attacks ever launched against the United States, claiming the lives of more than 3,000 innocent people;

Whereas in the aftermath of the attacks, without showing any hesitation, public safety officers, steel workers, electricians, construction workers, and thousands of skilled workers and volunteers spent endless days and nights, many without sleep for over 36 hours, risking their own lives to assist in the search for and rescue of anyone that might have survived the devastation at the site of the World Trade Center, which has come to be known as "Ground Zero";

Whereas the resolve of our nation was strengthened by the courage of the thousands of brave rescue and recovery workers who used their own hands in the hours and days after September 11th to this day to remove rubble from the site to locate those trapped and buried beneath the debris of the World Trade Center;

Whereas these workers inspired the American people with their extraordinary bravery and heroism, often risking their own life and limb to help find the remains of those who perished on September 11th;

Whereas many rescue and recovery workers were not just searching for a stranger but rather their lost son, daughter, aunt, uncle, brother, sister, husband, wife, mother, father, lifelong friend, or co-worker; each of these workers were helping to clear the debris just hoping to come across any one of their loved ones;

Whereas people, not only in New York but across the nation, worked to supply Ground Zero workers with such things as food and water, clothing, and medical supplies, surmounted numerous challenges and difficulties in securing and distributing these goods, and made it happen within hours and continuing still today, never once looked at how difficult it might be to get supplies, but rather went out and did whatever it took to ensure that the needs for those supplies were met;

Whereas local businesses, churches, and citizens opened their doors to police, fire, and other workers with places to sleep, eat, or even simply pray;

Whereas the selflessness displayed by the rescue and recovery workers helped unify our nation, bringing together good people to demonstrate to the forces of terror that good would triumph over evil;

Whereas all involved in the efforts at Ground Zero were working unselfishly beyond the point of exhaustion without regard for food, water, or sleep, simply to save and recover anyone and everyone possible; and

Whereas the recovery effort will conclude after more than nine months of hard work, removing over 1.6 million tons of debris while at the same time taking great care to collect all victims' remains, thereby allowing more than 1,000 families to lay their loved ones to rest: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives pays tribute to the workers in New York City for their rescue, recovery, and clean-up efforts at the site of the World Trade Center, which was destroyed by the terrorist attack of September 11, 2001.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from California (Mr. OSE) and the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY) each will control 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. OSE).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. OSE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on House Resolution 424.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. OSE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA) be permitted to control the time on House Concurrent Resolution 424.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY), and I join, I think, with the entire country to introduce a House resolution to pay tribute to the hundreds, if not thousands, of workers who have responded to the World Trade Center since that fateful day on September 11.

As a Nation, we need not be reminded, but in a way we always need to be reminded, of what happened that day; of the loss of life, of those who lost loved ones, aunts, uncles, sons, daughters who were lost, fathers, mothers. We know the tragedy, and it will forever be written of. But out of that tragedy really came a resilience and strength in this country, and some of that was demonstrated by the workers who reported immediately to ground zero and have been there almost every day since.

Believe it or not, Mr. Speaker, the recovery and ultimate redevelopment of the World Trade Center, which just a few months ago was thought to be almost impossible, will be coming to a close. In just the next few short days there will be a ceremony in New York City to honor and to pay tribute to those who have responded.

For someone who was there on September 11, I can tell my colleagues that the dedication and the commitment of these individuals has been unbelievable. But with all that, all the work that they have done, the 1.6 million tons of debris, some of it, sadly, tragically, containing the remains of those who perished in the Trade Center, a lot of it ending up on Staten Island, so it hits close to home for all of us, I cannot tell you how proud we should be of them. They responded. They give their time, sometimes working 16, 18, 20 hours a day, many of them looking for their loved ones.

You can just read the papers. Take the time necessary and see of those fathers who responded day in and day out hoping to find their sons, or those hoping to find a sister or a wife. Perhaps as we look back, this will be one of the darkest, if not the darkest, spot in American history. But if we look for a silver lining to it, it is the fundamental belief that there were those who responded heroically, with honor, with a sense of purpose to rebuild this country.

When we were attacked on September 11 at the Trade Center, we began the process of rebuilding almost immediately, all with the sense of honor to those who lost their life.

I can only tell my colleagues, as someone who lost almost 300 people from the district that I am very privileged to represent, and I think I can speak for a lot of those families, that each one of those individuals who have been at the Trade Center, Ground Zero as it has become known, we say thank you.

I think the entire Congress of this country has said thank you. Everybody across this country has responded wonderfully, Members on both sides. All 50 States have offered their advice, guidance, support, financial, emotional, spiritual, and it is not underappreciated. But this is the way we formally say thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I am very pleased to join with the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA) in support of this very important resolution. I also would like to take this opportunity to thank my colleagues in Congress for their support of New York, for voting for the $20 billion to help us restore our site, and for all of their support that continues each day in this Congress for our constituents and for our city.

I rise in support of this important resolution in praise of the workers at Ground Zero. After many months of around-the-clock work, the clearing of debris from the attacks on the World Trade Center has neared completion. The cleanup efforts in response to the attacks on the World Trade Center involved unprecedented, selfless acts of heroism by thousands of men and women from the construction and building trades who worked in an extremely dangerous atmosphere as they cleared the disaster site. In total they have cleared more than 1.6 million tons of debris in 8 months.

In the immediate aftermath of the attack, volunteers from the construction unions, iron and steelworkers and many others, toiled alongside firefighters and police officers and volunteers digging tunnels and gaining access to victims by operating cranes, burning steel, driving trucks, and moving debris by hand as part of the famous Bucket Brigade. Over the many months, the workers completed the cleanup of Ground Zero in an atmosphere which was filled with danger and in the midst of still burning fires and deadly debris. They completed their work ahead of schedule and with safety as an ultimate concern. I think that it is remarkable that they toiled in such dangerous conditions, yet there was not one serious injury of the volunteers and the construction workers who worked at the site.

Despite these dangerous conditions, the contracting firms themselves began the rescue and cleanup of the site without any government guarantee that they would be compensated for legal liability that they might incur during the cleanup. Nevertheless, the workers of Ground Zero and the contracting companies embraced this unprecedented and perilous challenge. Their actions personified the enduring determination to get New York back on its feet and to restore Lower Manhattan's majesty.

Throughout this heartbreaking cleanup, they worked tirelessly, many times away from their families for days. Of all of the things that I remember the most about Ground Zero, having gone there that night and the next day on September 12 and many other days, was the absolute silence at the site, the hushed silence at the site which lasted for many days after the bombing. It reflected an appreciation for the magnitude of the horror and the fact that they were working on the surface of a mass grave.

I want to extend my deepest gratitude to the Tully Construction Company who at my request preserved a segment of the ruins to be transformed into a national monument at an appropriate time in the future. We all remember the images of steel fragments from the towers that plunged upright into the pavement like arrows into the hearts of all New Yorkers, and I would say all citizens of America, and nearby fire trucks that were partially submerged and ruined in the rubble.

Thanks to the care and respect that workers have demonstrated in dismantling and removing the wreckage, these images will be preserved in honor of those who were lost, and in remembrance of a black Tuesday that this Nation must never forget. The scores of companies, organizations and union members who have cooperated in clearing the site with extraordinary speed, efficiency and safety include, but are not limited to, a special team of the New York City Office of Emergency Management and the New York City Department of Design and Construction; with main contractors Turner Construction, Plaza Construction, Bovis Construction, Amec Construction and Tully Construction; and dozens of subcontractors, including Thornton-Tomasette Engineering, LZA Engineering, New York Crane, Bay Crane, Cranes Inc., Slattery Association, Grace Industries, Big Apple Demolition, Regional Scaffolding & Hoisting, Atlantic-Heydt Scaffolding, York Scaffolding, Weeks Marine and Bechtel Corp.

Mr. Speaker, many Members of Congress and the Senate have gone to Ground Zero. They have seen the devastation but also resilience and redemption in the work that is being done there. I know I speak for this entire body in expressing our country's deep appreciation for the risks taken and sacrifices made by the unsung heroes at Ground Zero who have reminded us what the American spirit is all about.

We will be having a ceremony soon that will mark the completion of the cleanup. I join my colleagues tonight in honoring all that participated, the police, the fire, the emergency medical, the volunteers and the construction trades who toiled selflessly to help our city and this country.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I thank the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY) for really articulating, I think, the sentiments of many. As we saw those firefighters rush in or the police officers, the Port Authority police officers or the construction trades, the ironworkers, the steelworkers, the carpenters, as she has indicated, selflessly, without fear for their own life in an attempt to help others, they have been there since day one. There is no question that this was a terrible, terrible moment. There is no question that so many lives were lost and that we need to honor them every day. There is also no question that we need to pay tribute as so many Americans really have come to Ground Zero to pay their respects, to really offer a helping hand to the good people of New York, New York City. This is one way really Congress just does it formally.

To the local businesses that had opened their doors to those volunteers to sleep on cots or on the floor, to have a meal, or to get something to drink or just simply to sit and pray, we say thank you to them. I thank my colleagues on both sides for being so supportive of New York financially, in helping us to rebuild, and also paying honor to those at the Fresh Kills Landfill on Staten Island where so much of this, of the trade center, is sent on a daily basis and continues to be sent on a daily basis, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week. We have hundreds of professionals and volunteers going through with the utmost delicacy and utmost respect for the human beings that were lost on that fateful day. They should be honored as well.

But tonight we pay tribute to those at the trade center. As we have indicated, there will be a ceremony and they will know that the United States House of Representatives says thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I join my colleagues in thanking the gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA). We have stood in this well practically every day to thank our colleagues for their support, for their aid, for their friendship, for their concern. We can never say thank you enough for being there for New Yorkers in our time of greatest need. We appreciate so much the actions of this body. We appreciate the honorable work of all that were involved in the cleanup and in saving lives.

Mr. CROWLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the resolution offered by my friend and colleague from Staten Island, VITO FOSSELLA, in honor of all of the people who served at Ground Zero, whether looking for survivors to aid, helping to locate remains that would allow a family some closure, or rebuilding our City.

After September 11, the terrorists responsible thought they could scare America into submission, but the faces of the people working at Ground Zero—the public safety officers, the volunteers, the contractors, clean-up crews and union members—everyone there proved them wrong. In the face of the worst of humanity, New York displayed the best of humanity. America witnessed the bravery of its people that day as thousands of people rushed to the scene to help find survivors. Not just our brave firefighters, police and emergency medical technicians who were working that day, but office workers, students, construction workers, vendors, tourists and off-duty public safety officers.

There were so many but I would like to highlight one, Michael Weinberg of Maspeth, Queens. He was a 34-year-old firefighter who was off duty on September 11 and engaging in his passion—golf. It was on the course that he first learned of the news at the World Trade Center. Concerned for the people in the building, including his older sister Patricia, he rushed to his station house where he joined Fire Department Chaplain Rev. Mychal Judge and Capt. Daniel Brethel to go to the Towers. As the towers collapsed, all three perished in the building trying to aid victims.

His sister, who did escape safely from the Tower, remembered him with the simple but telling phrase "He loved to help people." This was a phrase used to describe so many people that day.

Our City was overwhelmed with offers of support from all over the Country, from people like Michael Weinberg who loved to help other people. Such as the welders who came to Manhattan from all over the area—not just the City or the State but all over; they jumped in their trucks to help at Ground Zero. Police and Fire fighters had to be convinced to take time off—even just a few minutes—from the rescue and recovery efforts; people who had been working for several days straight whether on duty or not. So many people rushed to the scene to join our firefighters, police, emergency medical technicians, court officers and Port Authority Police among so many already there to help.

Many of us remember the horribly tragic sight of seeing families waving pictures of missing loved ones on posters, or photos of the missing on telephone polls and windows in the City. What we didn't see were the people who tried to help find these people—we salute them today.

Blood banks had lines going for blocks from those citizens who couldn't go down to Ground Zero and help, but felt the need to contribute to the effort. People opened their wallets for the Twin Towers Fund and other relief charities for the families.

But this sense of volunteerism did not end after a few days—workers toiled day and night at Ground Zero—and still do. The fires at the World Trade Center could not be completely extinguished until December, with firefighters battling them daily; with police combing the wreckage; and with construction workers starting the clean-up and rebuilding process. They worked in some of the most horrible conditions known to humans—conditions that are unfathomable to all those except the few who were down there.

It was these workers that voiced the initial anger in the attacks and the pride in our nation shortly after that day when President Bush visited Ground Zero. People like that construction workers at Ground Zero, who shouted that he could not hear the President. At which the President responded with the memorable and inspirational line that while he may not be heard by all of those at Ground Zero, the people at Ground Zero were being heard by him, by the American people and soon by the terrorists that knocked those buildings down.

We honor their work today—work that took them into the most gruesome place imaginable. They are the people who make our country work and have helped us restore our sense of being—and showed the world what it is to be an American.

But while we salute our workers at Ground Zero, we must also work to remember their courage and their work everyday. The crowds that saluted and cheered our firefighters, are no longer there, but our respect and admiration for them must continue—both through encouraging words and also through support and assistance. All of the people who went to Ground Zero and worked there are a true inspiration for all of us.

This is a timely resolution and I am pleased it will coincide with the events being held next week, by Mayor Bloomberg to honor those at Ground Zero who worked to clean up the rubble and helped repair a broken City. They have removed almost 2 million tons of debris in less time then expected. They worked for us and we owe them a debt of gratitude. While the terrorists may have broken buildings we will never be a broken people.

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. OSE) that the House suspend the rules and agree to the resolution, H. Res. 424.

The question was taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds of those present have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

HONORING THE 61st ANNIVERSARY OF THE BATTLE OF CRETE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. MALONEY) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mrs. MALONEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to mark the 61st anniversary of the Battle of Crete. This is a historic event with direct significance to the allies' victory of World War II.

On May 20, 1941, thousands of German paratroopers and gliders began landing on the island of Crete. Both the allies and Nazis wanted Crete because of its strategic location. At the time the British controlled the island. It was a very strong point on the lifeline to India and protected both Palestine and Egypt. The Nazi invasion force included the elite German paratroopers and glider troops. Hitler felt that this would be an easy victory. Yet he is quoted to have said shortly after the invasion, "France fell in 8 days. Why is Crete free?"

The invasion of Crete lasted 11 days. It resulted in more than 6,000 German troopers listed as killed, wounded or missing in action. The losses to the elite 7th parachute division were felt so hard by the German military, it signified the end of large scale airborne operations. They did not have another parachute division invasion in the rest of the war. This valiant fight by the Cretan people began in the first hour of the Nazi airborne invasion, in contrast to the European underground movements that took a year or more after being invaded to activate. Young boys, old men and women displayed breathtaking bravery in defending their Crete. German soldiers never got used to Cretan women fighting against them. They would tear the dress from the shoulder of suspected women to find bruises from the recoil of the rifle. The penalty was death.

The London Times of July 28, 1941 reported, and I quote, that "500 Cretan women have been deported to Germany for taking part in the defense of their native island."

Another surprise for the German soldiers who invaded Crete was the heroic resistance of the clergy. A priest leading his parishioners into battle was not what the Germans anticipated. At Paleochora, Father Stylianos Frantzeskis, hearing of the German airborne invasion, rushed to his church, sounded the bell, took his rifle and marched his volunteers toward Maleme to write history. This struggle became an example for all Europe to follow in defying German occupation and aggression.

The price paid by the Cretans for their valiant resistance to Nazi forces was extremely high. Thousands of civilians died from random executions, starvation and imprisonment.

Entire communities were burned and destroyed by the Germans as punishment for the Cretan resistance movement. Yet this resistance lasted for 4 years.

The Battle of Crete was to change the final outcome of World War II. The Battle of Crete significantly contributed in delaying Hitler's plan to invade Russia. The invasion was delayed from April to June of 1941. The 2-month delay in the invasion made Hitler's forces face the harsh Russian winter. The Russian snow storms and the subzero temperatures eventually stalled the Nazi invasion before they could take Moscow or Leningrad. This was the beginning of the downfall of the Nazi reign of terror.

This significant battle and the heroic drive of the Cretan people must always be remembered and honored. Democracy came from Greece, and the Cretan heroes exemplify the courage that it takes to preserve it.

Today, the courage of the Cretan people is seen in the Members of the Pancretan Association of America and the Cretan Association "Omonoia" that is located in Astoria-Queens, which I have the honor of representing.

The Pancretan Association officers are Theodore Panagiotakis, president; Michael Papoutsakis, vice president; John Stavroulakis, secretary; and Emmanuel Kavrakis, treasurer. They are assisted by outstanding board members George Bassias, George Bombolakis, Nikos Chartzoulakis, George Fradelakis, George Kokonas, George Malandrakis, and Vassilis Manrangoudakis.

The Cretan people fought a seen enemy. Today we need the courage they displayed to fight the unseen enemy that struck on 9–11 and that continues to threaten our freedom and democracy.

I request my colleagues to join me in honoring the Cretans in the United States, Greece and the Diaspora.

THE SIXTY-FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF THE HEROIC BATTLE OF CRETE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FLAKE). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I too rise proudly to celebrate the 61st anniversary of the Battle of Crete, a World War II event that had a profound impact on the ultimate result of the war.

Amidst the cataclysm that had engulfed the countries of Europe at the time, it seems now preposterous that a small island dared to stand up to such a powerful enemy. For the benefit of future generations, I will share a brief account of these events as they unfolded.

In early April 1941, Greece was invaded by the German Army rushing to the aid of their defeated and humiliated ally, Italy. Following a valiant struggle against overwhelmingly superior German forces in and among the mountains to the north, Greek forces had been pushed entirely off the continent and were forced to take refuge on the Island of Crete.

The German Army then looked across the sea to Crete because of the British airfields on the island, which could be used by the allies for air strikes against the oil fields of Romania, thereby denying this vital war commodity to Hitler's forces. If captured, it would also provide air and sea bases from which the Nazis could dominate the eastern Mediterranean and launch air attacks against Allied forces in northern Africa. In fact, the Nazi high command envisioned the capture of Crete to be the first of a series of assaults leading to the Suez Canal.

Finally, as a result of the battle, Hitler's master plan to invade Russia before the coming of winter had to be postponed, thus directly resulting in the deaths of many of their troops as a consequence of not being properly prepared to survive the harsh Russian winter.

On May 20, 1941, Crete became the theater of the largest German airborne operation of the war, code named Operation Mercury. On that day, more than 8,000 paratroopers were dropped on the island. They were met with ferocious resistance by the Allied troops waiting for them and by the Cretan population.

Cretans fought bravely with whatever was at hand during the invasion. Even though the Allied forces had decided not to arm them, old men, women and children used whatever makeshift weapons they could find. They pointed their rusty guns at the descending German paratroopers. They used sticks, sickles and even their bare hands to fight those soldiers already on the ground. Most of them were illiterate villagers, but their intuition led them to fight with courage and bravery. "Aim for the legs and you will get them in the heart" was the popular motto that summarized their hastily acquired battle experience.

Although a tactical victory for the Germans, the Battle of Crete proved to be rather costly to them in terms of casualties and loss of aircraft. Of the 8,100 paratroopers involved in this operation, close to 4,000 were killed and 1,600 were wounded. So injured were the German units in fact that they never again, never again, attempted an airborne assault of the magnitude of that launched at Crete.

In retaliation for the losses they incurred, the Nazis spread punishment, terror and death on the innocent civilians of the island. More than 2,000 Cretans were executed during the first month alone, and thousands more the following 4 years. Despite these atrocities, the people of Crete put up a courageous guerrilla resistance.

Mr. Speaker, there are historical reasons why we Americans are very appreciative of the sacrifices of the Cretan people in defending their island during the Battle of Crete. We have a history replete with similar heroic events, starting with our popular revolt that led to the birth of our Nation more than 2 centuries ago.

We must always remember that as long as there are people willing to sacrifice their lives for the just cause of defending the integrity and freedom of their country, there is always hope for a better tomorrow. May we take inspiration from the shining example of the people of Crete in ensuring that this is indeed the case.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I come to the House floor this evening to commemorate the 61st anniversary of one of the most critical battles of the World War II—the Battle of Crete. I want to thank Congressman BILIRAKIS, co-chairman of the Congressional Caucus on Hellenic Issues, for organizing today's recognition of the resilience of the Cretan people in May 1941—a resilience that lasted long after the battle ended, and played an instrumental role in the downfall of Hitler and his Nazi regime.

In October of 1940, Mussolini's Italy invaded Greece. Shortly thereafter, the British rushed to Greece's aid and quickly sent army and Royal Air Force units to the island of Crete. With Italian troops bogged down in Greece and delaying his brutal campaign of world domination, Hitler sent German troops into Greece and directed the Nazi war machine to take control of Crete.

On the morning of May 20, 1941 the Nazis began executing Hitler's directive and launched an airborne invasion on a scale unprecedented in history. The Germans dropped some 20,000 troops on the island by air. In addition, the Germans and Italians launched a land invasion, sending troops by sea from the Greek, mainland, which had fallen to the Nazis a few weeks earlier.

The ensuing battle put up by the people of Crete and other allied forces against the superior Nazi war machine was one of the most significant of World War II. And though the Germans won the battle and took the island, they did so at the highest possible cost. Karl Student, the Nazi General in charge of the invasion, called the battle "the fiercest struggle any German formation had ever had to face." The German High Command would never again attempt an operation of its size again, and because of the loss of nearly 6,000 paratroopers, the Germans never used the parachute arm of their force again in large scale operations.

The unanticipated heroism and ferocity with which the people of Crete fought delayed Hitler's planned invasion of Russia for three months. There were heavy losses on both sides. Strengthened by the knowledge that they were defending a concept—democracy—that had originated from their homeland, Cretan civilians, including women, children and the elderly, joined in the battle against the Nazis, wielding pitchforks and fashioning homemade weapons. By the Battle's end, the Cretans and the Royal Air Force had inflicted so much damage on Hitler's elite 7th Air Division that it was rendered useless to the Nazi effort to conquer the Middle East.

The battle, moreover, continued long after the 11 days it took Hitler to finally take the Greek Island. The Cretans organized a resistance movement, which for the remaining four years of the war zealously fought the occupying Nazi force. They suffered horrendously for their resistance; the Germans executed thousands of civilians and randomly decimated entire towns, villages and communities. They did not, however, suffer in vein.

The resistance the people of Crete mounted against the invasion forced the Germans to attempt to invade Russia during the oppressive Russian winter—a task that proved to be too much for the Nazis.

We here in Congress should do our best to ensure Americans never forget the role the citizens of Crete played in defeating fascism.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to participate in the remembrance of a historical even as important as the Battle of Crete. As the sacrifices the Cretans made 55 years ago demonstrate, we are indebted to Greece not only for giving the world the system upon which our country was founded, but for shedding the blood of their sons and daughters to protect that system as well. I strongly encourage all Americans to join me in honoring Greek-Americans of Cretan decent, and our friends in Greece and Crete, for their contribution to one of the most important battles of the 20th Century.

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak about the famed Battle of Crete which occurred at the beginning of World War II. I would like to thank my colleague from Florida, Mr. BILIRAKIS for helping to keep alive the memory of this important battle.

Following the Allied loss of Greece, on May 20th, 1941, the Battle of Crete began in earnest. German forces were far better equipped than the Allied forces left on the island. Described by British Prime Minister Winston Churchill as "A head-on collision with the very spearhead of the German lance" the Battle of Crete displayed the early valiant efforts of Allied forces to stem the tide of the Nazi onslaught.

The majority of the resistance fighters on Crete were natives of the island as well as forces from New Zealand, Australian, and British forces. Having fallen back from defeat in Greece, many of the soldiers came ready to defend the island with little more than small arms.

As is now known, through the monitoring and decoding of German Enigma traffic, the British forces were well aware of the German intentions against Crete, and thus how to wreak havoc against the overwhelming number of paratroopers. Superior intelligence combated superior force numbers and provisions. Initially the Allied defenders had great success against the Nazi war machine—delaying the Axis foothold on the island.

Despite the eventual loss of Crete to the Nazis due to the overwhelming number of oppressor soldiers and supplies streaming to the island, the nearly 4000 killed and missing German paratroopers from the assault served as a significant blow to the myth of German invincibility. After Crete the German parachute arm was never used again in large scale airborne operations.

Aside from its military importance, the main reason we rise today to commemorate the Battle of Crete is to herald the brave stand that the many brave fighters from Crete and Allied forces made in the face of the Nazi onslaught. Rather than capitulate to Nazi tyrannical will, the defenders of Crete fought not only for their land and for their liberty, but for the world's freedom as well. Their sacrifice will never be forgotten.

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor to join my colleagues today in rendering a salute to the heroic men and women who fought tirelessly for the sake of freedom 61 years ago at the Battle of Crete.

As we come upon this anniversary which marks an incredible turning point in what would become the Allied victory of World War II, we are once again reminded of the current and unabated commitment of our Greek allies to the defense of freedom, especially today as we wage a global campaign against terrorism.

Sixty-one years ago, over a 10-day period, Nazi Germany committed a grave error: it underestimated the might and will to resist repression amongst the people of this quiet island nestled in the Mediterranean waters.

Lured to Crete by its strategic amidst three continents, the Axis Powers believed this island, the temporary station of retreating Allied units and home to an unarmed local community, would be an easy victory. That was not the case.

The battle Hitler thought would take a few hours took many days. Nazi Germany launched its first and most substantial airborne attack during the WWII at Crete.

The outcome was a disastrous and shameful loss of strength for the Germans. Over 4,000 Axis Powers troops died.

This loss rendered the German airborne division a faint tool in the War, never again to be used with the same intensity.

The great blow suffered by the Germans at Crete prevent the Axis Powers ability to penetrate the Middle East, but most importantly delayed their invasion of Russia—a determining moment in the victorious end of WWII.

Mr. Speaker, what makes the Battle of Crete such a remarkable moment in the history of our modern time, is that it epitomized the resilience of people when left with no other choice but to fight against repression.

The people of Crete took on the fight for their homeland. Faced with a weak Allied presence and the mounting invasion of the Germans, the people of Crete—men and women, farmers, local police, townspeople—armed with mere pistols, pitchforks, hand grenades, knives, their bare hands created a resistance against the Germans that began the Battle of Crete and lasted until the end of German occupation of Crete in 1945.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, it is with solemn honor and respect that I stand here today to render this tribute to a people who fought with every bit of might and kept the spirit of freedom alive through their resistance.

Their unwavering struggle represented to a world engaged in war hope in the face of despair and the promise of a more peaceful existence.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on the Special Orders on the 61st anniversary of the Battle of Crete.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

A FAILURE TO IMAGINE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. KAPTUR) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, today I went up before the Committee on Rules and, not knowing the rule that would be allowed on the supplemental appropriations bill that will be coming up later this week, I asked that I be allowed to offer a motion to strike $6 million that is included in the supplemental appropriation bill to fund the Colombian Army to protect the pipeline, the oil pipeline owned by that country, but operated in conjunction with Occidental Petroleum and two other multinational oil companies. I am hoping I will be able to offer that amendment here on the floor, because I do not think that U.S. taxpayers should be paying for the protection of private oil when in fact Occidental, for example, made over $2 billion over the last 2 years. Why should the American people be asked to pay $6 million or $100 million to protect that particular facility?

I was reminded of how very difficult it is to get America and certain decision-makers to think beyond the petroleum age. Sometimes you wonder if you can ever win this fight and wean us off our terrible, terrible strategic vulnerability to imported petroleum.

Then I come upon an article this past Sunday in the New York Times by Thomas Friedman that is so good I want to read it into the RECORD tonight. It is called "A Failure to Imagine." Wherever Mr. Friedman is in the world, believe me, he has my thanks, because he is an ally in our cause to get America refocused on what is really important and to no longer use oil as our proxy for foreign policy in the Middle East or Venezuela or Colombia or anywhere else.

He says: "If you ask me, the press has this whole story about whether President Bush had a warning of a possible attack before 9–11, and didn't share it, upside down.

"The failure to prevent September 11 was not a failure of intelligence or coordination. It was a failure of imagination. Even if all the raw intelligence signals had been shared among the FBI, the CIA and the White House," Mr. Friedman writes, he is convinced that "there was no one there who would have put them all together, who would have imagined evil on the scale that Osama bin Laden imagined it.

"Osama bin Laden was (or is) a unique character." He says, "He is a combination of Charles Manson and Jack Welch, a truly evil, twisted personality, but with the organizational skills of a top corporate manager who translated his evil into a global campaign that rocked a superpower. In some ways, I am glad that America (outside Hollywood) is not full of people with bin Laden-like imaginations. One Timothy McVeigh is enough.

"Imagining evil of this magnitude simply does not come naturally to the American character, which is why, even after we are repeatedly confronted with it, we keep reverting to our natural, naively optimistic view. Because our open society is so much based on trust, and that trust is so hard-wired into the American character and citizenry, we can't get rid of it, even when we so obviously should.

"So someone drives a truck bomb into the U.S. Embassy in Beirut, and we still don't really protect the Marine barracks there from a similar, but much bigger, attack a few months later. Someone blows up two U.S. embassies in east Africa with truck bombs, and we still don't imagine that someone would sail an exploding dinghy into a destroyer, the U.S.S. Cole, a few years later. Someone tries to blow up the World Trade Center in 1993 with a truck bomb, and the guy who did it tells us he had always wanted to slam a plane into the CIA, but we still couldn't imagine someone doing just that to the Twin Towers on 9–11.

"So I don't fault the President for not having imagined evil of this magnitude. But given the increasingly lethal nature of terrorism, we are going to have to adapt. We need an 'Office of Evil' whose job would be to constantly sift all intelligence data and imagine what the most twisted mind might be up to."

No, the author, Mr. Friedman, does not blame President Bush at all for his failure to imagine evil, but he blames him for "something much worse: his failure to imagine good." Mr. Friedman blames him for "squandering all the positive feeling in America after 9–11, particularly among young Americans who wanted to be drafted for a great project that would strengthen America in some lasting way, a Manhattan Project for energy independence. Such a project could have enlisted young people in a national movement for greater conservation and enlisted science and industry in a crash effort to produce enough renewable energy, efficiencies and domestic production to wean us gradually off oil imports.

"Such a project not only would have made us safer by making us independent of countries who share none of our values. It would also have made us safer by giving the world a much stronger reason to support our war on terrorism."

Mr. Speaker, I will include the remaining part of this article in the RECORD and would say that America, our country and the planet would be a whole lot greener, cleaner, and safer in the broadest sense if America were truly energy independent.

Mr. Speaker, I include the balance of the article for the RECORD.

There is no way we can be successful in this war without partners, and there is no way America will have lasting partners, especially in Europe, unless it is perceived as being the best global citizen it can be. And the best way to start conveying that would be by reducing our energy gluttony and ratifying the Kyoto treaty to reduce global warming.

President Bush is not alone in this failure. He has had the full cooperation of the Democratic Party leadership, which has been just as lacking in imagination. This has made it easy for Mr. Bush, and his oil-industry paymasters, to get away with it.

We and our kids are going to regret this. Because a war on terrorism that is fought only by sending soldiers to Afghanistan or by tightening our borders will ultimately be unsatisfying. Such a war is important, but it can never be definitively won. Someone will always slip through. But a war on terrorism that, with some imagination, is broadly defined as making America safer by also making it better is a war that could be won. It's a war that could ensure that something lasting comes out of 9/11, other than longer lines at the airport—and that something would be enhanced respect for America and a country and a planet that would be greener, cleaner and safer in the broadest sense.

Too bad we don't have a president who could imagine that.

PROJECT VARELA, A HISTORIC STEP TOWARD DEMOCRATIC REFORM IN CUBA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to draw attention to Project Varela, a historic step towards democratic reform in Cuba.

On Friday, May 10, over 11,000 citizens of Cuba took a courageous stand and petitioned the Cuban National Assembly to hold a nationwide referendum vote on guarantees of human rights and civil liberties.

Named for the nineteenth century priest and Cuban independence hero, Padre Felix Varela, the Varela Project received no funding or support from foreign organizations or foreign governments. This was a grassroots effort by the Cuban people to call on their government to provide them with internationally accepted standards of human and civil rights, including freedom of speech, the right to own a business, electoral reform and amnesty for political prisoners. This is the largest nonviolent challenge to Castro's decade-long, single-party control of the Cuban Government.

With its 11,000-plus signatures, the project qualifies under article 88 of the Cuban constitution, which states if the Cuban National Assembly receives the verified signatures of 10,000 legal voters, a referendum on the issue should be scheduled. Unfortunately, Cuban officials have given little hope for the project's success, stating that the national assembly is unlikely to agree to accept the petition and follow through with their constitutional obligation to hold a referendum vote.

Mr. Speaker, the ultimate goal of U.S. policy towards Cuba has always been to promote the island's peaceful transition to democracy. Many of my colleagues have varying views on the best approach to achieve the democracy; however, we can all agree on the importance of a grass-roots democratic effort like Project Varela.

That is why I plan to introduce, Mr. Speaker, a resolution praising Project Varela and calling on the Cuban government to accept the petition and to hold the referendum. I urge all of my colleagues to join with me in commending the citizens of Cuba for actively exercising their constitutional rights and taking a stand for the rights of all Cubans.

WORLD BANK PLANS MORE LOANS TO IRAN OVER U.S. OBJECTIONS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, where you sit now or stand now, the President of the United States told this Nation right after September 11 that there are those who are with us and those who are with the terrorists. I was not surprised to hear our President indicate that the government of Iran is on the side of the terrorists. Yes, it is true that there is a nominal, though impotent, figurehead reformist posing as President of Iran, but, of course, the real power is exercised by unelected officials who take the most extreme pro-terrorist views. So I was not surprised when our President used the term "axis of evil" and included the government of Iran, not the people of Iran who have given us one of the world's great civilizations, but the current unelected real power in the government of Iran.

I was not surprised today when the United States State Department identified the Iranian government as the number one sponsor of terrorism, but there was something that surprised me. I am surprised that we are about to finance those who finance terrorism. Yes, we do not have to comb the mountains of Afghanistan to find Mohammed Omar, because here in Washington down on K Street are those who are ready to finance those in the government of Iran who are the number one sponsors of terrorism.

This entity does not only enjoy the protection of the American government, but surprise further, they are about to receive over 800 million of our tax dollars this year, just as they did in prior years. I refer to the World Bank, an organization that does many worthy projects. Of course, Osama bin Laden built hospitals as well. Now they are about to fund the number one sponsor of terrorism.

Let us reflect that money is fungible. The government in Tehran spends the minimum they have to on domestic affairs in order to secure their power. Whatever is left over goes for nuclear weapons development and to finance terrorism, and to help meet those domestic needs the World Bank financed by our taxpayers.

I want to skip a little ahead in my speech to make sure I identify this point. I am currently working on legislation, and I hope others will join me in drafting it, not as mere cosponsors, but as genuine coauthors, to say to the World Bank: Enough is enough. That if you make further loans to Iran, you will not be allowed to receive any additional monies from the United States and, perhaps further, that if you make additional loans to Iran, we will withdraw the capital that we have already invested. This is because weak protests, a mere vote and voice, virtually guarantees that the World Bank will send over $700 million, $755 million, to be more precise, over the next year to the government in Tehran.

Two years ago when the World Bank proposed a loan, we weakly voted against it. We told them we were against it. We voted all of our shares. It did not matter. And if this House is willing to settle for nothing more than a weak protest, then let us remember that when Iran develops nuclear weapons, they are not going to be smuggling them in to Paris or Rome; those nuclear weapons, scarcely the size of a human being, will be smuggled into Washington or New York or Los Angeles. And those European governments that stood with Tehran and demanded that they get funded will not be the immediate targets of Iranian nuclear terrorism. We will.

So perhaps we need to do more than weakly protest and get outvoted than have tea with the diplomats who are sending our money to Tehran.

Now, we will be told that the World Bank is 5 different entities and we are funding the right hand and the money to Tehran is coming out of the left hand. Let us not be fooled. There is one staff, there is one president, there is one group of directors making one group of decisions, and if we are going to send over $800 million this fiscal year alone in this upcoming appropriations bill, not the supplemental, but the annual, if we are going to send that money to the very people who delight in the financing of the Tehran regime, and we can get outvoted as to how it is spent, a mere change in the bylaws, then even the right hand could send money to Tehran or to Khartoum in Sudan.

Mr. Speaker, let us hope that this Congress has the courage to upset the diplomats at their tea parties and say no money for the World Bank if that World Bank is financing the government in Iran.

WORLD BANK, OVER US OBJECTIONS, PLANS MORE LOANS TO IRAN

(By Joseph Rebello)

WASHINGTON (DOW JONES).—The World Bank, undeterred by President George W.

Bush's condemnation of Iran as part of an "axis of evil, arming to threaten the peace of the world," is pressing ahead with a plan that would provide as much as $755 million in loans to the country over the next two years.

Since the bank began preparing the plan, Iran has mostly disappointed Western expectations that political reformers would succeed in making it more democratic and liberal. Reformers were silenced, and public executions and public floggings increased last year, according to Human Rights Watch. Iran remained the world's "most active" state sponsor of terrorism, according to the U.S. government.

But inside the bank support for more loans to Iran has only grown, officials say. In January, just as Bush identified Iran as a key threat to U.S. security in his State of the Union address, a team of bank directors returned from a visit to Tehran. Its recommendation: "deeper and faster involvement of the bank" in Iran, said Jean-Louis Sarbib, the bank's vice president for the Middle East and North Africa.

STAFF EXPECTS TO SEEK APPROVAL FOR NEW LOAN BY DEC.

"We have been quite impressed with the way they have gone about some of their macroeconomic reforms," said Sarbib, citing the country's success in building its foreign reserves, in reducing poverty and in ensuring basis education for all Iranian girls. "What we see on the economic side are people who are really trying to build economic democracy, who are trying to build a market system."

The bank's staff intends to seek approval for a new loan—worth about $150 million—by the end of the year. That loan is an element of a tentative plan, endorsed last year by the bank's board of directors, that advocates the approval of $755 million in loans to Iran in fiscal 2002 and 2003. Iran could eventually be eligible for more than $500 million a year, if it continues to satisfy the bank's requirements, officials said.

For the U.S. government, the bank's biggest shareholder, the courtship of Iran has been a lingering source of embarrassment. The U.S. contributes 29% of the bank's capital. It control 16% of the votes cast by the bank's directors—usually a decisive share. It is forbidden by Congress from supporting loans to Iran. But it has been powerless to stop them in recent years.

U.S. HASN'T BEEN ABLE TO STOP LOANS TO IRAN RECENTLY

Two years ago, the bank's directors ended a seven-year lull in lending to Iran and approved two loans worth $232 million. The U.S. objected strenuously. Madeline Albright, the secretary of state, lobbied leaders of other governments, asking them to oppose the loans because of Iran's human-rights record. She made little headway: the U.S. cast the sole no vote. Canada and France abstained.

James Wolfensohn, the bank's president, told U.S. officials at the time that the loans addressed "basic human needs" and were designed to support the reform efforts of Mohammad Khatami, a moderate cleric who had been elected Iranian president in a landslide in 1997. But any future loans, he told the bank's U.S. representative, would be considered only after a "review of all aspects of the economic and governance programs of his government."

Iran's performance since then has been mixed. Khatami was reelected to a second four-year term last June. His government briefly warmed toward the U.S. after the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11—it offered, at one point, to rescue U.S. pilots downed in the war in Afghanistan. But Khatami's influence soon faded amid a crackdown by the country's conservative clerics, who control Iran's judiciary and security forces.

"Even after his sweeping election victory in June, when he increased his share of the popular vote, (Khatami) continued to shy away from open confrontation with his opponents and made no discernible progress in implementing his promised reforms," Human Rights Watch said in a report in January that warned of "mounting" social and economic problems. "Increasingly . . . he appeared to represent more of a safety valve than an agent of tangible change," it said.

The World Bank, however, measures Iran's performance differently. It considers itself apolitical: The bank's mandate, officials say, is simply to reduce poverty and promote sustainable economic development among poorer countries. In deciding to make loans, accordingly, it avoids making official judgments abut the borrower's stance on human rights, terrorism or nuclear weapons. Instead it keeps a close eye on economic and social indicators and the speed with which governments improve those statistics.

By those measures, Iran has performed splendidly. The poverty rate has fallen to 15.5% from 47% in 1978. The infant mortality rate dropped to 26 for every 1,000 births from 47 in 1990. Iran has also built up $17 billion in foreign reserves, partly because of the recent rebound in oil prices and partly because it has paid off much of its debt. It has lowered tariffs, removed most non-tariff trade barriers and unified its system of multiple exchange rates—all well ahead of schedule.

"We are seeing concrete results—in terms of economic and social reforms," Sarbib said. Last year, the bank's staff completed the review that Wolfensohn and the bank directors had called for, and advanced a short-term plan calling for the launch of a half-dozen development projects in 2002 and 2003. With the exception of the bank's U.S. representative, all of the bank's 24 directors supported the proposal. The bank's staff plans to present a long-term lending plan to the directors next year.

"The general sense among executive directors is that they are supportive of the bank's engagement with Iran, with the exception of the U.S.," said one director who asked not to be named. "It's difficult to see how the U.S. position could influence other countries. My sense is there is not widespread support for the U.S. position."

U.S. LAWMAKER CRITICIZES BANK; SAYS U.S. LACKADAISICAL

At least one U.S. lawmaker is incensed, saying the loans will merely bolster Iran's repressive leadership. "Money is fungible," said Rep. Brad Sherman, D-Calif. "The money that the World Bank is providing to Iran's government is not particularly benefiting its people. That government will engage in the minimum domestic expenditures necessary to maintain power. Whatever is left over they'll spend on terrorism and nuclear weapons."

Sherman said he has been trying to get the Bush administration to take a harder line with World Bank, with little success. "Nobody's blood pressure is up on this," he said. "The problem is the U.S. bureaucracy. They say, 'Oh, gee, we'll vote no. If we get outvoted, que sera sera.' It's as if they hadn't listened to the State of the Union address. It's as if they were unaware of what happened on Sept. 11."

A Treasury Department spokeswoman, Michele Davis, said the U.S. government has regularly expressed its displeasure with the World Bank's plans for Iran. "The U.S. opposes World Bank lending to Iran and has consistently communicated this position to Bank management, including in May of 2002, when the World Bank approved two loans to Iran despite U.S. opposition," she said.

World Bank officials, meanwhile, said they can see no reason why Iran should be deprived of loans. Sarbib rejects the argument that World Bank loans for humanitarian and development purposes allow Iran to spend its own resources to develop nuclear weapons and promote terrorism. "Look, they have $17 billion of reserves," he says. "If they want to do all these things, they can do it. They don't need World bank funds to do that kind of stuff."

Besides, he said, "Iran is a member in good standing of the World Bank. They are current on all their obligations. As a member in good standing of the cooperative, they are entitled to the services of the cooperative."

BLUE DOG COALITION TAKES STRONG POSITION REGARDING DEBT CEILING

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. TURNER) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, it is good to be here tonight to address a very important issue, the issue of fiscal responsibility, and I am joined tonight by some of my colleagues who are members of the Blue Dog Democrat coalition. That group of 33 Democrats in the House who believe in fiscal responsibility, who believe in balanced budgets, who believe in controlling spending, who believe in paying down our national debt, which now consumes, just to pay the interest, 14 cents out of every tax dollar. In fact, $1 out of every $4 of individual income tax payments made into the Treasury every year goes solely to pay the interest on our national debt.

The Blue Dogs have taken a very strong position with regard to an issue that is pending before this House and may very well be debated this week, and that is the issue of the debt ceiling. As we all know, there is a law on the books that controls the amount of debt that the United States Government can incur. That statutory debt ceiling has now been reached and, just in the last few days, the Secretary of the Treasury has been manipulating our Federal accounts to ensure that we do not go into default with regard to the obligations of the Federal Government. In fact, the Secretary of the Treasury has used the Federal Employees Retirement Fund as a means of avoiding, violating the statutory debt ceiling. And for a period of time, until the Congress acts to increase the statutory debt ceiling, the employees of the Federal Government will have their retirement funds being used to avoid the default in the obligations of this Federal Government.

The Blue Dog Democrats believe that we need to address the issue of the debt limit in an honest and responsible way. We believe that the debt ceiling, rather than an arbitrary amount that has no great significance, as some would suggest when they propose that we raise the debt ceiling by $750 billion, we believe that that debt ceiling is one of the last tools that this Congress has to promote fiscal responsibility and to require balanced budgets.

Just a year ago when this Congress voted the largest tax cut in recent history, we were projecting over the next decade record surpluses. Here we are just one year later and we no longer project surpluses, but we are projecting deficit spending and ever-growing national debt.

In 1997, this Congress passed the Balanced Budget Act. The Balanced Budget Act was one of the first pieces of major legislation that I voted on as a freshman member of this Congress. It put us on the road to fiscal responsibility and for 4 years this Congress produced balanced budgets. In fact, we produced budgets with surpluses, and we were able to begin the process, the slow process of paying down our national debt which totals close to $6 trillion today. That act was one of the most significant pieces of legislation that this Congress has dealt with in an effort to end the practice of deficit spending. In fact, the Congress, for 30 years prior to 1997, engaged in deficit spending and accumulated this almost $6 trillion national debt.

This year, the Congress, once again, is back into deficit spending. In fact, if we look at the first 7 months of this fiscal year, we will see that we have accumulated a $66.5 billion deficit, and many estimate that the deficit for this fiscal year will be as high as $150 billion. That means that we are spending the trust funds of the Federal Government to run the rest of the government's operations. We are doing what this Congress pledged in previous years not to do, and that is, we are raiding the Social Security Trust Fund, the retirement fund of the American people, to run the rest of the government. We believe that is wrong. We believe that is fiscally irresponsible.

Mr. Speaker, that $66.5 billion deficit that we already run in this fiscal year for the first 7 months compares to a surplus that we had at this point in time one year ago when, 7 months into the previous fiscal year, we were running $166 billion surplus. We clearly have seen a dramatic change in the financial picture of the Federal Government.

The Blue Dog Democrats believe that we must return to balanced budgets, and we have a plan to get us there.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have on the floor of the House with me tonight the gentleman from Utah (Mr. MATHESON), who has been a member of the Blue Dogs and who has stood up consistently for fiscal responsibility, who has represented his district in the way that I think most Americans want this Congress to be represented and that is, he has fought for balanced budgets and for paying down the debt. It is a privilege to have him on the floor tonight and to yield to the gentleman from Utah (Mr. MATHESON).

Mr. MATHESON. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. TURNER) for taking the lead tonight on what has been a continuing effort on the part of the Blue Dog Coalition to raise consciousness about this issue, because we are about to approach what we have been talking about for the last few weeks.

Let me just briefly review the circumstances that we have gotten into at this point.

By law, Congress has to set the debt limit for how much debt this country can have. We have had the benefit in the last few years of running some surpluses, so Congress has not had to vote on the debt limit for a while.

Now, I am a newcomer to this Congress. This is my first term. I came in with a stated desire to carry on with the Blue Dog agenda of being fiscally responsible, of trying to pay down our debt. Those are critical issues for me.

Now, circumstances have changed and some of these things, of course, no one could predict. With the events of September 11, the ensuing war on terrorism, the need for additional resources for homeland security, and a recession that this country has faced, the projections have turned around. We are running deficits, as the gentleman from Texas (Mr. TURNER) just indicated.

We understand that as Blue Dogs that there may very well be, and in fact I think there is, a legitimate call to increase that debt limit by some degree because we have encountered these tough times right now.

A number of us have cosponsored legislation that calls for an increase of $150 billion in the debt limit, coupled with the fact that we have to sit down and identify with the President and Congress a budget that is going to put us on a path back to balance by 2007.

We as Blue Dogs support the war on terrorism. We support efforts to upgrade homeland security. We support those efforts wholeheartedly. We recognize that is a need this country must address. We understand that in that context of the short term we are going to be running a deficit right now.

But the concern we have is this request came in, and this request came in to raise the debt limit by $750 billion. We throw numbers around Washington all the time, but $750 billion is a lot of money. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. TURNER) just indicated that maybe the projections this year are maybe the deficit will be $150 billion. So why do we need to raise the debt limit by $750 billion?

The real concern, and it is something that as Blue Dogs we have been talking about for week after week after week on the House floor, is that we are being asked to increase this limit by this huge amount with no indication of a plan on how we are going to get out of this deficit spending. There is no indication of a plan that someday we are going to turn this around and not saddle future generations with more and more debt.

There are a lot of people in this body on both sides of the aisle who strongly desire a reduction in the tax burden on our society. Well, in terms of future generations we are not doing them any favors, because we are piling up debt, and the tax burden is going to be laid on them to pay the interest on that debt.

So that is really the issue we have been trying to raise over the last few months: Why, why $750 billion? Why give Congress and the administration in effect a blank check to run up that much more debt over the next few years with no plan to turn it around?

We have come on the House floor, and we have talked about how, in the private sector, when you go out and borrow money, whether it is for a car or a home mortgage, or whether you are a business getting a loan, when you go to the bank you have to be able to tell the bank a story, a credible story about how you are going to pay the debt back. They are not just going to give you the loan without you justifying your capability and identifying a plan for how you are going to pay that back.

Blue Dogs do not claim to have every answer in the book, but we certainly claim to have the desire to sit down, put the papers and numbers out on the table, and let us articulate a way, let us identify a way to turn this financial ship around, so instead of running more deficits we can get back to balanced budgets.

As I said, we have been talking about this for many weeks. That really brings us to where we are today. What is really disturbing is perhaps we have got a lot of people thinking about this, and they do not want to have this vote on whether we should increase the debt limit by $750 billion. What we hear from reports is we are going to sneak this debt limit increase in on the supplemental appropriations bill.

Now, this is a bill that is an important bill. The supplemental appropriations bill is for emergency spending, and it contains significant spending regarding defense issues that are important to this country. Some would describe it as a "must pass" bill. When you have a "must pass" bill, maybe there is a desire to tuck in another provision that otherwise you do not want to have to put in front of us for a straight up-or-down vote.

That is not the way we should be working here. That is not what democracy is about. That is not what my constituents elected me to do, and that is not what constituents across the country elected their Members of Congress to do. They elected us to take on the issues and stand up and be counted.

What is really interesting is this is being done in a very innocuous way. The language that is going to be added to the supplemental appropriations bill does not really say $750 billion. All it says, well, there is some innocuous language about maintaining the full faith and credit of debt obligations that this country can incur.

Then the idea is, and this is where we are getting into total inside-Washington process discussions, and I hate to have to go into that, but that is what is going on here, is that it is going to go to the conference committee with the Senate and we are going to have a debt limit increase happen, where here on the House floor, as a stand-alone item, we will never have voted for it.

I find that a shame. I find that a shame, because we are going to set ourselves on a path for running up massive amounts of debt. If we are going to set ourselves on that path, then by golly, we ought to all stand up and see who wants to vote to do that.

That would be my request of people on both sides of the aisle here in this body, that we take the time to have a good debate and discuss fiscal policy, fiscal responsibility, how this government is going to move ahead in the next few years, how we can take actions to stop running up more debt, to stop saddling the next generation with so much debt, and to do what our constituents expect us to do.

When you come to this job, you know you are not always going to have easy votes. You face tough votes a lot. But this is a tough vote I hope we can face, because I fear we are not going to face that tough vote. It is getting tucked into this other bill. It is getting tucked in where we cannot even force an up-or-down stand-alone vote on that item.

So that really is why we are here tonight. After many weeks of talking about this, my Blue Dog colleagues have come to the floor Tuesday after Tuesday after Tuesday to try to raise consciousness about this. It is something we believe in so much.

I have been so proud to be associated with the Blue Dog Coalition because of their position on this very issue. And I pledge, first of all, and I speak for me and for the Blue Dogs, we are ready to work with people. We really are. We want to roll up our sleeves and try to come up with solutions.

I would make a request that everyone on both sides of the aisle try to join us in this effort. It is too important to play with election year and partisan politics. This is too important, when we take a look at the next generation. It is important we take on this issue. Let us make sure we have a true up-or-down vote on this issue. Let us articulate what our policy is going to be.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Utah. I appreciate his strong stand for fiscal responsibility. He is so right: we have the supplemental appropriations bill which is being considered as we speak by the Committee on Rules of this House, and it has been rumored that there will be an effort to sneak into that supplemental appropriations bill, which contains needed spending to fight the war on terrorism, language that would allow the debt ceiling to be raised without a full and adequate debate.

Because of the significance of the growing deficit and the ever-increasing national debt that results from that, Blue Dogs believe very strongly that that issue should have a straight up-or-down vote by the entire Congress and should not be tucked away out of the light of day in some other piece of legislation.

I am pleased that we are also joined on the floor tonight by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM), one of the most respected spokespersons that we have in the House on fiscal matters, a gentleman who has fought his entire career in the Congress, over 20 years, for fiscal responsibility, and who has gained the respect of all his colleagues for his consistency with regard to his interest in balancing our budget and paying down our debts.

Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to yield to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM).

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend, the gentleman from Texas, for the overly generous words of introduction.

Straight from the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. TAYLOR), I want to report that our total public debt outstanding on April 30, 2002, is $5,984,677,357,213.86. That is up $323,329,559,211.21 in the last 12 months. That is up. We have borrowed a public debt of $323 billion. That is what we are here tonight to talk about.

We have now reached the debt ceiling of $5.95 trillion. In fact, we are past it as of April 3, and Secretary of the Treasury Mr. O'Neill has asked that this debt ceiling be increased $750 billion.

The Blue Dogs have said for the last month or 6 weeks that we are perfectly willing to give a clean up-and-down vote on increasing the debt ceiling, not by a $750 billion blank check to spend more money, but to pay for the war and to pay for the necessary spending, and all that we ask is that we have a new budget plan submitted by the administration and taken up by this Congress.

The respected Concord Coalition has come out just yesterday and urged Congress to have swift action on increasing the debt ceiling and not to play games with something as serious as default on the United States of America's debt.

They are right in that, and the action that will perhaps be completed in the Committee on Rules any moment now is suggesting that rather than have a clean up-and-down vote on the budget ceiling, we are going to hide it in a supplemental appropriation. And not only are we going to hide that, we are also going to hide some additional spending.

I would predict to the gentleman tonight, we will not know it tomorrow because this is going to be added tonight, or sometime before we vote tomorrow, but sometime in the next 2 or 3 or 4 days we are going to find out there was some more spending, millions and millions and millions of dollars that was added to this supplemental emergency spending bill. It is going to be embarrassing for all who vote for it.

Back in 1993, I participated at that time with John Kasich and Tim Penny, and that was back when we were in the majority, Republicans were in the minority, and many of us on both sides of the aisle had grown quite tired of having emergency spending bills loaded up with nonemergency spending.

We introduced a bill, and I was proud to introduce the bill, and John Kasich, who later became chairman of the Committee on the Budget, Tim Penny, and it passed. It was thought to be such a good rule, and it is pretty simple: emergency spending, since it comes outside of the normal budget rules and regulations, should not have nonemergency spending added to it.

In fact, people thought it was so good that when my friends on the Republican side of the aisle became in the majority, they adopted this as one of their first rules, and it is a good rule.

My question tonight, Mr. Speaker, is why would we waive a rule, a rule that says that only emergency spending should be on an emergency spending bill? Why would we waive that rule and allow additional spending? Why not stick with the House rules? Why not say to everyone that wants to add a little extra spending to this bill: Is it an emergency? If it is not, wait your turn on the regular appropriation process.

That is a good question. We will ask it again tomorrow. We have a little more time tonight, because I suspect that this rule tomorrow and the debate will be very controlled. I suspect that there will be no amendments allowed. I wrote a letter that I sent to the chairman of the Committee on Rules (Mr. DREIER) today saying "Should you choose to waive this rule, then why not also make it consistent to those of us who would like to take the debt ceiling and separate it from the supplemental, and have a clean up-and-down vote on the debt ceiling—why not allow the rule to permit that? You are playing with fire."

In fact, we are playing with the very economy of the United States when we take a chance that somehow in the conference that will come back from the Senate that the debt ceiling will be applied to that conference. That is not a given. In fact, I hope that it does not come back with the debt ceiling attached to it.

It is amazing how some of us stay inconsistent in this body. Less than 6 years ago, 225 Republicans voted to soundly reprimand and prohibit then Secretary Rubin from taking precisely the actions outlined by Secretary O'Neill again this week.

The silence of the 147 Republicans who remain in the House today implies far less anxiety about the same actions today.

The fact that Secretary O'Neill must resort to short-term emergency measures to meet our Nation's obligation drives home the fact that not only that Congress failed to perform its duties, but also that budget surpluses were a short-lived success which have now been replaced by more deficit spending.

Again, lest people not understand what we are saying tonight, we Blue Dogs are perfectly willing, in fact, we have sent letters to the President, to the Speaker, in which we indicate we are willing to vote to increase the debt ceiling. Not by $750 billion but enough to get us through the August, well, the July reestimate of where we really are on the economy. And then in October let us pass a new budget. We Blue Dogs have suggested spending caps. In fact, we have already stated that we are willing to live with the spending levels that are present in the House-passed budget resolution. We are ready to go with that one and we believe that is a reasonable amount of spending. But what we are opposed to is hiding a very important and significant vote, hiding it in the supplemental emergency spending, spending that is necessary to pay for the war, something we are for.

I remember a speech my friend, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. TURNER) gave a few weeks ago on this subject and I have borrowed considerably from the thought that he had that night in which the gentleman acknowledged a little bit of concern in his own mind as to why we, this generation, are sending our youngest and finest to risk their lives, and we find that several have lost their lives in Afghanistan this week, why we do that and we do it on borrowed money.

We are having to pay $1 billion a day now for interest on the national debt. We have increased the national debt $323 billion in the last year, and under the budget plan that we are now under that the majority refuses, refuses to even reconsider, we are going to borrow another trillion dollars in the next couple of years. Why would we do that and then when our youngest and finest come home from defending this country in the fight against terrorism, why would we do that and then ask them to work and pay in taxes so that the interest on the debt that we sent them over to fight with? It does not make us kind of like the Greatest Generation, Tom Brokaw's book.

I remember the gentleman from Texas (Mr. TURNER) making that speech and he was just as right as he could be. And I find that others are kind of agreeing to that. I do not understand why our colleagues, particularly some of them who purport to be conservatives and challenge us and chastise us every time we take to the floor, at least there will be one coming after us and saying, well, you Blue Dogs do this, you Blue Dogs do that, but you really do not mean this. Well, judge us by our actions and by our deeds, not by our words.

What we are saying tonight again, the Concord Coalition is right. They urge swift action to avoid a debt crisis. By the end of June, Mr. O'Neill will not be able to juggle the books. He will not be able to borrow from the civil service retirement fund, from the military retirement fund, from the Medicare trust fund. It will be fish-or-cut-bait time.

We can avoid that tomorrow. We can avoid that tomorrow with a simple, simple resolution that increases the debts by a smaller amount than $750 billion, of which every Blue Dog will join with our colleagues on the other side in doing that, provided they are willing to put a new economic game plan in place. We think it is time to do that.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back to the gentleman.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for sharing his thoughts.

I know that all of us feel very strongly that this issue of the statutory debt ceiling deserves a full and open debate of this House. And with the national debt rising, with deficit spending back upon us, somebody has to put on the brakes. Somebody has to say that we need to control spending. Somebody needs to say that we ought to do the same thing in Congress that we all have to do at our own households, and that is we have to pay the bills. And as the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM) suggested, I have been very concerned about the fact that we are asking young men and women to fight the war against terrorism, and yet we are doing it on borrowed money, which means that when they get back home and they are in their better income-earning years, they will be the ones that will have to pay for the war that they fought.

So it seems to me that the right thing to do in Washington is the same thing that we all try to do in our own households, and that is, we pay our bills. We meet our obligations. We do not say that we are going to incur debt without having a plan for repaying that debt. And that is all that the Blue Dogs are asking with regard to the statutory debt ceiling is to say that, yes, the economy is on the downturn. We are in a war. Congress passed a major tax cut just a year ago and all the surpluses that were heralded at the time we took that vote are no longer there, and so the circumstances have changed.

Unfortunately, there seem to be many in Washington today who suggest that even though the circumstances have changed, we do not want to do anything differently. And we know that when our financial circumstances change, we have to change our spending patterns. We have to change our economic circumstances in a way that allows us to live within our means, and Congress is not doing that today. So I am hopeful that we will get a chance to have an honest and open debate about this debt ceiling and we will, as Blue Dogs, support an increase of $150 billion to account for the fact that there has been additional expenditures as a result of war. But we have gone a long way from just a year ago when the administration and the Secretary of the Treasury said that we will not have to deal with the statutory debt ceiling for 7 years, to today when we already know we have hit the statutory debt ceiling, and were it not for the Secretary of the Treasury manipulating the employees' retirement funds to keep the obligations of the United States government from going into default, that we would have a catastrophe on our hands today. And even after he pulls out all the tricks in the bag, those are going to run out by the end of June, and this Congress will have to raise the statutory debt ceiling in order to avoid a default on the obligations of the United States government, in order to pay a Social Security check, in order to be sure we pay the bills that are keeping the military of our country operating today in Afghanistan, we will have to raise the debt ceiling. We understand that. But we just do not believe it is right to raise it $750 billion. In essence, giving a blank check to this Congress and this President for ever-increasing spending.

So we feel very strongly that we have got to draw the line here and use this opportunity to remind this Congress and the American people that it is important to pay your bills. It is important to control spending. It is important to have a budget that moves us back to a balanced budget within the next 5 years. And even to say that is being generous because, in fact, most of us would like to see us move back to a balanced budget next year. The problem is the Congress, through its spending, and the Congress through the changed circumstances, and through the large tax cut that was enacted last year, has put us in a ditch. We are in a deficit ditch. And we have got to get ourselves out of it, and to fail to do so is an injustice to the next generation because the truth of the matter is the folly of unrestrained spending today, the folly of ever-increasing national debt and deficit spending means that our children and our grandchildren will be left to deal with the consequences of our inability to control our own spending and to balance our own budget.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield again to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM). I know that there is a plan that we have laid out as Blue Dogs and I think it is important for us to talk a little bit about that plan. Just the day before yesterday several of us met together with the ranking Democrat on the Committee on the Budget, the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT), who does an excellent job of trying to persuade this Congress to move back towards balanced budgets and to end deficit spending. We also had several Blue Dogs there. The gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MOORE) co-sponsored the legislation; the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. HILL), one of the co-sponsors of the legislation, along with the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM) and myself and the gentleman from Utah (Mr. MATHESON). And that plan was a sensible plan. That was a plan that should be supported in a bipartisan way by this Congress and by every Member of this Congress who calls themselves a fiscal conservative.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM) to allow him to talk a little bit about that plan so we can have the people understand tonight that what we are really trying to do is restore fiscal responsibility.

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for yielding back.

We have the Blue Dog ABC plan. It is as simple as ABC. I have already mentioned one tonight. We are prepared, in fact, we have indicated our support for the House budget spending levels as indicated in the budget, those numbers we tried to offer in our own budget this year, but once again we are denied even having an opportunity to have an alternative budget. But the spending levels are fine.

We need to recognize that strong budget enforcement rules are important. The provisions of the Budget Enforcement Act of 1990 expire this year and one of the things we have learned over the last 10 years is that meaningful caps on discretionary spending which tell our appropriators this is how much you can spend and if you spend more, you must offset it, it has worked. The appropriators have been responsible when the caps were there and when they were meaningful. But the 1997 Budget Act got off, a little bit off of what would be considered meaningful caps, particularly in the area of health care and rural health care and what has happened when you put unrealistic caps on without doing the policy changes.

Something else that the Blue Dogs have suggested in our plan is we think we ought to have a vote on the balanced budget amendment to the Constitution again; believing that as much as we would prefer not amending the Constitution from such purpose, we believe that it would be very helpful to have that amendment added to the Constitution so no future president and no future Congresses can again do what is now happening regarding the debt and borrowing money, borrowing money and spending the money. It used to be it was tax and spend. It is now borrow and spend. And the biggest difference between tax and spend and borrow and spend, with the borrow and spend, our children and grandchildren do not have a vote on it. If you tax, everyone in this body will get unelected. If you propose taxing to pay for the spending, that is different. But borrow and spend on our grandchildren, they do not have a vote and that is easy to do; and that is what we will, again, do tomorrow. And we will hide it in the supplemental emergency spending, so that we do not have the guts to stand up and say that is what we are going to do.

Well, some of us will not do that but, again, I repeat we are perfectly willing to increase the debt ceiling to dig us out of the ditch that we have dug ourselves into, even though some of us will say we did not vote for the budget. It matters not. We are all responsible, all 435 of us. We are perfectly willing to increase that debt ceiling.

The gentleman mentioned also the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT). One of the areas here, restore fiscal discipline, again, that is in the bill and it will be offered. Perhaps we will have to do it on the recommittal, perhaps we will have to do it in talking about defeating the rule so that we might have an opportunity to provide for a smaller debt increase. $150 billion, that would get us through to September and then in September when we come back after the August break, we will have a little, a little better idea of where the economy of this country is. And we can then, in fact, deal with a new economic game plan.

But, again, we do not seem to be getting through to our friends on the other side. They do not seem to be willing to change the economic game plan which will require that for the next 10 years we are going to have to borrow at least 2.75 trillion more dollars. This $750 billion down payment or installment is just the tip of the iceberg as to what is going to be needed.

I do not understand why our friends on the other side do not accept the hand that the Blue Dogs are offering to them and saying let us deal with deficit spending openly and honestly, let us deal with the debt ceiling openly and honestly, let us put spending caps back on, but let us revise the economic game plan that we are on so that we do not have to borrow the full $750 billion.

And do not hide it, do not hide it in an emergency supplemental and do not waive the rules of which I agreed with my friends on the other side of the aisle about 8 years ago when I said emergency spending should be emergency spending. If it is not emergency spending do not put it on an emergency spending bill. My colleagues will be surprised the million, tens if not hundreds of millions of dollars that will be voted on in this emergency supplemental that a careful analysis will show is not emergency, and we will have to have a rule that waives, waives, the rules in order to pass it.

We do not think that is the proper way to go. We will give my colleagues a clean up-and-down vote on increasing that debt ceiling. We will do what the Concorde Coalition is urging us to do. Let us not have a debt crisis.

This plan does not work and it does not get added to the conference coming back. Come about mid-June we are going to be in a crisis because Secretary O'Neill cannot juggle the books forever without having an economic crisis facing our country. It is too important for us to play with that game, especially when there can be bipartisan support; and all we have got to do is sit down and revise our budget.

Just like September 11, 9/11/01 changed America forever, and no one could foresee that and, yes, it has added increased spending needs for this country; but why if we need to have the increased spending do we not see the need to change the economic game plan that we are under? Why does the other side insist on staying with the same game plan while at the same time saying everything has changed? I do not understand that.

I yield back to my friend from Texas.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for sharing some of the elements of the Blue Dog plan for restoring fiscal discipline, and I am particularly pleased my colleague mentioned the constitutional amendment to require a balanced budget. That amendment was introduced by one of our fellow Blue Dogs, the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. BERRY).

I had the opportunity to serve in the Texas legislature, the Texas House and Texas Senate, for 10 years; and in Texas, as in most every other State in the Union, we have a requirement in law, in Texas it is in our constitution, that we have a balanced budget. So every year when the legislature convenes, they are required to not spend anymore than is estimated to come into the next budget cycle; and if they fail to do that, they have violated the Texas constitution.

If we had such a restraint in our Federal Constitution, we would not be here tonight talking about a five, almost $6 trillion national debt. We would have solved that problem a long time ago, and the gentleman from Arkansas' (Mr. BERRY) constitutional amendment makes sure that we have a balanced budget by including that requirement in our Constitution.

We know that when we amend the United States Constitution, it takes a two-thirds vote of both Houses and then the States have to ratify it, three-quarters of them, and we all know that could take a long time. So we also have other elements in the Blue Dog legislative package to restore fiscal responsibility in the shorter term, and those bills, one by the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. HILL), restores the budget rules that this Congress has had in place for some years which now are expiring, simply requiring that we set discretionary spending caps and that we abide by them, requiring that any legislation that deals with mandatory spending or revenues that increase the deficit be offset with some savings in some other area. Those kinds of basic rules are important to maintaining fiscal responsibility, and that bill by the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. HILL) would ensure that those rules continue.

Another piece of legislation introduced by the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MOORE) makes sure that we have a limit on how much we increase this statutory debt ceiling and ensures that once we go beyond the $150 billion that we all acknowledge would be the appropriate amount, that covers in the short term, that any further increases in the statutory debt ceiling would be preceded by the Congress enacting a budget that returns us to balance within 5 years without using Social Security trust fund moneys to balance the budget.

Finally, our legislation that was introduced by another Blue Dog, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. TANNER), says that we ought to require this Congress have a two-thirds vote if we are going to incur debt.

All of those pieces of legislation as a package will move this Congress back into balanced budgets and to reducing the national debt. Some people say, well, what is the big deal about this national debt? Well, I do not know if anybody can tell my colleagues for sure how big the national debt can be before it gets us in trouble. I think the folks in Argentina knew that they accumulated too big a debt and they certainly had a crisis; but here in the Congress, we seem to be oblivious to the size of the national debt.

Most Americans do not recognize and realize that one of the biggest areas of government waste is the national debt, because it takes a billion dollars of our hard-earned tax dollars every day just to pay the interest on the national debt. When people pay their individual income taxes every April 15, do they know that $1 out of every $4 paid into the government goes to cover the interest on the national debt? What a waste. What a waste.

So if we are really interested in cutting out government waste, the first thing we have got to do is to get our debt under control. We have got to begin to run surpluses in our annual budget because when we run surpluses in our annual budget, that surplus pays down our national debt; and the best gift we could give to our children and grandchildren is be sure that we do not hand them this $6 trillion and growing national debt.

We are here tonight to ask our colleagues in the Congress to deal seriously with this issue of the statutory debt ceiling, to not try to slip it in this supplemental appropriations bill that is coming to the floor this week and hide it and tuck it away in there as if it is not important, but to put it out in the light of day and have an honest debate on it and to acknowledge to the American people that this country, in terms of its finances, is going in the wrong direction.

Americans have been more patriotic since September 11 than I have seen them in my lifetime. Some of those who fought in the Second World War say that we are seeing an era of patriotism today that is like they felt when they were young people during the Second World War; but if we have a true spirit of patriotism in our country, we are going to be sure that when we send our young men and women into battle that those of us back home are going to be willing to make an equal sacrifice which is to pay the bills, and if we cannot stand here tonight and acknowledge that we should pay the bills for fighting the war and not pass those bills on to the next generation, it would give reason and give cause to question the sincerity of our patriotism.

Anytime that this country has been at war, Americans have been willing to sacrifice; and the sacrifice that every American is going to be called upon and should be called upon today to make as we find ourselves in this war against terrorism is those of us here at home should be willing to pay the bills. That is the least we can do.

So I am here tonight on behalf of our Blue Dog Democrat coalition to urge our colleagues to return us to fiscal responsibility; to be sure that we enact policies that allow this Congress and as an institution to observe honesty in budgeting; to be willing to say that we are going to balance the budget rather than to ignore it; to be big enough to say that even though a year ago when we passed a major tax cut, which I voted for at the time, when we were projecting a $5 trillion surplus over the next decade, that today as we stand here tonight, when that surplus is gone, that we have to be big enough to admit to the American people that the circumstances have changed.

Every American family understands that. Every American family has been through hard times. Folks have lost their jobs and had to make readjustments on their spending patterns. The Federal Government has to do the same thing if we are going to be honest with the American people.

In just a few years, somewhere between 12 and 15, we are going to see a tremendous increase in the population of our country that are over the age of 65. The Federal Government will face one of the biggest fiscal crises that we have ever seen, as those seniors will be ready to receive their Social Security payments, they will be ready to receive the benefits of the Medicare program that they have paid for in their Social Security and Medicare taxes that they have paid all these years.

If this Congress is going to be able to deal with the retirement of the baby boomers and the costs that are associated with those retirees, we have got to get the financial house in order today. Is it not wonderful that as we approach the crisis in the Nation that we were looking back at 4 years of surpluses, so that we could deal with the problems of the declining economy and the lost Federal revenues that flowed from that and to deal with the cost of the war on terrorism? What is it going to be like 12 and 15 years from now when the baby boomers retire and all of those costs are on the Federal Government and we look back to years of deficit spending?

Now is the time to get the financial house in order. Now is the time to balance our budget and to pay our bills, and that is what we are asking our colleagues in this Congress to join with us in doing.

I thank the members of the Democrat Blue Dog Coalition who have joined me on the floor of this House tonight, and I appreciate their stance for fiscal conservatism; and we look forward to the days ahead as we work together to try to balance the budget and pay down our debt.

MAJOR CHALLENGES CONFRONTING AMERICANS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ISSA). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. HAYWORTH) is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the majority leader.

Mr. HAYWORTH. My colleagues, I come here tonight not as a champion or a representative of party, but as a Member of the Congress of the United States, a constitutional officer, a husband, a father, a brother, a son and a grandson to discuss issues of great importance in what is quite literally, Mr. Speaker, our national health.

I champion the fact that in this Chamber people of goodwill can from time to time disagree, and there are those who would come to champion one specific philosophy or approach of a political party or even an approach within a political party; but I think, Mr. Speaker, when we confront major challenges, we do so much better and much more effectively not as Republicans or as Democrats but as Americans first; and it is in that spirit that I come to the well of the House tonight.

We confront many challenges, Mr. Speaker. Mention was made earlier by my colleagues from Texas of the fact that we are a Nation at war, and yet we are also a Nation blessed with unparalleled prosperity, and with what some would bill as problems, others view as unique opportunities.

Why do I say that at this time in this place? Well, Mr. Speaker, one need only look so far as the prevalent statistics for the United States of America a century ago, 100 ago, 1902.

Mr. Speaker, in 1902, the average life expectancy in the United States of America was 47. The average lifespan, 47 years of age. More than 95 percent of all births in the United States took place at home. Ninety percent of all U.S. physicians had no college education. Instead, Mr. Speaker, they attended so-called medical schools, many of which were condemned in the press and condemned by the government as substandard.

Mr. Speaker, I mentioned just a moment ago the shocking statistic that the average life expectancy a century ago was only 47 years. Mr. Speaker, it might interest my colleagues to know what the 5 leading causes of death were in the United States 100 years ago. Mr. Speaker, leading the list at number 1 among the causes of death in the United States in the year 1902 was pneumonia and influenza; number 2, tuberculosis; number 3, diarrhea; number 4, heart disease; and the fifth leading killer among Americans one century ago was stroke.

What is also interesting is not only the lack of a formal college education for more than 90 percent of our physicians a century ago but also an incredible change of pace and different outlook and attitude among those running the corner drugstores. One century ago in the United States of America, heroin and morphine were available over the counter at corner drugstores. Mr. Speaker, according to one pharmacist, "Heroin clears the complexion, gives buoyancy to the mind, regulates the stomach and the bowels, and is, in fact, a perfect guardian of health." So said a neighborhood druggist one century ago in the United States of America when the average life expectancy was only 47 years and when the leading killer of Americans was pneumonia and influenza.

Mr. Speaker, we are blessed indeed with the passage of time and the progress in medical science that we stand here in the year 2002 and we see the life expectancy close to doubling. It is commonplace to see men and women in the United States live at least until their 70s, and much longer in my household. I am blessed with a grandfather who is 98 years young. He has doubled what was his life expectancy.

At the dawn of the 20th century, Americans by and large are living healthier, happier, longer lives. That is not a problem, Mr. Speaker, that is a challenge. Almost 40 years ago, the United States of America introduced Medicare to help seniors, to help those over the age of 65 deal with the challenges confronted by those of advancing age in terms of health care. But health care in 1965 and, indeed, the Medicare program introduced that year, reflects a medical science that even 40 years ago was substantially different.

At that point in time, medical doctors were dealing primarily with what we call acute care; with responding to symptoms and outbreak of acute disease. Indeed, at that time, Mr. Speaker, gone was that nonsense about morphine and heroin, long regulated, and relegated, I should say, if not to the dustbin of history, at least, quite properly, to the dustbin of abuse. New prescription drugs were on the market.

But, Mr. Speaker, compared with the decade of the 1990s, or now in the 21st century, those pharmaceuticals were relatively few and far between. The course of action pursued by medical science in 1965 quite often involved invasive or exploratory surgery, or a medical procedure involving a long stay in a hospital. But as medical science has changed, as improvements have come to our way of life, so too has there been a change in treatment.

And, indeed, nowhere is that more clearly reflected than in the actual treatment received by today's seniors, and indeed, Mr. Speaker, by all Americans in terms of health care. Because now, Mr. Speaker, as we know, the emphasis is on prevention, on taking prudent preventive steps to delay or perhaps eliminate the need for acute care; the establishment of long-term conditions, changes in diet, improvement in exercise and, oh, yes, as the first line of defense in medical science, an exponential increase in the reliance on prescription drugs, or prescription medications.

The reason? Well, it flows out of the whole notion of preventive medicine and the admonition and observation that an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure.

The changes we have seen brought about by research, the miracle drugs that now exist to deal with so many different conditions, have risen exponentially. And, indeed, through the decade of the 1990s and now into the 21st century, it is safe to say, Mr. Speaker, that prescription drug coverage, that medications prescribed by physicians, have, in fact, conjoined with preventive steps to be our first line of defense and our first line of treatment in modern medical science.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, even as we confront the challenge of a new type of war, of the very real challenges to our society externally by the threat of foreign enemies, we also face a challenge within our borders borne by our very prosperity and the change in the type of health care treatment we now receive. For, Mr. Speaker, we must strengthen and reform Medicare to bring it into the 21st century to reflect the changes and the advances in medical science. And nowhere is that more prevalent, for my parents, who are now in their 70s, for my granddad, who is now 98 years young, than in the realm of prescription drug coverage.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to be the first Arizonan to serve on the House Committee on Ways and Means. It is the committee with jurisdiction quite literally over those matters that become the crossroads of American life here in the early 21st century, the tax code. Because it has been written, Mr. Speaker, the power to tax is the power to destroy. I believe, conversely, that the power to reduce taxation is the power to employ.

And in stark contrast to those who preceded me in the well of the House tonight, I believe that we can fire the economic engines of America, that we can lead to growth by reducing taxation, and by so doing we can grow and build and prosper, but also we deal with topics of trade and human resources, and especially the issue of health, along with the issue of Social Security and fulfilling America's commitment to its seniors.

And so the House Committee on Ways and Means is working now to fashion changes in Medicare to offer a prescription medication benefit as a part of Medicare, to usher Medicare into the 21st century and to reflect the changes we have seen in the realm of medical science and recognizing the reality of prescription drugs and their necessity.

Mr. Speaker, there are 4 principles which guide us. Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, in addition to innumerable conversations with my parents, I was pleased yesterday at noontime to visit the senior center in Mesa, Arizona, to sit down for a town hall meeting, a dialogue, if you will, Mr. Speaker, on the whole notion of prescription medication coverage through the eyes of those who today rely and depend on the Medicare system. I was pleased to see so many seniors, indeed hundreds of seniors, a living embodiment of what some have referred to as our greatest generation, those who experienced the Great Depression, those who led us through a world war, those who built a powerful postwar economy and ushered in an era of freedom and prosperity unlike any the world has seen.

Mr. Speaker, I know you find this to be true when you visit your district. You understand what deTouqueville pointed out early in our history, that America is great because America is good. And the quality of our citizens continues to show through regardless of their age, but with a lifetime of experience. Our honored seniors have a perspective and a common sense philosophy that those of us who are honored to represent them should keep in mind always in fashioning decisions for the future.

Mr. Speaker, those of us on the Committee on Ways and Means, moving forward with a common-sense plan to strengthen Medicare with prescription drug coverage, have come to rely on 4 bedrock principles that will be embodied in the plan that we will introduce. Number 1, and I heard this yesterday loudly and clearly from the senior citizens in the Sixth Congressional District from Arizona, Mr. Speaker, when they said to me unequivocally, lower the cost of prescription drugs now.

You see, in this land of prosperity, it just will not do. As the seniors told me yesterday, as we asked for a show of hands, they knew of some, indeed some of them gathered in that lunchroom in Mesa, Arizona, knew of friends who would cut their medication in two, actually reducing the dosage their doctors had prescribed to make the medicines go further. Others would make a choice between paying a utility bill or paying for their prescription drug coverage.

Mr. Speaker, as hard as it may be for some to perceive, there are those yesterday who even told me they had friends who were forced to make a stark choice to determine whether to purchase the prescription medications they need or to purchase their groceries. A choice between food and medicine for our most vulnerable is something that no one in this country can or should countenance. And so the message came through loudly and clearly, principle number 1, lower the cost of prescription drugs now.

Principle number 2, to update Medicare for the 21st century to reflect the changes we have seen. Mr. Speaker, there is a call and there is a recognition of our second principle and, that is, that we should guarantee all senior citizens prescription drug coverage. A fair and responsible Medicare plan for the 21st century must guarantee a prescription drug benefit under Medicare for all seniors and provide additional assistance for low-income seniors and those facing runaway drug costs because of long-term severe illness. It only makes sense, Mr. Speaker. It is the key to retirement security and peace of mind.

But understand, many seniors with whom I met yesterday are pleased with the current insurance plan they enjoy under their current Medicare coverage. And while there should be a guarantee for all seniors who want it to seek out this new form of coverage, there should not be the heavy hand of government or a specific mandate requiring all seniors to take it if they choose another course of action or want to keep what they have right now.

Mr. Speaker, the Medicare+Choice plans so prevalent in Arizona and in other parts of our Nation, as I mentioned earlier, many with whom I met yesterday have embraced those plans, they appreciate those plans, they want to maintain them, which leads me to principle number 3. We can improve Medicare, Mr. Speaker, with more choices and more savings. The right to choose the prescription drug plan that is best for you, Mr. or Mrs. Senior, Mr. Speaker, that is what we are dealing with, not to invite confusion or a plethora of paperwork or being snowed under by regulations but simply to give seniors the peace of mind and the freedom of choice to select what is best for them.

I mentioned earlier the Medicare+Choice programs which so many seniors in Arizona have come to embrace and depend on. They should be allowed to keep that. But something else that we should note as part and parcel of these principles. We need to understand this. Seniors understand true compassion. They believe those below the poverty line, those who have to make that stark choice between food or medicine or paying other bills or cutting their dosage in half to make the medicine go further, they believe those people should be cared for first, that should be the priority, but there should be a program open to all and all should have the right and the option to choose it.

Our fourth principle really undergirds all which I have spoken of earlier, and that is the realization that in updating Medicare for the 21st century, that in making the recognition that prescription medication coverage is a key, that we can strengthen Medicare for the future by offering this benefit as part of Medicare by utilizing this new front line assault on disease and on sickness and in so doing lower the long-term costs, eliminate in many cases the need for major surgery, see an improvement in lifestyle, and overall not only improve public health but be good stewards of the public purse because in the long term we actually hold down costs, and in so doing, that undergirding fourth principle, strengthening Medicare for the future, will be accomplished because we will ensure that the program can deliver necessary health care services, including this all-important addition of an affordable and voluntary prescription drug benefit under Medicare.

Mr. Speaker, one of the great honors of serving in this Congress and especially in the House Committee on Ways and Means is to work with talented men and women across the width and breadth of America. I am honored tonight to welcome to the floor for this discussion of the prescription drug benefit a lady who has toiled long and hard on this issue and other issues involving public health and the common good, the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON). I welcome her to the floor, Mr. Speaker.

I yield to my friend from Connecticut.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. I thank the gentleman from Arizona very much. As members of the Committee on Ways and Means, we work together on many, many issues, but no issue more important than prescription drugs for seniors. I am proud to say that our bill is an entitlement. It is going to be available to all seniors. It is going to be in my estimation, I think this is something that is rarely remembered, that the prescription drug benefit is going to be the greatest leap forward in women's health since the founding of Medicare. We all know that our grandmothers have lived longer than our grandfathers, that in general women tend to live quite a lot longer than men. What we are less aware of is that older women tend to have a lot less income than older men. The mean annual income of men over 65 is about $30,000 nationwide. The mean annual income of women over 65 is about $15,000 nationwide, exactly half. So women live longer but have much less disposable income. In fact, in the under-85 and the over-85 senior population, women are almost twice as likely as men to have incomes below $10,000 a year. What this tells you is that our retired women in America are very unlikely to be able to afford expensive prescription drugs, and they are very unlikely to be able to afford MediGap policies and those other supplementary insurance plans that are available but cost money and that fill that gap between what Medicare covers and what seniors have to pay. It is particularly a problem in prescription drugs, because in today's medicine, you cannot recover from most diseases without taking a prescription drug. So for us to pay for our seniors to be able to go to the doctor and get a diagnosis, which is increasingly expensive with the sophisticated tests and diagnostic technologies that are now available, wonderful medicine, wonderful world, but what is the good of being diagnosed if you cannot get the treatment?

But it is not just about medicines to cure illness that makes prescription drugs in Medicare so important, it is the need to have prescription drugs to manage chronic illness. And there the statistics are incredible. Of the seniors over 85, 72 percent are women and most have multiple chronic illnesses. So they need drugs more than any other single group of our population and that is women with multiple chronic illnesses. So it is important to remember that, frankly, prescription drugs in Medicare is the number one women's issue in America today.

I am determined to work with the gentleman from Arizona and to work with the rest of those on our committee to bring prescription drugs in Medicare to the floor of this House. I thank you for going through the principles that must underlie this bill. We are going to have a bill that is a more generous benefit than we were able to bring to the floor 2 years ago, that is more thoroughly thought out than any bill that has been introduced in this body or the other to this point, and that will be practical, workable, and because it involves a discount card that will be out there right away, it will help seniors from day one till the time the program is thoroughly established in 2 years and that is a unique aspect of our bill.

I would be happy to go into any aspect of this really important subject that you have not already explored. I am sorry I had to be late, but it is a pleasure to be with you tonight to talk about really the most important legislative initiative that this body will consider this session of Congress. If we do it by the end of June, I hope the other body will have the courage to move in July so that we can have a bill on the President's desk in the fall.

Mr. HAYWORTH. I thank my friend from Connecticut for pointing out why she is properly regarded as one of the foremost authorities and legislators in the field of public health and especially seniors' health care in the way in which we strengthen Medicare through a prescription drug benefit.

Mr. Speaker, as I share this information with my colleague from Connecticut, I know that she has conducted innumerable town hall meetings and chances just to sit down with the honored citizens, the seniors of her district in Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I think it is a safe assumption that she has heard, as I heard yesterday at the seniors' center in Mesa, Arizona, not only do seniors want to see the neediest cared for first, not only do seniors want to see a voluntary program available to all, but seniors first and foremost want to see the cost of prescription medications lowered right now, today.

The gentlewoman quite properly, Mr. Speaker, referenced without characterizing the action of the other body sharing this magnificent citadel of our constitutional republic with us in the legislative branch, but we want to make sure that as a House, as the people's house, we move in a practical, no-nonsense fashion to craft this bill, including our principles, so that, as my friend from Connecticut points out, the other body will have time to work on this and not become slaves to a political calendar. Because we are all mindful it is a strength, not a weakness, of our constitutional republic that all 435 of us must stand at the bar of public opinion on the first Tuesday following the first Monday in November. The danger comes when temptation so overtakes others not to respond to the needs of the people but instead to twist and turn and attempt to leverage or mischaracterize what can be done for the public good.

Mr. Speaker, in more straightforward language, the American people welcome a chance to put politics aside and move forward on this common-sense policy. I mentioned earlier, my colleague from Connecticut, the times we sit down with seniors. I think, Mr. Speaker, you have seen this. I just asked the question yesterday among the 300 seniors gathered for lunch in Mesa, Arizona, "How many of you spend at least $100 a month on prescription drugs?" Every hand in the auditorium went up. I said, "How many of you spend $200 a month for prescription drugs?" Most of the hands stayed up. I said, "How many spend $300?" A lady's voice said, "Try $400 a month." Hands still remained aloft. According to the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid, the average Medicare recipient spends about $2,150 per year on their prescription drugs.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. I visited a seniors' center in Oakville, which is a part of Watertown in my district. A couple got up and said, "Our income now is $18,000 a year. Our drug bills are $16,000 a year." This couple has used their IRA savings, they are working on everything else, and their drug costs will force them into poverty and into dependence on Medicaid. What good will that do us? Then the taxpayers will be picking up not only the cost of their medications but also the cost of their support. It was really sad to see the sorrow in their eyes of this sort of inevitable march toward poverty, just because they needed prescription drugs.

This bill that we are addressing, the gentleman is right, it is voluntary; and it does help the neediest the most, because the neediest get their premiums paid and their copayments paid as well, and for that first $1,000 people will get an 80 percent subsidy and only have to pay 20 percent, and that is off a discounted price.

This bill will drive costs down for seniors right off the bat almost 30 percent, and it will do it by just simply bringing the power of all the seniors of America to the bargaining table to bargain down those prices. They are the only group in the whole country that are not at the bargaining table. Every employer and employee is at the bargaining table, and they get a cut rate price. Only the seniors in our great country get no discounts on drugs, and this bill will put that discount in place right away while we are working on getting the subsidy in place in addition, which will take a little bit longer.

So I will tell the gentleman, when you ask those questions of seniors, there is no doubt, there can be no doubt in your mind, that this is not a burden that seniors can bear; and it is particularly not a burden that elderly, the widowed, divorced, single elderly can bear, because their incomes are really on average $15,000 or less.

So I thank the gentleman for bringing this to the attention of the American people tonight. It is such an important issue, it is the most important thing we could accomplish in this Congress, and I believe we are going to have an excellent bill that will keep doctors out there serving our seniors, that will give seniors the help they need to buy prescription drugs and manage chronic illness, and in general will make advances on every front in offering seniors higher-quality health care, prescription drug coverage, more choices of plans that are better suited to their needs. And because it is going to be such a good bill, I think the other body is going to have to move and the President will be able to sign a bill before we adjourn this session of Congress. That is my fondest hope. That is the only thing I am going to work for. If we all put as much effort in as the gentleman and I will, I know we are going to be able to accomplish this.

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague from Connecticut for offering her unique perspective and the experience that she brings to this issue and the heartfelt personal stories of real folks from the State of Connecticut, just like the real folks I sat down with yesterday in Mesa, Arizona, and just like my parents, now in their seventies, and my granddad, blessed with a long and healthy and accomplished life, to be just 2 years short of a century, of becoming a centurion.

Certainly it is unfair to categorize what is before us as a "problem." It is a tremendous challenge, as we live longer, healthier, more productive lives. And the key, as my friend pointed out, this is not a time to be penny-wise and pound foolish, but to take reasonable steps, as we have done within our budget plan, to accommodate this prescription drug benefit in dealing with a variety of priorities.

My colleague from Connecticut mentioned this, and via videotape the President of the United States joined us yesterday in Mesa with introductory remarks embracing the principles that we have espoused here on the floor of the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, it is so wonderful to work with a President who, yes, as commander in chief is dealing with a stark threat to freedom and survival, but yet at the same time a President who is forward thinking, to understand what he calls truly compassionate conservatism, a commonsense approach that says not only must we survive, we must thrive in this new century, and that the most vulnerable among us, just as my friend from Connecticut pointed out, the seniors who earn $18,000 a year but find in the current situation $16,000 of that income taken up with prescription drugs, we cannot let that happen.

The mandate for change is clear. The executive branch in the person of the President of the United States understands this. The people's House understands this. Now we will look to the other body to join with us to get this change made.

Now, Mr. Speaker, my colleague pointed out something else that is important, and, indeed, one is tempted almost to lapse into a parody of one of the old ads I would hear on top 40 radio in the 1970s talking about discounts at certain merchants: "How do we do it? Volume."

Mr. Speaker, it may be a parody; but it is absolutely correct. My friend from Connecticut, who has been both an accomplished legislator and a proud housewife, sitting around the kitchen table, making ends meet, I know at my house in Arizona one of our favorite places to visit is one of the big warehouse discount centers where we purchase items in bulk, in volume. As groups purchase these items, the prices are held down. We are able to do it with volume.

At the risk of a poor impersonation of a parody of an antiquated radio ad, the principle still holds true, "How do we do it? Volume." As more and more Americans are living longer lives, they form a tremendous resource for group buying power.

I would invite my friend from Connecticut to expound on that notion.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Well, it is very, very important, and it is ironic that all the seniors of America, 40 million, have not been at the bargaining table to use their volume power to drive prices down on something as expensive and as critical to their lives as prescription drugs.

But there is another question I get asked a lot by my seniors, because a lot of seniors have some drug coverage provided by their former employers. They say to me, Will this drive my employer to drop his plan? I say to them that this is the only hope that your employer will keep his plan, because as prescription drugs get more and more expensive, the burden of retiree health plans on employers grows rapidly. Ultimately they begin to say, well, you will have to do a copayment, we will cut coverage here and there. That is a real threat to senior health.

But if we do this prescription drug bill, then those employers will know that if your drug costs get over a certain amount, then the government will take the whole amount, and in fact below that will provide a generous subsidy for $2,000 worth. Then they will know they just have a small, what we call a "donut hole" to insure, and even in that hole seniors will get that deep discount of 25 to 30 percent. So employers will be encouraged to stay in the business of providing employee health plans for retired employees, rather than to leave it. Without this prescription drug bill, I fear employers will begin dropping their retiree health plans rapidly.

So this is a real big plus for those who have employer-provided retiree health plans; and, boy, I will tell you, we cannot get this done soon enough.

Mr. HAYWORTH. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Connecticut points this out, and we should make this clear to those who join us this evening, to those, like my parents, looking with interest at what may be available to them, now in their seventies. It is simply this realization: if we are able to pass a plan this year, if the House, with all due deliberation and sense of purpose, is able to move this forward in the coming weeks and months in a very defined period of time, and the other body takes action, it can be on the President's desk and the President signs it into law. Simply stated, if we pass a plan this year, seniors can reap the benefits this year.

It is what we hear again, prescription drug coverage now. Lower the cost of prescription drugs now.

My colleague from Connecticut, Mr. Speaker, offered another real point. To lower those costs, imagine what a 25 percent discount up front in a prescription drug bill would mean to a senior? I spoke earlier of the average Medicare beneficiary, the average senior, spending $2,150. Imagine an instant benefit of over $500, of $540. Think about that, in terms of purchasing groceries, in terms of paying utility bills and other commitments, or money that can be saved so that seniors have the peace of mind to pay their bills on time, to continue to be responsible, productive, honored individuals. In the great tapestry that is America, that is what we seek to do.

Again, we need to stress that under the plan we contemplate, we will guarantee prescription coverage as an entitlement under Medicare; strengthening, sustaining, reflecting the changes in health care; bringing Medicare into the 21st century with a prescription drug benefit that cannot be taken away. That is so important to so many senior Americans.

We want to make sure we are doing something now to make a positive difference in the lives of seniors and their families today, right now, because we understand that sets the framework for the future.

As that great demographic group nicknamed the baby boomers moves into retirement, we understand that we have to make changes to reflect the changes in medical science and in medical treatment and bringing Medicare into the 21st century. Our plan will help all seniors facing runaway drug costs because of a long-term serious illness.

It is a simple precept that we cannot repeat often enough, Mr. Speaker: no senior should lose their life savings simply to pay for their prescription medications.

Now, there will be some who offer plans that are under strict time limits, "now you see it, now you don't." It is our goal to introduce something with no catches, no gimmicks, no expiration dates, allowing senior Americans to choose the plan they believe to be right for them, voluntary, but a plan that can help all seniors, but especially the neediest among our seniors. Under our plan, it is our goal to guarantee a drug benefit under Medicare, no ifs, ands or buts.

Mr. Speaker, it is a challenge and a great honor to serve in the Congress of the United States. Indeed, as many reflect to me, sometimes in conversation, I guess the first time it really happened was one morning one weekend back in Arizona out for breakfast with my wife and children, and the young woman was of high school age behind the counter.

She said, "J.D. HAYWORTH, you were on my history test last week. I got extra credit because I know you are my Congressman." And I say that not out of some form of megalomania, though goodness knows those of us that get involved in public life do so for a variety of reasons, and for purposes of full disclosure we all have a healthy, strike that, perhaps many of us have an excessive dose of self-esteem, to be candid about that. But also whatever temporal pomposities must come along with it, it is a tremendously humbling experience to serve in the capacity of a constitutional officer; to be one of 435 charged with making laws; with making decisions that affect the lives of every American.

As we think about life's lessons learned, we think about those who imparted those lessons to us. Yes, teachers in classrooms across the years; but our first teachers came in our family, our parents, our grandparents, those who look to us now to be custodians of our future; to make the right decisions; to reflect the changes that need to come based on the remarkable advances we have seen in terms of health care to update and strengthen and bring Medicare into the 21st century; to renew the promise and the principle behind it, that to truly be compassionate we can hold down health care costs in the long term by adding this prescription drug coverage, and that we should not succumb to the temptation of being pennywise and yet pound foolish.

One of the great gifts of our forefathers, and what Catherine Drinker Bowen called "the miracle at Philadelphia," was not only giving us a remarkable document, the Constitution, and what Dr. Franklin charged was "a Republic, if you can keep it," but also the means through the amendment process, through the legislative process, to make changes based on the priorities and the changes in lifestyle that Americans would undoubtedly encounter as we have encountered some 200 years later.

Indeed, in these last few minutes, Mr. Speaker, I would point out that when we got together at the outset of this time, we spoke of the world as it existed in 1902, a very different America, still embodying the principles of constitutional governance, but a very different time in our history, not only in terms of the march of technology, but likewise in health care.

It bears repeating, Mr. Speaker, for those who may have just joined us, and Mr. Speaker, I hope those folks have found a seat, because some of this information is shocking, in 1902, let me repeat what I began our time together with, Mr. Speaker, in 1902 the average life expectancy in the United States was 47 years of age. The average life expectancy was 47 years of age. More than 95 percent of all births in the U.S. took place at home, not in a hospital, but at home. Ninety percent, 90 percent of all U.S. physicians had no college education. Instead, they attended so-called medical schools, many of which were condemned by the press and by our government as substandard.

The five leading causes of death were, No. 1, pneumonia and influenza; No. 2, tuberculosis; No. 3, diarrhea; No. 4, heart disease; No. 5, stroke.

We have a new set of challenges and opportunities. In this imperfect human existence, illness will be with us. We cannot completely conquer illness, but we can continue to improve the lifestyle conditions in terms of public health for all Americans, especially our honored seniors.

It is not a political gimmick or a short-term, cynical fix we seek; instead, it is a change that should be reflected in Medicare, to bring Medicare into the 21st century. This is the challenge we confront, Mr. Speaker, working together, men and women of good will across the panorama of political philosophies, across the partisan divide, to heed the message of our seniors who say they need and want prescription drug coverage now; that the cost of medicines can be lowered, that we can usher in a new age of Medicare for the 21st century reflecting the changes in medical technology, utilizing some of the commonsense proposals and principles our parents taught us about the value of a dollar, weaning out waste, fraud and abuse, making the effort to continue to improve lives, to continue to improve the quality of life, and set a prudent public policy based on true compassion that is not only more effective, more responsive, but in the long term, more economical for all Americans.

That is the challenge we confront, and we do not shrink from that challenge. Daunting though it may be, we welcome it; we embrace it. It is our intent to move this people's House forward to work with our President to get this done, to see action taken in the other body, and leaving plenty of time for the other body to get the work done on this legislation, as well.

If we move forward this year, seniors can reap the benefit this year. Mr. Speaker, our parents, our grandparents, our Nation's seniors deserve nothing less.

Mr. Speaker, I offer a word of thanks for my colleague, the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON), who joined me for this time of dialogue on prescription drug coverage as part of Medicare, a new, stronger Medicare for the 21st century.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to discuss the importance of prescrition drugs to seniors. I have talked to the seniors in my district about this, and I can tell you from my experience that this is of utmost importance to them. And it should be of utmost importance to us too. I am honored to be a part of the Speaker's Prescription Drug Action Team, working to achieve the best benefit possible for our seniors.

It is important that we provide prescription drug coverage for today's seniors while shoring up Medicare at the same time. The two go hand in hand. Unfortunately, Medicare is built around formulas that are outdated. We have a big job ahead of us, but it is one of the most important pieces of legislation to come before this body. We have to update Medicare at the same time we provide prescription drug coverage, so that both remain sound now and into the future.

But let's be clear about the prescription drug benefit: our seniors need coverage and they need it now, not later. We must act immediately to give them coverage such as 25% off the top of the first $1000 they spend. Their monthly premium and yearly deductible have got to be as low as we can get them, so that those living on a fixed income can afford their medications without worrying about whether or not they can afford food. And they have to be able to count on catastrophic coverage.

No senior should have to decide between prescription drugs and food, or prescription drugs and turning on the air conditioner in the middle of a brutal Oklahoma summer. That's just not fair. Our parents, and grandparents, deserve better than that. That's why I'm so excited to be on the Speaker's team, to help advise him on the concerns facing today's seniors. We have to be realistic about how we structure the plan, but the bottom line is that: seniors must be able to afford their prescriptions. I hope that my colleagues on both sides of the aisle would agree. This is our goal, and one we should reach across the aisle on, to help seniors. We must create policy, not politics. We must provide worthwhile prescription drug coverage for our parents and grandparents, and we must do it immediately.

DEFENDING PRESIDENT BUSH REGARDING KNOWLEDGE OF SEPTEMBER 11, 2001, THREAT, AND DETAILING UPCOMING TRAVEL TO RUSSIA, UZBEKISTAN, CHINA, AND NORTH KOREA

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ISSA). Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WELDON) is recognized provisionally for half the time remaining until midnight.

Mr. WELDON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I take the time this evening, and thank the Speaker and the staff for bearing with me, to basically perform two functions.

First of all, I will respond to those critics of President Bush who have taken unfair shots at him over the 9-11 situation, and will factually refute what people like the minority leader, the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT), have said publicly about this President somehow not heeding evidence that was provided to him.

I am going to present the true facts of what we could have and should have done prior to September 11 that I think would have allowed us to both understand what was about to occur and to have done something about it.

The second action I am going to discuss this evening is an upcoming trip that I will be leading to Russia, Uzbekistan, Beijing, China, as well as Pyongyang, North Korea, the first delegation going into that country, and Seoul, South Korea, at the end of this week.

Mr. Speaker, let me start out by saying, first of all, in response to many of the media pundits who have spent the last week or 10 days criticizing President Bush and have publicly said that he had indications that should have alerted him to the upcoming attack on the World Trade Center, nothing could be farther from the truth. The facts are all in. The data the President got were basically individual elements provided by individual agencies about potential acts that might be against our country, nowhere near the immensity of what we actually saw on September 11.

They were bits of information, like the CIA saying there might be an attempt to hijack an airplane, but no linkage of that act to an attack on the Trade Center; or the fact that other agencies were looking at pilots that were obtaining licenses and had no intention of landing an airplane. Each of these bits of information, while being provided to the upper levels of our government, in and of themselves would not lead anyone to believe that an imminent attack was about to occur on the Trade Center.

But Mr. Speaker, as I said on September 11 on CNN live at 12 noon from the roof of a church across from the Capitol, on that day the government did fail the American people. Now, the President did not fail the American people, but the government failed the American people.

I am going to document for our colleagues today, and for the American public and the media, steps that we took in the years prior to September 11 when our agencies and the government did not respond. This started back in the Clinton administration and continued during the Bush administration.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, during the late 1990s, I chaired the Committee on Research for our national security, which meant that my job was to oversee about $38 billion a year that we spend on cutting-edge technology for the military.

One of those projects that I helped get additional funding for was the Information Dominant Center that the Army was standing up down at Fort Belvoir, technically known as the LIWAC. This Land Information Warfare Assessment Center was designed to monitor on a 24-hour-a-day basis 7 days a week all of our military classified systems, those systems used to run the Army. Each of our services was in the process of standing up an entity like the one that the Army stood up at Fort Belvoir.

Back in 1997, as I was supporting increased funding for this capability, I was amazed in two trips that I took to Fort Belvoir that the Army was not just able to maintain security over their information systems, but they were able to use new software tools and high-speed computers to do what is commonly called "profiling," to take vast amounts of information about the classified and unclassified information and process it and analyze it so that a picture could be drawn and a threat could be developed, proliferation could be monitored.

Now, this was back in 1997. In fact, I had a chance to use these capabilities and I think this story, more than any other, underscores the inabilities of our agencies on September 11 to really understand the threat that was emerging.

As you might recall, back in 1997 we had gotten into a war in Kosovo to remove Milosevic from power. All of Congress was not supportive of that conflict. In fact, I opposed the initial involvement with President Clinton by our troops, not because I have supported Milosevic but because I felt that we did not force Russia or allow Russia to play a more vibrant role in helping us to get Milosevic out of power.

Two weeks after the bombing campaign started, I started to receive telephone calls and started to receive emails from my Russian colleagues in the State Duma. People who are senior leaders who called me and e-mailed me and said we have a real problem. Your policy of bombing Milosevic and innocent Serbs is causing the Russian people to lose confidence in what America's real intent is, and you are driving Russia further away from our country. And I said what do you want me to do? They said we need you to convince your president that Russia can help play a role in ending the war and getting Milosevic out of office. And the Russians told me that they wanted me to go to Belgrade in the middle of the conflict, that they would arrange a meeting with Milosevic.

Well, I told them that that was very much undoable because we were in the middle of a war. We were bombing Serbia at the time. But I asked them to put that request in writing and they did. Within the next few days I got a letter on official Duma stationery where the Russians outlined their desire to take me and a delegation of Members of Congress to Belgrade, Yugoslavia. They outlined who would come from the Russian side and they committed that they would have a meeting with Milosevic personally with a date and time certain. They also agreed to visit a refugee camp of our choosing so we could show them the damage that Milosevic had caused innocent people, and they also agreed to release the three American POWs that were being held hostage.

When the letter came, it also included the name of an individual I did not know. His name was Dragomir Kric. The Russians had told me that this individual was very close to Milosevic personally, that the Russians trusted him, and that he was the guy that would get Milosevic to agree to the terms to end the hostilities against the Serbian, Yugoslavian people.

The Russian request I then took to the State Department with my colleague, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) on the other side. We had a 1 hour and 30 minute meeting in the Office of Deputy Secretary of State Strobe Talbott. We outlined for him what the Russians had requested for us and that we were willing to lead a delegation into Belgrade in spite of the war going on. Strobe Talbott listened and he said, I do not think it is a good idea. He said we cannot guarantee your safety and we do not think Milosevic will do what the Russians say he will do, and we think he will just use you. So my advice is not to go, but as citizens in America you can do what you want.

I said that we would not violate the request of our State Department and would not go. But the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. HOYER) suggested that perhaps we should meet the Russians in a neutral city and he suggested Vienna. Strobe Talbott said that was fine. So I came back to Capitol Hill and I sent a letter to all 435 members of the House outlining for them what the Russians had asked, what the administration response was, and invited every Member of this body to attend a meeting if they were interested in going with us to Vienna. From the meeting that we held 1- Members of Congress, 5 Democrats and 5 Republicans, volunteered to go with me to Vienna to meet with our Russian counterparts and Mr. Kric.

Now, before we left on that trip I wanted to know something about Kric so I called the CIA director, George Tennant. I said I do not know who this guy is. The Russians are convinced that he can give us information that will allow us to get Milosevic to agree to our terms. Can you tell me something about him as the director of the CIA?

He called me back the next day and gave me 2 or 3 sentences about Dragomir Kric and said that they thought he was tied in with the corruption in Russia but did not know much else about him.

Without telling anyone, Mr. Speaker, I went back to my friends at the Army Information Dominence Center, and I said can you run me a profile of a Dragomir Kric and tell me something about him. They ran a profile and they came back to me with 8 pages of information about this man, the profile of someone who was very close to Milosevic personally.

With that information, we left on a military plane on a Thursday afternoon after votes and flew all night to Vienna, arrived on Friday morning, and began our discussions in the hotel in Vienna with the 11 members of Congress, a State Department representative, the 5 Russians and Dragomir Kric.

We worked all through Friday into the night and into Saturday. And by Saturday midday something historic had happened. The Russians had agreed to the terms that we wanted to end the conflict. The Russians had agreed to things they had never agreed to. During the time when we were meeting, Kric was calling back to Belgrade talking to Milosevic on the phone personally. He would come back in the room and he would tell us what Milosevic was happy with and what he was not, but we were not there to negotiate with Milosevic. We were there to get the Russians to agree with us on an end to the conflict.

By 2 o'clock on Saturday afternoon we reached agreement. It was word for word read by the Russian and American side and we all signed off on an end to the war. It was an historic time for us because we thought we could stop the bombing and stop killing innocent people and get Milosevic out of power.

Kric immediately left the room and made a phone call. He came back in the room and said I just talked to Milosevic personally, and he has assured me that if we go down as a group right now to Belgrade, and I will hire the bus, and we all go down together, Milosevic will meet with us, he will agree to this framework which ends his reign. He will agree to accept international peacekeeping force to disarm the Serbs, and he will agree to allowing a U.N. or NATO force to bring stability to this country. And he will also release the 3 POWs that have not been heard from since they were captured by Milosevic.

Well, that was pretty historic, Mr. Speaker. So my colleagues on the other side called the White House from Vienna. They get on the White House operation center phone line and talked to John Podesta, the chief of staff for the President. And they said we have something that you have to get to President Clinton immediately. We have negotiated what we think is the end of the Kosovo war with the Russians, with a representative of Milosevic agreeing to the terms.

Another representative with us of the State Department called the State Department operations center and he told them what had transpired. So he notified both the White House and the State Department. The State Department said let me talk to Congressman WELDON. So I got on the phone. On the other end of the line was Steven Sestanovich who was at that time in charge of the Russia desk at the State Department.

I outlined for him what had occurred. He said, Curt, this is amazing but it is above my pay grade. I cannot tell you what to do. Hold on and I will have someone else call you back. Thirty minutes later, Mr. Speaker, I got a call from Tom Pickering. Tom Pickering was at that time number three in the State Department and had been the ambassador for us to Russia. I had known him in that capacity. He said, Curt, what is going on? And I explained to him that we had met with the Russians and Kric. We had reached agreement, and that Milosovic through Kric was saying that he was prepared to end the war if we went down to Belgrade. So I said to Tom Pickering, what do you think we should do?

He said, Curt, first of all, we do not trust Milosevic. We do not think that he will live up to what he is telling you through this guy Kric; and, furthermore, Curt, I do not even know who Kric is. I never heard of this guy and how could you believe that somehow he speaks for Milosevic?

I said, Tom, I did not know Kric either before I came here, but I know the Russians. They are my friends, and they have convinced me that he is the person that can get Milosevic to do what we want. He said, I do not think it is a good idea. In fact, let me tell you, the Reverend Jesse Jackson has been in Belgrade for a week. We have been in constant communication with him. In fact, he is coming home today. His delegation has been unsuccessful. They were trying to get the three POWs released, he said, but their mission has failed.

What makes you think that you can do something that the Reverend Jesse Jackson could do? I do not know, Tom. All I am telling you is what the Russians are saying based upon Kric's taught discussions with Milosevic. He said I do not think you should go, and I said okay, then we will not, because we are a Nation of laws and not of people.

I came back to the room where the Members of Congress were seated with our Russian counterparts. I told them the story, and they immediately became incensed at me. Kric called me a coward for not taking a delegation to Belgrade. He said, You just lost a chance to end the war and bring home your POWs.

I had Members of Congress from both parties telling me they were going to go on their own, and I said, Oh no, you are not; we came in a military plane that I acquired; you are going back to America with me.

So the 11 Members of Congress and the Russians and our State Department official sat down and discussed how we would implement our plan instead of going to see Milosevic in Belgrade. Kric went out of the room and came back in after making a phone call, and said, You just blew it; Milosevic had said you had a chance to end the war, to get him to publicly accept this agreement and he would release the POWs.

We continued to meet. Two hours later, our Navy escort came into the room, and he said to the 11 Members of Congress that CNN has just announced that Milosevic is releasing the POWs to Jesse Jackson's delegation. Kric told us that Milosevic did not want to keep them because he was fearful they would be harmed and we would blame him for their injuries. Even though he did not want to release them to Jesse Jackson, he did.

To continue the story and make my point, Mr. Speaker, we all came back home to America. We briefed our colleagues. We briefed the administration. We presented the framework that we negotiated, and 8 days later, or 2 weeks later, that became the basis of the G-8 agreement to end the war. So our work was fruitful, but something interesting happened that applies to September 11.

I got a call from the FBI in my office asking my staff to allow two agents to come over for me to brief them, for me to brief them, on a fellow named Dragomir Kric. I said, Fine, set it up for Monday afternoon in my office in the Rayburn Building. I went back to Pennsylvania, and on the Friday before that Monday, my office paged me with a 911 page. I called them and they said, You must call CIA congressional affairs immediately. I did.

The CIA said, Congressman, we are going to fly two agents to Philadelphia right now. They will meet you at the airport, they will come to your home, they will come to a hotel, wherever you want to meet them, but they have to talk to you immediately. I said, What is the urgency? They said, We have been tasked by the State Department to brief them on Dragomir Kric and we want you to tell us what you know about him. I said, Well, the FBI already asked for that information, why can't we do it together on Monday afternoon?

So that Monday afternoon I had four agents in my office: two CIA agents, one CI person and two FBI agents. For two hours they grilled me with four pages of questions about Kric.

I answered all their questions. I told them that there were four Kric brothers, that they were the owners of the largest banking system in the former Yugoslavia; that they employed some 60,000 people; that their bank had tried to finance the sale of an SA-10 from Russia to Milosevic; that their bank had been involved in a $4 billion German bond scam; that one of the brothers had financed Milosevic's election; that the house Milosevic lived in was really their house; that, in fact, Krics' wives were best of friends with Milosevic's wife; and that they were the closest people to this leader.

I told them all the information. When I got done, Mr. Speaker, I said, Now, do you want to know where I got my data from? They said, Yeah, you got it from the Russians. I said, No. They said, Well, then you got it from Kric. I said, No. I said, Before I went over there I had the Army's information dominant center run a profile for me of Dragomir Kric.

The FBI and the CIA in 1997 said to me, what is the Army's information dominant center? The FBI and the CIA had no knowledge that our military was developing a capability that would be able to do massive data mining of information to allow us to do a profile of a person or an event that was about to happen.

We took that model, based on that lesson which infuriated me as a Member of Congress to be asked to brief the CIA and the FBI, and working with people in the intelligence agencies, I developed a plan. This plan was to create a national collaborative center.

Back in 1997, Mr. Speaker, the national collaborative center where there were articles written, published in the media, technical media here was called the NOAH, N-O-A-H. It stands for National Operations and Analysis Hub. The function of the NOAH would be to have all 32 Federal agencies that have classified systems have a node of each of those systems in one central location managed by one of their employees, and when tasked by the national command authority, the President or the National Security Council, their data would be entered into a massive computer using new software tools like STARLITE and SPIRES and six others that are used by the private sector to do data mining.

In addition to classified information systems, they would also run through massive amounts of unclassified data, newspaper stories, magazine story, TV broadcasts, radio broadcasts. A person cannot do that manually, but they can do it through high-speed computers, as the Army did for me in developing the profile of Kric.

We took this plan and we said to the intelligence community, this is what we need to have to be prepared for threats in the 21st century, because the threats we are going to see over the next several decades will not come only from one nation state, they will come from terrorist organizations. We need to be able to pool all this data together and be able to profile it, analyze it and then come back with a true picture of what may be about to occur.

Mr. Speaker, this was in 1997. I briefed John Hamre. Dr. John Hamre was then the Deputy Secretary of Defense. I said, John, you have got to go down to Fort Belvoir and see this facility; it is amazing. He went down twice. He called me back and he said, Curt, it is amazing what they are doing there. This profiling worked, and they could do it because unofficially some other secret lines were running through Fort Belvoir that the Army could unofficially access. So it really was an official process.

He said, But you know, Curt, I cannot get to where you want to go because the CIA and the FBI will not cooperate and neither will the other agencies. He said, So I have a suggestion for you. Why do you not host a meeting in your office? I will come and you invite my counterparts at the FBI and the CIA.

So, Mr. Speaker, in my office, in 1998, I had the Deputy Secretary of Defense, the Deputy Director of the CIA and the Deputy Director of the FBI, four of us met for 1 hour. We briefed them on the NOAH. We talked about the need for a national collaborative center, national data fusion center; and the response was, We do not need to do that right now, we are doing our own systems in our own agencies; so thank you for your recommendations, and we are trying to share but not the way you want because that is too bold. That is too aggressive. This was 1998, Mr. Speaker.

Not satisfied with that, we held hearings. We did briefings for our colleagues; and in two consecutive defense bills, I put language in the bill that basically said the Defense Department and our intelligence agencies had to create a national collaborative center. So it became a part of the law; but Mr. Speaker, the agencies refused. They said we do not need to do that, we do our job very well.

Each of them does their job very well, but the problem is the threats in the 21st century will be seen from a number of different sources. It may be information coming from the Customs Department or from the Defense Intelligence Agency or from the NSA or from the CIA or the FBI or Commerce, State and Justice, all of which have classified systems; or it may come from some public statements in articles in other countries. We can only have the capability to understand all of that if we have a national fusion center.

We did not have that capability before September 11. That is why I stood up on September 11, at 12 p.m. in the afternoon and said, "Today our government failed the American people." Because, Mr. Speaker, we knew what we should have done. We knew what we could have done. And we did not do it.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, I firmly believe that if we would have implemented the NOAH, which John Hamre offered to pay for with DOD dollars, back when we first recommended it, I am convinced we could have stopped or known about and prevented September 11 from ever happening.

Let me give an example. CIA information on terrorism, combined with what the FBI knew about training pilots and open-source information on remarks by al Qaeda, would have helped the intelligence community and enforcement agencies focus better on the threat. For example, in August of 2000, an al Qaeda member had been interviewed by an Italian newspaper and reported that al Qaeda was training kamikaze pilots. The intelligence community and enforcement agencies, however, do not read open-source information. Yes, they read all the classified stuff, but this interview in 2000 was in an open-source newspaper account in Italy.

If we would have had a fusion center, all of that data would have been processed, and in very real quick time, through massive high-speed computers, and we would have seen the linkages between what was occurring. But with each agency doing its own thing, it is impossible to see the linkages. And that is why when President Bush before September 11 got a bit of information from the CIA and a bit from the FBI, and something else, and nothing from open sources, there is no way he could have foretold what was about to occur.

If we would have had the NOAH in place, an idea that was developed with the intelligence community, an idea that was briefed to the FBI, briefed to the CIA and briefed to the Defense Department, I think we could have done something to prevent al Qaeda.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, there is another interesting development that occurred. After the Army showed the capability of the LIWAC model at Ft. Belvoir, other services began to take interest. Special forces command down in Florida contacted the Army and said, hey, we hear you are doing some neat things. We want to build a mini version of what you are doing down at our headquarters.

I did not find out about this until October of 2001, after the attack on the trade center. A year before, special forces command developed their own mini version of a data processing or collaborative center with very limited capabilities. But what they did, Mr. Speaker, they did a profile of al Qaeda 1 year before 9–11.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ISSA). The gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WELDON) is recognized to continue until midnight.

Mr. WELDON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, here is the chart, the unclassified chart of what special forces command had 1 year before 9–11. Interesting. The entire al Qaeda network is identified in a graphic chart with all the linkages to all the terrorist groups around the world.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, I was told by the folks who developed the capability for special forces command that this chart and the briefing that was supposed to be given to General Shelton, Chairman of our Joint Chiefs, had a recommendation to take out 5 cells of bin Laden's network. Mr. Speaker, this was 1 year before 9–11. This was not during President Bush's administration. This occurred in the fall of the remaining term of President Bill Clinton.

The key question I have been trying to get at is why was this 3-hour briefing, which I also got, I got General Holland to bring his briefers up from Florida with special forces, I went in the Pentagon, went in the tank, and they gave me the briefing, as much as they could give me, because part of it is being used for our operational plan, why was that 3-hour briefing with the recommendations to take out 5 cells of bin Laden's network condensed down to a 1-hour brief when it was given to General Hugh Shelton in January of 2001? And why were the recommendations to take out 5 cells not followed up on? That is the question we should get answered, Mr. Speaker.

Because 1 year before 9–11, the capability that special forces built actually identified to us the network of al Qaeda. And they went beyond that and gave us recommendations where we could take out cells to eliminate their capability. So for those pundits out there sitting in their armchairs criticizing President Bush, they have it all wrong.

Facts are a tough thing to refute, and the fact is that back in 1997, we told the administration at that time what to do. In 1998, we briefed the agencies. In 1999, we put language in a defense bill. In 2000, we put language in a defense bill. In 2000, special forces command built another mini version of that capability. And in 2000 they briefed General Shelton telling him to take out 5 cells of bin Laden's network. All of that activity could have prevented or helped to prevent 9–11 from ever occurring. I challenge my colleagues, Mr. Speaker, to review the facts. I challenge the media to report the truth.

We still do not have a national collaborative center. That capability still does not exist. We are getting there, but it has been a long road. I briefed our Homeland Security Director Tom Ridge, with the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BURTON), chairman of the Committee on Government Reform, about 4 months ago. He agreed with us, but he has not yet been able to achieve this new interagency collaborative center, and that is an indictment of our government that the American people deserve to be outraged over.

We need this kind of capability in the 21st century, because these bits of pieces of information have to be pieced together, both classified and unclassified, so that our analysts can get the clear picture of what may be about to occur against our people and our friends.

So, Mr. Speaker, I seek to clarify the charges against the President and to answer them, and I encourage my colleagues to learn more about the need for a national collaborative center, a national data fusion center or, as I call it, a national operations and analysis hub.

Mr. Speaker, I will enter into the RECORD the documentation from as far back as 1998, 1999, and 2000 with our recommendations to implement this kind of capability:

of an Office of Transformation within the Office of the Secretary of Defense to advise the Secretary on—

(1) development of force transformation strategies to ensure that the military of the future is prepared to dissuade potential military competitors and, if that fails, to fight and win decisively across the spectrum of future conflict;

(2) ensuring a continuous and broadly focused transformation process;

(3) service and joint acquisition and experimentation efforts, funding for experimentation efforts, promising operational concepts and technologies and other transformation activities, as appropriate; and

(4) development of service and joint operational concepts, transformation implementation strategies, and risk management strategies.

(c) SENSE OF CONGRESS OF FUNDING.—It is the sense of Congress that the Secretary of Defense should consider providing funding adequate for sponsoring selective prototyping efforts, wargames, and studies and analyses and for appropriate staffing, as recommended by the director of an Office of Transformation as described in subsection (b).

SEC. 903. REVISED JOINT REPORT ON ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL COLLABORATIVE INFORMATION ANALYSIS CAPABILITY.

(A) REVISED REPORT.—At the same time as the submission of the budget for fiscal year 2003 under section 1105 of title 31, United States Code, the Secretary of Defense and the Director of Central Intelligence shall submit to the congressional defense committees and the congressional intelligence committees a revised report assessing alternatives for the establishment of a national collaborative information analysis capability.

(b) MATTERS INCLUDED.—The revised report shall cover the same matters required to be included in the DOD/CIA report, except that the alternative architectures assessed in the revised report shall be limited to architectures that include the participation of All Federal agencies involved in the collection of intelligence. The revised report shall also include a draft of legislation sufficient to carry out the preferred architecture identified in the revised report.

(c) OFFICIALS TO BE CONSULTED.—The revised report shall be prepared after consultation with all appropriate Federal officials, including the following:

(1) The Secretary of the Treasury.
(2) The Secretary of Commerce.
(3) The Secretary of State.
(4) The Attorney General.

DEFENSE INFORMATION AND ELECTRONICS REPORT

WELDON: DOD NEEDS MASSIVE INTELLIGENCE NETWORK FOR SHARED THREAT INFO

Senior Pentagon officials are mulling over an idea proposed by Rep. Curt Weldon (R–PA) that would link classified and unclassified documents in a massive intelligence clearinghouse that could be accessed by 33 federal agencies—a concept similar in some ways to one floated by DOD intelligence officials but with significantly fewer players involved.

"Our problem with intelligence is that we're stove-pipped," said Weldon, chairman of the House Armed Services military research and development subcommittee, during a Nov. 8 interview. "Each agency has its own way of collecting data and analyzing it, but they don't share that information with other agencies. The need is to have a better system of analyzing and fusing data sets across agencies and services—certainly within the Pentagon and the military, but my opinion is that we have to go further than that."

Weldon first proposed the concept of a "National Operations Analysis Hub" to Deputy Defense Secretary John Hamre last June, although the congressman said he kept his initiative quiet until a stronger plan could be developed.

The Pentagon-funded network of agencies would be operated by DOD. According to Weldon, it would pull together large amounts of information to produce intelligence profiles of people, regions and national security threats, such as information warfare and cyber-terrorism.

"The NOAH concept of a national collaborative environment supporting policy and decision-makers mirrors the ideas you have expressed to me in recent discussions, and it is a tangible way to confront the growing asymmetrical threats to our nation," Weldon wrote in his July 30 letter to Hamre.

The NOAH concept, however, was not wholeheartedly embraced by Hamre, who met with Weldon last summer and told the congressman his suggested use of the Army's Land Information Warfare Activity at Ft. Belvoir, VA, as a model for NOAH, would never stick.

Because LIWA is already short of resources, the Army is apprehensive about taking on any new tasks, Hamre told Weldon.

Weldon, in a July 21 letter to Hamre, also urged the Pentagon to support additional future funding for LIWA, citing critical budget shortfalls that he said have kept the agency from fulfilling a barrage of requests for intelligence files from Army commanders (Defense Information and Electronics Report, July 30, p1).

"There's massive amounts of data out there, and you have to be able to analyze it and create ways to focus on that data so its relevant to whatever you're interested in," he said this week about his support for LIWA. "Well, the Army has already done that."

While Weldon continues to push for NOAH to be patterned after LIWA, he sees it operating on a much larger scale. Impressed by its ability to pull together huge amounts of both unclassified and classified data, Weldon noted LIWA's Information Dominance Center can create in-depth profiles that could be useful to the CIA, FBI and the White House. Yet most federal agencies don't even know LIWA exists, he added.

"Right now the military is limited to [its] own sources of information," Weldon said. "And in the 21st century, a terrorist group is more than likely going to be involved with terrorist nations. So the boundaries are crossed all the time. We don't have any way to share that and get beyond the stove-pipping."

Meanwhile, officials within the Defense Department's intelligence community have been considering another way to amass intelligence information through a concept called the Joint Counter-intelligence Assessment Group. A DOD spokeswoman said proponents of the idea, for now, are unwilling to disclose details about it. She was also unable to say whether a formal proposal to Hamre had been made yet.

In Weldon's July 30 letter to Hamre, however, Weldon alludes to an ongoing, "initiative to link counterintelligence groups throughout the community."

"I have heard of an attempt to connect the Office of Drug Control Policy (ONDCP) and [Office of the Secretary of Defense] assets with federal, state and local law enforcement agencies," Weldon wrote.

However, Weldon said in the interview he believes JCAG is simply more "stove-pipping."

"I also have seen what the Army has done at LIWA, which has created a foundation for creating a higher-level architecture collaborating all of these efforts," his July letter states.

NOAH would link together almost every federal agency with intelligence capabilities, including the National Security Agency, the National Imagery and Mapping Agency, the Energy Department, the CIA and the FBI. Both Congress and the White House would be offered a "node" for briefing capabilities, meaning intelligence agencies could detail situations on terrorist attacks or wartime scenarios.

"It's mainly for policymakers, the White House decisionmakers, the State Department, military, and military leaders," he said.

Although information-sharing among the intelligence community has yet to be formalized through NOAH or JCAG or a similar system, military officials have said they need some kind of linked access capability.

Intelligence systems need to be included within the Global Information Grid—the military's vision of a future global network that could be accessed from anywhere in the world, said Brig. Gen. Marilyn Quagliotti, vice director of the Joint Staff's command, control, communications and computers directorate, during a Nov. 5 speech on information assurance at a conference in Arlington, VA.

"We need a more integrated strategy, including help from [the Joint Staff's intelligence directorate] with intelligence reports or warnings of an attack," she said.

Quagliotti said the toughest challenge for achieving "information superiority" is the need to unite networks and network managers under one command structure with stronger situational awareness capabilities.

"Part of [the challenge] is the overwhelming amount of information, the ability to access that information, and the ability to reach back and get that information, which means that networks become more crucial to the warfight," she said.

Fusion Center Concept Takes Root As Congressional Interest Waxes

Creation of a national operations and analysis hub is finding grudging acceptance among senior officials in the U.S. national security community. This fresh intelligence mechanism would link federal agencies to provide instant collaborative threat profiling and analytical assessments for use against asymmetrical threats. National policy makers, military commanders and law enforcement agencies would be beneficiaries of the hub's information.

Prodded by a resolute seven-term Pennsylvania congressman and reminded by recent terrorist and cyberthreat activities, the U.S. Defense Department is rethinking its earlier aversion to the idea, and resistance is beginning to crumble. Funding to establish the national operations and analysis hub (NOAH), which would link 28 federal agencies, is anticipated as a congressional add-on in the Defense Department's new budget. An initial $10 million in funding is likely in fiscal year 2001 from identified research and development accounts.

Spearheading the formation of NOAH is Rep. Curt Weldon (R-PA), chairman of the U.S. House of Representatives National Security Committee's military research and development subcommittee. He emphasizes that challenges facing U.S. leaders are beginning to overlap, blurring distinction and jurisdiction. "The increasing danger is both domestic and international."

Conceptually, NOAH would become a national-level operations and control center with a mission to integrate various imagery, data and analytical viewpoints. The intelligence products would support U.S. actions. "I see NOAH as going beyond the capability of the National Military Command Center and the National Joint Military Intelligence Command. NOAH would provide recommended courses of action that allow the U.S. to effectively meet emerging challenges in near real time," the congressman illustrates.

"This central national-level hub would be composed of a system of agency-specified mini centers, or 'pods,' of participating agencies and services associated with growing national security concerns," Weldon reports. "NOAH would link the policy maker with action recommendations derived from fused information provided by the individual pod." Automation and connectivity would allow the pods to talk to each other in a computer-based environment to share data and perspectives on a given situation.

The congressman believes that NOAH should reside within the Defense Department and is modeling the hub's concept on a U.S. Army organization he closely follows. He says the idea for NOAH comes from officials in several federal agencies. However, it is also based on his own experiences with the U.S. Army's Intelligence and Security Command's (INSCOM's) Land Warfare Information Activity (LIWA) and Information Dominance Center, Fort Belvoir, Virginia.

Patterned after LIWA, (SIGNAL, March, page 31), NOAH would display collaborative threat profiling and analysis. With the aid of a variety of electronic tools, the hub would support national actions, Weldon discloses.

The congressman is conscious of other initiatives such as linking counterintelligence groups throughout the community. He also is aware of the Central Intelligence Agency's (CIA's) counterterrorism center, the Federal Bureau of Investigation's (FBI's) National Infrastructure Protection Center and a new human intelligence (HUMNIT) special operations center. "We don't need another analytical center. Instead, we need a national-level fusion center that can take already analyzed data and offer courses of action for decision making," he insists.

Weldon's wide experience in dealing with officials from the FBI, CIA and the National Security Agency (NSA) convince him that policy makers are continuing to work in a vacuum. "Briefings and testimonies are the primary vehicles for transmitting information to leaders. The volume of information germane to national security issues is expanding so rapidly that policy makers are overwhelmed with data," he claims.

Robust situational awareness of asymmetric threats to national security is a key in assisting leaders, Weldon observes. "Policy makers need an overarching information and intelligence architecture that will quickly assimilate, analyze and display assessments and recommend courses of action for many simultaneous national emergencies," he declares. The concept of NOAH also calls for virtual communications among policy makers.

Weldon's plan is for White House, Congress, Pentagon and agency-level leaders each to have a center where they receive, send, share and collaborate on assessments before they act. He calls NOAH the policy maker's tool. In the collaborative environment, the hub would provide a multiissue, multiagency hybrid picture to the White House situation room and the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

NOAH's concept also includes support for HUMINT and peacekeeping missions along with battle damage assessment. The same system could later help brace congressional committees and hearings. The new capability would allow application of foreign threat analyses to policy, while providing a hybrid situational awareness picture of the threat, Weldon relates. Industrial efforts of interest to the policy maker could be incorporated, and academia also could be directly linked.

In meetings with high-level FBI, CIA and defense officials, Weldon stressed the need to "acquire, fuse and analyze disparate data from many agencies in order to support the policy maker's actions against threats from terrorism, [ballistic missile] proliferation, illegal technology diversions, espionage, narcotics [trafficking], information warfare and cyberterrorism." He is convinced that current collection and analysis capabilities in various intelligence agencies are stovepiped. "To some extent, this involves turf protection, but it clearly hinders policy making."

Weldon, who was a Russian studies major, offers some of his own recent experiences as examples of why there is a strong need for NOAH. He maintains close contact with a number of Russians and understands their programs and technologies. The congressman is quick to recall vignettes about Russian officials and trips to facilities in the region.

During the recent U.S. combat action involvement in Kosovo, Weldon was contacted by senior Russian officials. Clamoring for Russia to be involved in the peace process they claimed that otherwise upcoming elections could go to the communists. The Russians proposed a Belgrade meeting with Weldon, congressional colleagues, key Serbian officials and possibly Yugoslave President Slobodan Milosevic.

After the first meeting with key officials from the departments of State and Defense and the CIA, Weldon and other members of Congress went to Vienna, Austria. The State Department objected to a meeting in Belgrade, suggesting instead a neutral site. Before the departure, the Russians informed Weldon that Dragomir Karic, a member of a powerful and wealthy Kosovo family, would attend the meeting. Karic's brother was a member of the Milosevic regime.

At the end of the Vienna meeting, the Russians and Karic told Weldon that if he would accompany them to Belgrade, Milosevic was prepared to meet with them and publicly embrace a peace agreement concept reached during the Vienna meeting. The agreement would have directly involved Russia in the peace process. A diplomatic official with the U.S. delegation telephoned Washington, D.C., and the State Department objected to the Belgrade trip. The congressman and his colleagues returned home.

As soon as he arrived in Washington, D.C., the FBI telephoned to request a meeting with Weldon to gather details on Karic. It was clear, Weldon reports, they had very little information on him or his family. The following day, the CIA telephoned the congressman and asked for a meeting "about Karic." Instead, the congressman proposed a joint meeting with CIA and FBI agents in his office. Two officials from each agency attended with a list of questions.

Weldon learned from the agents that they were seeking information on Karic to brief the State Department. When he explained that the information came from the Army and LIWA, the CIA and FBI agents had no knowledge of that organization, he confirms. Before his departure for Vienna, the congressman received a six-page LIWA profile of Karic and his family's links to Milosevic.

"This is an example of why an organization like NOAH is so critically necessary," Weldon contends. "LIWA's Information Dominance Center provides the best capability we have today in the federal government to assess massive amounts of data and develop profiles. LIWA uses it contacts with other agencies to obtain database information from those systems," he explains. "Some is unclassified and some classified."

Weldon cites an "extraordinary capability by a former CIA and Defense Intelligence Agency official, who is a LIWA profiler, as one of the keys in LIWA's success. She does the profiling and knows where to look and which systems to pull information from in a data mining and extrapolation process," he proclaims. "She makes the system work."

Weldon intends to use LIWA's profiling capability as a model for building NOAH. "My goal is to go beyond service intelligence agencies and integrate all intelligence collection. This must be beyond military intelligence, which is too narrow in scope, to provide a governmentwide capability. Each agency with a pod linked to NOAH would provide two staff members assigned at the hub, which would operate continuously. Data brought together in "this cluster would be used for fusion and profiling, Which any agency could then request," he maintains.

NOAH would not belong to the Army, which would continue with its own intelligence capabilities as would the other services. There would only be one fusion center, which would handle input from all federal agencies and from open sources. Weldon explains. "NOAH would handle threats like information operations and examine stability in various regions of the world. We need this ability to respond immediately." The congressman adds that he recently was briefed by LIWA on very sensitive, very limited and scary profile information, which he describes as "potentially explosive." In turn, Weldon arranged briefings for the chairman of the House National Security Committee, the Speaker of the House and other key congressional leaders.

"But this kind of profiling capability is very limited now. The goal is to have it on a regular basis. The profiling could be used for sensitive technology transfer issues and information about security breaches," the congressman allows. LIWA has what he terms the fusion and profiling state-of-the-art capability in the military, "even beyond the military." Weldon is pressing the case for NOAH among the leaders in both houses of Congress. "It is essential that we create a govenmentwide capability under very strict controls."

Weldon adds that establishing NOAH is not a funding issue; it is a jurisdictional issue. "Some agencies don't want to tear down their stovepipes. Yet, information on a drug lord, as an example, could be vitally important to help combat terrorism." He makes a point that too often, federal agencies overlap each other in their efforts to collect intelligence against these threats, or they fail to pool their resources and share vital information. "This redundancy of effort and confusion of jurisdiction only inhibits our nation's capabilities," he offers.

NOAH would provide high-bandwidth, virtual connectivity to experts to agency pod sites. Protocols for interagency data sharing would be established and refined in links to all pod sites. The ability to retrieve, collate, analyze and display data would be exercised to provide possible courses of action. A backup site would be established for redundancy, and training would begin on collaborative tools as soon as it is activated.

This hub system would become part of the national policy creation and execution system. The tools available at LIWA would be shared so that every agency would have the same tools. Weldon explains that all agencies would post data on the National Reconnaissance Office (NRO) highway in a replicated format sensitive to classification. NOAH's global network would use the NRO system as a backbone.

NOAH optimizes groups of expertise within each organization—experts who are always on hand regardless of the issue. This approach ties strategic analysis and tactical assessment to a course of action."Before the U.S. can take action against emerging threats, we must first understand their relationship to one another, their patterns, the people and countries involved and the level of danger posed to our nation," Weldon says, "That is where NOAH begins."

STEPS TO ACHIEVE NOAH CAPABILITY

Establish baseline capability by building initial Hub Center and congressional virtual hearing room. Equip White House Situation Room to Collaborate with these sites.

Staff the Hub Center with two reps from each of the 28 key participating agencies.

Link up NOAH internal and external collaborative environment.

Hook in Back up Site for redundancy and begin training on collaborative tools.

Build the 28 Key Agency Pod Sites along model of the Information Dominance Center at Fort Belvoir, VA.

Link all Pod Sites to NOAH hub center.

Establish Protocols for Inter-agency data sharing.

Exercise live ability to retrieve, collate, analyze, display disparate data and provide policy makers course of action analysis at the NOAH Hub Center.

Refine procedures and Protocols.

Mr. Speaker, the second topic I want to touch upon briefly is the President's summit, which will take place in Russia this week. When the President travels to Moscow and St. Petersburg this week, he will have something that no other president has had before in our relationship with Russia. This President will take with him a document that was prepared by a bipartisan group of our colleagues in the House and the Senate, supported by all the major U.S.-Russia thinktanks to broaden our relationship with Russia.

A year ago, I started working on trying to forge a new direction for our relationship with Russia. I contacted all the thinktanks from Harvard and Columbia to Monterrey, to the U.S.-Russia Business Council, the Tolstoy Foundation, Georgia Tech, and all those schools doing work with Russia and all those nonprofits and NGOs. I said, first of all, tell me what you are doing with Russia. Because, surprisingly, Mr. Speaker, not one Federal agency had a complete list of all the initiatives between the U.S. people and the Russian people, U.S. agencies and Russian agencies, U.S. NGOs and Russian NGOs.

That document became a 9-page appendix in the back of the report we prepared for President Bush, for the first time listing all the activities that we are engaged in with Russia on. How can we have a relationship when we do not even know what we are doing with that country and its people?

I also asked those groups to make recommendations for me of what new things we could be doing with Russia to expand our relationship beyond the issues where we disagree. Because you see, Mr. Speaker, in the past our Presidents would meet and they would argue over issues that we disagree on, how many missiles we had, how many nuclear weapons, the ABM treaty, and we argue when neither side trusts the other.

My point is before we can get to those difficult issues, we have a new President in Russia, a new President in America, a new Congress, why do we not expand our relationship based on the new direction Putin is taking Russia and truly become friends with the Russian people?

The resultant recommendations that we produced are contained in this document. Members can get it on my Web site, both in Russian and in English. It is also being transmitted over in Russia to the Duma, and I presented it to Putin himself in October of last year. This document, Mr. Speaker, says, and I hope that the upcoming summit will build on this and I am confident it will, that our relationship with Russia should be expanded to 11 areas, not just defense. They include agriculture, culture and education, economic development, energy and natural resources, the environment, health care, judicial and legal, local government, science and technology, space and aeronautics and defense and security. There are 108 recommendations. Some do not require any new programs, simply changes legislatively, like ratification of the Law of the Sea Convention basically elevating Russia out of Jackson-Vanik, supporting Russia's accession to the WTO, restructuring of the London and Paris Club debt.

Other recommendations require action on the part of the administration and the Congress. Many of these recommendations do not involve public money. They involve simply the support of existing private relationships, school to school, company to company, NGO to NGO. In fact, in the area of culture, that entire document was written by the Tolstoy Foundation. They receive no public money. All of their work is done with foundation and donations. In the economic area, we dealt with the U.S.-Russia Business Council. They gave us their recommendations. In health care I went to the Academy of Physicians. They are doing work in Russia in training doctors and nurses. They wrote that recommendation. The resultant document, 45 pages long, gave this President something no other President had, a detailed blueprint to expand the relationship between Russia and the U.S. to a new level.

In giving this to the President, Mr. Speaker, I did not want it to come from me. So I went to our colleagues in the House and the Senate. I had 2 days prior to the October summit to get signatures. Every Member I went to agreed to sign on as a supporter of this document and its recommendations. In the Senate, I went to CARL LEVIN, JOE BIDEN, and DICK LUGAR. They signed the front page with me. In the House I went to the far left, my good friend DENNIS KUCINICH who chairs the Progressive Caucus who immediately signed on. He has been with me to Russia three times. I went to my good friend BERNIE SANDERS who has traveled to Russia with me, who is our only socialist in the Congress. I went to the chairman of the Hispanic Caucus, SILVESTRE REYES, who signed the document responding and representing all the Hispanic Members and moderate Democrats like HOWARD BERMAN, NORM DICKS, JACK MURTHA, all signed on in support of this new relationship.

On the conservative side I went to our colleagues and friends ROSCOE BARTLETT and JOE PITTS, JOHN DOOLITTLE, they all signed on, as well as the leadership, DICK ARMEY, CHRIS COX, J.C. WATTS, and HENRY HYDE.

In the end, Mr. Speaker, when this document was given by me to President Bush, Condoleezza Rice, and to President Putin before he left for Crawford, Texas, by me, it had the signatures of one-third of the Congress. So as President Bush travels to St. Petersburg and Moscow this week, he now has the unified support of this Congress to broaden our relationship with Russia like we have never done before. It is up to our President and the Russian President to stake out new territory.

The arms control agreement they have reached is historic. I commend President Bush overwhelmingly for what he has done to reduce the nuclear weapons from 6,000 to 2,000 on both sides. That in itself is a historic item, as is the new relationship with Russia and NATO. But, Mr. Speaker, that is not enough. The stars are all aligned this week. We have a new President in Russia who has done some dramatic things, things that would never have been thought of over the past 10, 15 years in Russia. He shut down Russia's largest listening station against us in Cuba without our asking. He ordered the pullback of trainloads of Russian military supplies in Moldova on the European border without our request. He offered us his airport that used to be a Soviet military base in Uzbekistan where our troops are currently housed.

He was the first elected official on September 11 to call President Bush to say Russia will give you whatever you need to fight terrorism. It was not Tony Blair. It was Putin. And he has given us full access to Russia's intelligence.

So we have a president in Russia who is taking some dramatic steps. He is being criticized for that back home. In fact, just a month and a half ago, 41 retired generals and admirals and two former defense ministers in Russia took out a full page ad in a Russian publication called Nezavizimaya Gazeta, one of the largest publications in Moscow. That full page ad criticized Putin for moving too close to America, for getting too friendly with the West.

You see, Mr. Speaker, there are hard-liners in Russia that want to take us back to the Cold War, that do not like America and Russia coming together; but it is not just in Russia, Mr. Speaker. There are hard-liners in our country that do not like the direction we are going in, either. President Bush and President Putin have got to pull away from the Cold War mentality, those hard-liners in both countries, and have a historic opportunity to move our two nations into a new relationship, a relationship of trust, of understanding, and of mutual engagement, in the areas of health care, education, environment, energy, to show the Russian people that we truly want them to be a successful nation, that we want to be partners with them; and I am convinced now more than ever that we need Russia.

We need to reduce our dependency on Middle Eastern crude oil which is the reason why we have the major problem in the Middle East today, in Israel. If we reduce our dependency on Middle Eastern crude, the Russians have vast amounts of crude and gas that we can help them develop. We must work with them together.

So, Mr. Speaker, I wish the President well. I will lead a 19-Member delegation into Moscow the day that President Bush comes back home. We will follow up his meetings with Putin with members of the Duma and the Federation Council. We will follow up on the recommendations of the document and on Monday morning we will listen to President Putin give us a summary of his feeling about the summit. I am optimistic, Mr. Speaker, because I think these two Presidents are going to fundamentally change the face of the world security relationship. Russia and America, two archenemies for 70 years, I think in the 21st century will become two partners that will work to stabilize the world. Russia can assist us in dealing with Iran and Iraq because of their ties to those countries. In fact, Russia can assist us in a number of areas, in energy, in technology. It is in our interest and in theirs to work together.

Just 2 weeks ago on the floor of this Chamber, we took another historic vote. I offered an amendment to the defense bill that was supported by 362 Members of Congress from both parties to challenge the Russians to provide full transparency on their nuclear weapons, their nuclear testing, their nuclear program. That same day in my office, I was meeting with the Russian minister of atomic energy. He is a friend of mine. I have known him for the past 5 years when he worked at Kurchatov Institute for my friend Yevgeny Velakof. The minister of atomic energy was in my office when we voted on an historic measure that I offered to provide full transparency in our nuclear relationship with Russia. My hope is that this too will become a point of discussion between Presidents Bush and Putin, because if we truly want further arms reductions, if we truly want to have a more secure world, it has got to start by building a trust that we have not had for the past 10 years.

And if I were a Russian, I would not have trusted us either during the 1990s. After all, we turned our back when Yeltsin's friends were stealing billions of dollars of IMF money. We pretended we did not see it, because we did not want to embarrass Boris Yeltsin. And when we saw evidence of technology being transferred out of Russia, by disgruntled generals and admirals, we pretended that we did not see that because we did not want to embarrass Yeltsin. So the Congress misread that and blamed the Russian Government and said we do not want to work with this country. So during the 1990s, we lost the trust and confidence of the Russian people. The best evidence of that to me was comparing what I saw in 1992 when Boris Yeltsin stood on a tank outside the Moscow White House waving the Russian flag with 20,000 or 30,000 Russians surrounding him, declaring the Soviet Union was dead, Communism had ended, Russia was a new country.

During that same speech, Yeltsin said America and Russia will be partners together, and the Russian people cheered. That was in 1992 when Yeltsin gave that speech.

Compare that to 1999. Yeltsin has health problems, drinking problems. Russia is filled with corruption, which we ignored. 1999, Yeltsin is being railroaded out of office, his popularity is down to 2 percent. The only people supporting Yeltsin was the United States leadership. That is why in the fall of 1999, two months before Yeltsin left office, 20,000 new Russians gathered outside our embassy in Moscow and burned the American flag, fired weapons at our embassy, and threw paint at the walls of our embassy compound. In seven short years we had gone from Russia's partner to the Russian people saying "we don't trust you, America."

This week, President Bush and President Putin have a chance to change all that, and unlike any other time, they have got the Congress behind them, the Duma behind them, the Federation Council behind them. Members of Congress will be in Moscow right following the summit telling the Russian people that this truly is a new time, a new beginning.

I ask and I urge all of my colleagues to thank the President for his leadership and to continue to support those efforts, especially passage of the Jackson-Vanik legislation, that will truly allow Russia to become a close partner and ally of our Nation.

Mr. Speaker, following our trip to Russia, we are going to do a few other historic things I want to highlight for our colleagues. We will leave Russia on Monday, after meeting with Putin in the morning and the Members of the Duma and the Federation Council, and we will fly in our military plane to Uzbekistan. In Taskent we will meet with the President of the country and leaders of their parliament.

Uzbekistan is a shining example of a former Soviet State that has now become one of our strongest allies, opening up its territory for our troops. We will visit with their parliament and we will challenge them to start a new relationship between their parliament and our Congress like we have done with the Russian Duma, the Ukrainian Rada, the Moldavian Parliament.

While in Uzbekistan, after meeting with their leaders, we will go to our military base, we will meet with our troops, we will give them home-baked cookies from the kids and families of America, we will give them 6,000 handmade greeting cards from elementary school children, we will give them Hershey candy bars and TastyKakes from Pennsylvania, and talk to them about what life is like back here in the States.

We may also visit one of our base camps in Afghanistan to show our support there for our troops as well.

Then we will leave Uzbekistan and we will travel to Beijing, China. In Beijing we will meet with the incoming leader, Mr. Hu, who was just recently in the U.S. I will speak at the National Defense University of the People's Liberation Army, the third time I have spoken there. I will give a speech on a major university campus in Beijing and interact with the up and coming leaders of that country.

We will also meet with the chairman and leadership of the People's Congress to talk about areas of mutual concern and interest between the U.S. and China.

We will leave Beijing on Thursday and fly into Pyongyang, North Korea, the first time ever that a U.S. Congressional delegation in a bipartisan, open way has visited North Korea. What a historic opportunity for us to open the door for dialog with the leaders of North Korea.

We will not be there to endorse them, we will not be there to support their government, because it is a communist dictatorship. We will be there to tell them as human beings we have to talk, we have to meet, we have to speak and exchange our views. And we want to tell them that we care about their people, we care about the education of their kids, the ability for them to feed their people and the ability of them to provide a stable quality of life for North Korean citizens. We will not reach any landmark agreements. We will do something that needs to be done, we will open the door to North Korea.

I will be taking a letter with me, Mr. Speaker, from the President of Drexel University in Philadelphia, a school with a huge population of foreign and Korean students, and the president of Drexel, Constantine Papadakis, will invite the President of the largest university in North Korea to establish an academic relationship between the two schools.

We will also be carrying a letter from the Foreign Policy Research Institute in Philadelphia offering to host a conference in America on U.S.-North Korean relations.

I will be carrying a third letter signed by students of Drexel to students of the largest university in North Korea asking to have a student exchange of letters and eventually trips back and forth. We will also discuss our relations with the People's Congress in North Korea and ways we can work together. Hopefully this will be the start of the opening up and the thawing of the relations between our country and North Korea.

Following our trip to Pyongyang, we will travel to Seoul, Korea. In Seoul we will brief the South Koreans who are enthusiastically supporting our trip about our discussions. We will brief the incoming candidates for the presidency of that country in the elections later this year. We will brief the parliamentary leaders, and give a press conference to the world about the trip and the implications of building peace with the Russians, the Uzbekis, the Chinese, the North Koreans, and our good friends, the South Koreans.

Mr. Speaker, what this all says is this Congress plays a vitally crucial role in not just helping to prevent incidents like 9/11 with recommendations that the administration needs to listen to, but this Congress also plays a constructive role in building peaceful relations with those countries that would be our enemy. I thank our colleagues for their support of this effort.

Mr. Speaker, I will insert in the RECORD a summary of our New Time, New Beginning document, as well as the accompanying letter signed by one-third of the Congress that was hand-delivered to President Bush and to President Putin prior to the Crawford Summit, which we hope will be the basis of the St. Petersburg summit.

I thank the staff and you for your indulgence in allowing me to present this information today.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, November 7, 2001.

President GEORGE W. BUSH,
Washington, DC.

DEAR PRESIDENT BUSH: As you prepare for the upcoming summit with President Putin, we commend the positive approach you have established with Russia. Too often, the focus of our bilateral relations has been on defense and security—precisely the issues on which our interests often collide. It would be more useful, as we move forward with a Russian policy for the 21st century to take a more holistic approach—one that takes into account Russia's myriad concerns as well as our own.

Therefore, in consultation with many of the leading experts on Russia, we propose a series of bipartisan initiatives to engage Russia on issues such as the environment, energy, economic development, health care—as well as defense and security. We call this proposal "A New Time, A New Beginning." Some of these are new ideas, but many are not. Many of these initiatives are already underway, and need additional support to make even greater progress.

Such engagement is in the U.S. interest as well as Russia's. If the United States and Russia cooperate on issues across the board, Russia will be more likely to work closely with America on the national security issues that matter most to us—missile defense, the war against terrorism, and proliferation.

We encourage you to review the enclosed proposal and hope that some of these initiatives will prove useful to you in the ongoing discussions between Russia and America. We look forward to working with you to forge a new relationship that will benefit both our countries.

Thank you for your consideration of this request.

Sincerely,

A NEW VISION FOR U.S.-RUSSIAN RELATIONS

INTRODUCTION

Those of us who value the U.S.-Russian relationship have been on a roller-coaster ride for the past decade. During the heady days of the fall of the Berlin Wall and the ensuing collapse of the Soviet Union, it appeared that our two countries would cooperate as never before. The world cheered when Presidents Bush and Yeltsin hailed a new "strategic partnership" between America and Russia.

There followed, however, a dark period—marked by misguided American policies and rampant Russian corruption. The Russian economy sagged as American aid—money meant for the Russian people—was siphoned off and stashed in Swiss banks and American real estate investment. At the same time, NATO's war in Kosovo strained the already sinking bilateral relationship. What were the results of this increasingly bitter disenchantment? A more aggressive Russian foreign policy, increased proliferation from Moscow to rogue states, and the final coup de grace: Russia and China announcing last year a new "strategic partnership"—against the interests of America and the West.

Now is the time, with new leaders in Washington and Moscow, to improve the relationship for the long-term.

My interest in this relationship began when I was nineteen years old, when a college professor convinced me to switch my major to Russian Studies. Since that time, I have been fascinated with the Soviet Union and Russia—and have traveled there more than twenty-five times.

I began my travels when I was a member of my local County Council and was invited to travel to Moscow by the American Council of Young Political Leaders. I have continued to visit Russia since my election to Congress, as a member of the House Armed Services Committee, and later as co-chairman of the Duma-Congress Study Group, the official interparliamentary exchange between the U.S. and Russia.

My interactions with leaders across Russia have taught me that the Russians are a proud people, historically aware, and mindful of Russia's unique global role. Increasingly, they are becoming aware of the limitless possibilities of U.S.-Russian cooperation on a host of issues.

This brief paper, then, is an effort to weave together a comprehensive program of U.S.-Russian cooperation across a wide-range of issues.

Too often, the focus of our bilateral relations has been on defense and security—precisely the issues on which our interests often collide. It would be more useful, as we move forward with a Russian policy for the 21st century, to take a more holistic approach—one that takes into account Russia's myriad concerns as well as our own.

Therefore, in consultation with many of the leading experts on Russia, I propose a series of initiatives to engage Russia on issues like the environment, energy, economic development, and health care—as well as defense and security. Some of these are new ideas, but many are not. Many of these initiatives are already underway, and need additional support to make even greater progress.

Such engagement is in the interest of the U.S. as well as Russia. For if the U.S. and Russia are cooperating on issues across the board, Russia will be more likely to work closely with America on the national security issues that matter most to us—missile defense, the war against terrorism, and proliferation.

This is not, and will never be, a finished product. The contours of our bilateral relationship change daily with world events. Nor will it likely be turned into a grand legislative proposal, although certainly parts of it may be. I hope that it is a starting point for discussions between Russia and America on ways that we can forge a new relationship that will benefit both our countries.

For if we make a new American-Russian relationship, one based on common interests that benefit the citizens of both countries, then we will make great progress—not just for America and Russia alone, but for peace and stability across the globe.

Rep. Curt Weldon (R-PA)

U.S.-RUSSIA PARTNERSHIP

A NEW TIME A NEW BEGINNING

Summary of recommendations

Agricultural Development: Assist in agricultural production; expand private-sector investment; and enhance capacity to purchase essential agricultural inputs, commodities and equipment.

Cultural/Education Development: Expand cultural ties outside the major cities; assist regional museums in generating tourism; and provide for more Russian language and cultural studies in U.S. schools.

Defense and Security: Initiate new bilateral talks similar to the Ross-Mamedov talks on a Global Protection System; move forward with joint talks on a new nonproliferation regime; and encourage progress on the RAMOS program and restructure the Nuclear Cities Initiative.

Economic Development: Help facilitate Russia's accession to the WTO and its acceptance of all WTO agreements; increase funding for OPIC and EX-IM Bank projects in Russia; and work with Russia to improve intellectual property rights.

Energy/Natural Resources: Foster cooperative pilot projects, starting with oil and gas exploration in Timan Pechora; convene bilateral task force to discuss the energy ramifications of the war on terrorism; and eliminate bureaucratic obstacles to joint cooperation on energy.

Environmental Cooperation: Develop a revolving fund to assure development of promising Russian technologies; expand debt for nature swaps; and dramatically expand cooperation on marine science research.

Health Care: Increase emphasis on chronic disease like cardiovascular disease and diabetes; develop more extensive physician exchange programs; and augment existing cooperation between NIH and appropriate Russian research institutes.

Judicial/Legal Systems: Support expansion of jury trials into all Russian regions; expand Environmental Public Advocacy Centers into Russia; and encourage a doubling of the number of legal clinics.

Local Governments: Propose ways to expand the tax base available to local governments; encourage political participation by increasing local partisan affiliations; and encourage the gradual devolution of services to the local level.

Science and Technology: Increase cooperation in the area of nuclear fuel cycles; expand cooperative fusion research on nonpolluting energy solutions; and involve Russian industry in embryonic U.S. nanotechnology efforts.

Space and Aeronautics: Utilize commercial joint ventures to enable Russia to meet its Space Station obligations; increase joint projects on space solar power, propulsion technology, and weather satellites; and cooperate on mutually-beneficial planetary defense tracking technologies.

AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT

Summary

United States government resources are employed in Russia to enhance Russia's capacity to purchase essential agricultural inputs, commodities, and equipment in order to assist agricultural production and expand private-sector investment to improve Russia's agricultural infrastructure. Neither Russia's government nor the private sector alone are willing or able to meet these needs. There are a number of programs carried out through USDA and USAID to benefit Russian agriculture. USDA and USAID officials have stated that there are no cooperative efforts between Russia and the U.S. in any third countries. Most programs are administered by private voluntary organizations (PVOs) which utilize USDA and USAID resources to carry out development activities within Russia. Additionally, private-sector efforts such as the U.S.-Russia Business Council utilize government resources through these programs in order to expand and enhance the U.S.-Russian commercial relationship.

Those PVOs involved in Russian that are actually working at ground level believe that greater efforts are required to improve the country's ability to provide for its citizens. Regarding USDA's programs, the Administration's food aid review, especially with regard to the 416(b) surplus disposal program, has thrown into question the amount of resources available for Russia, since many PVO projects are funded through monetized 416(b) donations. This situation may become clearer once U.S. food aid programs are reauthorized and/or altered through a new farm bill and once the Administration releases its food aid proposals as part of its FY03 budget request. As for USAID, PVOs express the concern that the agency's activities in Russia Require a greater focus on agriculture.

The programs designed as a solution would require U.S. governemnt resources (primarily, through USDA and USAID) because the Russian government and private capital markets cannot or will not provide the resources necessary to improve the Russian agriculture infrastructure. A number of proposals exist, and the number of proposals would increase with a greater commitment to Russian agriculture through USDA and USAID. Such efforts through USDA and USAID would play a key role not only in improving the ability of Russia agriculture to meet the critical needs of its citizens, but in enhancing the Russian private sector and improving the prospects for future earnings of U.S. agribusiness.

Recommendations

Improving credit availability and production practices and attracting investment in Russian agribusiness are the areas of focus for redeveloping Russian agriculture. CNFA's Agribusiness Partnerships Program seeks to build financially and economically viable private sector agricultural systems within Russia and the former Soviet states.

For example, in 1993, the Russian baby food manufacturing industry was supplying less than half of the country's annual baby food required to assure minimum levels of health and nutrition to Russian infants and children. CNFA entered into a partnership with Heinz to increase domestic manufacturing output. Using USAID-funded technical assistance, CNFA and Heinz worked to develop and introduce more nutritious baby food products and enhance local production to increase the Russian baby food sector's ability to meet its domestic demand.

The recovery of Russian domestic production capacity may require foreign equity investment in production facilities and businesses along with access to credits for the purchase of production inputs. Without proactive PVO involvement, neither the Russian government nor private capital markets will be willing or able to meet these needs.

(a) CNFA has a proposal that would establish a fund which will provide long-term investment capital for the development of agricultural production, processing, packaging, and distribution businesses and establish a trade finance facility. This fund would address Russia's inability to purchase critical agriculture inputs and commodities and the lack of investment capital to develop the private sector agricultural infrastructure. The fund would be established through the monetization of USDA food aid commodities within Russia.

(b) Similarly, another PVO, ACDI–VOCA, has submitted a large project proposal to improve rural credit availability and facilitate investment in medium-sized Russian food processing companies. Thus far, the proposal has not received approval. ACDI–VOCA believes the approval has been stalled at the interagency food aid review process due to what it perceives as OMB's unease at utilizing 416(b) donations for monetizing. Again, this proposal would seek to address two principle problems: inadequate access to credit and inadequate capital investment.

CULTURAL/EDUCATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Summary

Cultural cooperation is known to be one of the best ways to overcome mutual distrust, insularity, and conflict among nations. By working together with artists, writers, musicians, and cultural institutions we can promote artistic freedom, good will, and international exposure, as well as support economic viability in the cultural sector. Additionally, in sharing knowledge, specific techniques, and skills—and in broadening horizons—we are investing positively and constructively toward greater mutual understanding and a more peaceful and stable world for ourselves and coming generations.

Recommendations

Encourage expansion of cultural ties and initiatives outside the major centers. In recent years too much emphasis has been placed by Western institutions on the major centers of Moscow and St. Petersburg. This policy fails to serve the rest of the country as reasons grapple with a range of challenges, from economic problems to the need to regain their own identity.

Create viable links with other like-minded institutions to promote cultural cooperation. Example: With the support of the Soros Foundation through their Open Society project entitled "Transformation of Russian Society," the L.N. Tolstoy Museum/Estate at Yasnaya Polyana (LNM/E) established the first association of museum/estates in Russia. In the mid 1990s, this project assisted in the development of regional museums as focal centers for the preservation and promulgation of local culture, with programs on literature, music, and the arts.

Link regional museum centers to promote much-needed tourism and other support for the economically-depressed heartland of Russia outside the major centers of Moscow and St. Petersburg.

Help to stimulate programs by supporting grassroots initiatives. Example: LNM/E in Tula has been involved for many years now in a project to encourage local artisans and musicians in this economically-depressed region. With assistance from the Soros Foundation, the LNM/E has been able to provide a forum for exhibitions and concerts to help stimulate local talent and find a market for them as well.

Foster interest in and greater appreciation of Russian language and culture among youth in the U.S. and provide Russian language and cultural immersion programs for secondary school students in preparation for college.

Increase funding for collaborative academic and research programs between Russian and American scholars, local government leaders, journalists, heads of NGOs, and researchers.

Allocate more federal funding for cultural initiatives to the private sector. There are many small non-profit organizations in the U.S. which have both cultural sensitivity and proven track records, yet cannot compete for AID funding because of current bureaucratic restrictions.

Support initiatives to create a U.S. clearinghouse for the identification and consolidation of U.S.-Russian cultural initiatives and exchange programs. There is no central point that can identify and help consolidate programs or facilitate student exchanges. Many programs today—both government and private—are being duplicated.

The U.S. should follow through with funding promised by former President Bush for the establishment of the American University in Moscow. Support initiatives like the Soros Foundation linking U.S. schools with Russian schools. Expand education exchanges between teachers, administrators, and educators at all levels. Establish a university to university relationship between American and Russian universities. Every school should have a partner.

DEFENSE AND SECURITY

Summary

United States defense and security cooperation and assistance involving the Russian Federation should contribute to defining a new bilateral strategic framework that is not rooted in the notion of Mutual Assured Destruction. Instead, the new security framework should be based upon improving U.S. and Russian security by working with Russia to combat terrorism and to halt the spread of missiles and weapons of mass destruction (WMD).

America and Russia must forge an alliance beneficial to both, or face the near certainty that historical suspicions will reassert themselves and plunge the world into a new Cold War. Such an eventuality would be especially tragic since the United States and Russia have more in common than not. Indeed, given that the gravest and most imminent threats to both nations are terrorism and WMD proliferation, these great common enemies should make the United States and Russia natural allies.

The Cold War era model of bilateral relations and arms control is predicated on mutual antagonism and nuclear threats: a situation that is unacceptable as the basis for 21st Century U.S.-Russian relations. Russia and the United States each have unique security concerns, but have more security concerns that are shared in common. U.S. policy should encourage Russia to recognize the advantages of U.S.-Russian cooperation in areas like counter-terrorism, nonproliferation and missile defense—and the dangers of pursuing a confrontational foreign policy. There is some evidence to suggest that Russia may grudgingly compromise on U.S. missile defense goals. However, the main thrust of current Russian foreign policy and military strategy is actively seeking to curtail American influence and enhancing Russia's status by trying to diminish the United States. U.S. policy must recognize the existence of both positive and negative strains in Russian foreign policy, and then encourage the positive strain that is consistent with U.S. national security interests.

There should be a clear intent in U.S. policy to transition from near-term measures rooted in U.S. nonproliferation goals to a long-term solution. For example, one component of a long-term solution might be transitioning the Russian economy from defense to non-military production so that scientists can participate in sustainable nonweapons work that benefits the Russian economy. Achieving this will require integration of defense and security cooperation, with broader social and economic assistance focused on regional economies—programs administered outside the U.S. security community.

This is consistent not only with U.S. nonproliferation goals, but Russian interests as well. According to President Putin, Russia must speed up its integration into the Western community. If Putin is serious, Russia should not be involved in activities that undermine the security of the West. While Russia has formed an alliance with China, President Bush and President Putin have since found mutual interests in fighting terrorism as a result of September 11, 2001.

The key to forging a U.S.-Russian alliance is to do it now, before U.S.-Russian relations deteriorate further. The United States must offer Russia a relationship that clearly benefits Russian as well as U.S. interests, and begin as soon as possible, working jointly toward mutually beneficial goals. As the victor in the Cold War, the greater burden for taking the initiative and building trust between the sides falls upon the United States. In its relations with Russia, the U.S. holds an array of levers—strategic, military-technical, economic, and social—that can be used as positive and negative inducements to move Russia toward cooperation, and ultimately toward alliance, with the United States. Even the most modest proposals and programs already underway should be viewed as means to the larger end of reforging the still adversarial relationship between Washington and Moscow into a new American-Russian alliance that will defeat terrorism, halt WMD proliferation, and establish a more stable global order for the growth of political and economic freedom everywhere.

Recommendations

Strategic

Begin a new, high-level dialog similar to the Ross-Mamedov talks of 1992 to discuss U.S. and Russian proposals for a Global Protection System. Transitioning the security dialog with Russia to a "normal" one primarily conducted by lower-level officials is a laudable goal, but you can't "get there from here" without an interim step. That step is to initiate a high-level process that has a broad mandate and will provide "cover" for lower levels of the Russian defense and security establishment to talk productively about these issues. The resulting cooperative approach to BMD deployment could encompass U.S. NMD, the Russian proposal for a European missile shield, and new initiatives like a feasibility study of boost-phase intercept involving Russia, Israel, and Turkey.

Moscow has repeatedly proposed working with Washington against terrorism. Washington should propose a formal alliance with Moscow in a global war against terrorism that will involve military and intelligence cooperation and joint operations. The U.S.-Russian alliance against terrorism will help Russia by gaining U.S. support for Russia's war against terrorism in Central Asia, which will go far toward achieving the U.S. goal of crushing terrorism globally. Unless Central Asia is stabilized, the region threatens to continue to spiral toward chaos and become, like Afghanistan, a breeding ground for terrorism. Moreover, a U.S.-Russian alliance against terrorism would preempt the emergence of an anti-Western Sino-Russian alliance, pull Russia closer to the West, and give a second chance to Russian democracy.

Russia has advocated an expanded international nonproliferation regime that would, among other things, involve countries of proliferation concern to the United States. The Departments of State and Defense should begin detailed discussions with the Russian Foreign and Defense Ministries on this proposal to determine if a new regime could establish more stringent nonproliferation and arms trade criteria. According to these criteria, Russia would limit its sales of arms, military technology, weapons of mass destruction, and dual-use military-civilian technology to China and Iran, cease such sales to rogue states, and severely limit them to countries in conflict, such as India and Pakistan. U.S. support for the effort, which, if successful, would enhance Moscow's diplomatic prestige, should also depend on Russia's willingness to advocate the return of U.N. weapons inspectors to Iraq. Russia has proposed this regime as an alternative to U.S. NMD and the U.S. must make it clear that it does not accept that argument: missile defense and international cooperation on nonproliferation are not mutually exclusive (indeed, they actually reinforce each other).

Direct the Department of Defense and the Ballistic Missile Defense Organization to develop a strategy to evaluate the feasibility of increasing technical cooperation with Russian military industry on missile defense technologies. The strategy should include a risk assessment (e.g., the spread of knowledge to China) and an assessment of the possible benefits (technical and political) to U.S. programs of projects like co-development of the Russian S-500. For example, Russian scientists might participate in developing high-speed boosters for interceptor rockets and airborne and space-based lasers.

Demonstrate to Russia that the U.S. is not interested in taking advantage of Russian weakness. Traditional nuclear arms control only makes sense if the U.S. and Russia remain adversaries. The U.S. should immediately begin efforts to demonstrate that American policy seeks to support transparency rather than numerical equivalencies as a measure of our shared interest in "stability." We also seek to take a fuller account of each side's nuclear arsenals and infrastructure—including tactical nuclear weapons and nuclear weapon production facilities—in any future nuclear agreement between the U.S. and Russia. We understand that both the U.S. and Russia increasingly have different force structure requirements as determined by our respective threat perceptions, geography, and technical abilities. The Departments of Defense, State, and Energy should articulate a strategy for communicating our interest in transparency to the Russians and fulfilling our part of such transparency dialog. We cannot force the Russians to accept that our motives are benign and that such a dialog is in Russian interests. However, the offer, coupled with the array of economic and political outreaches inherent in our broader Russian Policy, would be a good faith effort.

Make clear to Russia that the potential for cooperation in areas like counterterrorism, joint operations with NATO, regional defenses for Europe, etc. are greatly undermined by the way Russia has chosen to wage its war in Chechnya.

Military-Technical

Encourage and continue the Russian-American Observation Satellite (RAMOS) program. The innovative U.S.-Russian space based remote sensor R&D program addresses defense and environmental concerns. Initial concept of co-orbiting U.S. and Russian satellites for simultaneous stereo observations should be continued.

Restructure CTR Nuclear Cities Initiative (NCI) funding to other more effective efforts. The NCI's near-term goal of providing nonweapon work for Russian scientists if more flexibly addressed by other programs (e.g., ISTC, IPP) while its longer-term goal of converting the nuclear cities to sustainable nonweapons work cannot be achieved without a broader focus on the economies of the respective regions.

Economic

Support the rescheduling of Russia's $150 billion debt to the Paris Club if Russia demonstrates active cooperation in cutting the flow of advanced military technology to rogue states.

A sustained effort to increase the percentage of Cooperative Threat Reduction money actually being spent in Russia. The perception is that in too many programs inordinate amounts of money are spent on administration, U.S. contractors, and consultants. Program offices must be made aware that this issue is a congressional priority and reporting requirements should reflect that concern.

A more rigorous joint program accounting effort to monitor how U.S. funds are spent in Cooperative Threat Reduction and associated programs. This improves U.S. confidence that monies are being spent appropriately and gives Russians experience in the application of modern accounting methods. Waste, fraud and abuse of CTR funding is a serious concern to both governments and a vehicle like this is necessary lest the process devolve into an adversarial one of accusation and denial.

Insist that Russia stop taxing U.S. assistance provided to scientists through cooperative programs. The Administration should suspend all Export-Import Bank and Overseas Private Investment Corporation Insurance and Credits to U.S. companies that do business with Russian entities that are linked to Iran's military build-up activities. Russian government-controlled companies, such as the natural gas monopoly Gazprom, should not be allowed to raise funds from U.S. investors for energy schemes in Iran, since they could fund Iran's military build-up, which ultimately could be used to threaten U.S. interests in the region.

Task the interagency WMD working group at the National Security Council with designing a strategy for sanctioning Russia and Iran because of their proliferation activities. The intelligence community should be tasked with a comprehensive assessment of the ongoing technology transfer and weapons programs, and with providing recommendations identifying "choke points" that might be vulnerable to sanctions. The current WMD working group at the NSC should be tasked with developing a sanctions strategy that targets Russian and Iranian officials, businesses, and individuals involved in the proliferation of WMD technologies, material, or know-how, as well as their sources of financing.

Establish a vehicle, preferably through a Congressionally mandated organization like USIP, to target support to U.S. non-governmental initiatives that interface directly with official or semi-official Russia in a productive way. These initiatives need a level of analytical freedom and the ability to shape the agenda of their dialog that is sometimes not possible within more traditional Department or Agency sponsorship (it needs to be easy to "think outside the box" established by Administration policy). The Russians would almost certainly be responsive to an effort with this sort of background and it would serve to broaden the bilateral dialog at a time when Russian voices appear to be more reticent. Efforts supported should be conscious of congressional interest in spending money in Russia. For example, Congress could create a vehicle for funding unofficial academic research that would, of necessity, involve significant Russian participation at the official or senior unofficial level. Projects could be chosen for their potential to be "spun on" to the official foreign policy or House-Duma dialogs.

Encourage U.S.-Russian military officer exchange programs and greatly increase the numbers. Encourage joint participation in U.S., Russian, and NATO military exercises. This will help allay Russia's residual fear of the West and promote a climate of trust.

Ratify the Law of the Sea Convention to establish guidelines for international maritime waters.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Summary

Since the collapse of the Soviet Union, Russia has experienced widespread economic dislocation and a drop of about 50 percent in GDP. However, after more than a decade of virtually uninterrupted decline, the Russian economy demonstrated many promising signs of recovery.

The year 2000 was one of the most successful years for Russia in over three decades.

The growth of GDP was 7.7 percent, fixed assets grew more than 18 percent, unemployment fell by more than 9 percent, real income of the population increased, and pensions increased by 38 percent in real terms.

Recommendations

Work to facilitate Russia's accession and its implementation of WTO agreements. The U.S. government can help Russia to realize its enormous economic potential and enable the country to become a more significant participant in the global economy. Specifically, these efforts will support the growth of the Russian private sector by permitting Russia to negotiate the elimination of trade barriers faced by its exporters and to challenge the WTO-consistency of measures taken by other member countries.

Increase the budgetary allocations for EX-IM, OPIC, and TDA. To help solidify the policy transition from aid to trade, these program funds must be maintained and increased. Where feasible, U.S. institutional financial risk on appropriate large-scale projects should be shared with multilateral agencies such as the World Bank and the EBRD.

Provde targeted financing opportunities for small- and medium-sized U.S. companies. The practices of various U.S. government-sponsored funds should be reviewed to ensure that they promote access to capital for the development of small- and medium-size enterprises.

The continuing development of the Tax Code will greatly benefit Russia if it creates a tax system that encourages, rather than discourages, investment.

Investors in Russia continue to express concern over weakness in protecting the property rights investors are afforded under Russian law. Amendments to the current legal framework should address gaps and ambiguities associated with some of these risks.

Support Russian efforts to strengthen Intellectual Property Rights protection and enforcement. Anti-counterfeit legislation should be strengthened and penalties enforced, while training law enforcement and judicial officials in this area.

Currency control laws have failed to stop capital flight and instead have damaged the reputation of the Russian business community. The current framework, which acts as a disincentive to Western investment, should be replaced by control and monitoring arrangements that will encourage investment and allow Russian capital freedom of movement in the global economy, while protecting the Russian tax base and treasury.

Russia should be graduated from Jackson-Vanik. This would remove a longstanding irritant in our relationship with Russia and help foster a sense of "normal" trade relations between our countries.

Authorize and appropriate funds to achieve the goal of awarding 10,000 Masters of Business Administration degrees in Russia.

Revitalize the enterprise fund concept in Russia as a means of U.S. support to Russian entrepreneurs. Additional funding from the U.S.-Russia Investment Fund or other vehicles would be necessary.

ENERGY/NATURAL RESOURCES

Summary

Russia, as the world's second largest oil producer and a major supplier of gas to Western Europe, represents an important stabilizing force for global energy security. U.S. polity makers have long understood that in the post-Cold War era, bilateral energy cooperation can provide mutual benefits that go well beyond enhanced energy security. Cooperation in the energy sphere contributes to economic development in Russia, commercial opportunities for U.S. and Russian firms, and a highly positive foundation for the bilateral political relationship.

As our two countries proceed to re-engage across a broad range of important policy and cultural arenas, energy can claim its critical position as the centerpiece in the relationship, strengthening global energy security and promoting mutual economic growth.

Recommendations

Development of U.S.-Russian cooperation in energy should become a priority for international policy because of its capacity to address this risk of uncertain supplies and unnecessary dependence. The U.S. and Russia should initiate the development of a sustained institutional structure to move forward on critical areas hindering mutual development of Russian energy resources.

A high level Presidential task force with representation from both the Putin and Bush administrations should be immediately established as part of the partner offer in addressing the economic and energy components of the anti-terrorism campaign.

The institutional structure for moving forward on critical energy policy and projects should be established to eliminate bureaucratic tendencies that are delaying the implementation of a favorable investment climate in Russia and positive economic responses from the United States. On the U.S. side, this will require the direct involvement of the Secretaries of Energy and Commerce, as well as the Vice President. Members of Congress should be involved and regularly consulted.

The bilateral group should proceed with specific remedies to move projects forward. Official U.S. financial organizations, such as OPIC and U.S. Ex-Im Bank should play a prominent and ongoing role in the bilateral discussions.

An expanded program of energy cooperation will provide a critical reinforcement of the positive aspects of the bilateral relationship. One such project, for example, is the development of the oil and gas resources of the Timan Pechora region which offers enormous challenges in project development and investment, but also enormous rewards in new petroleum supplies for the world market.

Work of the Duma-Congress inter-parliamentary group should be intensified for purposes of using this efficient mechanism of bilateral consultation to encourage approval in Russia, at the parliamentary level and to promote investment and taxation laws that provide a positive environment for investment, such as full and appropriate finalization of PSA legislation.

This bilateral energy initiative should engage both official and non-governmental groups committed to moving forward on energy cooperation. The Moscow International Petroleum Club, a nongovernmental and consultative organization, is prepared to lend all assistance to "jump start" the process and provide ongoing support as a well-known and well-respect NGO in the energy area.

ENVIRONMENTAL COOPERATION

Summary

With Russia's economy ailing, substantial environmental improvements will necessarily be connected with socioeconomic, institutional, and cultural changes. This represents a challenge as well as an opportunity. While environmental protection cannot reasonably be regarded as a priority, it can as a consequence be a driver of societal changes on the whole.

It has been demonstrated that Russia's population suffers from environmental pollution to a degree that makes it not just a quality-of-life issue. The environmental pollution threatens Russia's economic well-being and public health, especially for poor families.

Western governments and international financial institutions should support projects to improve Russia's environmental infrastructure. Based on a market approach, Western donors should provide expertise and oversight to avoid excesses, lawlessness, and abuse. The Russian government should provide the appropriate incentives. Nothing would better mobilize the forces of capitalism for positive change while at the same time bring Russian and Western interests under one umbrella.

Recommendations

Russians have a strong bias in favor of engineered solutions (hardware) to problems, while advanced economies are taking a software approach (planning and organization). The hardware bias has been adopted in international assistance projects. This trend must be reversed.

Russia's scientific institutes and scientists have developed state-of-the-art technology to prevent and clean up environmental problems. For lack of funding these technologies have not been deployed in Russia and have not been commercialized in international markets. A revolving fund should be created to deploy the technologies and solve the problems.

If trade benefits were extended to certified sustainably-produced products in Europe and North America, this alone could open markets wide enough for investors to take the risk of improving the degraded and polluting infrastructure. Trade rules benefiting sustainable production would also give an incentive to the Russian government, which bets heavily on export earnings from natural resource extraction, to enforce its laws.

By enlarging the concept of debt-for-nature swaps to environmental protection more generally, Russia's government would get real incentives and financial tools to tighten and enforce its rules. Oversight over environmental protection would thus move from the resource extraction agencies to less directly interested ones. Existing legislative proposals such as the Russian Economic Restoration and Justice Act of 1999 and the Nuclear Threat Reduction Act of 2001 could, if modified, serve as cornerstones for financial cooperative assistance.

Financial tools such as a mortgage or a bond system must be developed for a market economy to flourish and be sustained. Issuing bonds to finance local environmental projects could be acceptable to Russians, especially where the environmental problems are clear and their impact severe.

Increase participation with groups such as Global Legislators Organization for a Balanced Environment (GLOBE) and the Advisory Committee on the Protection of the Seas (ACOPS). Both organizations work with Russia to help conserve the world's most valuable ecosystems. A shared annual legislative agenda for Members of Congress and their colleagues in the Duma can bring attention to the threats to ecosystems such as ill-conceived development projects and poor environmental policy.

Increase cooperation in marine science research to better address the problems of the ocean where maintenance of stable fisheries is becoming a source of conflict. Such cooperation can increase our knowledge of the oceans, boast our ability to manage the oceans' rich resources, and enhance our understanding of ocean effects on climate and carbon sequestration.

Expand cooperation between the U.S. and Russian navies to help assist with preserving the environment.

Promost the DOE and the Ministry of Atomic Energy for the Russian Federation (MinAtom) to cooperate on the Nuclear Cities Initiative (NCI). NCI seeks to increase U.S. national and global security through economic diversification and weapons complex down-sizing in Russia's Nuclear Cities.

Encompass all forms of energy in a comprehensive energy plan that includes attention to global warming and environmental impacts.

Establish a mechanism for the exchange of information and to assist in the implementation of initiatives that result from these recommendations.

HEALTH CARE

Summary

Since the collapse of the USSR, public health and the state of the medical care system in Russia have been deeply troubled. Mortality trends, which began to worsen in the late 1960s, accelerated downward in the past decade, leading to a decline in longevity unknown outside parts of the developing world. Russia sustained a net loss of 750,000 persons last year. Of the two factors behind this trend—decreased fertility and premature mortality—mortality is the more important. The major contributor to premature mortality is an excessive incidence of fatal cardiovascular disease—heart attacks and strokes, due, in turn, to a high prevalence of unrecognized and unmanaged hypertension, an easily treatable disease but one that requires an innovative and sustained program of prevention and education. This record, unprecedented in time of peace for a developed country, reveals conditions that threaten to cause serious social and economic consequences for the nation. President Putin has acknowledged it as a key security issue for Russia.

For Russia as well as the West, the health issue is both a challenge and an opportunity. The history of U.S. and Western health assistance for Russia reveals a record of thin support, episodic contributions and, at times, counterproductive efforts. There has been a lack of appropriate leadership, absence of a coherent strategy, and a resignation generated by a feeling that the job was simply too overwhelming. Yet there are opportunities for constructive engagement for both professional contributions and community-based efforts in partnership with Russian colleagues in a well-conceived plan that builds on the strengths of the existing Russian resources.

Recommendations

An effective health assistance program for the Russian Federation should concentrate on important health issues and serious, life-threatening diseases—those which make the most prominent contribution to premature mortality and where effective intervention and prevention are possible. This implies a much increased emphasis on chronic diseases—especially cardiovascular disorders and diabetes. An effective program should combine clinical medicine, public health, and public education.

Develop, implement, and evaluate cooperative physician exchange programs for the sharing of knowledge and skills that improve the Russian medical profession's ability to meet the challenges of the burden of disease.

Develop and implement cooperative programs aimed at efficient use of medical care resources for treatment and prevention of disease.

Serve as a clearinghouse for privately and publicly sponsored programs designed to improve the health of Russians and improve the quality and effectiveness of preventive and therapeutic efforts there.

Develop close working relationships with private American and European philanthropic institutions interested in both security and health issues in the former Soviet republics.

Establish close working relationships with key commercial entities whose interests involve issues of health and medicine in the Russian Federation.

Assist professional education—continuing medical education for Russian physicians—by organizing exchanges in both directions, based in regional academic medical centers in several regions of the Russian Federation.

Support Russian versions of the American Medical Association, Center for Disease Control, etc.

Collaborate among compelementary organizations on behalf of disease management and prevention by combining clinical medicine, public health, and public education. Key examples include cardiovascular disease, diabetes, and tuberculosis.

Assist in the selective provision of therapeutic drugs and medical equipment.

Increase cooperative biomedical research between the National Institutes of Health and research institutes in Russia.

A joint announcement by Presidents Bush and Putin for close bilateral cooperation on the eradication of AIDS, cancer, etc. would build support for these types of programs.

JUDICIAL/LEGAL SYSTEMS

Summary

Russia's judiciary is the least developed of the three branches. Reform has begun but some of the old structure and personnel are still in place. Trial by jury is being introduced and President Putin declared that it would become the norm nationwide by 2003. A major overhaul of the Soviet-era criminal code is nearing approval in the Duma.

Recommendations

Jury trials were a feature of the pre-revolutionary Russian legal system. Few initiatives have had such a concrete impact in promoting the rule of law in Russia and in promoting human rights. Putin will almost certainly succeed in his new effort to expand jury trials to other regions of the Russian Federation. The U.S. technical assistance community can and should play a critical role in promoting Putin's practical and high-minded initiative.

The Central and East European Law Initiative's (CEELI) much-heralded Environmental Public Advocacy Center (EPAC) in Ukraine, Moldova, and Uzbekistan has successfully litigated high-impact environmental cases on behalf of citizens in the courts and has promoted citizen participation in advocacy and environmental decision-making. Russia would benefit from a proliferation of NGOs able to advocate on behalf of the public through proper, legal channels (as opposed to settling disputes through extra-judicial means). Average citizens should be involved in settling environmental disputes with businesses and the government in a manner that is familiar to Americans but wholly unfamiliar to most Russians.

Russia adopted a new system last year to expand judicial power to a group of magistrates, commonly referred to as Justices of the Peace. Work with these magistrates will prove to be critical because they will be the court of first instance for most common citizen complaints. These courts also will be the first in Russia to implement an abbreviated trial, pursuant to the current draft code of criminal procedure, which includes for the first time a system of plea bargaining. Likewise, the justices will have greater discretion under the draft code to determine the conditions of pre-trial release (bail).

The expansion of legal clinics in the last five years has proven to be successful in reforming the Russian legal education system. Encouraging the doubling of these clinics in the next 3–5 years will have a salutary effect on the legal education system in Russia, as well as facilitate access to justice for Russia's poor.

Russian law students and law professors continue to use outdated textbooks from Soviet times. The dearth of textbooks on newer subjects (particularly on commercial law) has hampered curriculum reform and the ability of professors to prepare their students to practice in a market economy. Through small grant programs targeting individual professors or groups of professors, this need could be addressed relatively inexpensively.

The Law on Advocates has passed its first reading in parliament and appears destined to be passed in final form in the near term. The new law will represent the legislative backbone for the restructuring of the legal profession in Russia. New, higher qualification standards, ethics standards, etc. will be mandated by the new law. A great deal of assistance and training will be needed in order to properly implement the law.

Continue to promote the passage of a modern criminal procedure code in Russia. The Code itself mandates of expansion of jury trials throughout the entire Federation by 2003 and sets other timetables for the transfer of the responsibility from prosecutors to judges for issuing arrest warrants, search warrants, wiretap orders, and setting conditions for pretrial release.

Encourage American law schools to provide tuition for at least one Russian student and establish a U.S. government program to cover all other costs. Additionally, Russian students should be able to apply for J, I (section 212E) visas.

Fully support and expand institutional relationships between the Russian and American local governments. State-to-state, city-to-city, and mayor-to-mayor initiatives should be further encouraged.

Support and expand training programs for local officials in Russia.

LOCAL GOVERNMENTS

Summary

A successful transition to democracy in Russia cannot take place only at the national level. The democratization of national political institutions without corresponding changes taking place locally would be a prescription for political instability. Furthermore, there are a number or reasons why the attempt to build democracy at the sub-national level in Russia is conducive to a successful transition to democracy nationally.

In stable federal systems, legitimate and effectively functioning local governments can act as a balance to central power; their absence creates greater opportunity for abuse of power by the center.

Popular participation at the local level gives people a knowledge of the mechanics of democracy. Among the lessons to be learned through participation in local politics are tolerance for the opinions of others, majority rule, representation, and accountability.

Popular participation in local government also leads to stronger feelings of political efficacy—the sense that people have some control over the decisions that directly effect their lives. As such, democratically run local governments can instill greater support for democratic institutions nationally and so contribute to the development of a democratic political culture.

Finally, national policies must be implemented locally; local governments that are responsive and are perceived as legitimate are likely to be more effective in doing so. Local knowledge and proximate interest may improve the effectiveness of local service delivery.

The Constitution of the Russian Federation adopted in 1993 envisages two levels of government below the national level, both operating in accordance with democratic principles. The upper level consists of 89 federal subdivisions, considered part of the Russian state system. Below them are institutions of Local Self Government, generally municipalities. Chapter Eight of the Constitution is devoted to these institutions and accords them an essential role in promoting public participation in all local decision making. However, despite the high ideals expressed in the Constitution, democracy at the sub-national level in Russia has been slow to develop. Efforts to promote these ideals are crucial to building democracy in Russia.

Recommendations

Together with Russian specialists, assess the degree to which efforts to develop institutions of local self government in Russia have succeeded and identify areas of weakness which could benefit from American cooperation.

Propose ways to improve the tax base of local government in Russia and explore ways in which revenues might best be shared between levels of government.

Consider ways to encourage political participation locally, including efforts at building stronger political parties and organizations that represent elements of civil society.

Focus on strengthening local legal institutions, including the courts, the judiciary, and legal services for those who can least afford them, while encouraging legal education.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

Summary

Under the existing 10-year Umbrella Agreement on S&T Cooperation between the Russian Federation and the United States signed in 1993, a large number of projects have been underway involving more than 15 federal agencies. Areas of research have included space, the environment, agricultural science, energy, public health and medicine, infectious diseases, earth sciences, nuclear and molecular physics, information technology, and a wide range of basic science disciplines. Cooperative endeavors between U.S. and Russian scientists have resulted in numerous scientific and political breakthroughs.

Participating U.S. government agencies include: ARS, CDC, DOD, DOE, DOS, DOT, EPA, HHS, NASA, NIH, NIST, NOAA, NRC, NSF/CRDF, ONR, USDA, and USGS. In addition, private funds, such as the Soros and Turner Foundations, have made or are about to make sizable investments in the Russian science community.

Under the various programs administered by these agencies, thousands of Russian scientists and engineers have been involved in commercial and scientific relationships. Numerous areas of cooperation can be expanded and new areas can be explored. The U.S. needs to determine which areas of cooperation require focused attention. The goals of these programs should be self-sustained.

Recommendations

DoD/DoE should cooperate with MinAtom in the area of nuclear fuel cycles, including development of proliferation resistant fuel cycles for possible application in advanced nuclear countries and appropriate repositories for final disposition of spent fuel.

Stimulate arms control thinking by training the next generation of Russian nuclear weapons and public policy specialists in programs for natural and social sciences.

Encourage private firms and NGOs to utilize current technology to respond to and mitigate natural and environmental disasters.

Encourage industry by way of taxes and other incentives to develop and use Russian technology and to support the institutes that create the technology.

Continue and expand cooperative fusion research that began over 25 years ago because it is expected that fusion energy could become the long-term non-polluting solution to the world's energy needs.

Involve Russia in nanotechnology projects because materials research is an area of traditional Russian R&D strength.

Cooperate with Russia in the area of food safety and food security—in the production as well as processing and storage stages. This could provide significant benefits not only to the U.S. and Russia, but to developing countries as well.

Increase cooperation in marine science research to better address the problems of the ocean, where maintenance of stable fisheries is becoming a source of conflict. Such cooperation can increase our knowledge of the oceans, boost our ability to manage the oceans' rich resources, and enhance our understanding of oceanic effects on climate and carbon sequestration.

Further develop commercial relations in the high-tech area of information technology using the strong mathematical and software development skills of Russian computer scientists. The existing NCI and IPP programs could serve as facilitators for this further development.

Restructure our scientific aid programs so that there are economic drivers for investments in science that complement the political issues and scientific advancements for the project. The existing NCI and IPP programs could serve as economic drivers.

Establish a mechanism for the exchange of information and to assist in the implementation of initiatives that result from these recommendations.

SPACE AND AERONAUTICS

Summary

At the dawn of the post-Cold War era, U.S. industry feared that Russia's vast rocket resources would disrupt the international satellite launch services market following the end of Soviet Communism. By formulating a framework for cooperative space activities, the U.S. and Russian governments opened the door for the creation of strategic partnerships between their respective aerospace companies. Today, the once secretive Russian Proton Rocket, now marketed alongside other western launch vehicles, is the result of joint ventures between U.S. and Russian space launch service providers. Such ventures, however, will not be limited to only marketing space transportation services as we enter the 21st century.

The push for greater commercialization of government space assets and operations is characteristic of new challenges for the 21st Century, as well as greater improvements in space-related technologies for the benefit of near-Earth space development and space exploration. Some members of Congress view a newly formulated partnership with Russia as a potential solution to the cost-related problems we now face with the International Space Station (ISS) and other future undertakings such as the colonization of Mars. Undoubtedly, the ISS, space exploration, and improvements in aerospace technology appear to be the major elements that will come to characterize U.S.-Russian cooperation in space and aeronautics activities in the mid-term.

Recommendations

International Space Station—Currently, Russia provides Progress re-supply cargo ships to support ISS refueling and logistics and Soyuz capsules for crew return. Russia is also expected to provide modules for docking and stowage, critical power, and research modules. Although Russia has invested large sums of money in the program, it is unclear whether it can continue as a viable partner in this effort due to schedule delays, funding shortages, and national security concerns. Additionally, the U.S. estimate of a growing projected Station cost overrun only compounds the problem. Joint commercialization ventures, however, may provide Russia with opportunities for meeting its ISS obligations. SpaceHab, Inc. has approached Russia regarding a cooperative arrangement to develop its Enterprise module, which would have the capability to meet Russia's docking and stowage obligations as well as provide a near-term solution for new habitation. Similarly, Boeing is interested in developing the Russian FGB–2 as an alternative means for providing habitation capability. Both proposals require substantial U.S. payments, which are not currently budgeted.

Space-Related Technologies and Missions—In the case of rocket engine development, Pratt & Whitney, Inc. currently imports Russia's RD–180 engines to power the new U.S. commercial Atlas III and Atlas V launchers. Pratt & Whitney is developing a U.S.-based capability for manufacturing RD-180 engines for use on military launches of these systems. Additionally, American and Russian scientists were working to define a new space-based stereo viewing research project called the Russian-American Observation Satellite (RAMOS). The goal of RAMOS was to build confidence between the United States and the Russian Federation by cooperating on a defense research and development program. This program has currently received an increase in funding. Potential joint U.S.-Russian cooperation programs are focused on a wide range of technologies and space operational needs.

(a) Space Solar Power: Russia and U.S. could further this joint technology risk reduction program. (b) Cooperative Aeronautics Research Program: This joint research program in advanced aeronautics and propulsion technologies could benefit both nations. (c) Advanced Space Propulsion technology: We should build on previous U.S.-Russian cooperative activities on Russian electric propulsion technology for deep space missions. (d) Joint Weather Satellites: The U.S. and Russia could jointly develop polar and geostationary weather satellites and solar monitoring satellites. (e) Planetary Defense: Joint U.S.-Russian cooperative program to detect, monitor, and track potential Earth-crossing asteroids and develop capabilities to rapidly respond. There is an unmet need to develop a comprehensive catalogue of Earth-threatening objects and the means to rapidly respond to the threat they pose. (f) Aerospace and Aeronautics Research: Achievement of the goal of low-cost access will depend upon significant improvements in launch vehicle technology development. It must be understood that U.S.-Russian partnership on space initiatives will require U.S.-Russian partnership in the areas of aeronautics as well. The state of art in aircraft engine technology for both countries would benefit from an exchange in manufacturing techniques and materials science.

Further Space Exploration—The focus of joint programs involving humans exploring the solar system and beyond must involve launch vehicle technology development. Concentration in this area would allow cooperative programs to move forward in exploring and determining whether there is life in the oceans beneath the ice on Europa, for example. Although NASA abandoned its Pluto mission earlier this year due to a lack of funds, a joint mission to Pluto and the Kuiper asteroid belts may make it feasible.

Support and expand private sector relationship. The Lockheed Krunachev Space Launch is an example of this partnership.

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ISSA). Pursuant to clause 12 of rule I, the Chair declares the House in recess until approximately 12:10 a.m.

Accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 57 minutes p.m.), the House stood in recess until approximately 12:10 a.m.

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. SESSIONS) at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes a.m.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 3129, CUSTOMS BORDER SECURITY ACT OF 2002

Mr. REYNOLDS, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 107–482) on the resolution (H. Res. 426) providing for consideration of the bill (H.R. 3129) to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 2002 and 2003 for the United States Customs Service for antiterrorism, drug interdiction, and other operations for the Office of the United States Trade Representative, for the United States International Trade Commission, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION WAIVING POINTS OF ORDER AGAINST CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 3448, PUBLIC HEALTH SECURITY AND BIOTERRORISM PREPAREDNESS AND RESPONSE ACT OF 2002

Mr. REYNOLDS, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 107–483) on the resolution (H. Res. 427) waiving points of order against the conference report to accompany the bill (H.R. 3448) to improve the ability of the United States to prevent, prepare for, and respond to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 4775, 2002 SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS ACT FOR FURTHER RECOVERY FROM AND RESPONSE TO TERRORIST ATTACKS ON THE UNITED STATES

Mr. REYNOLDS, from the Committee on Rules, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 107–484) on the resolution (H. Res. 428) providing for consideration of the bill (H.R. 4775) making supplemental appropriations for further recovery from and response to terrorist attacks on the United States for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. 107–481)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3448), to improve the ability of the United States to prevent, prepare for, and respond to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Public Health Security and Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Act of 2002".

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents of the Act is as follows:

TITLE I—NATIONAL PREPAREDNESS FOR BIOTERRORISM AND OTHER PUBLIC HEALTH EMERGENCIES

Subtitle A—National Preparedness and Response Planning, Coordinating, and Reporting

Sec. 101. National preparedness and response.
Sec. 102. Assistant Secretary for Public Health Emergency Preparedness; National Disaster Medical System.
Sec. 103. Improving ability of Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.
Sec. 104. Advisory committees and communications; study regarding communications abilities of public health agencies.
Sec. 105. Education of health care personnel; training regarding pediatric issues.
Sec. 106. Grants regarding shortages of certain health professionals.
Sec. 107. Emergency system for advance registration of health professions volunteers.
Sec. 108. Working group.
Sec. 109. Antimicrobial resistance.
Sec. 110. Supplies and services in lieu of award funds.
Sec. 111. Additional amendments.

Subtitle B—Strategic National Stockpile; Development of Priority Countermeasures

Sec. 121. Strategic national stockpile.
Sec. 122. Accelerated approval of priority countermeasures.
Sec. 123. Issuance of rule on animal trials.
Sec. 124. Security for countermeasure development and production.
Sec. 125. Accelerated countermeasure research and development.
Sec. 126. Evaluation of new and emerging technologies regarding bioterrorist attack and other public health emergencies.
Sec. 127. Potassium iodide.

Subtitle C—Improving State, Local, and Hospital Preparedness for and Response to Bioterrorism and Other Public Health Emergencies

Sec. 131. Grants to improve State, local, and hospital preparedness for and response to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies.

Subtitle D—Emergency Authorities; Additional Provisions

Sec. 141. Reporting deadlines.
Sec. 142. Streamlining and clarifying communicable disease quarantine provisions.
Sec. 143. Emergency waiver of Medicare, Medicaid, and SCHIP requirements.
Sec. 144. Provision for expiration of public health emergencies.

Subtitle E—Additional Provisions

Sec. 151. Designated State public emergency announcement plan.
Sec. 152. Expanded research by Secretary of Energy.
Sec. 153. Expanded research on worker health and safety.
Sec. 154. Enhancement of emergency preparedness of Department of Veterans Affairs.
Sec. 155. Reauthorization of existing program.
Sec. 156. Sense of Congress.
Sec. 157. General Accounting Office report.
Sec. 158. Certain awards.
Sec. 159. Public access defibrillation programs and public access defibrillation demonstration projects.

TITLE II—ENHANCING CONTROLS ON DANGEROUS BIOLOGICAL AGENTS AND TOXINS

Subtitle A—Department of Health and Human Services

Sec. 201. Regulation of certain biological agents and toxins.
Sec. 202. Implementation by Department of Health and Human Services.
Sec. 203. Effective dates.
Sec. 204. Conforming amendment.

Subtitle B—Department of Agriculture

Sec. 211. Short title.
Sec. 212. Regulation of certain biological agents and toxins.
Sec. 213. Implementation by Department of Agriculture.

Subtitle C—Interagency Coordination Regarding Overlap Agents and Toxins

Sec. 221. Interagency coordination.

Subtitle D—Criminal Penalties Regarding Certain Biological Agents and Toxins

Sec. 231. Criminal penalties.

TITLE III—PROTECTING SAFETY AND SECURITY OF FOOD AND DRUG SUPPLY

Subtitle A—Protection of Food Supply

Sec. 301. Food safety and security strategy.

Sec. 302. Protection against adulteration of food.
Sec. 303. Administrative detention.
Sec. 304. Debarment for repeated or serious food import violations.
Sec. 305. Registration of food facilities.
Sec. 306. Maintenance and inspection of records for foods.
Sec. 307. Prior notice of imported food shipments.
Sec. 308. Authority to mark articles refused admission into United States.
Sec. 309. Prohibition against port shopping.
Sec. 310. Notices to States regarding imported food.
Sec. 311. Grants to States for inspections.
Sec. 312. Surveillance and information grants and authorities.
Sec. 313. Surveillance of zoonotic diseases.
Sec. 314. Authority to commission other Federal officials to conduct inspections.
Sec. 315. Rule of construction.

Subtitle B—Protection of Drug Supply

Sec. 321. Annual registration of foreign manufacturers; shipping information; drug and device listing.
Sec. 322. Requirement of additional information regarding import components intended for use in export products.

Subtitle C—General Provisions Relating to Upgrade of Agricultural Security

Sec. 331. Expansion of Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service activities.
Sec. 332. Expansion of Food Safety Inspection Service activities.
Sec. 333. Biosecurity upgrades at the Department of Agriculture.
Sec. 334. Agricultural biosecurity.
Sec. 335. Agricultural bioterrorism research and development.
Sec. 336. Animal enterprise terrorism penalties.

TITLE IV—DRINKING WATER SECURITY AND SAFETY

Sec. 401. Terrorist and other intentional acts.
Sec. 402. Other Safe Drinking Water Act amendments.
Sec. 403. Miscellaneous and technical amendments.

TITLE V—ADDITIONAL PROVISIONS

Subtitle A—Prescription Drug User Fees

Sec. 501. Short title.
Sec. 502. Findings.
Sec. 503. Definitions.
Sec. 504. Authority to assess and use drug fees.
Sec. 505. Accountability and reports.
Sec. 506. Reports of postmarketing studies.
Sec. 507. Savings clause.
Sec. 508. Effective date.
Sec. 509. Sunset clause.

Subtitle B—Funding Provisions Regarding Food and Drug Administration

Sec. 521. Office of Drug Safety.
Sec. 522. Division of Drug Marketing, Advertising, and Communications.
Sec. 523. Office of Generic Drugs.

Subtitle C—Additional Provisions

Sec. 531. Transition to digital television.
Sec. 532. 3-year delay in lock in procedures for Medicare+Choice plans; change in Medicare+Choice reporting deadlines and annual, coordinated election period for 2003, 2004, and 2005.

TITLE I—NATIONAL PREPAREDNESS FOR BIOTERRORISM AND OTHER PUBLIC HEALTH EMERGENCIES

Subtitle A—National Preparedness and Response Planning, Coordinating, and Reporting

SEC. 101. NATIONAL PREPAREDNESS AND RESPONSE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 201 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following title:

"TITLE XXVIII—NATIONAL PREPAREDNESS FOR BIOTERRORISM AND OTHER PUBLIC HEALTH EMERGENCIES

"Subtitle A—National Preparedness and Response Planning, Coordinating, and Reporting

"SEC. 2801. NATIONAL PREPAREDNESS PLAN.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—

"(1) PREPAREDNESS AND RESPONSE REGARDING PUBLIC HEALTH EMERGENCIES.—The Secretary shall further develop and implement a coordinated strategy, building upon the core public health capabilities established pursuant to section 319A, for carrying out health-related activities to prepare for and respond effectively to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies, including the preparation of a plan under this section. The Secretary shall periodically thereafter review and, as appropriate, revise the plan.

"(2) NATIONAL APPROACH.—In carrying out paragraph (1), the Secretary shall collaborate with the States toward the goal of ensuring that the activities of the Secretary regarding bioterrorism and other public health emergencies are coordinated with activities of the States, including local governments.

"(3) EVALUATION OF PROGRESS.—The plan under paragraph (1) shall provide for specific benchmarks and outcome measures for evaluating the progress of the Secretary and the States, including local governments, with respect to the plan under paragraph (1), including progress toward achieving the goals specified in subsection (b).

"(b) PREPAREDNESS GOALS.—The plan under subsection (a) should include provisions in furtherance of the following:

"(1) Providing effective assistance to State and local governments in the event of bioterrorism or other public health emergency.

"(2) Ensuring that State and local governments have appropriate capacity to detect and respond effectively to such emergencies, including capacities for the following:

"(A) Effective public health surveillance and reporting mechanisms at the State and local levels.

"(B) Appropriate laboratory readiness.

"(C) Properly trained and equipped emergency response, public health, and medical personnel.

"(D) Health and safety protection of workers responding to such an emergency.

"(E) Public health agencies that are prepared to coordinate health services (including mental health services) during and after such emergencies.

"(F) Participation in communications networks that can effectively disseminate relevant information in a timely and secure manner to appropriate public and private entities and to the public.

"(3) Developing and maintaining medical countermeasures (such as drugs, vaccines and other biological products, medical devices, and other supplies) against biological agents and toxins that may be involved in such emergencies.

"(4) Ensuring coordination and minimizing duplication of Federal, State, and local planning, preparedness, and response activities, including during the investigation of a suspicious disease outbreak or other potential public health emergency.

"(5) Enhancing the readiness of hospitals and other health care facilities to respond effectively to such emergencies.

"(c) REPORTS TO CONGRESS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than one year after the date of the enactment of the Public Health Security and Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Act of 2002, and biennially thereafter, the Secretary shall submit to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions of the Senate, a report concerning progress with respect to the plan under subsection (a), including progress toward achieving the goals specified in subsection (b).

"(2) ADDITIONAL AUTHORITY.—Reports submitted under paragraph (1) by the Secretary (other than the first report) shall make recommendations concerning—

"(A) any additional legislative authority that the Secretary determines is necessary for fully implementing the plan under subsection (a), including meeting the goals under subsection (b); and

"(B) any additional legislative authority that the Secretary determines is necessary under section 319 to protect the public health in the event of an emergency described in section 319(a).

"(d) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—This section may not be construed as expanding or limiting any of the authorities of the Secretary that, on the day before the date of the enactment of the Public Health Security and Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Act of 2002, were in effect with respect to preparing for and responding effectively to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies.".

(b) OTHER REPORTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services (referred to in this subsection as the "Secretary") shall submit to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions of the Senate, a report concerning—

(A) the recommendations and findings of the National Advisory Committee on Children and Terrorism under section 319F(c)(2) of the Public Health Service Act;

(B) the recommendations and findings of the EPIC Advisory Committee under section 319F(c)(3) of such Act;

(C) the characteristics that may render a rural community uniquely vulnerable to a biological attack, including distance, lack of emergency transport, hospital or laboratory capacity, lack of integration of Federal or State public health networks, workforce deficits, or other relevant characteristics;

(D) the characteristics that may render areas or populations designated as medically underserved populations (as defined in section 330 of such Act) uniquely vulnerable to a biological attack, including significant numbers of low-income or uninsured individuals, lack of affordable and accessible health care services, insufficient public and primary health care resources, lack of integration of Federal or State public health networks, workforce deficits, or other relevant characteristics;

(E) the recommendations of the Secretary with respect to additional legislative authority that the Secretary determines is necessary to effectively strengthen rural communities, or medically underserved populations (as defined in section 330 of such Act); and

(F) the need for and benefits of a National Disaster Response Medical Volunteer Service that would be a private-sector, community-based rapid response corps of medical volunteers.

(2) STUDY REGARDING LOCAL EMERGENCY RESPONSE METHODS.—The Secretary shall conduct a study of effective methods for the provision of emergency response services through local governments (including through private response contractors and volunteers of such governments) in a consistent manner in response to acts of bioterrorism or other public health emergencies. Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions of the Senate, a report describing the findings of the study.

SEC. 102. ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR PUBLIC HEALTH EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS; NATIONAL DISASTER MEDICAL SYSTEM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title XXVIII of the Public Health Service Act, as added by section 101 of this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following subtitle:

“Subtitle B—Emergency Preparedness and Response

“SEC. 2811. COORDINATION OF PREPAREDNESS FOR AND RESPONSE TO BIOTERRORISM AND OTHER PUBLIC HEALTH EMERGENCIES.

“(a) ASSISTANT SECRETARY FOR PUBLIC HEALTH EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—There is established within the Department of Health and Human Services the position of Assistant Secretary for Public Health Emergency Preparedness. The President shall appoint an individual to serve in such position. Such Assistant Secretary shall report to the Secretary.

“(2) DUTIES.—Subject to the authority of the Secretary, the Assistant Secretary for Public Health Emergency Preparedness shall carry out the following duties with respect to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies:

“(A) Coordinate on behalf of the Secretary—

“(i) interagency interfaces between the Department of Health and Human Services (referred to in this paragraph as the ‘Department’) and other departments, agencies, and offices of the United States; and “(ii) interfaces between the Department and State and local entities with responsibility for emergency preparedness.

“(B) Coordinate the operations of the National Disaster Medical System and any other emergency response activities within the Department of Health and Human Services that are related to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies.

“(C) Coordinate the efforts of the Department to bolster State and local emergency preparedness for a bioterrorist attack or other public health emergency, and evaluate the progress of such entities in meeting the benchmarks and other outcome measures contained in the national plan and in meeting the core public health capabilities established pursuant to 319A.

“(b) NATIONAL DISASTER MEDICAL SYSTEM.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall provide for the operation in accordance with this section of a system to be known as the National Disaster Medical System. The Secretary shall designate the Assistant Secretary for Public Health Emergency Preparedness as the head of the National Disaster Medical System, subject to the authority of the Secretary.

“(2) FEDERAL AND STATE COLLABORATIVE SYSTEM.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The National Disaster Medical System shall be a coordinated effort by the Federal agencies specified in subparagraph (B), working in collaboration with the States and other appropriate public or private entities, to carry out the purposes described in paragraph (3).

“(B) PARTICIPATING FEDERAL AGENCIES.—The Federal agencies referred to in subparagraph (A) are the Department of Health and Human Services, the Federal Emergency Management Agency, the Department of Defense, and the Department of Veterans Affairs.

“(3) PURPOSE OF SYSTEM.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may activate the National Disaster Medical System to—

“(i) provide health services, health-related social services, other appropriate human services, and appropriate auxiliary services to respond to the needs of victims of a public health emergency (whether or not determined to be a public health emergency under section 319); or

“(ii) be present at locations, and for limited periods of time, specified by the Secretary on the basis that the Secretary has determined that a location is at risk of a public health emergency during the time specified.

“(B) ONGOING ACTIVITIES.—The National Disaster Medical System shall carry out such ongoing activities as may be necessary to prepare for the provision of services described in subparagraph (A) in the event that the Secretary activates the National Disaster Medical System for such purposes.

“(C) TEST FOR MOBILIZATION OF SYSTEM.—During the one-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of the Public Health Security and Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Act of 2002, the Secretary shall conduct an exercise to test the capability and timeliness of the National Disaster Medical System to mobilize and otherwise respond effectively to a bioterrorist attack or other public health emergency that affects two or more geographic locations concurrently. Thereafter, the Secretary may periodically conduct such exercises regarding the National Disaster Medical System as the Secretary determines to be appropriate.

“(c) CRITERIA.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall establish criteria for the operation of the National Disaster Medical System.

“(2) PARTICIPATION AGREEMENTS FOR NONFEDERAL ENTITIES.—In carrying out paragraph (1), the Secretary shall establish criteria regarding the participation of States and private entities in the National Disaster Medical System, including criteria regarding agreements for such participation. The criteria shall include the following:

“(A) Provisions relating to the custody and use of Federal personal property by such entities, which may in the discretion of the Secretary include authorizing the custody and use of such property to respond to emergency situations for which the National Disaster Medical System has not been activated by the Secretary pursuant to subsection (b)(3)(A). Any such custody and use of Federal personal property shall be on a reimbursable basis.

“(B) Provisions relating to circumstances in which an individual or entity has agreements with both the National Disaster Medical System and another entity regarding the provision of emergency services by the individual. Such provisions shall address the issue of priorities among the agreements involved.

“(d) INTERMITTENT DISASTER-RESPONSE PERSONNEL.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—For the purpose of assisting the National Disaster Medical System in carrying out duties under this section, the Secretary may appoint individuals to serve as intermittent personnel of such System in accordance with applicable civil service laws and regulations.

“(2) LIABILITY.—For purposes of section 224(a) and the remedies described in such section, an individual appointed under paragraph (1) shall, while acting within the scope of such appointment, be considered to be an employee of the Public Health Service performing medical, surgical, dental, or related functions. With respect to the participation of individuals appointed under paragraph (1) in training programs authorized by the Assistant Secretary for Public Health Emergency Preparedness or a comparable official of any Federal agency specified in subsection (b)(2)(B), acts of individuals so appointed that are within the scope of such participation shall be considered within the scope of the appointment under paragraph (1) (regardless of whether the individuals receive compensation for such participation).

“(1) INTERMITTENT DISASTER-RESPONSE APPOINTEE.—For purposes of this subsection, the term ‘intermittent disaster-response appointee’ means an individual appointed by the Secretary under subsection (d).

“(2) COMPENSATION FOR WORK INJURIES.—An intermittent disaster-response appointee shall, while acting in the scope of such appointment, be considered to be an employee of the Public Health Service performing medical, surgical, dental, or related functions, and an injury sustained by such an individual shall be deemed ‘in the performance of duty’, for purposes of chapter 81 of title 5, United States Code, pertaining to compensation for work injuries. With respect to the participation of individuals appointed under subsection (d) in training programs authorized by the Assistant Secretary for Public Health Emergency Preparedness or a comparable official of any Federal agency specified in subsection (b)(2)(B), injuries sustained by such an individual, while acting within the scope of such participation, also shall be deemed ‘in the performance of duty’ for purposes of chapter 81 of title 5, United States Code (regardless of whether the individuals receive compensation for such participation). In the event of an injury to such an intermittent disaster-response appointee, the Secretary of Labor shall be responsible for making determinations as to whether the claimant is entitled to compensation or other benefits in accordance with chapter 81 of title 5, United States Code.

“(3) EMPLOYMENT AND REEMPLOYMENT RIGHTS.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—Service as an intermittent disaster-response appointee when the Secretary activates the National Disaster Medical System or when the individual participates in a training program authorized by the Assistant Secretary for Public Health Emergency Preparedness or a comparable official of any Federal agency specified in subsection (b)(2)(B) shall be deemed ‘service in the uniformed services’ for purposes of chapter 43 of title 38, United States Code, pertaining to employment and reemployment rights of individuals who have performed service in the uniformed services (regardless of whether the individual receives compensation for such participation). All rights and obligations of such persons and procedures for assistance, enforcement, and investigation shall be as provided for in chapter 43 of title 38, United States Code.

“(B) NOTICE OF ABSENCE FROM POSITION OF EMPLOYMENT.—Preclusion of giving notice of service by necessity of Service as an intermittent disaster-response appointee when the Secretary activates the National Disaster Medical System shall be deemed preclusion by ‘military necessity’ for purposes of section 4312(b) of title 38, United States Code, pertaining to giving notice of absence from a position of employment. A determination of such necessity shall be made by the Secretary, in consultation with the Secretary of Defense, and shall not be subject to judicial review.

“(4) LIMITATION.—An intermittent disaster-response appointee shall not be deemed an employee of the Department of Health and Human Services for purposes other than those specifically set forth in this section.

“(f) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION REGARDING USE OF COMMISSIONED CORPS.—If the Secretary assigns commissioned officers of the Regular or Reserve Corps to serve with the National Disaster Medical System, such assignments do not affect the terms and conditions of their appointments as commissioned officers of the Regular or Reserve Corps, respectively (including with respect to pay and allowances, retirement, benefits, rights, privileges, and immunities).

“(g) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this section, the term ‘auxiliary services’ includes mortuary services, veterinary services, and other services that are determined by the Secretary to be appropriate with respect to the needs referred to in subsection (b)(3)(A).

“(h) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—For the purpose of providing for the Assistant Secretary for Public Health Emergency Preparedness and the operations of the National Disaster Medical System, other than purposes for which amounts in the Public Health Emergency Fund under section 319 are available, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 2002 through 2006.”.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS REGARDING RESOURCES OF NATIONAL DISASTER MEDICAL SYSTEM.—It is the sense of the Congress that the Secretary of Health and Human Services should provide sufficient resources to entities tasked to carry out the duties of the National Disaster Medical System for reimbursement of expenses, operations, purchase and maintenance of equipment, training, and other funds expended in furtherance of the National Disaster Medical System.

SEC. 103. IMPROVING ABILITY OF CENTERS FOR DISEASE CONTROL AND PREVENTION.

Section 319D of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 247d–4) is amended to read as follows:

“(a) FACILITIES; CAPACITIES.—

“(1) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention has an essential role in defending against and combatting public health threats and requires secure and modern facilities, and expanded and improved capabilities related to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies, sufficient to enable such Centers to conduct this important mission.

“(2) FACILITIES.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention may design, construct, and equip new facilities, renovate existing facilities (including laboratories, laboratory support buildings, scientific communication facilities, transshipment complexes, secured and isolated parking structures, office buildings, and other facilities and infrastructure), and upgrade security of such facilities, in order to better conduct the capacities described in section 319A, and for supporting public health activities.

“(B) MULTIYEAR CONTRACTING AUTHORITY.—For any project of designing, constructing, equipping, or renovating any facility under subparagraph (A), the Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention may enter into a single contract or related contracts that collectively include the full scope of the project, and the solicitation and contract shall contain the clause ‘availability of funds’ found at section 52.232–18 of title 48, Code of Federal Regulations.

“(3) IMPROVING THE CAPACITIES OF THE CENTERS FOR DISEASE CONTROL AND PREVENTION.—The Secretary, taking into account evaluations under section 319B(a), shall expand, enhance, and improve the capabilities of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention relating to preparedness for and responding effectively to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies. Activities that may be carried out under the preceding sentence include—

“(A) expanding or enhancing the training of personnel;

“(B) improving communications facilities and networks, including delivery of necessary information to rural areas;

“(C) improving capabilities for public health surveillance and reporting activities, taking into account the integrated system or systems of public health alert communications and surveillance networks under subsection (b); and

“(D) improving laboratory facilities related to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies, including increasing the security of such facilities.

“(b) NATIONAL COMMUNICATIONS AND SURVEILLANCE NETWORKS.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, directly or through awards of grants, contracts, or cooperative agreements, shall provide for the establishment of an integrated system or systems of public health alert communications and surveillance networks between and among—

“(A) Federal, State, and local public health officials;

“(B) public and private health-related laboratories, hospitals, and other health care facilities; and

“(C) any other entities determined appropriate by the Secretary.

“(2) REQUIREMENTS.—The Secretary shall ensure that networks under paragraph (1) allow for the timely sharing and discussion, in a secure manner, of essential information concerning bioterrorism or another public health emergency, or recommended methods for responding to such an attack or emergency.

“(3) STANDARDS.—Not later than one year after the date of the enactment of the Public Health Security and Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Act of 2002, the Secretary, in cooperation with health care providers and State and local public health officials, shall establish any additional technical and reporting standards (including standards for interoperability) for networks under paragraph (1).

“(1) FACILITIES; CAPACITIES.—

“(A) FACILITIES.—For the purpose of carrying out subsection (a)(2), there are authorized to be appropriated $300,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 2002 and 2003, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 2004 through 2006.

“(B) MISSION; IMPROVING CAPACITIES.—For the purposes of achieving the mission of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention described in subsection (a)(1), for carrying out subsection (a)(3), for better conducting the capacities described in section 319A, and for supporting public health activities, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 2002 through 2006.

“(2) NATIONAL COMMUNICATIONS AND SURVEILLANCE NETWORKS.—For the purpose of carrying out subsection (b), there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 2002 through 2006.”.

SEC. 104. ADVISORY COMMITTEES AND COMMUNICATIONS; STUDY REGARDING COMMUNICATIONS ABILITIES OF PUBLIC HEALTH AGENCIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 319F of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 247d–6) is amended—

(1) by striking subsections (b) and (i);

(2) by redesignating subsections (c) through (h) as subsections (e) through (j), respectively; and

(3) by inserting after subsection (a) the following subsections:

“(b) ADVICE TO THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT.—

“(1) REQUIRED ADVISORY COMMITTEES.—In coordination with the working group under subsection (a), the Secretary shall establish advisory committees in accordance with paragraphs (2) and (3) to provide expert recommendations to assist such working groups in carrying out their respective responsibilities under subsections (a) and (b).

“(2) NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON CHILDREN AND TERRORISM.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the Secretary shall establish an advisory committee to be known as the National Advisory Committee on Children and Terrorism (referred to in this paragraph as the ‘Advisory Committee’).

“(B) DUTIES.—The Advisory Committee shall provide recommendations regarding—

“(i) the preparedness of the health care (including mental health care) system to respond to bioterrorism as it relates to children;

“(ii) needed changes to the health care and emergency medical service systems and emergency medical services protocols to meet the special needs of children; and

“(iii) changes, if necessary, to the national stockpile under section 121 of the Public Health Security and Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Act of 2002 to meet the emergency health security of children.

“(C) COMPOSITION.—The Advisory Committee shall be composed of such Federal officials as may be appropriate to address the special needs of the diverse population groups of children, and child health experts on infectious disease, environmental health, toxicology, and other relevant professional disciplines.

“(D) TERMINATION.—The Advisory Committee terminates one year after the date of the enactment of the Public Health Security and Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Act of 2002.

“(3) EMERGENCY PUBLIC INFORMATION AND COMMUNICATIONS ADVISORY COMMITTEE.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the Secretary shall establish an advisory committee to be known as the Emergency Public Information and Communications Advisory Committee (referred to in this paragraph as the ‘EPIC Advisory Committee’).

“(B) DUTIES.—The EPIC Advisory Committee shall make recommendations to the Secretary and the working group under subsection (a) and report on appropriate ways to communicate public health information regarding bioterrorism and other public health emergencies to the public.

“(C) COMPOSITION.—The EPIC Advisory Committee shall be composed of individuals representing a diverse group of experts in public health, medicine, communications, behavioral psychology, and other areas determined appropriate by the Secretary.

“(D) DISSEMINATION.—The Secretary shall review the recommendations of the EPIC Advisory Committee and ensure that appropriate information is disseminated to the public.

“(E) TERMINATION.—The EPIC Advisory Committee terminates one year after the date of the enactment of Public Health Security and Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Act of 2002.

“(c) STRATEGY FOR COMMUNICATION OF INFORMATION REGARDING BIOTERRORISM AND OTHER PUBLIC HEALTH EMERGENCIES.—In coordination with working group under subsection (a), the Secretary shall develop a strategy for effectively communicating information regarding bioterrorism and other public health emergencies, and shall develop means by which to communicate such information. The Secretary may carry out the preceding sentence directly or through grants, contracts, or cooperative agreements.

“(d) RECOMMENDATION OF CONGRESS REGARDING OFFICIAL FEDERAL INTERNET SITE ON BIOTERRORISM.—It is the recommendation of Congress that there should be established an official Federal Internet site on bioterrorism, either directly or through provision of a grant to an entity that has expertise in bioterrorism and the development of websites, that should include information relevant to diverse populations (including messages directed at the general public and such relevant groups as medical personnel, public safety workers, and agricultural workers) and links to appropriate State and local government sites.''.

(b) STUDY REGARDING COMMUNICATIONS ABILITIES OF PUBLIC HEALTH AGENCIES.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services, in consultation with the Federal Communications Commission, the National Telecommunications and Information Administration, and other appropriate Federal agencies, shall conduct a study to determine whether local public health entities have the ability to maintain communications in the event of a bioterrorist attack or other public health emergency. The study shall examine whether redundancies are required in the telecommunications system, particularly with respect to mobile communications, for public health entities to maintain systems operability and connectivity during such emergencies. The study shall also include recommendations to industry and public health entities about how to implement such redundancies if necessary.

SEC. 105. EDUCATION OF HEALTH CARE PERSONNEL; TRAINING REGARDING PEDIATRIC ISSUES.

Section 319F(g) of the Public Health Service Act, as redesignated by section 104(a)(2) of this Act, is amended to read as follows:

''(g) EDUCATION; TRAINING REGARDING PEDIATRIC ISSUES.—

''(1) MATERIALS; CORE CURRICULUM.—The Secretary, in collaboration with members of the working group described in subsection (b), and professional organizations and societies, shall—

''(A) develop materials for teaching the elements of a core curriculum for the recognition and identification of potential bioweapons and other agents that may create a public health emergency, and for the care of victims of such emergencies, recognizing the special needs of children and other vulnerable populations, to public health officials, medical professionals, emergency physicians and other emergency department staff, laboratory personnel, and other personnel working in health care facilities (including poison control centers);

''(B) develop a core curriculum and materials for community-wide planning by State and local governments, hospitals and other health care facilities, emergency response units, and appropriate public and private sector entities to respond to a bioterrorist attack or other public health emergency;

''(C) develop materials for proficiency testing of laboratory and other public health personnel for the recognition and identification of potential bioweapons and other agents that may create a public health emergency; and

''(D) provide for dissemination and teaching of the materials described in subparagraphs (A) through (C) by appropriate means, which may include telemedicine, long-distance learning, or other such means.

''(2) CERTAIN ENTITIES.—The entities through which education and training activities described in paragraph (1) may be carried out include Public Health Preparedness Centers, the Public Health Service's Noble Training Center, the Emerging Infections Program, the Epidemic Intelligence Service, the Public Health Leadership Institute, multi-State, multi-institutional consortia, other appropriate educational entities, professional organizations and societies, private accrediting organizations, and other nonprofit institutions or entities meeting criteria established by the Secretary.

''(3) GRANTS AND CONTRACTS.—In carrying out paragraph (1), the Secretary may carry out activities directly and through the award of grants and contracts, and may enter into interagency cooperative agreements with other Federal agencies.

''(4) HEALTH-RELATED ASSISTANCE FOR EMERGENCY RESPONSE PERSONNEL TRAINING.—The Secretary, in consultation with the Attorney General and the Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, may provide technical assistance with respect to health-related aspects of emergency response personnel training carried out by the Department of Justice and the Federal Emergency Management Agency.''.

SEC. 106. GRANTS REGARDING SHORTAGES OF CERTAIN HEALTH PROFESSIONALS.

''SEC. 319H. GRANTS REGARDING TRAINING AND EDUCATION OF CERTAIN HEALTH PROFESSIONALS.

''(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may make awards of grants and cooperative agreements to appropriate public and nonprofit private health or educational entities, including health professions schools and programs as defined in section 799B, for the purpose of providing low-interest loans, partial scholarships, partial fellowships, revolving loan funds, or other cost-sharing forms of assistance for the education and training of individuals in any category of health professions for which there is a shortage that the Secretary determines should be alleviated in order to prepare for or respond effectively to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies.

''(b) AUTHORITY REGARDING NON-FEDERAL CONTRIBUTIONS.—The Secretary may require as a condition of an award under subsection (a) that a grantee under such subsection provide non-Federal contributions toward the purpose described in such subsection.

''(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—For the purpose of carrying out this section, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 2002 through 2006.''.

SEC. 107. EMERGENCY SYSTEM FOR ADVANCE REGISTRATION OF HEALTH PROFESSIONS VOLUNTEERS.

Part B of title III of the Public Health Service Act, as amended by section 106 of this Act, is amended by inserting after section 319H the following section:

''SEC. 319I. EMERGENCY SYSTEM FOR ADVANCE REGISTRATION OF HEALTH PROFESSIONS VOLUNTEERS.

''(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall, directly or through an award of a grant, contract, or cooperative agreement, establish and maintain a system for the advance registration of health professionals for the purpose of verifying the credentials, licenses, accreditations, and hospital privileges of such professionals when, during public health emergencies, the professionals volunteer to provide health services (referred to in this section as the 'verification system'). In carrying out the preceding sentence, the Secretary shall provide for an electronic database for the verification system.

''(b) CERTAIN CRITERIA.—The Secretary shall establish provisions regarding the promptness and efficiency of the system in collecting, storing, updating, and disseminating information on the credentials, licenses, accreditations, and hospital privileges of volunteers described in subsection (a).

''(c) OTHER ASSISTANCE.—The Secretary may make grants and provide technical assistance to States and other public or nonprofit private entities for activities relating to the verification system developed under subsection (a).

''(d) COORDINATION AMONG STATES.—The Secretary may encourage each State to provide legal authority during a public health emergency for health professionals authorized in another State to provide certain health services to provide such health services in the State.

''(e) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—This section may not be construed as authorizing the Secretary to issue requirements regarding the provision by the States of credentials, licenses, accreditations, or hospital privileges.

''(f) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—For the purpose of carrying out this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $2,000,000 for fiscal year 2002, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 2003 through 2006.''.

SEC. 108. WORKING GROUP.

Section 319F of the Public Health Service Act, as amended by section 104(a), is amended by striking subsection (a) and inserting the following:

''(a) WORKING GROUP ON BIOTERRORISM AND OTHER PUBLIC HEALTH EMERGENCIES.—

''(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, in coordination with the Secretary of Agriculture, the Attorney General, the Director of Central Intelligence, the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of Energy, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, the Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of Veterans Affairs, and with other similar Federal officials as determined appropriate, shall establish a working group on the prevention, preparedness, and response to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies. Such joint working group, or subcommittees thereof, shall meet periodically for the purpose of consultation on, assisting in, and making recommendations on—

''(A) responding to a bioterrorist attack, including the provision of appropriate safety and health training and protective measures for medical, emergency service, and other personnel responding to such attacks;

''(B) prioritizing countermeasures required to treat, prevent, or identify exposure to a biological agent or toxin pursuant to section 351A;

''(C) facilitation of the awarding of grants, contracts, or cooperative agreements for the development, manufacture, distribution, supply-chain management, and purchase of priority countermeasures;

''(D) research on pathogens likely to be used in a biological threat or attack on the civilian population;

''(E) development of shared standards for equipment to detect and to protect against biological agents and toxins;

''(F) assessment of the priorities for and enhancement of the preparedness of public health institutions, providers of medical care, and other emergency service personnel (including firefighters) to detect, diagnose, and respond (including mental health response) to a biological threat or attack;

''(G) in the recognition that medical and public health professionals are likely to provide much of the first response to such an attack, development and enhancement of the quality of joint planning and training programs that address the public health and medical consequences of a biological threat or attack on the civilian population between—

''(i) local firefighters, ambulance personnel, police and public security officers, or other emergency response personnel; and

''(ii) hospitals, primary care facilities, and public health agencies;

''(H) development of strategies for Federal, State, and local agencies to communicate information to the public regarding biological threats or attacks;

''(I) ensuring that the activities under this subsection address the health security needs of children and other vulnerable populations;

''(J) strategies for decontaminating facilities contaminated as a result of a biological attack, including appropriate protections for the safety of workers conducting such activities;

"(K) subject to compliance with other provisions of Federal law, clarifying the responsibilities among Federal officials for the investigation of suspicious outbreaks of disease and other potential public health emergencies, and for related revisions of the interagency plan known as the Federal response plan; and

"(L) in consultation with the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration and the U.S. Fire Administration, ways to enhance coordination among Federal agencies involved with State, local, and community based emergency medical services, including issuing a report that—

"(i) identifies needs of community-based emergency medical services; and

"(ii) identifies ways to streamline and enhance the process through which Federal agencies support community-based emergency medical services.

"(2) CONSULTATION WITH EXPERTS.—In carrying out subparagraphs (B) and (C) of paragraph (1), the working group under such paragraph shall consult with the pharmaceutical, biotechnology, and medical device industries, and other appropriate experts.

"(3) USE OF SUBCOMMITTEES REGARDING CONSULTATION REQUIREMENTS.—With respect to a requirement under law that the working group under paragraph (1) be consulted on a matter, the working group may designate an appropriate subcommittee of the working group to engage in the consultation.

"(4) DISCRETION IN EXERCISE OF DUTIES.—Determinations made by the working group under paragraph (1) with respect to carrying out duties under such paragraph are matters committed to agency discretion for purposes of section 701(a) of title 5, Unites States Code.

"(5) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—This subsection may not be construed as establishing new regulatory authority for any of the officials specified in paragraph (1), or as having any legal effect on any other provision of law, including the responsibilities and authorities of the Environmental Protection Agency.".

SEC. 109. ANTIMICROBIAL RESISTANCE.

Section 319E of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 247d–5) is amended—

(1) in subsection (b)—

(A) by striking "shall conduct and support" and inserting "shall directly or through awards of grants or cooperative agreements to public or private entities provide for the conduct of"; and

(B) by amending paragraph (4) to read as follows:

"(4) the sequencing of the genomes, or other DNA analysis, or other comparative analysis, of priority pathogens (as determined by the Director of the National Institutes of Health in consultation with the task force established under subsection (a)), in collaboration and coordination with the activities of the Department of Defense and the Joint Genome Institute of the Department of Energy; and";

(2) in subsection (e)(2), by inserting after "societies," the following: "schools or programs that train medical laboratory personnel,"; and

(3) in subsection (g), by striking "and such sums" and all that follows and inserting the following: "$25,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 2002 and 2003, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 2004 through 2006.".

SEC. 110. SUPPLIES AND SERVICES IN LIEU OF AWARD FUNDS.

Part B of title III of the Public Health Service Act, as amended by section 107 of this Act, is amended by inserting after section 319I the following section:

"SEC. 319J. SUPPLIES AND SERVICES IN LIEU OF AWARD FUNDS

"(a) IN GENERAL.—Upon the request of a recipient of an award under any of sections 319 through 319I or section 319K, the Secretary may, subject to subsection (b), provide supplies, equipment, and services for the purpose of aiding the recipient in carrying out the purposes for which the award is made and, for such purposes, may detail to the recipient any officer or employee of the Department of Health and Human Services.

"(b) CORRESPONDING REDUCTION IN PAYMENTS.—With respect to a request described in subsection (a), the Secretary shall reduce the amount of payments under the award involved by an amount equal to the costs of detailing personnel and the fair market value of any supplies, equipment, or services provided by the Secretary. The Secretary shall, for the payment of expenses incurred in complying with such request, expend the amounts withheld.".

SEC. 111. ADDITIONAL AMENDMENTS.

Part B of title III of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 243 et seq) is amended—

(1) in section 319A(a)(1), by striking "10 years" and inserting "five years";

(2) in section 319B(a), in the first sentence, by striking "10 years" and inserting "five years"; and

(3) in section 391F(e)(2), as redesignated by section 104(a)(2) of this Act—

(A) by striking "or" after "clinic,"; and

(B) by inserting before the period following: ", professional organization or society, school or program that trains medical laboratory personnel, private accrediting organization, or other nonprofit private institution or entity meeting criteria established by the Secretary".

SEC. 121. STRATEGIC NATIONAL STOCKPILE.

(a) STRATEGIC NATIONAL STOCKPILE.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services (referred to in this section as the "Secretary"), in coordination with the Secretary of Veterans Affairs, shall maintain a stockpile or stockpiles of drugs, vaccines and other biological products, medical devices, and other supplies in such numbers, types, and amounts as are determined by the Secretary to be appropriate and practicable, taking into account other available sources, to provide for the emergency health security of the United States, including the emergency health security of children and other vulnerable populations, in the event of a bioterrorist attack or other public health emergency.

(2) PROCEDURES.—The Secretary, in managing the stockpile under paragraph (1), shall—

(A) consult with the working group under section 319F(a) of the Public Health Service Act;

(B) ensure that adequate procedures are followed with respect to such stockpile for inventory management and accounting, and for the physical security of the stockpile;

(C) in consultation with Federal, State, and local officials, take into consideration the timing and location of special events;

(D) review and revise, as appropriate, the contents of the stockpile on a regular basis to ensure that emerging threats, advanced technologies, and new countermeasures are adequately considered;

(E) devise plans for the effective and timely supply-chain management of the stockpile, in consultation with appropriate Federal, State and local agencies, and the public and private health care infrastructure; and

(F) ensure the adequate physical security of the stockpile.

(b) SMALLPOX VACCINE DEVELOPMENT.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall award contracts, enter into cooperative agreements, or carry out such other activities as may reasonably be required in order to ensure that the stockpile under subsection (a) includes an amount of vaccine against smallpox as determined by the Secretary to be sufficient to meet the health security needs of the United States.

(2) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to limit the private distribution, purchase, or sale of vaccines from sources other than the stockpile described in subsection (a).

(c) DISCLOSURES.—No Federal agency shall disclose under section 552, United States Code, any information identifying the location at which materials in the stockpile under subsection (a) are stored.

(d) DEFINITION.—For purposes of subsection (a), the term "stockpile" includes—

(1) a physical accumulation (at one or more locations) of the supplies described in subsection (a); or

(2) a contractual agreement between the Secretary and a vendor or vendors under which such vendor or vendors agree to provide to the Secretary supplies described in subsection (a).

(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

(1) STRATEGIC NATIONAL STOCKPILE.—For the purpose of carrying out subsection (a), there are authorized to be appropriated $640,000,000 for fiscal year 2002, and such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2006.

(2) SMALLPOX VACCINE DEVELOPMENT.—For the purpose of carrying out subsection (b), there are authorized to be appropriated $509,000,000 for fiscal year 2002, and such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2006.

SEC. 122. ACCELERATED APPROVAL OF PRIORITY COUNTERMEASURES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services may designate a priority countermeasure as a fast-track product pursuant to section 506 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 356) or as a device granted review priority pursuant to section 515(d)(5) of such Act (21 U.S.C. 360e(d)(5)). Such a designation may be made prior to the submission of—

(1) a request for designation by the sponsor or applicant; or

(2) an application for the investigation of the drug under section 505(i) of such Act or section 351(a)(3) of the Public Health Service Act.

Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prohibit a sponsor or applicant from declining such a designation.

(b) USE OF ANIMAL TRIALS.—A drug for which approval is sought under section 505(b) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act or section 351 of the Public Health Service Act on the basis of evidence of effectiveness that is derived from animal studies pursuant to section 123 may be designated as a fast track product for purposes of this section.

(c) PRIORITY REVIEW OF DRUGS AND BIOLOGICAL PRODUCTS.—A priority countermeasure that is a drug or biological product shall be considered a priority drug or biological product for purposes of performance goals for priority drugs or biological products agreed to by the Commissioner of Food and Drugs.

(d) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this title:

(1) The term "priority countermeasure" has the meaning given such term in section 319F(h)(4) of the Public Health Service Act.

(2) The term "priority drugs or biological products" means a drug or biological product that is the subject of a drug or biologics application referred to in section 101(4) of the Food and Drug Administration Modernization Act of 1997.

SEC. 123. ISSUANCE OF RULE ON ANIMAL TRIALS.

Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall complete the process of rulemaking that was commenced under authority of section 505 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act and section 351 of the Public Health Service Act with the issuance of the proposed rule entitled "New Drug and Biological Drug Products; Evidence Needed to Demonstrate Efficacy of New Drugs for Use Against Lethal or Permanently Disabling Toxic Substances When Efficacy Studies in Humans Ethically Cannot be Conducted" published in the Federal Register on October 5, 1999 (64 Fed. Reg. 53960), and shall promulgate a final rule.

SEC. 124. SECURITY FOR COUNTERMEASURE DEVELOPMENT AND PRODUCTION.

Part B of title III of the Public Health Service Act, as amended by section 110 of this Act, is amended by inserting after section 319J the following section:

"SEC. 319K. SECURITY FOR COUNTERMEASURE DEVELOPMENT AND PRODUCTION.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, in consultation with the Attorney General and the Secretary of Defense, may provide technical or other assistance to provide security to persons or facilities that conduct development, production, distribution, or storage of priority countermeasures (as defined in section 319F(h)(4)).

"(b) GUIDELINES.—The Secretary may develop guidelines to enable entities eligible to receive assistance under subsection (a) to secure their facilities against potential terrorist attack.".

SEC. 125. ACCELERATED COUNTERMEASURE RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT.

Section 319F(h) of the Public Health Service Act, as redesignated by section 104(a)(2) of this Act, is amended to read as follows:

"(h) ACCELERATED RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT ON PRIORITY PATHOGENS AND COUNTERMEASURES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—With respect to pathogens of potential use in a bioterrorist attack, and other agents that may cause a public health emergency, the Secretary, taking into consideration any recommendations of the working group under subsection (a), shall conduct, and award grants, contracts, or cooperative agreements for, research, investigations, experiments, demonstrations, and studies in the health sciences relating to—

"(A) the epidemiology and pathogenesis of such pathogens;

"(B) the sequencing of the genomes, or other DNA analysis, or other comparative analysis, of priority pathogens (as determined by the Director of the National Institutes of Health in consultation with the working group established in subsection (a)), in collaboration and coordination with the activities of the Department of Defense and the Joint Genome Institute of the Department of Energy;

"(C) the development of priority countermeasures; and

"(D) other relevant areas of research; with consideration given to the needs of children and other vulnerable populations.

"(2) PRIORITY.—The Secretary shall give priority under this section to the funding of research and other studies related to priority countermeasures.

"(3) ROLE OF DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS.—In carrying out paragraph (1), the Secretary shall consider using the biomedical research and development capabilities of the Department of Veterans Affairs, in conjunction with that Department's affiliations with health-professions universities. When advantageous to the Government in furtherance of the purposes of such paragraph, the Secretary may enter into cooperative agreements with the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to achieve such purposes.

"(4) PRIORITY COUNTERMEASURES.—For purposes of this section, the term 'priority countermeasure' means a drug, biological product, device, vaccine, vaccine adjuvant, antiviral, or diagnostic test that the Secretary determines to be—

"(A) a priority to treat, identify, or prevent infection by a biological agent or toxin listed pursuant to section 351A(a)(1), or harm from any other agent that may cause a public health emergency; or

"(B) a priority to diagnose conditions that may result in adverse health consequences or death and may be caused by the administering of a drug, biological product, device, vaccine, vaccine adjuvant, antiviral, or diagnostic test that is a priority under subparagraph (A).".

SEC. 126. EVALUATION OF NEW AND EMERGING TECHNOLOGIES REGARDING BIOTERRORIST ATTACK AND OTHER PUBLIC HEALTH EMERGENCIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services (referred to in this section as the "Secretary") shall promptly carry out a program to periodically evaluate new and emerging technologies that, in the determination of the Secretary, are designed to improve or enhance the ability of public health or safety officials to conduct public health surveillance activities relating to a bioterrorist attack or other public health emergency.

(b) CERTAIN ACTIVITIES.—In carrying out this subsection, the Secretary shall, to the extent practicable—

(1) survey existing technology programs funded by the Federal Government for potentially useful technologies;

(2) promptly issue a request, as necessary, for information from non-Federal public and private entities for ongoing activities in this area; and

(3) evaluate technologies identified under paragraphs (1) and (2) pursuant to subsection (c).

(c) CONSULTATION AND EVALUATION.—In carrying out subsection (b)(3), the Secretary shall consult with the working group under section 319F(a) of the Public Health Service Act, as well as other appropriate public, nonprofit, and private entities, to develop criteria for the evaluation of such technologies and to conduct such evaluations.

(d) REPORT.—Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, and periodically thereafter, the Secretary shall submit to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions of the Senate, a report on the activities under this section.

SEC. 127. POTASSIUM IODIDE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Through the national stockpile under section 121, the President, subject to subsections (b) and (c), shall make available to State and local governments potassium iodide tablets for stockpiling and for distribution as appropriate to public facilities, such as schools and hospitals, in quantities sufficient to provide adequate protection for the population within 20 miles of a nuclear power plant.

(b) STATE AND LOCAL PLANS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (a) applies with respect to a State or local government, subject to paragraph (2), if the government involved meets the following conditions:

(A) Such government submits to the President a plan for the stockpiling of potassium iodide tablets, and for the distribution and utilization of potassium iodide tablets in the event of a nuclear incident.

(B) The plan is accompanied by certifications by such government that the government has not already received sufficient quantities of potassium iodide tablets from the Federal Government.

(2) LOCAL GOVERNMENTS.—Subsection (a) applies with respect to a local government only if, in addition to the conditions described in paragraph (1), the following conditions are met:

(A) The State in which the locality involved is located—

(i) does not have a plan described in paragraph (1)(A); or

(ii) has a plan described in such paragraph, but the plan does not address populations at a distance greater than 10 miles from the nuclear power plant involved.

(B) The local government has petitioned the State to modify the State plan to address such populations, not exceeding 20 miles from such plant, and 60 days have elapsed without the State modifying the State plan to address populations at the full distance sought by the local government through the petition.

(C) The local government has submitted its local plan under paragraph (1)(A) to the State, and the State has approved the plan and certified that the plan is not inconsistent with the State emergency plan.

(c) GUIDELINES.—Not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the President, in consultation with individuals representing appropriate Federal, State, and local agencies, shall establish guidelines for the stockpiling of potassium iodide tablets, and for the distribution and utilization of potassium iodide tablets in the event of a nuclear incident. Such tablets may not be made available under subsection (a) until such guidelines have been established.

(d) INFORMATION.—The President shall carry out activities to inform State and local governments of the program under this section.

(1) PRESIDENT.—Not later than six months after the date on which the guidelines under subsection (c) are issued, the President shall submit to the Congress a report—

(A) on whether potassium iodide tablets have been made available under subsection (a) or other Federal, State, or local programs, and the extent to which State and local governments have established stockpiles of such tablets; and

(B) the measures taken by the President to implement this section.

(2) NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The President shall request the National Academy of Sciences to enter into an agreement with the President under which the Academy conducts a study to determine what is the most effective and safe way to distribute and administer potassium iodide tablets on a mass scale. If the Academy declines to conduct the study, the President shall enter into an agreement with another appropriate public or nonprofit private entity to conduct the study.

(B) REPORT.—The President shall ensure that, not later than six months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the study required in subparagraph (A) is completed and a report describing the findings made in the study is submitted to the Congress.

(f) APPLICABILITY.—Subsections (a) and (d) cease to apply as requirements if the President determines that there is an alternative and more effective prophylaxis or preventive measures for adverse thyroid conditions that may result from the release of radionuclides from nuclear power plants.

Subtitle C—Improving State, Local, and Hospital Preparedness for and Response to Bioterrorism and Other Public Health Emergencies

SEC. 131. GRANTS TO IMPROVE STATE, LOCAL, AND HOSPITAL PREPAREDNESS FOR AND RESPONSE TO BIOTERRORISM AND OTHER PUBLIC HEALTH EMERGENCIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part B of title III of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 243 et seq.) is amended by inserting after section 319C the following sections:

"SEC. 319C-1. GRANTS TO IMPROVE STATE, LOCAL, AND HOSPITAL PREPAREDNESS FOR AND RESPONSE TO BIOTERRORISM AND OTHER PUBLIC HEALTH EMERGENCIES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—To enhance the security of the United States with respect to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies, the Secretary shall make awards of grants or cooperative agreements to eligible entities to enable such entities to conduct the activities described in subsection (d).

"(b) Eligible Entities.—

"(1) In general.—To be eligible to receive an award under subsection (a), an entity shall—

"(A)(i) be a State; and

"(ii) prepare and submit to the Secretary an application at such time, and in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may require, including an assurance that the State—

"(I) has completed an evaluation under section 319B(a), or an evaluation that is substantially equivalent to an evaluation described in such section (as determined by the Secretary);

"(II) has prepared, or will (within 60 days of receiving an award under this section) prepare, a Bioterrorism and Other Public Health Emergency Preparedness and Response Plan in accordance with subsection (c);

"(III) has established a means by which to obtain public comment and input on the plan prepared under subclause (II), and on the implementation of such plan, that shall include an advisory committee or other similar mechanism for obtaining comment from the public at large as well as from other State and local stakeholders;

"(IV) will use amounts received under the award in accordance with the plan prepared under subclause (II), including making expenditures to carry out the strategy contained in the plan; and

"(V) with respect to the plan prepared under subclause (II), will establish reasonable criteria to evaluate the effective performance of entities that receive funds under the award and include relevant benchmarks in the plan; or

"(B)(i) be a political subdivision of a State or a consortium of 2 or more such subdivisions; and

"(ii) prepare and submit to the Secretary an application at such time, and in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may require.

"(2) Coordination with statewide plans.—An award under subsection (a) to an eligible entity described in paragraph (1)(B) may not be made unless the application of such entity is in coordination with, and consistent with, applicable Statewide plans described in subsection (d)(1).

"(c) Bioterrorism and Other Public Health Emergency Preparedness and Response Plan.—Not later than 60 days after receiving amounts under an award under subsection (a), an eligible entity described in subsection (b)(1)(A) shall prepare and submit to the Secretary a Bioterrorism and Other Public Health Emergency Preparedness and Response Plan. Recognizing the assessment of public health needs conducted under section 319B, such plan shall include a description of activities to be carried out by the entity to address the needs identified in such assessment (or an equivalent assessment).

"(d) Use of Funds.—An award under subsection (a) may be expended for activities that may include the following and similar activities:

"(1) To develop Statewide plans (including the development of the Bioterrorism and Other Public Health Emergency Preparedness and Response Plan required under subsection (c)), and community-wide plans for responding to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies that are coordinated with the capacities of applicable national, State, and local health agencies and health care providers, including poison control centers.

"(2) To address deficiencies identified in the assessment conducted under section 319B.

"(3) To purchase or upgrade equipment (including stationary or mobile communications equipment), supplies, pharmaceuticals or other priority countermeasures to enhance preparedness for and response to bioterrorism or other public health emergencies, consistent with the plan described in subsection (c).

"(4) To conduct exercises to test the capability and timeliness of public health emergency response activities.

"(5) To develop and implement the trauma care and burn center care components of the State plans for the provision of emergency medical services.

"(6) To improve training or workforce development to enhance public health laboratories.

"(7) To train public health and health care personnel to enhance the ability of such personnel—

"(A) to detect, provide accurate identification of, and recognize the symptoms and epidemiological characteristics of exposure to a biological agent that may cause a public health emergency; and

"(B) to provide treatment to individuals who are exposed to such an agent.

"(8) To develop, enhance, coordinate, or improve participation in systems by which disease detection and information about biological attacks and other public health emergencies can be rapidly communicated among national, State, and local health agencies, emergency response personnel, and health care providers and facilities to detect and respond to a bioterrorist attack or other public health emergency, including activities to improve information technology and communications equipment available to health care and public health officials for use in responding to a biological threat or attack or other public health emergency.

"(9) To enhance communication to the public of information on bioterrorism and other public health emergencies, including through the use of 2-1-1 call centers.

"(10) To address the health security needs of children and other vulnerable populations with respect to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies.

"(11) To provide training and develop, enhance, coordinate, or improve methods to enhance the safety of workers and workplaces in the event of bioterrorism.

"(12) To prepare and plan for contamination prevention efforts related to public health that may be implemented in the event of a bioterrorist attack, including training and planning to protect the health and safety of workers conducting the activities described in this paragraph.

"(13) To prepare a plan for triage and transport management in the event of bioterrorism or other public health emergencies.

"(14) To enhance the training of health care professionals to recognize and treat the mental health consequences of bioterrorism or other public health emergencies.

"(15) To enhance the training of health care professionals to assist in providing appropriate health care for large numbers of individuals exposed to a bioweapon.

"(16) To enhance training and planning to protect the health and safety of personnel, including health care professionals, involved in responding to a biological attack.

"(17) To improve surveillance, detection, and response activities to prepare for emergency response activities including biological threats or attacks, including training personnel in these and other necessary functions and including early warning and surveillance networks that use advanced information technology to provide early detection of biological threats or attacks.

"(18) To develop, enhance, and coordinate or improve the ability of existing telemedicine programs to provide health care information and advice as part of the emergency public health response to bioterrorism or other public health emergencies.

Nothing in this subsection may be construed as establishing new regulatory authority or as modifying any existing regulatory authority.

"(e) Priorities in Use of Grants.—

"(1) In general.—

"(A) Priorities.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the Secretary shall, in carrying out the activities described in this section, address the following hazards in the following priority:

"(i) Bioterrorism or acute outbreaks of infectious diseases.

"(ii) Other public health threats and emergencies.

"(B) Determination of the secretary.—In the case of the hazard involved, the degree of priority that would apply to the hazard based on the categories specified in clauses (i) and (ii) of subparagraph (A) may be modified by the Secretary if the following conditions are met:

"(i) The Secretary determines that the modification is appropriate on the basis of the following factors:

"(I) The extent to which eligible entities are adequately prepared for responding to hazards within the category specified in clause (i) of subparagraph (A).

"(II) There has been a significant change in the assessment of risks to the public health posed by hazards within the category specified in clause (ii) of such subparagraph.

"(ii) Prior to modifying the priority, the Secretary notifies the appropriate committees of the Congress of the determination of the Secretary under clause (i) of this subparagraph.

"(2) Areas of emphasis within categories.—The Secretary shall determine areas of emphasis within the category of hazards specified in clause (i) of paragraph (1)(A), and shall determine areas of emphasis within the category of hazards specified in clause (ii) of such paragraph, based on an assessment of the risk and likely consequences of such hazards and on an evaluation of Federal, State, and local needs, and may also take into account the extent to which receiving an award under subsection (a) will develop capacities that can be used for public health emergencies of varying types.

"(f) Certain Activities.—In administering activities under section 319C(c)(4) or similar activities, the Secretary shall, where appropriate, give priority to activities that include State or local government financial commitments, that seek to incorporate multiple public health and safety services or diagnostic databases into an integrated public health entity, and that cover geographic areas lacking advanced diagnostic and laboratory capabilities.

"(g) Coordination with Local Medical Response System.—An eligible entity and local Metropolitan Medical Response Systems shall, to the extent practicable, ensure that activities carried out under an award under subsection (a) are coordinated with activities that are carried out by local Metropolitan Medical Response Systems.

"(h) Coordination of Federal Activities.—In making awards under subsection (a), the Secretary shall—

"(1) annually notify the Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, the Director of the Office of Justice Programs, and the Director of the National Domestic Preparedness Office, as to the amount, activities covered under, and status of such awards; and

"(2) coordinate such awards with other activities conducted or supported by the Secretary to enhance preparedness for bioterrorism and other public health emergencies.

"(i) Definition.—For purposes of this section, the term 'eligible entity' means an entity that meets the conditions described in subparagraph (A) or (B) of subsection (b)(1).

"(j) FUNDING.—

"(1) AUTHORIZATIONS OF APPROPRIATIONS.—

"(A) FISCAL YEAR 2003.—

"(i) AUTHORIZATIONS.—For the purpose of carrying out this section, there is authorized to be appropriated $1,600,000,000 for fiscal year 2003, of which—

"(I) $1,080,000,000 is authorized to be appropriated for awards pursuant to paragraph (3) (subject to the authority of the Secretary to make awards pursuant to paragraphs (4) and (5)); and

"(II) $520,000,000 is authorized to be appropriated—

"(aa) for awards under subsection (a) to States, notwitstanding the eligibility conditions under subsection (b), for the purpose of enhancing the preparedness of hospitals (including children's hospitals), clinics, health centers, and primary care facilities for bioterrorism and other public health emergencies; and

"(bb) for Federal, State, and local planning and administrative activities related to such purpose.

"(ii) CONTINGENT ADDITIONAL AUTHORIZATION.—If a significant change in circumstances warrants an increase in the amount authorized to be appropriated under clause (i) for fiscal year 2003, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for such year for carrying out this section, in addition to the amount authorized in clause (i).

"(B) OTHER FISCAL YEARS.—For the purpose of carrying out this section, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 2004 through 2006.

"(2) SUPPLEMENT NOT SUPPLANT.—Amounts appropriated under paragraph (1) shall be used to supplement and not supplant other State and local public funds provided for activities under this section.

"(3) STATE BIOTERRORISM AND OTHER PUBLIC HEALTH EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS AND RESPONSE BLOCK GRANT FOR FISCAL YEAR 2003.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For fiscal year 2003, the Secretary shall, in an amount determined in accordance with subparagraphs (B) through (D), make an award under subsection (a) to each State, notwithstanding the eligibility conditions described in subsection (b), that submits to the Secretary an application for the award that meets the criteria of the Secretary for the receipt of such an award and that meets other implementation conditions established by the Secretary for such awards. No other awards may be made under subsection (a) for such fiscal year, except as provided in paragraph (1)(A)(i)(II) and paragraphs (4) and (5).

"(B) BASE AMOUNT.—In determining the amount of an award pursuant to subparagraph (A) for a State, the Secretary shall first determine an amount the Secretary considers appropriate for the State (referred to in this paragraph as the 'base amount'), except that such amount may not be greater than the minimum amount determined under subparagraph (D).

"(C) INCREASE ON BASIS OF POPULATION.—After determining the base amount for a State under subparagraph (B), the Secretary shall increase the base amount by an amount equal to the product of—

"(i) the amount appropriated under paragraph (1)(A)(i)(I) for the fiscal year, less an amount equal to the sum of all base amounts determined for the States under subparagraph (B), and less the amount, if any, reserved by the Secretary under paragraphs (4) and (5); and

"(ii) subject to paragraph (4)(C), the percentage constituted by the ratio of an amount equal to the population of the State over an amount equal to the total population of the States (as indicated by the most recent data collected by the Bureau of the Census).

"(D) MINIMUM AMOUNT.—Subject to the amount appropriated under paragraph (1)(A)(i)(I), an award pursuant to subparagraph (A) for a State shall be the greater of the base amount as increased under subparagraph (C), or the minimum amount under this subparagraph. The minimum amount under this subparagraph is—

"(i) in the case of each of the several States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, an amount equal to the lesser of—

"(I) $5,000,000; or

"(II) if the amount appropriated under paragraph (1)(A)(i)(I) is less than $667,000,000, an amount equal to 0.75 percent of the amount appropriated under such paragraph, less the amount, if any, reserved by the Secretary under paragraphs (4) and (5); or

"(ii) in the case of each of American Samoa, Guam, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Virgin Islands, an amount determined by the Secretary to be appropriate, except that such amount may not exceed the amount determined under clause (i).

"(4) CERTAIN POLITICAL SUBDIVISIONS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For fiscal year 2003, the Secretary may, before making awards pursuant to paragraph (3) for such year, reserve from the amount appropriated under paragraph (1)(A)(i)(I) for the year an amount determined necessary by the Secretary to make awards under subsection (a) to political subdivisions that have a substantial number of residents, have a substantial local infrastructure for responding to public health emergencies, and face a high degree of risk from bioterrorist attacks or other public health emergencies. Not more than three political subdivisions may receive awards pursuant to this subparagraph.

"(B) COORDINATION WITH STATEWIDE PLANS.—An award pursuant to subparagraph (A) may not be made unless the application of the political subdivision involved is in coordination with, and consistent with, applicable Statewide plans described in subsection (c)(1).

"(C) RELATIONSHIP TO FORMULA GRANTS.—In the case of a State that will receive an award pursuant to paragraph (3), and in which there is located a political subdivision that will receive an award pursuant to subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall, in determining the amount under paragraph (3)(B) for the State, subtract from the population of the State an amount equal to the population of such political subdivision.

"(D) CONTINUITY OF FUNDING.—In determining whether to make an award pursuant to subparagraph (A) to a political subdivision, the Secretary may consider, as a factor indicating that the award should be made, that the political subdivision received public health funding from the Secretary for fiscal year 2002.

"(5) SIGNIFICANT UNMET NEEDS; DEGREE OF RISK.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For fiscal year 2003, the Secretary may, before making awards pursuant to paragraph (3) for such year, reserve from the amount appropriated under paragraph (1)(A)(i)(I) for the year an amount determined necessary by the Secretary to make awards under subsection (a) to eligible entities that—"(i) have a significant need for funds to build capacity to identify, detect, monitor, and respond to a bioterrorist or other threat to the public health, which need will not be met by awards pursuant to paragraph (3); and

"(ii) face a particularly high degree of risk of such a threat.

"(B) RECIPIENTS OF GRANTS.—Awards pursuant to subparagraph (A) may be supplemental awards to States that receive awards pursuant to paragraph (3), or may be awards to eligible entities described in subsection (b)(1)(B) within such States.

"(C) FINDING WITH RESPECT TO DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.—The Secretary shall consider the District of Columbia to have a significant unmet need for purposes of subparagraph (A), and to face a particularly high degree of risk for such purposes, on the basis of the concentration of entities of national significance located within the District.

"(6) FUNDING OF LOCAL ENTITIES.—For fiscal year 2003, the Secretary shall in making awards under this section ensure that appropriate portions of such awards are made available to political subdivisions, local departments of public health, hospitals (including children's hospitals), clinics, health centers, or primary care facilities, or consortia of such entities.

"SEC. 319C–2. PARTNERSHIPS FOR COMMUNITY AND HOSPITAL PREPAREDNESS.

"(a) GRANTS.—The Secretary shall make awards of grants or cooperative agreements to eligible entities to enable such entities to improve community and hospital preparedness for bioterrorism and other public health emergencies.

"(b) ELIGIBILITY.—To be eligible for an award under subsection (a), an entity shall—

"(1) be a partnership consisting of—

"(A) one or more hospitals (including children's hospitals), clinics, health centers, or primary care facilities; and

"(B)(i) one or more political subdivisions of States;

"(ii) one or more States; or

"(iii) one or more States and one or more political subdivisions of States; and

"(2) prepare, in consultation with the Chief Executive Officer of the State, District, or territory in which the hospital, clinic, health center, or primary care facility described in paragraph (1)(A) is located, and submit to the Secretary, an application at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may require.

"(c) REGIONAL COORDINATION.—In making awards under subsection (a), the Secretary shall give preference to eligible entities that submit applications that, in the determination of the Secretary, will—

"(1) enhance coordination—

"(A) among the entities described in subsection (b)(1)(A); and

"(B) between such entities and the entities described in subsection (b)(1)(B); and

"(2) serve the needs of a defined geographic area.

"(d) CONSISTENCY OF PLANNED ACTIVITIES.—An entity described in subsection (b)(1) shall utilize amounts received under an award under subsection (a) in a manner that is coordinated and consistent, as determined by the Secretary, with an applicable State Bioterrorism and Other Public Health Emergency Preparedness and Response Plan.

"(e) USE OF FUNDS.—An award under subsection (a) may be expended for activities that may include the following and similar activities—

"(1) planning and administration for such award;

"(2) preparing a plan for triage and transport management in the event of bioterrorism or other public health emergencies;

"(3) enhancing the training of health care professionals to improve the ability of such professionals to recognize the symptoms of exposure to a potential bioweapon, to make appropriate diagnosis, and to provide treatment to those individuals so exposed;

"(4) enhancing the training of health care professionals to recognize and treat the mental health consequences of bioterrorism or other public health emergencies;

"(5) enhancing the training of health care professionals to assist in providing appropriate health care for large numbers of individuals exposed to a bioweapon;

"(6) enhancing training and planning to protect the health and safety of personnel involved in responding to a biological attack;

"(7) developing and implementing the trauma care and burn center care components of the State plans for the provision of emergency medical services; or

"(8) conducting such activities as are described in section 319C–1(d) that are appropriate for hospitals (including children's hospitals), clinics, health centers, or primary care facilities.

"(f) LIMITATION ON AWARDS.—A political subdivision of a State shall not participate in more than one partnership described in subsection (b)(1).

"(g) PRIORITIES IN USE OF GRANTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—

"(A) PRIORITIES.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the Secretary shall, in carrying out the activities described in this section, address the following hazards in the following priority:

"(i) Bioterrorism or acute outbreaks of infectious diseases.

"(ii) Other public health threats and emergencies.

"(B) DETERMINATION OF THE SECRETARY.—In the case of the hazard involved, the degree of priority that would apply to the hazard based on the categories specified in clauses (i) and (ii) of subparagraph (A) may be modified by the Secretary if the following conditions are met:

"(i) The Secretary determines that the modification is appropriate on the basis of the following factors:

"(I) The extent to which eligible entities are adequately prepared for responding to hazards within the category specified in clause (i) of subparagraph (A).

"(II) There has been a significant change in the assessment of risks to the public health posed by hazards within the category specified in clause (ii) of such subparagraph.

"(ii) Prior to modifying the priority, the Secretary notifies the appropriate committees of the Congress of the determination of the Secretary under clause (i) of this subparagraph.

"(2) AREAS OF EMPHASIS WITHIN CATEGORIES.—The Secretary shall determine areas of emphasis within the category of hazards specified in clause (i) of paragraph (1)(A), and shall determine areas of emphasis within the category of hazards specified in clause (ii) of such paragraph, based on an assessment of the risk and likely consequences of such hazards and on an evaluation of Federal, State, and local needs, and may also take into account the extent to which receiving an award under subsection (a) will develop capacities that can be used for public health emergencies of varying types.

"(h) COORDINATION WITH LOCAL MEDICAL RESPONSE SYSTEM.—An eligible entity and local Metropolitan Medical Response Systems shall, to the extent practicable, ensure that activities carried out under an award under subsection (a) are coordinated with activities that are carried out by local Metropolitan Medical Response Systems.

"(i) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—For the purpose of carrying out this section, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal years 2004 through 2006.".

(b) CERTAIN GRANTS.—Section 319C of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 247d–3) is amended by striking subsection (f).

Subtitle D—Emergency Authorities; Additional Provisions

SEC. 141. REPORTING DEADLINES.

Section 319 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 247d) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(d) DATA SUBMITTAL AND REPORTING DEADLINES.—In any case in which the Secretary determines that, wholly or partially as a result of a public health emergency that has been determined pursuant to subsection (a), individuals or public or private entities are unable to comply with deadlines for the submission to the Secretary of data or reports required under any law administered by the Secretary, the Secretary may, notwithstanding any other provision of law, grant such extensions of such deadlines as the circumstances reasonably require, and may waive, wholly or partially, any sanctions otherwise applicable to such failure to comply. Before or promptly after granting such an extension or waiver, the Secretary shall notify the Congress of such action and publish in the Federal Register a notice of the extension or waiver.".

SEC. 142. STREAMLINING AND CLARIFYING COMMUNICABLE DISEASE QUARANTINE PROVISIONS.

(a) ELIMINATION OF PREREQUISITE FOR NATIONAL ADVISORY HEALTH COUNCIL RECOMMENDATION BEFORE ISSUING QUARANTINE RULES.—

(1) EXECUTIVE ORDERS SPECIFYING DISEASES SUBJECT TO INDIVIDUAL DETENTIONS.—Section 361(b) of the Public Health Act (42 U.S.C. 264(b)) is amended by striking "Executive orders of the President upon the recommendation of the National Advisory Health Council and the Surgeon General" and inserting "Executive orders of the President upon the recommendation of the Secretary, in consultation with the Surgeon General,".

(2) REGULATIONS PROVIDING FOR APPREHENSION OF INDIVIDUALS.—Section 361(d) of the Public Health Act (42 U.S.C. 264(d)) is amended by striking "On recommendation of the National Advisory Health Council, regulations" and inserting "Regulations".

(3) REGULATIONS PROVIDING FOR APPREHENSION OF INDIVIDUALS IN WARTIME.—Section 363 of the Public Health Act (42 U.S.C. 266) is amended by striking "the Surgeon General, on recommendation of the National Advisory Health Council," and inserting "the Secretary, in consultation with the Surgeon General,".

(b) APPREHENSION AUTHORITY TO APPLY IN CASES OF EXPOSURE TO DISEASE.—

(1) REGULATIONS PROVIDING FOR APPREHENSION OF INDIVIDUALS.—Section 361(d) of the Public Health Act (42 U.S.C. 264(d)), as amended by subsection (a)(2), is further amended—

(A) by striking "(1)" and "(2)" and inserting "(A)" and "(B)", respectively;

(B) by striking "(d)" and inserting "(d)(1)";

(C) in paragraph (1) (as designated by subparagraph (B) of this paragraph), in the first sentence, by striking "in a communicable stage" each place such term appears and inserting "in a qualifying stage"; and

(D) by adding at the end the following paragraph:

"(2) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'qualifying stage', with respect to a communicable disease, means that such disease—

"(A) is in a communicable stage; or

"(B) is in a precommunicable stage, if the disease would be likely to cause a public health emergency if transmitted to other individuals.".

(2) REGULATIONS PROVIDING FOR APPREHENSION OF INDIVIDUALS IN WARTIME.—Section 363 of the Public Health Act (42 U.S.C. 266), as amended by subsection (a)(3), is further amended by striking "in a communicable stage"

(c) STATE AUTHORITY.—Section 361 of the Public Health Act (42 U.S.C. 264) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(e) Nothing in this section or section 363, or the regulations promulgated under such sections, may be construed as superseding any provision under State law (including regulations and including provisions established by political subdivisions of States), except to the extent that such a provision conflicts with an exercise of Federal authority under this section or section 363.".

SEC. 143. EMERGENCY WAIVER OF MEDICARE, MEDICAID, AND SCHIP REQUIREMENTS.

(a) WAIVER AUTHORITY.—Title XI of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1301 et seq.) is amended by inserting after section 1134 the following new section:

"AUTHORITY TO WAIVE REQUIREMENTS DURING NATIONAL EMERGENCIES

"SEC. 1135. (a) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this section is to enable the Secretary to ensure to the maximum extent feasible, in any emergency area and during an emergency period (as defined in subsection (g)(1))—

"(1) that sufficient health care items and services are available to meet the needs of individuals in such area enrolled in the programs under titles XVIII, XIX, and XXI; and

"(2) that health care providers (as defined in subsection (g)(2)) that furnish such items and services in good faith, but that are unable to comply with one or more requirements described in subsection (b), may be reimbursed for such items and services and exempted from sanctions for such noncompliance, absent any determination of fraud or abuse.

"(b) SECRETARIAL AUTHORITY.—To the extent necessary to accomplish the purpose specified in subsection (a), the Secretary is authorized, subject to the provisions of this section, to temporarily waive or modify the application of, with respect to health care items and services furnished by a health care provider (or classes of health care providers) in any emergency area (or portion of such an area) during any portion of an emergency period, the requirements of titles XVIII, XIX, or XXI, or any regulation thereunder (and the requirements of this title other than this section, and regulations thereunder, insofar as they relate to such titles), pertaining to—

"(1)(A) conditions of participation or other certification requirements for an individual health care provider or types of providers,

"(B) program participation and similar requirements for an individual health care provider or types of providers, and

"(C) pre-approval requirements;

"(2) requirements that physicians and other health care professionals be licensed in the State in which they provide such services, if they have equivalent licensing in another State and are not affirmatively excluded from practice in that State or in any State a part of which is included in the emergency area;

"(3) sanctions under section 1867 (relating to examination and treatment for emergency medical conditions and women in labor) for a transfer of an individual who has not been stabilized in violation of subsection (c) of such section if the transfer arises out of the circumstances of the emergency;

"(4) sanctions under section 1877(g) (relating to limitations on physician referral);

"(5) deadlines and timetables for performance of required activities, except that such deadlines and timetables may only be modified, not waived; and

"(6) limitations on payments under section 1851(i) for health care items and services furnished to individuals enrolled in a Medicare+Choice plan by health care professionals or facilities not included under such plan.

Insofar as the Secretary exercises authority under paragraph (6) with respect to individuals enrolled in a Medicare+Choice plan, to the extent possible given the circumstances, the Secretary shall reconcile payments made on behalf of such enrollees to ensure that the enrollees do not pay more than would be required had they received services from providers within the network of the plan and may reconcile payments to the organization offering the plan to ensure that such organization pays for services for which payment is included in the capitation payment it receives under part C of title XVIII.

"(c) Authority for Retroactive Waiver.—A waiver or modification of requirements pursuant to this section may, at the Secretary's discretion, be made retroactive to the beginning of the emergency period or any subsequent date in such period specified by the Secretary.

"(d) Certification to Congress.—The Secretary shall provide a certification and advance written notice to the Congress at least two days before exercising the authority under this section with respect to an emergency area. Such a certification and notice shall include—

"(1) a description of—

"(A) the specific provisions that will be waived or modified;

"(B) the health care providers to whom the waiver or modification will apply;

"(C) the geographic area in which the waiver or modification will apply; and

"(D) the period of time for which the waiver or modification will be in effect; and

"(2) a certification that the waiver or modification is necessary to carry out the purpose specified in subsection (a).

"(e) Duration of Waiver.—

"(1) In general.—A waiver or modification of requirements pursuant to this section terminates upon—

"(A) the termination of the applicable declaration of emergency or disaster described in subsection (g)(1)(A);

"(B) the termination of the applicable declaration of public health emergency described in subsection (g)(1)(B); or

"(C) subject to paragraph (2), the termination of a period of 60 days from the date the waiver or modification is first published (or, if applicable, the date of extension of the waiver or modification under paragraph (2)).

"(2) Extension of 60-day periods.—The Secretary may, by notice, provide for an extension of a 60-day period described in paragraph (1)(C) (or an additional period provided under this paragraph) for additional period or periods (not to exceed, except as subsequently provided under this paragraph, 60 days each), but any such extension shall not affect or prevent the termination of a waiver or modification under subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (1).

"(f) Report to Congress.—Within one year after the end of the emergency period in an emergency area in which the Secretary exercised the authority provided under this section, the Secretary shall report to the Congress regarding the approaches used to accomplish the purposes described in subsection (a), including an evaluation of such approaches and recommendations for improved approaches should the need for such emergency authority arise in the future.

"(g) Definitions.—For purposes of this section:

"(1) Emergency area; emergency period.—An 'emergency area' is a geographical area in which, and an 'emergency period' is the period during which, there exists—

"(A) an emergency or disaster declared by the President pursuant to the National Emergencies Act or the Robert T. Stafford Disaster Relief and Emergency Assistance Act; and

"(B) a public health emergency declared by the Secretary pursuant to section 319 of the Public Health Service Act.

"(2) Health care provider.—The term 'health care provider' means any entity that furnishes health care items or services, and includes a hospital or other provider of services, a physician or other health care practitioner or professional, a health care facility, or a supplier of health care items or services.".

(b) Effective Date.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall be effective on and after September 11, 2001.

SEC. 144. PROVISION FOR EXPIRATION OF PUBLIC HEALTH EMERGENCIES.

(a) In General.—Section 319(a) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 247d(a)), is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "Any such determination of a public health emergency terminates upon the Secretary declaring that the emergency no longer exists, or upon the expiration of the 90-day period beginning on the date on which the determination is made by the Secretary, whichever occurs first. Determinations that terminate under the preceding sentence may be renewed by the Secretary (on the basis of the same or additional facts), and the preceding sentence applies to each such renewal. Not later than 48 hours after making a determination under this subsection of a public health emergency (including a renewal), the Secretary shall submit to the Congress written notification of the determination.".

(b) Applicability.—The amendment made by subsection (a) applies to any public health emergency under section 319(a) of the Public Health Service Act, including any such emergency that was in effect as of the day before the date of the enactment of this Act. In the case of such an emergency that was in effect as of such day, the 90-day period described in such section with respect to the termination of the emergency is deemed to begin on such date of enactment.

SEC. 151. DESIGNATED STATE PUBLIC EMERGENCY ANNOUNCEMENT PLAN.

Section 613(b) of the Robert T. Stafford Disaster Relief and Emergency Assistance Act (42 U.S.C. 5196b(b)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (5), by striking "and" at the end;

(2) in paragraph (6), by striking the period and inserting "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

"(7) include a plan for providing information to the public in a coordinated manner.".

SEC. 152. EXPANDED RESEARCH BY SECRETARY OF ENERGY.

(a) Detection and Identification Research.—

(1) In general.—In conjunction with the working group under section 319F(a) of the Public Health Service Act, the Secretary of Energy and the Administrator of the National Nuclear Security Administration shall expand, enhance, and intensify research relevant to the rapid detection and identification of pathogens likely to be used in a bioterrorism attack or other agents that may cause a public health emergency.

(2) Authorized activities.—Activities carried out under paragraph (1) may include—

(A) the improvement of methods for detecting biological agents or toxins of potential use in a biological attack and the testing of such methods under variable conditions;

(B) the improvement or pursuit of methods for testing, verifying, and calibrating new detection and surveillance tools and techniques; and

(C) carrying out other research activities in relevant areas.

(3) Report.—Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Administrator of the National Nuclear Security Administration shall submit to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources and the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate, and the Committee on Energy and Commerce and the Committee on Armed Services of the House of Representatives, a report setting forth the programs and projects that will be funded prior to the obligation of funds appropriated under subsection (b).

(b) Authorization.—For the purpose of carrying out this section, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary in each of fiscal years 2002 through 2006.

SEC. 153. EXPANDED RESEARCH ON WORKER HEALTH AND SAFETY.

The Secretary of Health and Human Services (referred to in this section as the "Secretary"), acting through the Director of the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health, shall enhance and expand research as deemed appropriate on the health and safety of workers who are at risk for bioterrorist threats or attacks in the workplace, including research on the health effects of measures taken to treat or protect such workers for diseases or disorders resulting from a bioterrorist threat or attack. Nothing in this section may be construed as establishing new regulatory authority for the Secretary or the Director to issue or modify any occupational safety and health rule or regulation.

SEC. 154. ENHANCEMENT OF EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS OF DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS.

(a) Readiness of Department Medical Center.—(1) The Secretary of Veterans Affairs shall take appropriate actions to enhance the readiness of Department of Veterans Affairs medical centers to protect the patients and staff of such centers from chemical or biological attack or otherwise to respond to such an attack and so as to enable such centers to fulfil their obligations as part of the Federal response to public health emegencies.

(2) Actions under paragraph (1) shall include—

(A) the provision of decontamination equipment and personal protection equipment at Department medical centers; and

(B) the provision of training in the use of such equipment to staff of such centers.

(b) Security at Department Medical and Research Facilities.—(1) Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall carry out an evaluation of the security needs at Department medical centers and research facilities. The evaluation shall address the following needs:

(A) Needs for the protection of patients and medical staff during emergencies, including a chemical or biological attack or other terrorist attack.

(B) Needs, if any, for screening personnel engaged in research relating to biological pathogens or agents, including work associated with such research.

(C) Needs for securing laboratories or other facilities engaged in research relating to biological pathogens or agents.

(D) Any other needs the Secretary considers appropriate.

(2) The Secretary shall take appropriate actions to enhance the security of Department medical centers and research facilities, including staff and patients at such centers and facilities. In taking such actions, the Secretary shall take into account the results of the evaluation required by paragraph (1).

(c) Tracking of Pharmaceuticals and Medical Supplies and Equipment.—The Secretary shall develop and maintain a centralized system for tracking the current location and availability of pharmaceuticals, medical supplies, and medical equipment throughout the Department health care system in order to permit the ready identification and utilization of such pharmaceuticals, supplies, and equipment for a variety of purposes, including response to a chemical or biological attack or other terrorist attack.

(d) TRAINING.—The Secretary shall ensure that the Department medical centers, in consultation with the accredited medical school affiliates of such medical centers, develop and implement curricula to train resident physicians and health care personnel in medical matters relating to biological, chemical, or radiological attacks.

(e) PARTICIPATION IN NATIONAL DISASTER MEDICAL SYSTEM.—(1) The Secretary shall, in consultation with the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, and the Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, establish and maintain a training program to facilitate the participation of the staff of Department medical centers, and of the community partners of such centers, in the National Disaster Medical System.

(2) The Secretary shall establish and maintain the training program under paragraph (1) in accordance with the recommendations of the working group under section 319F(a) of the Public Health Service Act.

(f) MENTAL HEALTH COUNSELING.—(1) With respect to activities conducted by personnel serving at Department medical centers, the Secretary shall, in consultation with the Secretary of Health and Human Services, the American Red Cross, and the working group under section 319F(a) of the Public Health Service Act, develop and maintain various strategies for providing mental health counseling and assistance, including counseling and assistance for post-traumatic stress disorder, to local and community emergency response providers, veterans, active duty military personnel, and individuals seeking care at Department medical centers following a bioterrorist attack or other public health emergency.

(2) The strategies under paragraph (1) shall include the following:

(A) Training and certification of providers of mental health counseling and assistance.

(B) Mechanisms for coordinating the provision of mental health counseling and assistance to emergency response providers referred to in that paragraph.

(g) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the Department of Veterans Affairs amounts as follows:

(1) To carry out activities required by subsection (a)—

(A) $100,000,000 for fiscal year 2002; and

(B) such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2006.

(2) To carry out activities required by subsections (b) through (f)—

(A) $33,000,000 for fiscal year 2002; and

(B) such sums as may be necessary for each of fiscal years 2003 through 2006.

SEC. 155. REAUTHORIZATION OF EXISTING PROGRAM.

Section 582(f) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 290hh-1(f)) is amended by striking "2002 and 2003" and inserting "2003 through 2006".

SEC. 156. SENSE OF CONGRESS.

It is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) many excellent university-based programs are already functioning and developing important biodefense products and solutions throughout the United States;

(2) accelerating the crucial work done at university centers and laboratories will contribute significantly to the United States capacity to defend against any biological threat or attack;

(3) maximizing the effectiveness of, and extending the mission of, established university programs would be one appropriate use of the additional resources provided for in this Act and the amendments made by this Act; and

(4) the Secretary of Health and Human Services should, as appropriate, recognize the importance of existing public and private university-based research, training, public awareness, and safety related biological defense programs when the Secretary makes awards of grants and contracts in accordance with this Act and the amendments made by this Act.

SEC. 157. GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE REPORT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Comptroller General shall submit to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, and to the Committee on Energy and Commerce and the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, a report that describes—

(1) Federal activities primarily related to research on, preparedness for, and the management of the public health and medical consequences of a bioterrorist attack against the civilian population;

(2) the coordination of the activities described in paragraph (1);

(3) the effectiveness of such efforts in preparing national, State, and local authorities to address the public health and medical consequences of a potential bioterrorist attack against the civilian population;

(4) the activities and costs of the Civil Support Teams of the National Guard in responding to biological threats or attacks against the civilian population;

(5) the activities of the working group under subsection (a) and the efforts made by such group to carry out the activities described in such subsection; and

(6) the ability of private sector contractors to enhance governmental responses to biological threats or attacks.

SEC. 158. CERTAIN AWARDS.

Section 319(a) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 247d(a)) is amended in the matter after and below paragraph (2) by striking "grants and" and inserting "grants, providing awards for expenses, and"

SEC. 159. PUBLIC ACCESS DEFIBRILLATION PROGRAMS AND PUBLIC ACCESS DEFIBRILLATION DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This section may be cited as the "Community Access to Emergency Defibrillation Act of 2002".

(b) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Over 220,000 Americans die each year from cardiac arrest. Every 2 minutes, an individual goes into cardiac arrest in the United States.

(2) The chance of successfully returning to a normal heart rhythm diminishes by 10 percent each minute following sudden cardiac arrest.

(3) Eighty percent of cardiac arrests are caused by ventricular fibrillation, for which defibrillation is the only effective treatment.

(4) Sixty percent of all cardiac arrests occur outside the hospital. The average national survival rate for out-of-hospital cardiac arrest is only 5 percent.

(5) Communities that have established and implemented public access defibrillation programs have achieved average survival rates for out-of-hospital cardiac arrest as high as 50 percent.

(6) According to the American Heart Association, wide use of defibrillators could save as many as 50,000 lives nationally each year.

(7) Successful public access defibrillation programs ensure that cardiac arrest victims have access to early 911 notification, early cardiopulmonary resuscitation, early defibrillation, and early advanced care.

"SEC. 312. PUBLIC ACCESS DEFIBRILLATION PROGRAMS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall award grants to States, political subdivisions of States, Indian tribes, and tribal organizations to develop and implement public access defibrillation programs—

"(1) by training and equipping local emergency medical services personnel, including firefighters, police officers, paramedics, emergency medical technicians, and other first responders, to administer immediate care, including cardiopulmonary resuscitation and automated external defibrillation, to cardiac arrest victims;

"(2) by purchasing automated external defibrillators, placing the defibrillators in public places where cardiac arrests are likely to occur, and training personnel in such places to administer cardiopulmonary resuscitation and automated external defibrillation to cardiac arrest victims;

"(3) by setting procedures for proper maintenance and testing of such devices, according to the guidelines of the manufacturers of the devices;

"(4) by providing training to members of the public in cardiopulmonary resuscitation and automated external defibrillation;

"(5) by integrating the emergency medical services system with the public access defibrillation programs so that emergency medical services personnel, including dispatchers, are informed about the location of automated external defibrillators in their community; and

"(6) by encouraging private companies, including small businesses, to purchase automated external defibrillators and provide training for their employees to administer cardiopulmonary resuscitation and external automated defibrillation to cardiac arrest victims in their community.

"(b) PREFERENCE.—In awarding grants under subsection (a), the Secretary shall give a preference to a State, political subdivision of a State, Indian tribe, or tribal organization that—

"(1) has a particularly low local survival rate for cardiac arrests, or a particularly low local response rate for cardiac arrest victims; or

"(2) demonstrates in its application the greatest commitment to establishing and maintaining a public access defibrillation program.

"(c) USE OF FUNDS.—A State, political subdivision of a State, Indian tribe, or tribal organization that receives a grant under subsection (a) may use funds received through such grant to—

"(1) purchase automated external defibrillators that have been approved, or cleared for marketing, by the Food and Drug Administration;

"(2) provide automated external defibrillation and basic life support training in automated external defibrillator usage through nationally recognized courses;

"(3) provide information to community members about the public access defibrillation program to be funded with the grant;

"(4) provide information to the local emergency medical services system regarding the placement of automated external defibrillators in public places;

"(5) produce materials to encourage private companies, including small businesses, to purchase automated external defibrillators; and

"(6) further develop strategies to improve access to automated external defibrillators in public places.

"(d) APPLICATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—To be eligible to receive a grant under subsection (a), a State, political subdivision of a State, Indian tribe, or tribal organization shall prepare and submit an application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may reasonably require.

“(2) CONTENTS.—An application submitted under paragraph (1) shall—

“(A) describe the comprehensive public access defibrillation program to be funded with the grant and demonstrate how such program would make automated external defibrillation accessible and available to cardiac arrest victims in the community;

“(B) contain procedures for implementing appropriate nationally recognized training courses in performing cardiopulmonary resuscitation and the use of automated external defibrillators;

“(C) contain procedures for ensuring direct involvement of a licensed medical professional and coordination with the local emergency medical services system in the oversight of training and notification of incidents of the use of the automated external defibrillators;

“(D) contain procedures for proper maintenance and testing of the automated external defibrillators, according to the labeling of the manufacturer;

“(E) contain procedures for ensuring notification of local emergency medical services system personnel, including dispatchers, of the location and type of devices used in the public access defibrillation program; and

“(F) provide for the collection of data regarding the effectiveness of the public access defibrillation program to be funded with the grant in affecting the out-of-hospital cardiac arrest survival rate.

“(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—For the purpose of carrying out this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $25,000,000 for fiscal year 2003, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 2004 through 2006. Not more than 10 percent of amounts received under a grant awarded under this section may be used for administrative expenses.

“SEC. 313. PUBLIC ACCESS DEFIBRILLATION DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS.

“(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall award grants to political subdivisions of States, Indian tribes, and tribal organizations to develop and implement innovative, comprehensive, community-based public access defibrillation demonstration projects that—

“(1) provide cardiopulmonary resuscitation and automated external defibrillation to cardiac arrest victims in unique settings;

“(2) provide training to community members in cardiopulmonary resuscitation and automated external defibrillation; and

“(3) maximize community access to automated external defibrillators.

“(b) USE OF FUNDS.—A recipient of a grant under subsection (a) shall use the funds provided through the grant to—

“(1) purchase automated external defibrillators that have been approved, or cleared for marketing, by the Food and Drug Administration;

“(2) provide basic life training in automated external defibrillator usage through nationally recognized courses;

“(3) provide information to community members about the public access defibrillation demonstration project to be funded with the grant;

“(4) provide information to the local emergency medical services system regarding the placement of automated external defibrillators in the unique settings; and

“(5) further develop strategies to improve access to automated external defibrillators in public places.

“(c) APPLICATION.—

“(1) IN GENERAL.—To be eligible to receive a grant under subsection (a), a political subdivision of a State, Indian tribe, or tribal organization shall prepare and submit an application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may reasonably require.

“(2) CONTENTS.—An application submitted under paragraph (1) may—

“(A) describe the innovative, comprehensive, community-based public access defibrillation demonstration project to be funded with the grant;

“(B) explain how such public access defibrillation demonstration project represents innovation in providing public access to automated external defibrillation; and

“(C) provide for the collection of data regarding the effectiveness of the demonstration project to be funded with the grant in—

“(i) providing emergency cardiopulmonary resuscitation and automated external defibrillation to cardiac arrest victims in the setting served by the demonstration project; and

“(ii) affecting the cardiac arrest survival rate in the setting served by the demonstration project.

“(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $5,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2002 through 2006. Not more than 10 percent of amounts received under a grant awarded under this section may be used for administrative expenses.”.

TITLE II—ENHANCING CONTROLS ON DANGEROUS BIOLOGICAL AGENTS AND TOXINS

Subtitle A—Department of Health and Human Services

SEC. 201. REGULATION OF CERTAIN BIOLOGICAL AGENTS AND TOXINS.

(a) BIOLOGICAL AGENTS PROVISIONS OF THE ANTITERRORISM AND EFFECTIVE DEATH PENALTY ACT OF 1996; CODIFICATION IN THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE ACT, WITH AMENDMENTS.—Subpart 1 of part F of title III of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 262 et seq.) is amended by inserting after section 351 the following:

“(1) LIST OF BIOLOGICAL AGENTS AND TOXINS.—

“(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall by regulation establish and maintain a list of each biological agent and each toxin that has the potential to pose a severe threat to public health and safety.

“(B) CRITERIA.—In determining whether to include an agent or toxin on the list under subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall—

“(i) consider—

“(I) the effect on human health of exposure to the agent or toxin;

“(II) the degree of contagiousness of the agent or toxin and the methods by which the agent or toxin is transferred to humans;

“(III) the availability and effectiveness of pharmacotherapies and immunizations to treat and prevent any illness resulting from infection by the agent or toxin; and

“(IV) any other criteria, including the needs of children and other vulnerable populations, that the Secretary considers appropriate; and

“(ii) consult with appropriate Federal departments and agencies and with scientific experts representing appropriate professional groups, including groups with pediatric expertise.

“(2) BIENNIAL REVIEW.—The Secretary shall review and republish the list under paragraph (1) biennially, or more often as needed, and shall by regulation revise the list as necessary in accordance with such paragraph.

“(b) REGULATION OF TRANSFERS OF LISTED AGENTS AND TOXINS.—The Secretary shall by regulation provide for—

“(1) the establishment and enforcement of safety procedures for the transfer of listed agents and toxins, including measures to ensure—

“(A) proper training and appropriate skills to handle such agents and toxins; and

“(B) proper laboratory facilities to contain and dispose of such agents and toxins;

“(2) the establishment and enforcement of safeguard and security measures to prevent access to such agents and toxins for use in domestic or international terrorism or for any other criminal purpose;

“(3) the establishment of procedures to protect the public safety in the event of a transfer or potential transfer of such an agent or toxin in violation of the safety procedures established under paragraph (1) or the safeguard and security measures established under paragraph (2); and

“(4) appropriate availability of biological agents and toxins for research, education, and other legitimate purposes.

“(c) POSSESSION AND USE OF LISTED AGENTS AND TOXINS.—The Secretary shall by regulation provide for the establishment and enforcement of standards and procedures governing the possession and use of listed agents and toxins, including the provisions described in paragraphs (1) through (4) of subsection (b), in order to protect the public health and safety.

“(d) REGISTRATION; IDENTIFICATION; DATABASE.—

“(1) REGISTRATION.—Regulations under subsections (b) and (c) shall require registration with the Secretary of the possession, use, and transfer of listed agents and toxins, and shall include provisions to ensure that persons seeking to register under such regulations have a lawful purpose to possess, use, or transfer such agents and toxins, including provisions in accordance with subsection (e)(6).

“(2) IDENTIFICATION; DATABASE.—Regulations under subsections (b) and (c) shall require that registration include (if available to the person registering) information regarding the characterization of listed agents and toxins to facilitate their identification, including their source. The Secretary shall maintain a national database that includes the names and locations of registered persons, the listed agents and toxins such persons are possessing, using, or transferring, and information regarding the characterization of such agents and toxins.

“(1) IN GENERAL.—Regulations under subsections (b) and (c) shall include appropriate safeguard and security requirements for persons possessing, using, or transferring a listed agent or toxin commensurate with the risk such agent or toxin poses to public health and safety (including the risk of use in domestic or international terrorism). The Secretary shall establish such requirements in consultation with the Attorney General, and shall ensure compliance with such requirements as part of the registration system under such regulations.

“(2) LIMITING ACCESS TO LISTED AGENTS AND TOXINS.—Requirements under paragraph (1) shall include provisions to ensure that registered persons—

“(A) provide access to listed agents and toxins to only those individuals whom the registered person involved determines have a legitimate need to handle or use such agents and toxins;

“(B) submit the names and other identifying information for such individuals to the Secretary and the Attorney General, promptly after first determining that the individuals need access under subparagraph (A), and periodically thereafter while the individuals have such access, not less frequently than once every five years;

“(C) deny access to such agents and toxins by individuals whom the Attorney General has identified as restricted persons; and

“(D) limit or deny access to such agents and toxins by individuals whom the Attorney General has identified as within any category under paragraph (3)(B)(ii), if limiting or denying such access by the individuals involved is determined appropriate by the Secretary, in consultation with the Attorney General.

"(3) SUBMITTED NAMES; USE OF DATABASES BY ATTORNEY GENERAL.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Upon the receipt of names and other identifying information under paragraph (2)(B), the Attorney General shall, for the sole purpose of identifying whether the individuals involved are within any of the categories specified in subparagraph (B), promptly use criminal, immigration, national security, and other electronic databases that are available to the Federal Government and are appropriate for such purpose.

"(B) CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the categories specified in this subparagraph regarding an individual are that—

"(i) the individual is a restricted person; or

"(ii) the individual is reasonably suspected by any Federal law enforcement or intelligence agency of—

"(I) committing a crime set forth in section 2332b(g)(5) of title 18, United States Code;

"(II) knowing involvement with an organization that engages in domestic or international terrorism (as defined in section 2331 of such title 18) or with any other organization that engages in intentional crimes of violence; or

"(III) being an agent of a foreign power (as defined in section 1801 of title 50, United States Code).

"(C) NOTIFICATION BY ATTORNEY GENERAL REGARDING SUBMITTED NAMES.—After the receipt of a name and other identifying information under paragraph (2)(B), the Attorney General shall promptly notify the Secretary whether the individual is within any of the categories specified in subparagraph (B).

"(4) NOTIFICATIONS BY SECRETARY.—The Secretary, after receiving notice under paragraph (3) regarding an individual, shall promptly notify the registered person involved of whether the individual is granted or denied access under paragraph (2). If the individual is denied such access, the Secretary shall promptly notify the individual of the denial.

"(5) EXPEDITED REVIEW.—Regulations under subsections (b) and (c) shall provide for a procedure through which, upon request to the Secretary by a registered person who submits names and other identifying information under paragraph (2)(B) and who demonstrates good cause, the Secretary may, as determined appropriate by the Secretary—

"(A) request the Attorney General to expedite the process of identification under paragraph (3)(A) and notification of the Secretary under paragraph (3)(C); and

"(B) expedite the notification of the registered person by the Secretary under paragraph (4).

"(6) PROCESS REGARDING PERSONS SEEKING TO REGISTER.—

"(A) INDIVIDUALS.—Regulations under subsections (b) and (c) shall provide that an individual who seeks to register under either of such subsections is subject to the same processes described in paragraphs (2) through (4) as apply to names and other identifying information submitted to the Attorney General under paragraph (2)(B). Paragraph (5) does not apply for purposes of this subparagraph.

"(B) OTHER PERSONS.—Regulations under subsections (b) and (c) shall provide that, in determining whether to deny or revoke registration by a person other than an individual, the Secretary shall submit the name of such person to the Attorney General, who shall use criminal, immigration, national security, and other electronic databases available to the Federal Government, as appropriate for the purpose of promptly notifying the Secretary whether the person, or, where relevant, the individual who owns or controls such person, is a restricted person or is reasonably suspected by any Federal law enforcement or intelligence agency of being within any category specified in paragraph (3)(B)(ii) (as applied to persons, including individuals). Such regulations shall provide that a person who seeks to register under either of such subsections is subject to the same processes described in paragraphs (2) and (4) as apply to names and other identifying information submitted to the Attorney General under paragraph (2)(B). Paragraph (5) does not apply for purposes of this subparagraph. The Secretary may exempt Federal, State, or local governmental agencies from the requirements of this subparagraph.

"(7) REVIEW.—

"(A) ADMINISTRATIVE REVIEW.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Regulations under subsections (b) and (c) shall provide for an opportunity for a review by the Secretary—

"(I) when requested by the individual involved, of a determination under paragraph (2) to deny the individual access to listed agents and toxins; and

"(II) when requested by the person involved, of a determination under paragraph (6) to deny or revoke registration for such person.

"(ii) EX PARTE REVIEW.—During a review under clause (i), the Secretary may consider information relevant to the review ex parte to the extent that disclosure of the information could compromise national security or an investigation by any law enforcement agency.

"(iii) FINAL AGENCY ACTION.—The decision of the Secretary in a review under clause (i) constitutes final agency action for purposes of section 702 of title 5, United States Code.

"(B) CERTAIN PROCEDURES.—

"(i) SUBMISSION OF EX PARTE MATERIALS IN JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.—When reviewing a decision of the Secretary under subparagraph (A), and upon request made ex parte and in writing by the United States, a court, upon a sufficient showing, may review and consider ex parte documents containing information the disclosure of which could compromise national security or an investigation by any law enforcement agency. If the court determines that portions of the documents considered ex parte should be disclosed to the person involved to allow a response, the court shall authorize the United States to delete from such documents specified items of information the disclosure of which could compromise national security or an investigation by any law enforcement agency, or to substitute a summary of the information to which the person may respond. Any order by the court authorizing the disclosure of information that the United States believes could compromise national security or an investigation by any law enforcement agency shall be subject to the processes set forth in subparagraphs (A) and (B)(i) of section 2339B(f)(5) of title 18, United States Code (relating to interlocutory appeal and expedited consideration).

"(ii) DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION.—In a review under subparagraph (A), and in any judical proceeding conducted pursuant to such review, neither the Secretary nor the Attorney General may be required to disclose to the public any information that under subsection (h) shall not be disclosed under section 552 of title 5, United States Code.

"(8) NOTIFICATIONS REGARDING THEFT OR LOSS OF AGENTS.—Requirements under paragraph (1) shall include the prompt notification of the Secretary, and appropriate Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies, of the theft or loss of listed agents and toxins.

"(9) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE FOR REGISTERED PERSONS.—The Secretary, in consultation with the Attorney General, may provide technical assistance to registered persons to improve security of the facilities of such persons.

"(f) INSPECTIONS.—The Secretary shall have the authority to inspect persons subject to regulations under subsection (b) or (c) to ensure their compliance with such regulations, including prohibitions on restricted persons and other provisions of subsection (e).

"(g) EXEMPTIONS.—

"(1) CLINICAL OR DIAGNOSTIC LABORATORIES.—Regulations under subsections (b) and (c) shall exempt clinical or diagnostic laboratories and other persons who possess, use, or transfer listed agents or toxins that are contained in specimens presented for diagnosis, verification, or proficiency testing, provided that—

"(A) the identification of such agents or toxins is reported to the Secretary, and when required under Federal, State, or local law, to other appropriate authorities; and

"(B) such agents or toxins are transferred or destroyed in a manner set forth by the Secretary by regulation.

"(2) PRODUCTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Regulations under subsections (b) and (c) shall exempt products that are, bear, or contain listed agents or toxins and are cleared, approved, licensed, or registered under any of the Acts specified in subparagraph (B), unless the Secretary by order determines that applying additional regulation under subsection (b) or (c) to a specific product is necessary to protect public health and safety.

"(B) RELEVANT LAWS.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the Acts specified in this subparagraph are the following:

"(i) The Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act.

"(ii) Section 351 of this Act.

"(iii) The Act commonly known as the Virus-Serum-Toxin Act (the eighth paragraph under the heading 'Bureau of Animal Industry' in the Act of March 4, 1913; 21 U.S.C. 151-159).

"(iv) The Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act.

"(C) INVESTIGATIONAL USE.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may exempt an investigational product that is, bears, or contains a listed agent or toxin from the applicability of provisions of regulations under subsection (b) or (c) when such product is being used in an investigation authorized under any Federal Act and the Secretary determines that applying additional regulation under subsection (b) or (c) to such product is not necessary to protect public health and safety.

"(ii) CERTAIN PROCESSES.—Regulations under subsections (b) and (c) shall set forth the procedures for applying for an exemption under clause (i). In the case of investigational products authorized under any of the Acts specified in subparagraph (B), the Secretary shall make a determination regarding a request for an exemption not later than 14 days after the first date on which both of the following conditions have been met by the person requesting the exemption:

"(I) The person has submitted to the Secretary an application for the exemption meeting the requirements established by the Secretary.

"(II) The person has notified the Secretary that the investigation has been authorized under such an Act.

"(3) PUBLIC HEALTH EMERGENCIES.—The Secretary may temporarily exempt a person from the applicability of the requirements of this section, in whole or in part, if the Secretary determines that such exemption is necessary to provide for the timely participation of the person in a response to a domestic or foreign public health emergency (whether determined under section 319(a) or otherwise) that involves a listed agent or toxin. With respect to the emergency involved, such exemption for a person may not exceed 30 days, except that the Secretary, after review of whether such exemption remains necessary, may provide one extension of an additional 30 days.

"(4) AGRICULTURAL EMERGENCIES.—Upon request of the Secretary of Agriculture, after the granting by such Secretary of an exemption under section 212(g)(1)(D) of the Agricultural Bioterrorism Protection Act of 2002 pursuant to a finding that there is an agricultural emergency, the Secretary of Health and Human Services may temporarily exempt a person from the applicability of the requirements of this section, in whole or in part, to provide for the timely participation of the person in a response to the agricultural emergency. With respect to the emergency involved, the exemption under this paragraph for a person may not exceed 30 days, except that upon request of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Health and Human Services may, after review of whether such exemption remains necessary, provide one extension of an additional 30 days.

"(h) DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION.—

"(1) NONDISCLOSURE OF CERTAIN INFORMATION.—No Federal agency specified in paragraph (2) shall disclose under section 552 of title 5, United States Code, any of the following:

"(A) Any registration or transfer documentation submitted under subsections (b) and (c) for the possession, use, or transfer of a listed agent or toxin; or information derived therefrom to the extent that it identifies the listed agent or toxin possessed, used, or transferred by a specific registered person or discloses the identity or location of a specific registered person.

"(B) The national database developed pursuant to subsection (d), or any other compilation of the registration or transfer information submitted under subsections (b) and (c) to the extent that such compilation discloses site-specific registration or transfer information.

"(C) Any portion of a record that discloses the site-specific or transfer-specific safeguard and security measures used by a registered person to prevent unauthorized access to listed agents and toxins.

"(D) Any notification of a release of a listed agent or toxin submitted under subsections (b) and (c), or any notification of theft or loss submitted under such subsections.

"(E) Any portion of an evaluation or report of an inspection of a specific registered person conducted under subsection (f) that identifies the listed agent or toxin possessed by a specific registered person or that discloses the identity or location of a specific registered person if the agency determines that public disclosure of the information would endanger public health or safety.

"(2) COVERED AGENCIES.—For purposes of paragraph (1) only, the Federal agencies specified in this paragraph are the following:

"(A) The Department of Health and Human Services, the Department of Justice, the Department of Agriculture, and the Department of Transportation.

"(B) Any Federal agency to which information specified in paragraph (1) is transferred by any agency specified in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph.

"(C) Any Federal agency that is a registered person, or has a sub-agency component that is a registered person.

"(D) Any Federal agency that awards grants or enters into contracts or cooperative agreements involving listed agents and toxins to or with a registered person, and to which information specified in paragraph (1) is transferred by any such registered person.

"(3) OTHER EXEMPTIONS.—This subsection may not be construed as altering the application of any exemptions to public disclosure under section 552 of title 5, United States Code, except as to subsection 552(b)(3) of such title, to any of the information specified in paragraph (1).

"(4) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Except as specifically provided in paragraph (1), this subsection may not be construed as altering the authority of any Federal agency to withhold under section 552 of title 5, United States Code, or the obligation of any Federal agency to disclose under section 552 of title 5, United States Code, any information, including information relating to—

"(A) listed agents and toxins, or individuals seeking access to such agents and toxins;

"(B) registered persons, or persons seeking to register their possession, use, or transfer of such agents and toxins;

"(C) general safeguard and security policies and requirements under regulations under subsections (b) and (c); or

"(D) summary or statistical information concerning registrations, registrants, denials or revocations of registrations, listed agents and toxins, inspection evaluations and reports, or individuals seeking access to such agents and toxins.

"(5) DISCLOSURES TO CONGRESS; OTHER DISCLOSURES.—This subsection may not be construed as providing any authority—

"(A) to withhold information from the Congress or any committee or subcommittee thereof; or

"(B) to withhold information from any person under any other Federal law or treaty.

"(i) CIVIL MONEY PENALTY.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In addition to any other penalties that may apply under law, any person who violates any provision of regulations under subsection (b) or (c) shall be subject to the United States for a civil money penalty in an amount not exceeding $250,000 in the case of an individual and $500,000 in the case of any other person.

"(2) APPLICABILITY OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS.—The provisions of section 1128A of the Social Security Act (other than subsections (a), (b), (h), and (i), the first sentence of subsection (c), and paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (f)) shall apply to a civil money penalty under paragraph (1) in the same manner as such provisions apply to a penalty or proceeding under section 1128A(a) of such Act. The Secretary may delegate authority under this subsection in the same manner as provided in section 1128A(j)(2) of the Social Security Act, and such authority shall include all powers as contained in section 6 of the Inspector General Act of 1978 (5 U.S.C. App.).

"(j) NOTIFICATION IN EVENT OF RELEASE.—Regulations under subsections (b) and (c) shall require the prompt notification of the Secretary by a registered person whenever a release, meeting criteria established by the Secretary, of a listed agent or toxin has occurred outside of the biocontainment area of a facility of the registered person. Upon receipt of such notification and a finding by the Secretary that the release poses a threat to public health or safety, the Secretary shall take appropriate action to notify relevant State and local public health authorities, other relevant Federal authorities, and, if necessary, other appropriate persons (including the public). If the released listed agent or toxin is an overlap agent or toxin (as defined in subsection (l)), the Secretary shall promptly notify the Secretary of Agriculture upon notification by the registered person.

"(k) REPORTS.—The Secretary shall report to the Congress annually on the number and nature of notifications received under subsection (e)(8) (relating to theft or loss) and subsection (j) (relating to releases).

"(l) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

"(1) The terms 'biological agent' and 'toxin' have the meanings given such terms in section 178 of title 18, United States Code.

"(2) The term 'listed agents and toxins' means biological agents and toxins listed pursuant to subsection (a)(1).

"(3) The term 'listed agents or toxins' means biological agents or toxins listed pursuant to subsection (a)(1).

"(4) The term 'overlap agents and toxins' means biological agents and toxins that—

"(A) are listed pursuant to subsection (a)(1); and

"(B) are listed pursuant to section 212(a)(1) of the Agricultural Bioterrorism Protection Act of 2002.

"(5) The term 'overlap agent or toxin' means a biological agent or toxin that—

"(A) is listed pursuant to subsection (a)(1); and

"(B) is listed pursuant to section 212(a)(1) of the Agricultural Bioterrorism Protection Act of 2002.

"(6) The term 'person' includes Federal, State, and local governmental entities.

"(7) The term 'registered person' means a person registered under regulations under subsection (b) or (c).

"(8) The term 'restricted person' has the meaning given such term in section 175b of title 18, United States Code.

"(m) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—For the purpose of carrying out this section, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 2002 through 2007.".

(b) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—Not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, after consultation with other appropriate Federal agencies, shall submit to the Congress a report that—

(1) describes the extent to which there has been compliance by governmental and private entities with applicable regulations under section 351A of the Public Health Service Act (as added by subsection (a) of this section), including the extent of compliance before the date of the enactment of this Act, and including the extent of compliance with regulations promulgated after such date of enactment;

(2) describes the actions to date and future plans of the Secretary for updating the list of biological agents and toxins under such section 351A;

(3) describes the actions to date and future plans of the Secretary for determining compliance with regulations under such section 351A and for taking appropriate enforcement actions;

(4) evaluates the impact of such section 351A on research on biological agents and toxins listed pursuant to such section; and

(5) provides any recommendations of the Secretary for administrative or legislative initiatives regarding such section 351A.

SEC. 202. IMPLEMENTATION BY DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES.

(a) DATE CERTAIN FOR NOTICE OF POSSESSION.—Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, all persons (unless exempt under subsection (g) of section 351A of the Public Health Service Act, as added by section 201 of this Act) in possession of biological agents or toxins listed under such section 351A of the Public Health Service Act shall notify the Secretary of Health and Human Services of such possession. Not later than 30 days after such date of enactment, the Secretary shall provide written guidance on how such notice is to be provided to the Secretary.

(b) DATE CERTAIN FOR PROMULGATION; EFFECTIVE DATE REGARDING CRIMINAL AND CIVIL PENALTIES.—Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall promulgate an interim final rule for carrying out section 351A of the Public Health Service Act, subject to subsection (c). Such interim final rule shall take effect 60 days after the date on which such rule is promulgated, including for purposes of—

(1) section 175b(c) of title 18, United States Code (relating to criminal penalties), as added by section 231(a)(5) of this Act; and

(2) section 351A(i) of the Public Health Service Act (relating to civil penalties).

(c) TRANSITIONAL PROVISION REGARDING CURRENT RESEARCH AND EDUCATION.—The interim final rule under subsection (b) shall include time frames for the applicability of the rule that minimize disruption of research or educational projects that involve biological agents and toxins listed pursuant to section 351A(a)(1) of the Public Health Service Act and that were underway as of the effective date of such rule.

SEC. 203. EFFECTIVE DATES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Regulations promulgated by the Secretary of Health and Human Services under section 511 of the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 are deemed to have been promulgated under section 351A of the Public Health Service Act, as added by section 201 of this Act. Such regulations, including the list under subsection (d)(1) of such section 511, that were in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of this Act remain in effect until modified by the Secretary in accordance with such section 351A and with section 202 of this Act.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE REGARDING DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION.—Subsection (h) of section 351A of the Public Health Service Act, as added by section 201 of this Act, is deemed to have taken effect on the effective date of the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996.

SEC. 204. CONFORMING AMENDMENT.

Subsections (d), (e), (f), and (g) of section 511 of the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 (42 U.S.C. 262 note) are repealed.

Subtitle B—Department of Agriculture

SEC. 211. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Agricultural Bioterrorism Protection Act of 2002".

SEC. 212. REGULATION OF CERTAIN BIOLOGICAL AGENTS AND TOXINS.

(a) REGULATORY CONTROL OF CERTAIN BIOLOGICAL AGENTS AND TOXINS.—

(1) LIST OF BIOLOGICAL AGENTS AND TOXINS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Agriculture shall by regulation establish and maintain a list of each biological agent and each toxin that the Secretary determines has the potential to pose a severe threat to animal or plant health, or to animal or plant products.

(B) CRITERIA.—In determining whether to include an agent or toxin on the list under subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall—

(i) consider—

(I) the effect of exposure to the agent or toxin on animal or plant health, and on the production and marketability of animal or plant products;

(II) the pathogenicity of the agent or the toxicity of the toxin and the methods by which the agent or toxin is transferred to animals or plants;

(III) the availability and effectiveness of pharmacotherapies and prophylaxis to treat and prevent any illness caused by the agent or toxin; and

(IV) any other criteria that the Secretary considers appropriate to protect animal or plant health, or animal or plant products; and

(ii) consult with appropriate Federal departments and agencies and with scientific experts representing appropriate professional groups.

(2) BIENNIAL REVIEW.—The Secretary shall review and republish the list under paragraph (1) biennially, or more often as needed, and shall by regulation revise the list as necessary in accordance with such paragraph.

(b) REGULATION OF TRANSFERS OF LISTED AGENTS AND TOXINS.—The Secretary shall by regulation provide for—

(1) the establishment and enforcement of safety procedures for the transfer of listed agents and toxins, including measures to ensure—

(A) proper training and appropriate skills to handle such agents and toxins; and

(B) proper laboratory facilities to contain and dispose of such agents and toxins;

(2) the establishment and enforcement of safeguard and security measures to prevent access to such agents and toxins for use in domestic or international terrorism or for any other criminal purpose;

(3) the establishment of procedures to protect animal and plant health, and animal and plant products, in the event of a transfer or potential transfer of such an agent or toxin in violation of the safety procedures established under paragraph (1) or the safeguard and security measures established under paragraph (2); and

(4) appropriate availability of biological agents and toxins for research, education, and other legitimate purposes.

(c) POSSESSION AND USE OF LISTED AGENTS AND TOXINS.—The Secretary shall by regulation provide for the establishment and enforcement of standards and procedures governing the possession and use of listed agents and toxins, including the provisions described in paragraphs (1) through (4) of subsection (b), in order to protect animal and plant health, and animal and plant products.

(d) REGISTRATION; IDENTIFICATION; DATABASE.—

(1) REGISTRATION.—Regulations under subsections (b) and (c) shall require registration with the Secretary of the possession, use, and transfer of listed agents and toxins, and shall include provisions to ensure that persons seeking to register under such regulations have a lawful purpose to possess, use, or transfer such agents and toxins, including provisions in accordance with subsection (e)(6).

(2) IDENTIFICATION; DATABASE.—Regulations under subsections (b) and (c) shall require that registration include (if available to the person registering) information regarding the characterization of listed agents and toxins to facilitate their identification, including their source. The Secretary shall maintain a national database that includes the names and locations of registered persons, the listed agents and toxins such persons are possessing, using, or transferring, and information regarding the characterization of such agents and toxins.

(e) SAFEGUARD AND SECURITY REQUIREMENTS FOR REGISTERED PERSONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Regulations under subsections (b) and (c) shall include appropriate safeguard and security requirements for persons possessing, using, or transferring a listed agent or toxin commensurate with the risk such agent or toxin poses to animal and plant health, and animal and plant products (including the risk of use in domestic or international terrorism). The Secretary shall establish such requirements in consultation with the Attorney General, and shall ensure compliance with such requirements as part of the registration system under such regulations.

(2) LIMITING ACCESS TO LISTED AGENTS AND TOXINS.—Requirements under paragraph (1) shall include provisions to ensure that registered persons—

(A) provide access to listed agents and toxins to only those individuals whom the registered person involved determines have a legitimate need to handle or use such agents and toxins;

(B) submit the names and other identifying information for such individuals to the Secretary and the Attorney General, promptly after first determining that the individuals need access under subparagraph (A), and periodically thereafter while the individuals have such access, not less frequently than once every five years; and

(C)(i) in the case of listed agents and toxins that are not overlap agents and toxins (as defined in subsection (g)(1)(A)(ii)), limit or deny access to such agents and toxins by individuals whom the Attorney General has identified as within any category under paragraph (3)(B), if limiting or denying such access by the individuals involved is determined appropriate by the Secretary, in consultation with the Attorney General; and

(ii) in the case of listed agents and toxins that are overlap agents—

(I) deny access to such agents and toxins by individuals whom the Attorney General has identified as within any category referred to in paragraph (3)(B)(i); and

(II) limit or deny access to such agents and toxins by individuals whom the Attorney General has identified as within any category under paragraph (3)(B)(ii), if limiting or denying such access by the individuals involved is determined appropriate by the Secretary, in consultation with the Attorney General.

(3) SUBMITTED NAMES; USE OF DATABASES BY ATTORNEY GENERAL.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Upon the receipt of names and other identifying information under paragraph (2)(B), the Attorney General shall, for the sole purpose of identifying whether the individuals involved are within any of the categories specified in subparagraph (B), promptly use criminal, immigration, national security, and other electronic databases that are available to the Federal Government and are appropriate for such purpose.

(B) CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the categories specified in this subparagraph regarding an individual are that—

(i) the individual is within any of the categories described in section 175b(d)(1) of title 18, United States Code (relating to restricted persons); or

(ii) the individual is reasonably suspected by any Federal law enforcement or intelligence agency of—

(I) committing a crime set forth in section 2332b(g)(5) of title 18, United States Code;

(II) knowing involvement with an organization that engages in domestic or international terrorism (as defined in section 2331 of such title 18) or with any other organization that engages in intentional crimes of violence; or

(III) being an agent of a foreign power (as defined in section 1801 of title 50, United States Code).

(C) NOTIFICATION BY ATTORNEY GENERAL REGARDING SUBMITTED NAMES.—After the receipt of a name and other identifying information under paragraph (2)(B), the Attorney General shall promptly notify the Secretary whether the individual is within any of the categories specified in subparagraph (B).

(4) NOTIFICATIONS BY SECRETARY.—The Secretary, after receiving notice under paragraph (3) regarding an individual, shall promptly notify the registered person involved of whether the individual is granted or denied access under paragraph (2). If the individual is denied such access, the Secretary shall promptly notify the individual of the denial.

(5) EXPEDITED REVIEW.—Regulations under subsections (b) and (c) shall provide for a procedure through which, upon request to the Secretary by a registered person who submits names and other identifying information under paragraph (2)(B) and who demonstrates good cause, the Secretary may, as determined appropriate by the Secretary—

(A) request the Attorney General to expedite the process of identification under paragraph (3)(A) and notification of the Secretary under paragraph (3)(C); and

(B) expedite the notification of the registered person by the Secretary under paragraph (4).

(6) PROCESS REGARDING PERSONS SEEKING TO REGISTER.—

(A) INDIVIDUALS.—Regulations under subsections (b) and (c) shall provide that an individual who seeks to register under either of such subsections is subject to the same processes described in paragraphs (2) through (4) as apply to names and other identifying information submitted to the Attorney General under paragraph (2)(B). Paragraph (5) does not apply for purposes of this subparagraph.

(B) OTHER PERSONS.—Regulations under subsections (b) and (c) shall provide that, in determining whether to deny or revoke registration by a person other than an individual, the Secretary shall submit the name of such person to the Attorney General, who shall use criminal, immigration, national security, and other electronic databases available to the Federal Government, as appropriate for the purpose of promptly notifying the Secretary whether the person, or, where relevant, the individual who owns or controls such person, is within any of the categories described in section 175b(d)(1) of title 18, United States Code (relating to restricted persons), or is reasonably suspected by any Federal law enforcement or intelligence agency of being within any category specified in paragraph (3)(B)(ii) (as applied to persons, including individuals). Such regulations shall provide that a person who seeks to register under either of such subsections is subject to the same processes described in paragraphs (2) and (4) as apply to names and other identifying information submitted to the Attorney General under paragraph (2)(B). Paragraph (5) does not apply for purposes of this subparagraph. The Secretary may exempt Federal, State, or local governmental agencies from the requirements of this subparagraph.

(7) REVIEW.—

(A) ADMINISTRATIVE REVIEW.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—Regulations under subsections (b) and (c) shall provide for an opportunity for a review by the Secretary—

(I) when requested by the individual involved, of a determination under paragraph (2) to deny the individual access to listed agents and toxins; and

(II) when requested by the person involved, of a determination under under paragraph (6) to deny or revoke registration for such person.

(ii) EX PARTE REVIEW.—During a review under clause (i), the Secretary may consider information relevant to the review ex parte to the extent that disclosure of the information could compromise national security or an investigation by any law enforcement agency.

(iii) FINAL AGENCY ACTION.—The decision of the Secretary in a review under clause (i) constitutes final agency action for purposes of section 702 of title 5, United States Code.

(B) CERTAIN PROCEDURES.—

(i) SUBMISSION OF EX PARTE MATERIALS IN JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.—When reviewing a decision of the Secretary under subparagraph (A), and upon request made ex parte and in writing by the United States, a court, upon a sufficient showing, may review and consider ex parte documents containing information the disclosure of which could compromise national security or an investigation by any law enforcement agency. If the court determines that portions of the documents considered ex parte should be disclosed to the person involved to allow a response, the court shall authorize the United States to delete from such documents specified items of information the disclosure of which could compromise national security or an investigation by any law enforcement agency, or to substitute a summary of the information to which the person may respond. Any order by the court authorizing the disclosure of information that the United States believes could compromise national security or an investigation by any law enforcement agency shall be subject to the processes set forth in subparagraphs (A) and (B)(i) of section 2339B(f)(5) of title 18, United States Code (relating to interlocutory appeal and expedited consideration).

(ii) DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION.—In a review under subparagraph (A), and in any judical proceeding conducted pursuant to such review, neither the Secretary nor the Attorney General may be required to disclose to the public any information that under subsection (h) shall not be disclosed under section 552 of title 5, United States Code.

(8) NOTIFICATIONS REGARDING THEFT OR LOSS OF AGENTS.—Requirements under paragraph (1) shall include the prompt notification of the Secretary, and appropriate Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies, of the theft or loss of listed agents and toxins.

(9) TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE FOR REGISTERED PERSONS.—The Secretary, in consultation with the Attorney General, may provide technical assistance to registered persons to improve security of the facilities of such persons.

(f) INSPECTIONS.—The Secretary shall have the authority to inspect persons subject to regulations under subsection (b) or (c) to ensure their compliance with such regulations, including prohibitions on restricted persons and other provisions of subsection (e).

(g) EXEMPTIONS.—

(1) OVERLAP AGENTS AND TOXINS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—

(i) LIMITATION.—In the case of overlap agents and toxins, exemptions from the applicability of provisions of regulations under subsection (b) or (c) may be granted only to the extent provided in this paragraph.

(ii) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

(I) The term "overlap agents and toxins" means biological agents and toxins that—

(aa) are listed pursuant to subsection (a)(1); and

(bb) are listed pursuant to section 315A(a)(1) of the Public Health Service Act.

(II) The term "overlap agent or toxin" means a biological agent or toxin that—

(aa) is listed pursuant to subsection (a)(1); and

(bb) is listed pursuant to section 315A(a)(1) of the Public Health Service Act.

(B) CLINICAL OR DIAGNOSTIC LABORATORIES.—Regulations under subsections (b) and (c) shall exempt clinical or diagnostic laboratories and other persons who possess, use, or transfer overlap agents or toxins that are contained in specimens presented for diagnosis, verification, or proficiency testing, provided that—

(i) the identification of such agents or toxins is reported to the Secretary, and when required under Federal, State, or local law, to other appropriate authorities; and

(ii) such agents or toxins are transferred or destroyed in a manner set forth by the Secretary by regulation.

(C) PRODUCTS.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—Regulations under subsections (b) and (c) shall exempt products that are, bear, or contain overlap agents or toxins and are cleared, approved, licensed, or registered under any of the Acts specified in clause (ii), unless the Secretary by order determines that applying additional regulation under subsection (b) or (c) to a specific product is necessary to protect animal or plant health, or animal or plant products.

(ii) RELEVANT LAWS.—For purposes of clause (i), the Acts specified in this clause are the following:

(I) The Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act.

(II) Section 351 of the Public Health Service Act.

(III) The Act commonly known as the Virus-Serum-Toxin Act (the eighth paragraph under the heading 'Bureau of Animal Industry' in the Act of March 4, 1913; 21 U.S.C. 151-159).

(IV) The Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act.

(iii) INVESTIGATIONAL USE.—

(I) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may exempt an investigational product that is, bears, or contains an overlap agent or toxin from the applicability of provisions of regulations under subsection (b) or (c) when such product is being used in an investigation authorized under any Federal Act and the Secretary determines that applying additional regulation under subsection (b) or (c) to such product is not necessary to protect animal and plant health, and animal and plant products.

(II) CERTAIN PROCESSES.—Regulations under subsections (b) and (c) shall set forth the procedures for applying for an exemption under subclause (I). In the case of investigational products authorized under any of the Acts specified in clause (ii), the Secretary shall make a determination regarding a request for an exemption not later than 14 days after the first date on which both of the following conditions have been met by the person requesting the exemption:

(aa) The person has submitted to the Secretary an application for the exemption meeting the requirements established by the Secretary.

(bb) The person has notified the Secretary that the investigation has been authorized under such an Act.

(D) AGRICULTURAL EMERGENCIES.— The Secretary may temporarily exempt a person from the applicability of the requirements of this section with respect to an overlap agent or toxin, in whole or in part, if the Secretary determines that such exemption is necessary to provide for the timely participation of the person in a response to a domestic or foreign agricultural emergency that involves such an agent or toxin. With respect to the emergency involved, the exemption under this subparagraph for a person may not exceed 30 days, except that the Secretary, after review of whether such exemption remains necessary, may provide one extension of an additional 30 days.

(E) PUBLIC HEALTH EMERGENCIES.—Upon request of the Secretary of Health and Human Services, after the granting by such Secretary of an exemption under 351A(g)(3) of the Public Health Service Act pursuant to a finding that there is a public health emergency, the Secretary of Agriculture may temporarily exempt a person from the applicability of the requirements of this section with respect to an overlap agent or toxin, in whole or in part, to provide for the timely participation of the person in a response to the public health emergency. With respect to the emergency involved, such exemption for a person may not exceed 30 days, except that upon request of the Secretary of Health and Human Services, the Secretary of Agriculture may, after review of whether such exemption remains necessary, provide one extension of an additional 30 days.

(2) GENERAL AUTHORITY FOR EXEMPTIONS NOT INVOLVING OVERLAP AGENTS OR TOXINS.—In the case of listed agents or toxins that are not overlap agents or toxins, the Secretary may grant exemptions from the applicability of provisions of regulations under subsection (b) or (c) if the Secretary determines that such exemptions are consistent with protecting animal and plant health, and animal and plant products.

(h) DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION.—

(1) NONDISCLOSURE OF CERTAIN INFORMATION.—No Federal agency specified in paragraph (2) shall disclose under section 552 of title 5, United States Code, any of the following:

(A) Any registration or transfer documentation submitted under subsections (b) and (c), or permits issued prior to the date of the enactment of this Act, for the possession, use or transfer of a listed agent or toxin; or information derived therefrom to the extent that it identifies the listed agent or toxin possessed, used or transferred by a specific person or discloses the identity or location of a specific person.

(B) The national database developed pursuant to subsection (d), or any other compilation of the registration or transfer information submitted under subsections (b) and (c) to the extent that such compilation discloses site-specific registration or transfer information.

(C) Any portion of a record that discloses the site-specific or transfer-specific safeguard and security measures used by a registered person to prevent unauthorized access to listed agents and toxins.

(D) Any notification of a release of a listed agent or toxin submitted under subsections (b) and (c), or any notification of theft or loss submitted under such subsections.

(E) Any portion of an evaluation or report of an inspection of a specific registered person conducted under subsection (f) that identifies the listed agent or toxin possessed by a specific registered person or that discloses the identity or location of a specific registered person if the agency determines that public disclosure of the information would endanger animal or plant health, or animal or plant products.

(2) COVERED AGENCIES.—For purposes of paragraph (1) only, the Federal agencies specified in this paragraph are the following:

(A) The Department of Health and Human Services, the Department of Justice, the Department of Agriculture, and the Department of Transportation.

(B) Any Federal agency to which information specified in paragraph (1) is transferred by any agency specified in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph.

(C) Any Federal agency that is a registered person, or has a sub-agency component that is a registered person.

(D) Any Federal agency that awards grants or enters into contracts or cooperative agreements involving listed agents and toxins to or with a registered person, and to which information specified in paragraph (1) is transferred by any such registered person.

(3) OTHER EXEMPTIONS.—This subsection may not be construed as altering the application of any exemptions to public disclosure under section 552 of title 5, United States Code, except as to subsection 552(b)(3) of such title, to any of the information specified in paragraph (1).

(4) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Except as specifically provided in paragraph (1), this subsection may not be construed as altering the authority of any Federal agency to withhold under section 552 of title 5, United States Code, or the obligation of any Federal agency to disclose under section 552 of title 5, United States Code, any information, including information relating to—

(A) listed agents and toxins, or individuals seeking access to such agents and toxins;

(B) registered persons, or persons seeking to register their possession, use, or transfer of such agents and toxins;

(C) general safeguard and security policies and requirements under regulations under subsections (b) and (c); or

(D) summary or statistical information concerning registrations, registrants, denials or revocations of registrations, listed agents and toxins, inspection evaluations and reports, or individuals seeking access to such agents and toxins.

(5) DISCLOSURES TO CONGRESS; OTHER DISCLOSURES.—This subsection may not be construed as providing any authority—

(A) to withhold information from the Congress or any committee or subcommittee thereof; or

(B) to withhold information from any person under any other Federal law or treaty.

(i) CIVIL MONEY PENALTY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In addition to any other penalties that may apply under law, any person who violates any provision of regulations under subsection (b) or (c) shall be subject to the United States for a civil money penalty in an amount not exceeding $250,000 in the case of an individual and $500,000 in the case of any other person.

(2) APPLICABILITY OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS.—The provisions of sections 423 and 425(2) of the Plant Protection Act (7 U.S.C. 7733 and 7735(2) shall apply to a civil money penalty or activity under paragraph (1) in the same manner as such provisions apply to a penalty or activity under the Plant Protection Act.

(j) NOTIFICATION IN EVENT OF RELEASE.—Regulations under subsections (b) and (c) shall require the prompt notification of the Secretary by a registered person whenever a release, meeting criteria established by the Secretary, of a listed agent or toxin has occurred outside of the biocontainment area of a facility of the registered person. Upon receipt of such notification and a finding by the Secretary that the release poses a threat to animal or plant health, or animal or plant products, the Secretary shall take appropriate action to notify relevant Federal, State, and local authorities, and, if necessary, other appropriate persons (including the public). If the released listed agent or toxin is an overlap agent or toxin, the Secretary shall promptly notify the Secretary of Health and Human Services upon notification by the registered person.

(k) REPORTS.—The Secretary shall report to the Congress annually on the number and nature of notifications received under subsection (e)(8) (relating to theft or loss) and subsection (j) (relating to releases).

(l) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

(1) The terms "biological agent" and "toxin" have the meanings given such terms in section 178 of title 18, United States Code.

(2) The term "listed agents and toxins" means biological agents and toxins listed pursuant to subsection (a)(1).

(3) The term "listed agents or toxins" means biological agents or toxins listed pursuant to subsection (a)(1).

(4) The terms "overlap agents and toxins" and "overlap agent or toxin" have the meaning given such terms in subsection (g)(1)(A)(ii).

(5) The term "person" includes Federal, State, and local governmental entities.

(6) The term "registered person" means a person registered under regulations under subsection (b) or (c).

(7) The term "'Secretary" means the Secretary of Agriculture.

SEC. 213. IMPLEMENTATION BY DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

(a) DATE CERTAIN FOR PROMULGATION OF LIST.—Not later than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Agriculture (referred to in this section as the "Secretary") shall promulgate an interim final rule that establishes the initial list under section 212(a)(1). In promulgating such rule, the Secretary shall provide written guidance on the manner in which the notice required in subsection (b) is to be provided to the Secretary.

(b) DATE CERTAIN FOR NOTICE OF POSSESSION.—Not later than 60 days after the date on which the Secretary promulgates the interim final rule under subsection (a), all persons (unless exempt under section 212(g)) in possession of biological agents or toxins included on the list referred to in subsection (a) shall notify the Secretary of such possession.

(c) DATE CERTAIN FOR PROMULGATION; EFFECTIVE DATE REGARDING CRIMINAL AND CIVIL PENALTIES.—Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall promulgate an interim final rule for carrying out section 212, other than for the list referred to in subsection (a) of this section (but such rule may incorporate by reference provisions promulgated pursuant to subsection (a)). Such interim final rule shall take effect 60 days after the date on which such rule is promulgated, including for purposes of—

(1) section 175b(c) of title 18, United States Code (relating to criminal penalties), as added by section 231(a)(5) of this Act; and

(2) section 212(i) of this Act (relating to civil penalties).

(d) TRANSITIONAL PROVISION REGARDING CURRENT RESEARCH AND EDUCATION.—The interim final rule under subsection (c) shall include time frames for the applicability of the rule that minimize disruption of research or educational projects that involve biological agents and toxins listed pursuant to section 212(a)(1) and that were underway as of the effective date of such rule.

Subtitle C—Interagency Coordination Regarding Overlap Agents and Toxins

SEC. 221. INTERAGENCY COORDINATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) COORDINATION.—The Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall in accordance with this section coordinate activities regarding overlap agents and toxins.

(2) OVERLAP AGENTS AND TOXINS; OTHER TERMS.—For purposes of this section:

(A) The term "overlap agent or toxin" means a biological agent or toxin that—

(i) is listed pursuant to section 315A(a)(1) of the Public Health Service Act, as added by section 201 of this Act; and

(ii) is listed pursuant to section 212(a)(1) of this Act.

(B) The term "section 351A program" means the program under section 351A of the Public Health Service Act.

(C) The term "section 212 program" means the program under section 212 of this Act.

(b) CERTAIN MATTERS.—In carrying out the section 351A program and the section 212 program, the Secretary of Health and Human Services and the Secretary of Agriculture shall, to the greatest extent practicable, coordinate activities to achieve the following purposes:

(1) To minimize any conflicts between the regulations issued under, and activities carried out under, such programs.

(2) To minimize the administrative burden on persons subject to regulation under both of such programs.

(3) To ensure the appropriate availability of biological agents and toxins for legitimate biomedical, agricultural or veterinary research, education, or other such purposes.

(4) To ensure that registration information for overlap agents and toxins under the section 351A and section 212 programs is contained in both the national database under the section 351A program and the national database under the section 212 program.

(c) MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Promptly after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall enter into a memorandum of understanding regarding overlap agents and toxins that is in accordance with paragraphs (2) through (4) and contains such additional provisions as the Secretary of Agriculture and the Secretary of Health and Human Services determine to be appropriate.

(2) SINGLE REGISTRATION SYSTEM REGARDING REGISTERED PERSONS.—The memorandum of understanding under paragraph (1) shall provide for the development and implementation of a single system of registration for persons who possess, use, or transfer overlap agents or toxins and are required to register under both the section 351A program and the section 212 program. For purposes of such system, the memorandum shall provide for the development and implementation of the following:

(A) A single registration form through which the person submitting the form provides all information that is required for registration under the section 351A program and all information that is required for registration under the section 212 program.

(B) A procedure through which a person may choose to submit the single registration form to the agency administering the section 351A program (in the manner provided under such program), or to the agency administering the section 212 program (in the manner provided under such program).

(C) A procedure through which a copy of a single registration form received pursuant to subparagraph (B) by the agency administering one of such programs is promptly provided to the agency administering the other program.

(D) A procedure through which the agency receiving the single registration form under one of such programs obtains the concurrence of the agency administering the other program that the requirements for registration under the other program have been met.

(E) A procedure through which—

(i) the agency receiving the single registration form under one of such programs informs the agency administering the other program whether the receiving agency has denied the registration; and

(ii) each of such agencies ensures that registrations are entered into the national database of registered persons that is maintained by each such agency.

(3) PROCESS OF IDENTIFICATION.—With respect to the process of identification under the section 351A program and the section 212 program for names and other identifying information submitted to the Attorney General (relating to certain categories of individuals and entities), the memorandum of understanding under paragraph (1) shall provide for the development and implementation of the following:

(A) A procedure through which a person who is required to submit information pursuant to such process makes (in addition to the submission to the Attorney General) a submission, at the option of the person, to either the agency administering the section 351A program or the agency administering the section 212 program, but not both, which submission satisfies the requirement of submission for both of such programs.

(B) A procedure for the sharing by both of such agencies of information received from the Attorney General by one of such agencies pursuant to the submission under subparagraph (A).

(C) A procedure through which the agencies administering such programs concur in determinations that access to overlap agents and toxins will be granted.

(4) COORDINATION OF INSPECTIONS AND ENFORCEMENT.—The memorandum of understanding under paragraph (1) shall provide for the development and implementation of procedures under which Federal personnel under the section 351A program and the section 212 program may share responsibilities for inspections and enforcement activities under such programs regarding overlap agents and toxins. Activities carried out under such procedures by one of such programs on behalf of the other may be carried out with or without reimbursement by the agency that administers the other program.

(5) DATE CERTAIN FOR IMPLEMENTATION.—The memorandum of understanding under paragraph (1) shall be implemented not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act. Until the single system of registration under paragraph (2) is implemented, persons who possess, use, or transfer overlap agents or toxins shall register under both the section 351A program and the section 212 program.

(d) JOINT REGULATIONS.—Not later than 18 months after the date on which the single system of registration under subsection (c)(2) is implemented, the Secretary of Health and Human Services and the Secretary of Agriculture shall jointly issue regulations for the possession, use, and transfer of overlap agents and toxins that meet the requirements of both the section 351A program and the section 212 program.

Subtitle D—Criminal Penalties Regarding Certain Biological Agents and Toxins

SEC. 231. CRIMINAL PENALTIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 175b of title 18, United States Code, as added by section 817 of Public Law 107–56, is amended—

(1) by striking "(a)" and inserting "(a)(1)";

(2) by transferring subsection (c) from the current placement of the subsection and inserting the subsection before subsection (b);

(3) by striking "(c)" and inserting "(2);

(4) by redesignating subsection (b) as subsection (d); and

(5) by inserting before subsection (d) (as so redesignated) the following subsections:

"(b) TRANSFER TO UNREGISTERED PERSON.—

"(1) SELECT AGENTS.—Whoever transfers a select agent to a person who the transferor knows or has reasonable cause to believe is not registered as required by regulations under subsection (b) or (c) of section 351A of the Public Health Service Act shall be fined under this title, or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

"(2) CERTAIN OTHER BIOLOGICAL AGENTS AND TOXINS.—Whoever transfers a biological agent or toxin listed pursuant to section 212(a)(1) of the Agricultural Bioterrorism Protection Act of 2002 to a person who the transferor knows or has reasonable cause to believe is not registered as required by regulations under subsection (b) or (c) of section 212 of such Act shall be fined under this title, or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

"(c) UNREGISTERED FOR POSSESSION.—

"(1) SELECT AGENTS.—Whoever knowingly possesses a biological agent or toxin where such agent or toxin is a select agent for which such person has not obtained a registration required by regulations under section 351A(c) of the Public Health Service Act shall be fined under this title, or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.

"(2) CERTAIN OTHER BIOLOGICAL AGENTS AND TOXINS.—Whoever knowingly possesses a biological agent or toxin where such agent or toxin is a biological agent or toxin listed pursuant to section 212(a)(1) of the Agricultural Bioterrorism Protection Act of 2002 for which such person has not obtained a registration required by regulations under section 212(c) of such Act shall be fined under this title, or imprisoned for not more than 5 years, or both.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Chapter 10 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in section 175b (as added by section 817 of Public Law 107–56 and amended by subsection (a) of this section)—

(A) in subsection (d)(1), by striking "The term" and all that follows through "does not include" and inserting the following: "The term 'select agent' means a biological agent or toxin to which subsection (a) applies. Such term (including for purposes of subsection (a)) does not include"; and

(B) in the heading for the section, by striking "Possession by restricted persons" and inserting "Select agents; certain other agents"; and

(2) in the chapter analysis, in the item relating to section 175b, by striking "Possession by restricted persons." and inserting "Select agents; certain other agents.".

(c) TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS.—Chapter 10 of title 18, United States Code, as amended by section 817 of Public Law 107–56 and subsections (a) and (b) of this section, is amended—

(1) in section 175(c), by striking "protective" and all that follows and inserting "protective, bona fide research, or other peaceful purposes.";

(2) in section 175b—

(A) in subsection (a)(1), by striking "described in subsection (b)" and all that follows and inserting the following: "shall ship or transport in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce, or possess in or affecting interstate or foreign commerce, any biological agent or toxin, or receive any biological agent or toxin that has been shipped or transported in interstate or foreign commerce, if the biological agent or toxin is listed as a select agent in Appendix A of part 72 of title 42, Code of Federal Regulations, pursuant to section 351A of the Public Health Service Act, and is not exempted under subsection (h) of section 72.6, or Appendix A of part 72, of title 42, Code of Federal Regulations."; and

(B) in subsection (d)(3), by striking "section 1010(a)(3)" and inserting "section 101(a)(3)";

(3) in section 176(a)(1)(A), by striking "exists by reason of" and inserting "pertains to"; and

(4) in section 178—

(A) in paragraph (1), by striking "means any micro-organism" and all that follows through "product, capable of" and inserting the following: "means any microorganism (including, but not limited to, bacteria, viruses, fungi, rickettsiae or protozoa), or infectious substance, or any naturally occurring, bioengineered or synthesized component of any such microorganism or infectious substance, capable of";

(B) in paragraph (2), by striking "means the toxic" and all that follows through "including—" and inserting the following: "means the toxic material or product of plants, animals, microorganisms (including, but not limited to, bacteria, viruses, fungi, rickettsiae or protozoa), or infectious substances, or a recombinant or synthesized molecule, whatever their origin and method of production, and includes—"; and

(C) in paragraph (4), by striking "recombinant molecule," and all that follows through "biotechnology," and inserting "recombinant or synthesized molecule,".

(d) ADDITIONAL TECHNICAL CORRECTION.—Section 2332a of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), in the matter preceding paragraph (1), by striking "section 229F)" and all that follows through "section 178)—" and inserting "section 229F)—"; and

(2) in subsection (c)(2)(C), by striking "a disease organism" and inserting "a biological agent, toxin, or vector (as those terms are defined in section 178 of this title)".

TITLE III—PROTECTING SAFETY AND SECURITY OF FOOD AND DRUG SUPPLY

Subtitle A—Protection of Food Supply

SEC. 301. FOOD SAFETY AND SECURITY STRATEGY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The President's Council on Food Safety (as established by Executive Order 13100) shall, in consultation with the Secretary of Transportation, the Secretary of the Treasury, other relevant Federal agencies, the food industry, consumer and producer groups, scientific organizations, and the States, develop a crisis communications and education strategy with respect to bioterrorist threats to the food supply. Such strategy shall address threat assessments; technologies and procedures for securing food processing and manufacturing facilities and modes of transportation; response and notification procedures; and risk communications to the public.

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—For the purpose of implementing the strategy developed under subsection (a), there are authorized to be appropriated $750,000 for fiscal year 2002, and such sums as may be necessary for each subsequent fiscal year.

SEC. 302. PROTECTION AGAINST ADULTERATION OF FOOD.

(a) INCREASING INSPECTIONS FOR DETECTION OF ADULTERATION OF FOOD.—Section 801 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 381) is amended by adding at the end the following subsection:

"(h)(1) The Secretary shall give high priority to increasing the number of inspections under this section for the purpose of enabling the Secretary to inspect food offered for import at ports of entry into the United States, with the greatest priority given to inspections to detect the intentional adulteration of food.".

(b) IMPROVEMENTS TO INFORMATION MANAGEMENT SYSTEMS.—Section 801(h) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, as added by subsection (a) of this section, is amended by adding at the end the following paragraph:

"(2) The Secretary shall give high priority to making necessary improvements to the information management systems of the Food and Drug Administration that contain information related to foods imported or offered for import into the United States for purposes of improving the ability of the Secretary to allocate resources, detect the intentional adulteration of food, and facilitate the importation of food that is in compliance with this Act.".

(c) LINKAGES WITH APPROPRIATE PUBLIC ENTITIES.—Section 801(h) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, as amended by subsection (b) of this section, is amended by adding at the end the following paragraph:

"(3) The Secretary shall improve linkages with other regulatory agencies of the Federal Government that share responsibility for food safety, and shall with respect to such safety improve linkages with the States and Indian tribes (as defined in section 4(e) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450b(e))).".

(d) TESTING FOR RAPID DETECTION OF ADULTERATION OF FOOD.—Section 801 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, as amended by subsection (a) of this section, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(i)(1) For use in inspections of food under this section, the Secretary shall provide for research on the development of tests and sampling methodologies—

"(A) whose purpose is to test food in order to rapidly detect the adulteration of the food, with the greatest priority given to detect the intentional adulteration of food; and

"(B) whose results offer significant improvements over the available technology in terms of accuracy, timing, or costs.

"(2) In providing for research under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall give priority to conducting research on the development of tests that are suitable for inspections of food at ports of entry into the United States.

"(3) In providing for research under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall as appropriate coordinate with the Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, the Director of the National Institutes of Health, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, and the Secretary of Agriculture.

"(4) The Secretary shall annually submit to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions of the Senate, a report describing the progress made in research under paragraph (1), including progress regarding paragraph (2).".

(e) ASSESSMENT OF THREAT OF INTENTIONAL ADULTERATION OF FOOD.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the Commissioner of Food and Drugs, shall ensure that, not later than six months after the date of the enactment of this Act—

(1) the assessment that (as of such date of enactment) is being conducted on the threat of the intentional adulteration of food is completed; and

(2) a report describing the findings of the assessment is submitted to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions of the Senate.

(f) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—For the purpose of carrying out this section and the amendments made by this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $100,000,000 for fiscal year 2002, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 2003 through 2006, in addition to other authorizations of appropriations that are available for such purpose.

SEC. 303. ADMINISTRATIVE DETENTION.

(a) EXPANDED AUTHORITY.—Section 304 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 334) is amended by adding at the end the following subsection:

"(h) ADMINISTRATIVE DETENTION OF FOODS.—

"(1) DETENTION AUTHORITY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—An officer or qualified employee of the Food and Drug Administration may order the detention, in accordance with this subsection, of any article of food that is found during an inspection, examination, or investigation under this Act conducted by such officer or qualified employee, if the officer or qualified employee has credible evidence or information indicating that such article presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death to humans or animals.

"(B) SECRETARY'S APPROVAL.—An article of food may be ordered detained under subparagraph (A) only if the Secretary or an official designated by the Secretary approves the order. An official may not be so designated unless the official is the director of the district under this Act in which the article involved is located, or is an official senior to such director.

"(2) PERIOD OF DETENTION.—An article of food may be detained under paragraph (1) for a reasonable period, not to exceed 20 days, unless a greater period, not to exceed 30 days, is necessary, to enable the Secretary to institute an action under subsection (a) or section 302. The Secretary shall by regulation provide for procedures for instituting such action on an expedited basis with respect to perishable foods.

"(3) SECURITY OF DETAINED ARTICLE.—An order under paragraph (1) with respect to an article of food may require that such article be labeled or marked as detained, and shall require that the article be removed to a secure facility, as appropriate. An article subject to such an order shall not be transferred by any person from the place at which the article is ordered detained, or from the place to which the article is so removed, as the case may be, until released by the Secretary or until the expiration of the detention period applicable under such order, whichever occurs first. This subsection may not be construed as authorizing the delivery of the article pursuant to the execution of a bond while the article is subject to the order, and section 801(b) does not authorize the delivery of the article pursuant to the execution of a bond while the article is subject to the order.

"(4) APPEAL OF DETENTION ORDER.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—With respect to an article of food ordered detained under paragraph (1), any person who would be entitled to be a claimant for such article if the article were seized under subsection (a) may appeal the order to the Secretary. Within five days after such an appeal is filed, the Secretary, after providing opportunity for an informal hearing, shall confirm or terminate the order involved, and such confirmation by the Secretary shall be considered a final agency action for purposes of section 702 of title 5, United States Code. If during such five-day period the Secretary fails to provide such an opportunity, or to confirm or terminate such order, the order is deemed to be terminated.

"(B) EFFECT OF INSTITUTING COURT ACTION.—The process under subparagraph (A) for the appeal of an order under paragraph (1) terminates if the Secretary institutes an action under subsection (a) or section 302 regarding the article of food involved.".

(b) PROHIBITED ACT.—Section 301 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 331) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(bb) The transfer of an article of food in violation of an order under section 304(h), or the removal or alteration of any mark or label required by the order to identify the article as detained.".

(c) TEMPORARY HOLDS AT PORTS OF ENTRY.—Section 801 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, as amended by section 302(d)of this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(j)(1) If an officer or qualified employee of the Food and Drug Administration has credible evidence or information indicating that an article of food presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death to humans or animals, and such officer or qualified employee is unable to inspect, examine, or investigate such article upon the article being offered for import at a port of entry into the United States, the officer or qualified employee shall request the Secretary of Treasury to hold the food at the port of entry for a reasonable period of time, not to exceed 24 hours, for the purpose of enabling the Secretary to inspect, examine, or investigate the article as appropriate.

"(2) The Secretary shall request the Secretary of Treasury to remove an article held pursuant to paragraph (1) to a secure facility, as appropriate. During the period of time that such article is so held, the article shall not be transferred by any person from the port of entry into the United States for the article, or from the secure facility to which the article has been removed, as the case may be. Subsection (b) does not authorize the delivery of the article pursuant to the execution of a bond while the article is so held.

"(3) An officer or qualified employee of the Food and Drug Administration may make a request under paragraph (1) only if the Secretary or an official designated by the Secretary approves the request. An official may not be so designated unless the official is the director of the district under this Act in which the article involved is located, or is an official senior to such director.

"(4) With respect to an article of food for which a request under paragraph (1) is made, the Secretary, promptly after the request is made, shall notify the State in which the port of entry involved is located that the request has been made, and as applicable, that such article is being held under this subsection.".

SEC. 304. DEBARMENT FOR REPEATED OR SERIOUS FOOD IMPORT VIOLATIONS.

(a) DEBARMENT AUTHORITY.—

(1) PERMISSIVE DEBARMENT.—Section 306(b)(1) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 335a(b)(1)) is amended—

(A) in subparagraph (A), by striking "or" after the comma at the end;

(B) in subparagraph (B), by striking the period at the end and inserting ", or"; and

(C) by adding at the end the following subparagraph:

"(C) a person from importing an article of food or offering such an article for import into the United States.";

(2) AMENDMENT REGARDING DEBARMENT GROUNDS.—Section 306(b) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 335a(b)) is amended—

(A) in paragraph (2), in the matter preceding subparagraph (A), by inserting "subparagraph (A) or (B) of" before "paragraph (1)";

(B) by redesignating paragraph (3) as paragraph (4); and

(C) by inserting after paragraph (2) the following paragraph:

"(3) PERSONS SUBJECT TO PERMISSIVE DEBARMENT; FOOD IMPORTATION.—A person is subject to debarment under paragraph (1)(C) if—

"(A) the person has been convicted of a felony for conduct relating to the importation into the United States of any food; or

"(B) the person has engaged in a pattern of importing or offering for import adulterated food that presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death to humans or animals.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 306 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 335a) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a), in the heading for the subsection, by striking "MANDATORY DEBARMENT.—" and inserting "MANDATORY DEBARMENT; CERTAIN DRUG APPLICATIONS.—";

(2) in subsection (b)—

(A) in the heading for the subsection, by striking "PERMISSIVE DEBARMENT.—" and inserting "PERMISSIVE DEBARMENT; CERTAIN DRUG APPLICATIONS; FOOD IMPORTS.—"; and

(B) in paragraph (2), in the heading for the paragraph, by striking "PERMISSIVE DEBARMENT.—" and inserting "PERMISSIVE DEBARMENT; CERTAIN DRUG APPLICATIONS.—";

(3) in subsection (c)(2)(A)(iii), by striking "subsection (b)(2)" and inserting "paragraph (2) or (3) of subsection (b)";

(4) in subsection (d)(3)—

(A) in subparagraph (A)(i), by striking "or (b)(2)(A)" and inserting " or paragraph (2)(A) or (3) of subsection (b)";

(B) in subparagraph (A)(ii)(II), by inserting "in applicable cases," before "sufficient audits";

(C) in subparagraph (B), in each of clauses (i) and (ii), by inserting "or subsection (b)(3)" after "subsection (b)(2)(B)"; and

(D) in subparagraph (B)(ii), by inserting before the period the following: "or the food importation process, as the case may be".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATES.—Section 306(l)(2) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 335a(l)(2)) is amended—

(1) in the first sentence—

(A) by striking "and" after "subsection (b)(2),"; and

(B) by inserting ", and subsection (b)(3)(A)" after "subsection (b)(2)(B)"; and

(2) in the second sentence, by inserting ", subsection (b)(3)(B)," after "subsection (b)(2)(B)".

(d) PROHIBITED ACT.—Section 301 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, as amended by section 303(b) of this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(cc) The importing or offering for import into the United States of an article of food by, with the assistance of, or at the direction of, a person debarred under section 306(b)(3).".

(e) IMPORTATION BY DEBARRED PERSONS.—Section 801 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, as amended by section 303(c) of this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following subsection:

"(k)(1) If an article of food is being imported or offered for import into the United States, and the importer, owner, or consignee of the article is a person who has been debarred under section 306(b)(3), such article shall be held at the port of entry for the article, and may not be delivered to such person. Subsection (b) does not authorize the delivery of the article pursuant to the execution of a bond while the article is so held. The article shall be removed to a secure facility, as appropriate. During the period of time that such article is so held, the article shall not be transferred by any person from the port of entry into the United States for the article, or from the secure facility to which the article has been removed, as the case may be.

"(2) An article of food held under paragraph (1) may be delivered to a person who is not a debarred person under section 306(b)(3) if such person affirmatively establishes, at the expense of the person, that the article complies with the requirements of this Act, as determined by the Secretary.".

SEC. 305. REGISTRATION OF FOOD FACILITIES.

"SEC. 415. REGISTRATION OF FOOD FACILITIES.

"(a) REGISTRATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall by regulation require that any facility engaged in manufacturing, processing, packing, or holding food for consumption in the United States be registered with the Secretary. To be registered—

"(A) for a domestic facility, the owner, operator, or agent in charge of the facility shall submit a registration to the Secretary; and

"(B) for a foreign facility, the owner, operator, or agent in charge of the facility shall submit a registration to the Secretary and shall include with the registration the name of the United States agent for the facility.

"(2) REGISTRATION.—An entity (referred to in this section as the 'registrant') shall submit a registration under paragraph (1) to the Secretary containing information necessary to notify the Secretary of the name and address of each facility at which, and all trade names under which, the registrant conducts business and, when determined necessary by the Secretary through guidance, the general food category (as identified under section 170.3 of title 21, Code of Federal Regulations) of any food manufactured, processed, packed, or held at such facility. The registrant shall notify the Secretary in a timely manner of changes to such information.

"(3) PROCEDURE.—Upon receipt of a completed registration described in paragraph (1), the Secretary shall notify the registrant of the receipt of such registration and assign a registration number to each registered facility.

"(4) LIST.—The Secretary shall compile and maintain an up-to-date list of facilities that are registered under this section. Such list and any registration documents submitted pursuant to this subsection shall not be subject to disclosure under section 552 of title 5, United States Code. Information derived from such list or registration documents shall not be subject to disclosure under section 552 of title 5, United States Code, to the extent that it discloses the identity or location of a specific registered person.

"(b) FACILITY.—For purposes of this section:

"(1) The term 'facility' includes any factory, warehouse, or establishment (including a factory, warehouse, or establishment of an importer) that manufactures, processes, packs, or holds food. Such term does not include farms; restaurants; other retail food establishments; nonprofit food establishments in which food is prepared for or served directly to the consumer; or fishing vessels (except such vessels engaged in processing as defined in section 123.3(k) of title 21, Code of Federal Regulations).

"(2) The term 'domestic facility' means a facility located in any of the States or Territories.

"(3)(A) The term 'foreign facility' means a facility that manufacturers, processes, packs, or holds food, but only if food from such facility is exported to the United States without further processing or packaging outside the United States.

"(B) A food may not be considered to have undergone further processing or packaging for purposes of subparagraph (A) solely on the basis that labeling was added or that any similar activity of a de minimis nature was carried out with respect to the food.

"(c) RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.—Nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize the Secretary to require an application, review, or licensing process.".

"(dd) The failure to register in accordance with section 415.".

(c) IMPORTATION; FAILURE TO REGISTER.—Section 801 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, as amended by section 304(e) of this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following subsection:

"(l)(1) If an article of food is being imported or offered for import into the United States, and such article is from a foreign facility for which a registration has not been submitted to the Secretary under section 415, such article shall be held at the port of entry for the article, and may not be delivered to the importer, owner, or consignee of the article, until the foreign facility is so registered. Subsection (b) does not authorize the delivery of the article pursuant to the execution of a bond while the article is so held. The article shall be removed to a secure facility, as appropriate. During the period of time that such article is so held, the article shall not be transferred by any person from the port of entry into the United States for the article, or from the secure facility to which the article has been removed, as the case may be.".

(d) ELECTRONIC FILING.—For the purpose of reducing paperwork and reporting burdens, the Secretary of Health and Human Services may provide for, and encourage the use of, electronic methods of submitting to the Secretary registrations required pursuant to this section. In providing for the electronic submission of such registrations, the Secretary shall ensure adequate authentication protocols are used to enable identification of the registrant and validation of the data as appropriate.

(e) RULEMAKING; EFFECTIVE DATE.—Not later than 18 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall promulgate proposed and final regulations for the requirement of registration under section 415 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (as added by subsection (a) of this section). Such requirement of registration takes effect—

(1) upon the effective date of such final regulations; or

(2) upon the expiration of such 18-month period if the final regulations have not been made effective as of the expiration of such period, subject to compliance with the final regulations when the final regulations are made effective.

SEC. 306. MAINTENANCE AND INSPECTION OF RECORDS FOR FOODS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter IV of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, as amended by section 305 of this Act, is amended by inserting before section 415 the following section:

"SEC. 414. MAINTENANCE AND INSPECTION OF RECORDS.

"(a) RECORDS INSPECTION.—If the Secretary has a reasonable belief that an article of food is adulterated and presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death to humans or animals, each person (excluding farms and restaurants) who manufactures, processes, packs, distributes, receives, holds, or imports such article shall, at the request of an officer or employee duly designated by the Secretary, permit such officer or employee, upon presentation of appropriate credentials and a written notice to such person, at reasonable times and within reasonable limits and in a reasonable manner, to have access to and copy all records relating to such article that are needed to assist the Secretary in determining whether the food is adulterated and presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death to humans or animals. The requirement under the preceding sentence applies to all records relating to the manufacture, processing, packing, distribution, receipt, holding, or importation of such article maintained by or on behalf of such person in any format (including paper and electronic formats) and at any location.

"(b) Regulations Concerning Recordkeeping.—The Secretary, in consultation and coordination, as appropriate, with other Federal departments and agencies with responsibilities for regulating food safety, may by regulation establish requirements regarding the establishment and maintenance, for not longer than two years, of records by persons (excluding farms and restaurants) who manufacture, process, pack, transport, distribute, receive, hold, or import food, which records are needed by the Secretary for inspection to allow the Secretary to identify the immediate previous sources and the immediate subsequent recipients of food, including its packaging, in order to address credible threats of serious adverse health consequences or death to humans or animals. The Secretary shall take into account the size of a business in promulgating regulations under this section.

"(c) Protection of Sensitive Information.—The Secretary shall take appropriate measures to ensure that there are in effect effective procedures to prevent the unauthorized disclosure of any trade secret or confidential information that is obtained by the Secretary pursuant to this section.

"(d) Limitations.—This section shall not be construed—

"(1) to limit the authority of the Secretary to inspect records or to require establishment and maintenance of records under any other provision of this Act;

"(2) to authorize the Secretary to impose any requirements with respect to a food to the extent that it is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture pursuant to the Federal Meat Inspection Act (21 U.S.C. 601 et seq.), the Poultry Products Inspection Act (21 U.S.C. 451 et seq.), or the Egg Products Inspection Act (21 U.S.C. 1031 et seq);

"(3) to have any legal effect on section 552 of title 5, United States Code, or section 1905 of title 18, United States Code; or

"(4) to extend to recipes for food, financial data, pricing data, personnel data, research data, or sales data (other than shipment data regarding sales).".

(b) Factory Inspection.—Section 704(a) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 374(a)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: "In the case of any person (excluding farms and restaurants) who manufactures, processes, packs, transports, distributes, holds, or imports foods, the inspection shall extend to all records and other information described in section 414 when the Secretary has a reasonable belief that an article of food is adulterated and presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death to humans or animals, subject to the limitations established in section 414(d)."; and

(2) in paragraph (2), in the matter preceding subparagraph (A), by striking "second sentence" and inserting "third sentence".

(c) Prohibited Act.—Section 301 of the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 331) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (e)—

(A) by striking "by section 412, 504, or 703" and inserting "by section 412, 414, 504, 703, or 704(a)"; and

(B) by striking "under section 412" and inserting "under section 412, 414(b)"; and

(2) in paragraph (j), by inserting "414," after "412,".

(d) Expedited Rulemaking.—Not later than 18 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall promulgate proposed and final regulations establishing recordkeeping requirements under subsection 414(b) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (as added by subsection (a)).

SEC. 307. PRIOR NOTICE OF IMPORTED FOOD SHIPMENTS.

(a) In General.—Section 801 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, as amended by section 305(c) of this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following subsection:

"(m)(1) In the case of an article of food that is being imported or offered for import into the United States, the Secretary, after consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury, shall by regulation require, for the purpose of enabling such article to be inspected at ports of entry into the United States, the submission to the Secretary of a notice providing the identity of each of the following: The article; the manufacturer and shipper of the article; if known within the specified period of time that notice is required to be provided, the grower of the article; the country from which the article originates; the country from which the article is shipped; and the anticipated port of entry for the article. An article of food imported or offered for import without submission of such notice in accordance with the requirements under this paragraph shall be refused admission into the United States. Nothing in this section may be construed as a limitation on the port of entry for an article of food.

"(2)(A) Regulations under paragraph (1) shall require that a notice under such paragraph be provided by a specified period of time in advance of the time of the importation of the article of food involved or the offering of the food for import, which period shall be no less than the minimum amount of time necessary for the Secretary to receive, review, and appropriately respond to such notification, but may not exceed five days. In determining the specified period of time required under this subparagraph, the Secretary may consider, but is not limited to consideration of, the effect on commerce of such period of time, the locations of the various ports of entry into the United States, the various modes of transportation, the types of food imported into the United States, and any other such consideration. Nothing in the preceding sentence may be construed as a limitation on the obligation of the Secretary to receive, review, and appropriately respond to any notice under paragraph (1).

"(B)(i) If an article of food is being imported or offered for import into the United States and a notice under paragraph (1) is not provided in advance in accordance with the requirements under paragraph (1), such article shall be held at the port of entry for the article, and may not be delivered to the importer, owner, or consignee of the article, until such notice is submitted to the Secretary, and the Secretary examines the notice and determines that the notice is in accordance with the requirements under paragraph (1). Subsection (b) does not authorize the delivery of the article pursuant to the execution of a bond while the article is so held. The article shall be removed to a secure facility, as appropriate. During the period of time that such article is so held, the article shall not be transferred by any person from the port of entry into the United States for the article, or from the secure facility to which the article has been removed, as the case may be.

"(ii) In carrying out clause (i) with respect to an article of food, the Secretary shall determine whether there is in the possession of the Secretary any credible evidence or information indicating that such article presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death to humans or animals.

"(3)(A) This subsection may not be construed as limiting the authority of the Secretary to obtain information under any other provision of this Act.

"(B) This subsection may not be construed as authorizing the Secretary to impose any requirements with respect to a food to the extent that it is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the Secretary of Agriculture pursuant to the Federal Meat Inspection Act (21 U.S.C. 601 et seq.), the Poultry Products Inspection Act (21 U.S.C. 451 et seq.), or the Egg Products Inspection Act (21 U.S.C. 1031 et seq).".

(b) Prohibited Act.—Section 301 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, as amended by section 305(b) of this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(ee) The importing or offering for import into the United States of an article of food in violation of the requirements under section 801(m).".

(c) Rulemaking; Effective Date.—

(1) In general.—Not later than 18 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall promulgate proposed and final regulations for the requirement of providing notice in accordance with section 801(m) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (as added by subsection (a) of this section). Such requirement of notification takes effect—

(A) upon the effective date of such final regulations; or

(B) upon the expiration of such 18-month period if the final regulations have not been made effective as of the expiration of such period, subject to compliance with the final regulations when the final regulations are made effective.

(2) Default; minimum period of advance notice.—If under paragraph (1) the requirement for providing notice in accordance with section 801(m) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act takes effect without final regulations having been made effective, then for purposes of such requirement, the specified period of time that the notice is required to be made in advance of the time of the importation of the article of food involved or the offering of the food for import shall be not fewer than eight hours and not more than five days, which shall remain in effect until the final regulations are made effective.

SEC. 308. AUTHORITY TO MARK ARTICLES REFUSED ADMISSION INTO UNITED STATES.

(a) In General.—Section 801 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 381(a)), as amended by section 307(a) of this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(n)(1) If a food has been refused admission under subsection (a), other than such a food that is required to be destroyed, the Secretary may require the owner or consignee of the food to affix to the container of the food a label that clearly and conspicuously bears the statement: 'UNITED STATES: REFUSED ENTRY'.

"(2) All expenses in connection with affixing a label under paragraph (1) shall be paid by the owner or consignee of the food involved, and in default of such payment, shall constitute a lien against future importations made by such owner or consignee.

"(3) A requirement under paragraph (1) remains in effect until the Secretary determines that the food involved has been brought into compliance with this Act.".

(b) Misbranded Foods.—Section 403 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 343) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(v) If—

"(1) it fails to bear a label required by the Secretary under section 801(n)(1) (relating to food refused admission into the United States);

"(2) the Secretary finds that the food presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death to humans or animals; and

"(3) upon or after notifying the owner or consignee involved that the label is required under section 801, the Secretary informs the owner or consignee that the food presents such a threat.".

(c) Rule of Construction.—With respect to articles of food that are imported or offered for import into the United States, nothing in this section shall be construed to limit the authority of the Secretary of Health and Human Services or the Secretary of the Treasury to require the marking of refused articles of food under any other provision of law.

SEC. 309. PROHIBITION AGAINST PORT SHOPPING.

Section 402 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 342) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(h) If it is an article of food imported or offered for import into the United States and the article of food has previously been refused admission under section 801(a), unless the person reoffering the article affirmatively establishes, at the expense of the owner or consignee of the article, that the article complies with the applicable requirements of this Act, as determined by the Secretary.".

SEC. 310. NOTICES TO STATES REGARDING IMPORTED FOOD.

Chapter IX of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 391 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following section:

"SEC. 908. NOTICES TO STATES REGARDING IMPORTED FOOD.

"(a) In General.—If the Secretary has credible evidence or information indicating that a shipment of imported food or portion thereof presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death to humans or animals, the Secretary shall provide notice regarding such threat to the States in which the food is held or will be held, and to the States in which the manufacturer, packer, or distributor of the food is located, to the extent that the Secretary has knowledge of which States are so involved. In providing notice to a State, the Secretary shall request the State to take such action as the State considers appropriate, if any, to protect the public health regarding the food involved.

"(b) Rule of Construction.—Subsection (a) may not be construed as limiting the authority of the Secretary with respect to food under any other provision of this Act.".

SEC. 311. GRANTS TO STATES FOR INSPECTIONS.

Chapter IX of the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act, as amended by section 310 of this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following section:

"SEC. 909. GRANTS TO STATES FOR INSPECTIONS.

"(a) In General.—The Secretary is authorized to make grants to States, territories, and Indian tribes (as defined in section 4(e) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450b(e))) that undertake examinations, inspections, and investigations, and related activities under section 702. The funds provided under such grants shall only be available for the costs of conducting such examinations, inspections, investigations, and related activities.

"(b) Notices Regarding Adulterated Imported Food.—The Secretary may make grants to the States for the purpose of assisting the States with the costs of taking appropriate action to protect the public health in response to notification under section 908, including planning and otherwise preparing to take such action.

"(c) Authorization of Appropriations.—For the purpose of carrying out this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $10,000,000 for fiscal year 2002, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 2003 through 2006.".

SEC. 312. SURVEILLANCE AND INFORMATION GRANTS AND AUTHORITIES.

"SEC. 317R. FOOD SAFETY GRANTS.

"(a) In General.—The Secretary may award grants to States and Indian tribes (as defined in section 4(e) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450b(e))) to expand participation in networks to enhance Federal, State, and local food safety efforts, including meeting the costs of establishing and maintaining the food safety surveillance, technical, and laboratory capacity needed for such participation.

"(b) Authorization of Appropriations.—For the purpose of carrying out this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $19,500,000 for fiscal year 2002, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 2003 through 2006.".

SEC. 313. SURVEILLANCE OF ZOONOTIC DISEASES.

The Secretary of Health and Human Services, through the Commissioner of Food and Drugs and the Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, and the Secretary of Agriculture shall coordinate the surveillance of zoonotic diseases.

SEC. 314. AUTHORITY TO COMMISSION OTHER FEDERAL OFFICIALS TO CONDUCT INSPECTIONS.

Section 702(a) of the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 372(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking "(a)" and inserting "(a)(1)";

(2) by striking "In the case of food packed" and inserting the following:

"(3) In the case of food packed";

(3) by striking "For the purposes of this subsection" and inserting the following:

"(4) For the purposes of this subsection,"; and

(4) by inserting after paragraph (1) (as designated by paragraph (1) of this section) the following paragraph:

"(2)(A) In addition to the authority established in paragraph (1), the Secretary, pursuant to a memorandum of understanding between the Secretary and the head of another Federal department or agency, is authorized to conduct examinations and investigations for the purposes of this Act through the officers and employees of such other department or agency, subject to subparagraph (B). Such a memorandum shall include provisions to ensure adequate training of such officers and employees to conduct the examinations and investigations. The memorandum of understanding shall contain provisions regarding reimbursement. Such provisions may, at the sole discretion of the head of the other department or agency, require reimbursement, in whole or in part, from the Secretary for the examinations or investigations performed under this section by the officers or employees of the other department or agency.

"(B) A memorandum of understanding under subparagraph (A) between the Secretary and another Federal department or agency is effective only in the case of examinations or inspections at facilities or other locations that are jointly regulated by the Secretary and such department or agency.

"(C) For any fiscal year in which the Secretary and the head of another Federal department or agency carries out one or more examinations or inspections under a memorandum of understanding under subparagraph (A), the Secretary and the head of such department or agency shall with respect to their respective departments or agencies submit to the committees of jurisdiction (authorizing and appropriating) in the House of Representatives and the Senate a report that provides, for such year—

"(i) the number of officers or employees that carried out one or more programs, projects, or activities under such memorandum;

"(ii) the number of additional articles that were inspected or examined as a result of such memorandum; and

"(iii) the number of additional examinations or investigations that were carried out pursuant to such memorandum.".

SEC. 315. RULE OF CONSTRUCTION.

Nothing in this title, or an amendment made by this title, shall be construed to alter the jurisdiction between the Secretaries of Agriculture and of Health and Human Services, under applicable statutes and regulations.

Subtitle B—Protection of Drug Supply

SEC. 321. ANNUAL REGISTRATION OF FOREIGN MANUFACTURERS; SHIPPING INFORMATION; DRUG AND DEVICE LISTING.

(a) Annual Registration; Listing.—Section 510 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 360) is amended—

(1) in subsection (i)(1)—

(A) by striking "Any establishment" and inserting "On or before December 31 of each year, any establishment"; and

(B) by striking "shall register" and all that follows and inserting the following: "shall, through electronic means in accordance with the criteria of the Secretary, register with the Secretary the name and place of business of the establishment, the name of the United States agent for the establishment, the name of each importer of such drug or device in the United States that is known to the establishment, and the name of each person who imports or offers for import such drug or device to the United States for purposes of importation."; and

(2) in subsection (j)(1), in the first sentence, by striking "or (d)" and inserting "(d), or (i)".

(b) Importation; Statement Regarding Registration of Manufacturer.—

(1) In general.—Section 801 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, as amended by section 308(a) of this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following subsection:

"(o) If an article that is a drug or device is being imported or offered for import into the United States, and the importer, owner, or consignee of such article does not, at the time of offering the article for import, submit to the Secretary a statement that identifies the registration under section 510(i) of each establishment that with respect to such article is required under such section to register with the Secretary, the article may be refused admission. If the article is refused admission for failure to submit such a statement, the article shall be held at the port of entry for the article, and may not be delivered to the importer, owner, or consignee of the article, until such a statement is submitted to the Secretary. Subsection (b) does not authorize the delivery of the article pursuant to the execution of a bond while the article is so held. The article shall be removed to a secure facility, as appropriate. During the period of time that such article is so held, the article shall not be transferred by any person from the port of entry into the United States for the article, or from the secure facility to which the article has been removed, as the case may be.".

(2) PROHIBITED ACT.—Section 301 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, as amended by section 307(b) of this Act, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(ff) The importing or offering for import into the United States of a drug or device with respect to which there is a failure to comply with a request of the Secretary to submit to the Secretary a statement under section 801(o).".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section take effect upon the expiration of the 180-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 322. REQUIREMENT OF ADDITIONAL INFORMATION REGARDING IMPORT COMPONENTS INTENDED FOR USE IN EXPORT PRODUCTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 801(d)(3) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 381(d)(3)) is amended to read as follows:

"(3)(A) Subject to subparagraph (B), no component of a drug, no component part or accessory of a device, or other article of device requiring further processing, which is ready or suitable for use for health-related purposes, and no article of a food additive, color additive, or dietary supplement, including a product in bulk form, shall be excluded from importation into the United States under subsection (a) if each of the following conditions is met:

"(i) The importer of such article of a drug or device or importer of such article of a food additive, color additive, or dietary supplement submits to the Secretary, at the time of initial importation, a statement in accordance with the following:

"(I) Such statement provides that such article is intended to be further processed by the initial owner or consignee, or incorporated by the initial owner or consignee, into a drug, biological product, device, food, food additive, color additive, or dietary supplement that will be exported by the initial owner or consignee from the United States in accordance with subsection (e) or section 802, or with section 351(h) of the Public Health Service Act.

"(II) The statement identifies the manufacturer of such article and each processor, packer, distributor, or other entity that had possession of the article in the chain of possession of the article from the manufacturer to such importer of the article.

"(III) The statement is accompanied by such certificates of analysis as are necessary to identify such article, unless the article is a device or is an article described in paragraph (4).

"(ii) At the time of initial importation and before the delivery of such article to the importer or the initial owner or consignee, such owner or consignee executes a good and sufficient bond providing for the payment of such liquidated damages in the event of default as may be required pursuant to regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury.

"(iii) Such article is used and exported by the initial owner or consignee in accordance with the intent described under clause (i)(I), except for any portions of the article that are destroyed.

"(iv) The initial owner or consignee maintains records on the use or destruction of such article or portions thereof, as the case may be, and submits to the Secretary any such records requested by the Secretary.

"(v) Upon request of the Secretary, the initial owner or consignee submits a report that provides an accounting of the exportation or destruction of such article or portions thereof, and the manner in which such owner or consignee complied with the requirements of this subparagraph.

"(B) Notwithstanding subparagraph (A), the Secretary may refuse admission to an article that otherwise would be imported into the United States under such subparagraph if the Secretary determines that there is credible evidence or information indicating that such article is not intended to be further processed by the initial owner or consignee, or incorporated by the initial owner or consignee, into a drug, biological product, device, food, food additive, color additive, or dietary supplement that will be exported by the initial owner or consignee from the United States in accordance with subsection (e) or section 802, or with section 351(h) of the Public Health Service Act.

"(C) This section may not be construed as affecting the responsibility of the Secretary to ensure that articles imported into the United States under authority of subparagraph (A) meet each of the conditions established in such subparagraph for importation.".

(b) PROHIBITED ACT.—Section 301(w) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 331(w)) is amended to read as follows:

"(w) The making of a knowingly false statement in any statement, certificate of analysis, record, or report required or requested under section 801(d)(3); the failure to submit a certificate of analysis as required under such section; the failure to maintain records or to submit records or reports as required by such section; the release into interstate commerce of any article or portion thereof imported into the United States under such section or any finished product made from such arricle or portion, except for export in accordance with section 801(e) or 802, or with section 351(h) of the Public Health Service Act; or the failure to so export or to destroy such an article or portions thereof, or such a finished product.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section take effect upon the expiration of the 90-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act.

Subtitle C—General Provisions Relating to Upgrade of Agricultural Security

SEC. 331. EXPANSION OF ANIMAL AND PLANT HEALTH INSPECTION SERVICE ACTIVITIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Agriculture (referred to in this section as the "Secretary") may utilize existing authorities to give high priority to enhancing and expanding the capacity of the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service to conduct activities to—

(1) increase the inspection capacity of the Service at international points of origin;

(2) improve surveillance at ports of entry and customs;

(3) enhance methods of protecting against the introduction of plant and animal disease organisms by terrorists;

(4) develop new and improve existing strategies and technologies for dealing with intentional outbreaks of plant and animal disease arising from acts of terrorism or from unintentional introduction, including—

(A) establishing cooperative agreements among Veterinary Services of the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, State animal health commissions and regulatory agencies for livestock and poultry health, and private veterinary practitioners to enhance the preparedness and ability of Veterinary Services and the commissions and agencies to respond to outbreaks of such animal diseases; and

(B) strengthening planning and coordination with State and local agencies, including—

(i) State animal health commissions and regulatory agencies for livestock and poultry health; and

(ii) State agriculture departments; and

(5) otherwise improve the capacity of the Service to protect against the threat of bioterrorism.

(b) AUTOMATED RECORDKEEPING SYSTEM.—The Administrator of the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service may implement a central automated recordkeeping system to provide for the reliable tracking of the status of animal and plant shipments, including those shipments on hold at ports of entry and customs. The Secretary shall ensure that such a system shall be fully accessible to or fully integrated with the Food Safety Inspection Service.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section, $30,000,000 for fiscal year 2002, and such sums as may be necessary for each subsequent fiscal year.

SEC. 332. EXPANSION OF FOOD SAFETY INSPECTION SERVICE ACTIVITIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Agriculture may utilize existing authorities to give high priority to enhancing and expanding the capacity of the Food Safety Inspection Service to conduct activities to—

(1) enhance the ability of the Service to inspect and ensure the safety and wholesomeness of meat and poultry products;

(2) improve the capacity of the Service to inspect international meat and meat products, poultry and poultry products, and egg products at points of origin and at ports of entry;

(3) strengthen the ability of the Service to collaborate with relevant agencies within the Department of Agriculture and with other entities in the Federal Government, the States, and Indian tribes (as defined in section 4(e) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450b(e))) through the sharing of information and technology; and

(4) otherwise expand the capacity of the Service to protect against the threat of bioterrorism.

SEC. 333. BIOSECURITY UPGRADES AT THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

There is authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 2002, $180,000,000 for the purpose of enabling the Agricultural Research Service to conduct building upgrades to modernize existing facilities, of which (1) $100,000,000 shall be allocated for renovation, updating, and expansion of the Biosafety Level 3 laboratory and animal research facilities at the Plum Island Animal Disease Center (Greenport, New York), and of which (2) $80,000,000 shall be allocated for the Agricultural Research Service/Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service facility in Ames, Iowa. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 2003 through 2006 for the purpose described in the preceding sentence, for the planning and design of an Agricultural Research Service biocontainment laboratory for poultry research in Athens, Georgia, and for the planning, updating, and renovation of the Arthropod-Borne Animal Disease Laboratory in Laramie, Wyoming.

SEC. 334. AGRICULTURAL BIOSECURITY.

(a) SECURITY AT COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES.—

(1) GRANTS.—The Secretary of Agriculture (referred to in this section as the "Secretary") may award grants to covered entities to review security standards and practices at their facilities in order to protect against bioterrorist attacks.

(2) COVERED ENTITIES.—Covered entities under this subsection are colleges or universities that—

(A) are colleges or universities as defined in section 1404 of the National Agricultural Research, Extension, and Teaching Policy Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 3103); and

(B) have programs in food and agricultural sciences, as defined in such section.

(3) LIMITATION.—Each individual covered entity may be awarded one grant under paragraph (1), the amount of which shall not exceed $50,000.

(4) CONTRACT AUTHORITY.—Colleges and universities receiving grants under paragraph (1) may use such grants to enter into contracts with independent private organizations with established and demonstrated security expertise to conduct the security reviews specified in such paragraph.

(b) GUIDELINES FOR AGRICULTURAL BIOSECURITY.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may award grants to associations of food producers or consortia of such associations for the development and implementation of educational programs to improve biosecurity on farms in order to ensure the security of farm facilities against potential bioterrorist attacks.

(2) LIMITATION.—Each individual association eligible under paragraph (1) may be awarded one grant under such paragraph, the amount of which shall not exceed $100,000. Each consortium eligible under paragraph (1) may be awarded one grant under such paragraph, the amount of which shall not exceed $100,000 per association participating in the consortium.

(3) CONTRACT AUTHORITY.—Associations of food producers receiving grants under paragraph (1) may use such grants to enter into contracts with independent private organizations with established and demonstrated expertise in biosecurity to assist in the development and implementation of educational programs to improve biosecurity specified in such paragraph.

(c) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section such sums as may be necessary for each fiscal year.

SEC. 335. AGRICULTURAL BIOTERRORISM RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Agriculture (referred to in this section as the "Secretary") may utilize existing research authorities and research programs to protect the food supply of the United States by conducting and supporting research activities to—

(1) enhance the capability of the Secretary to respond in a timely manner to emerging or existing bioterrorist threats to the food and agricultural system of the United States;

(2) develop new and continue partnerships with institutions of higher education and other institutions to help form stable, long-term programs to enhance the biosecurity and food safety of the United States, including the coordination of the development, implementation, and enhancement of diverse capabilities for addressing threats to the nation's agricultural economy and food supply, with special emphasis on planning, training, outreach, and research activities related to vulnerability analyses, incident response, detection, and prevention technologies;

(3) strengthen coordination with the intelligence community to better identify research needs and evaluate materials or information acquired by the intelligence community relating to potential threats to United States agriculture;

(4) expand the involvement of the Secretary with international organizations dealing with plant and animal disease control;

(5) continue research to develop rapid detection field test kits to detect biological threats to plants and animals and to provide such test kits to State and local agencies preparing for or responding to bioterrorism;

(6) develop an agricultural bioterrorism early warning surveillance system through enhancing the capacity of and coordination between State veterinary diagnostic laboratories, Federal and State agricultural research facilities, and public health agencies; and

(7) otherwise improve the capacity of the Secretary to protect against the threat of bioterrorism.

SEC. 336. ANIMAL ENTERPRISE TERRORISM PENALTIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 43(a) of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(a) OFFENSE.—Whoever—

"(1) travels in interstate or foreign commerce, or uses or causes to be used the mail or any facility in interstate or foreign commerce for the purpose of causing physical disruption to the functioning of an animal enterprise; and

"(2) intentionally damages or causes the loss of any property (including animals or records) used by the animal enterprise, or conspires to do so, shall be punished as provided for in subsection (b).".

(b) PENALTIES.—Section 43(b) of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(b) PENALTIES.—

"(1) ECONOMIC DAMAGE.—Any person who, in the course of a violation of subsection (a), causes economic damage not exceeding $10,000 to an animal enterprise shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than 6 months, or both.

"(2) MAJOR ECONOMIC DAMAGE.—Any person who, in the course of a violation of subsection (a), causes economic damage exceeding $10,000 to an animal enterprise shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than 3 years, or both.

"(3) SERIOUS BODILY INJURY.—Any person who, in the course of a violation of subsection (a), causes serious bodily injury to another individual shall be fined under this title or imprisoned not more than 20 years, or both.

"(4) DEATH.—Any person who, in the course of a violation of subsection (a), causes the death of an individual shall be fined under this title and imprisoned for life or for any term of years.".

(c) RESTITUTION.—Section 43(c) of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by striking "and" at the end;

(2) in paragraph (2), by striking the period at the end and inserting "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

"(3) for any other economic damage resulting from the offense.".

TITLE IV—DRINKING WATER SECURITY AND SAFETY

SEC. 401. TERRORIST AND OTHER INTENTIONAL ACTS.

The Safe Drinking Water Act (title XIV of the Public Health Service Act) is amended by inserting the following new section after section 1432:

"SEC. 1433. TERRORIST AND OTHER INTENTIONAL ACTS.

"(a) VULNERABILITY ASSESSMENTS.—(1) Each community water system serving a population of greater than 3,300 persons shall conduct an assessment of the vulnerability of its system to a terrorist attack or other intentional acts intended to substantially disrupt the ability of the system to provide a safe and reliable supply of drinking water. The vulnerability assessment shall include, but not be limited to, a review of pipes and constructed conveyances, physical barriers, water collection, pretreatment, treatment, storage and distribution facilities, electronic, computer or other automated systems which are utilized by the public water system, the use, storage, or handling of various chemicals, and the operation and maintenance of such system. The Administrator, not later than August 1, 2002, after consultation with appropriate departments and agencies of the Federal Government and with State and local governments, shall provide baseline information to community water systems required to conduct vulnerability assessments regarding which kinds of terrorist attacks or other intentional acts are the probable threats to—

"(A) substantially disrupt the ability of the system to provide a safe and reliable supply of drinking water; or

"(B) otherwise present significant public health concerns.

"(2) Each community water system referred to in paragraph (1) shall certify to the Administrator that the system has conducted an assessment complying with paragraph (1) and shall submit to the Administrator a written copy of the assessment. Such certification and submission shall be made prior to:

"(A) March 31, 2003, in the case of systems serving a population of 100,000 or more.

"(B) December 31, 2003, in the case of systems serving a population of 50,000 or more but less than 100,000.

"(C) June 30, 2004, in the case of systems serving a population greater than 3,300 but less than 50,000.

"(3) Except for information contained in a certification under this subsection identifying the system submitting the certification and the date of the certification, all information provided to the Administrator under this subsection and all information derived therefrom shall be exempt from disclosure under section 552 of title 5 of the United States Code.

"(4) No community water system shall be required under State or local law to provide an assessment described in this section to any State, regional, or local governmental entity solely by reason of the requirement set forth in paragraph (2) that the system submit such assessment to the Administrator.

"(5) Not later than November 30, 2002, the Administrator, in consultation with appropriate Federal law enforcement and intelligence officials, shall develop such protocols as may be necessary to protect the copies of the assessments required to be submitted under this subsection (and the information contained therein) from unauthorized disclosure. Such protocols shall ensure that—

"(A) each copy of such assessment, and all information contained in or derived from the assessment, is kept in a secure location;

"(B) only individuals designated by the Administrator may have access to the copies of the assessments; and

"(C) no copy of an assessment, or part of an assessment, or information contained in or derived from an assessment shall be available to anyone other than an individual designated by the Administrator.

At the earliest possible time prior to November 30, 2002, the Administrator shall complete the development of such protocols for the purpose of having them in place prior to receiving any vulnerability assessments from community water systems under this subsection.

"(6)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), any individual referred to in paragraph (5)(B) who acquires the assessment submitted under paragraph (2), or any reproduction of such assessment, or any information derived from such assessment, and who knowingly or recklessly reveals such assessment, reproduction, or information other than—

"(i) to an individual designated by the Administrator under paragraph (5),

"(ii) for purposes of section 1445 or for actions under section 1431, or

"(iii) for use in any administrative or judicial proceeding to impose a penalty for failure to comply with this section, shall upon conviction be imprisoned for not more than one year or fined in accordance with the provisions of chapter 227 of title 18, United States Code, applicable to class A misdemeanors, or both, and shall be removed from Federal office or employment.

"(B) Notwithstanding subparagraph (A), an individual referred to in paragraph (5)(B) who is an officer or employee of the United States may discuss the contents of a vulnerability assessment submitted under this section with a State or local official.

"(7) Nothing in this section authorizes any person to withhold any information from Congress or from any committee or subcommittee of Congress.

"(b) Emergency Response Plan.—Each community water system serving a population greater than 3,300 shall prepare or revise, where necessary, an emergency response plan that incorporates the results of vulnerability assessments that have been completed. Each such community water system shall certify to the Administrator, as soon as reasonably possible after the enactment of this section, but not later than 6 months after the completion of the vulnerability assessment under subsection (a), that the system has completed such plan. The emergency response plan shall include, but not be limited to, plans, procedures, and identification of equipment that can be implemented or utilized in the event of a terrorist or other intentional attack on the public water system. The emergency response plan shall also include actions, procedures, and identification of equipment which can obviate or significantly lessen the impact of terrorist attacks or other intentional actions on the public health and the safety and supply of drinking water provided to communities and individuals. Community water systems shall, to the extent possible, coordinate with existing Local Emergency Planning Committees established under the Emergency Planning and Community Right-to-Know Act (42 U.S.C. 11001, et seq.) when preparing or revising an emergency response plan under this subsection.

"(c) Record Maintenance.—Each community water system shall maintain a copy of the emergency response plan completed pursuant to subsection (b) for 5 years after such plan has been certified to the Administrator under this section.

"(d) Guidance to Small Public Water Systems.—The Administrator shall provide guidance to community water systems serving a population of less than 3,300 persons on how to conduct vulnerability assessments, prepare emergency response plans, and address threats from terrorist attacks or other intentional actions designed to disrupt the provision of safe drinking water or significantly affect the public health or significantly affect the safety or supply of drinking water provided to communities and individuals.

"(e) Funding.—(1) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section not more than $160,000,000 for the fiscal year 2002 and such sums as may be necessary for the fiscal years 2003 through 2005.

"(2) The Administrator, in coordination with State and local governments, may use funds made available under paragraph (1) to provide financial assistance to community water systems for purposes of compliance with the requirements of subsections (a) and (b) and to community water systems for expenses and contracts designed to address basic security enhancements of critical importance and significant threats to public health and the supply of drinking water as determined by a vulnerability assessment conducted under subsection (a). Such basic security enhancements may include, but shall not be limited to the following:

"(A) the purchase and installation of equipment for detection of intruders;

"(B) the purchase and installation of fencing, gating, lighting, or security cameras;

"(C) the tamper-proofing of manhole covers, fire hydrants, and valve boxes;

"(D) the rekeying of doors and locks;

"(E) improvements to electronic, computer, or other automated systems and remote security systems;

"(F) participation in training programs, and the purchase of training manuals and guidance materials, relating to security against terrorist attacks;

"(G) improvements in the use, storage, or handling of various chemicals; and

"(H) security screening of employees or contractor support services.

Funding under this subsection for basic security enhancements shall not include expenditures for personnel costs, or monitoring, operation, or maintenance of facilities, equipment, or systems.

"(3) The Administrator may use not more than $5,000,000 from the funds made available under paragraph (1) to make grants to community water systems to assist in responding to and alleviating any vulnerability to a terrorist attack or other intentional acts intended to substantially disrupt the ability of the system to provide a safe and reliable supply of drinking water (including sources of water for such systems) which the Administrator determines to present an immediate and urgent security need.

"(4) The Administrator may use not more than $5,000,000 from the funds made available under paragraph (1) to make grants to community water systems serving a population of less than 3,300 persons for activities and projects undertaken in accordance with the guidance provided to such systems under subsection (d).

SEC. 402. OTHER SAFE DRINKING WATER ACT AMENDMENTS.

The Safe Drinking Water Act (title XIV of the Public Health Service Act) is amended by inserting the following new sections after section 1433 (as added by section 401 of this Act):

"SEC. 1434. CONTAMINANT PREVENTION, DETECTION AND RESPONSE.

"(a) In General.—The Administrator, in consultation with the Centers for Disease Control and, after consultation with appropriate departments and agencies of the Federal Government and with State and local governments, shall review (or enter into contracts or cooperative agreements to provide for a review of) current and future methods to prevent, detect and respond to the intentional introduction of chemical, biological or radiological contaminants into community water systems and source water for community water systems, including each of the following:

"(1) Methods, means and equipment, including real time monitoring systems, designed to monitor and detect various levels of chemical, biological, and radiological contaminants or indicators of contaminants and reduce the likelihood that such contaminants can be successfully introduced into public water systems and source water intended to be used for drinking water.

"(2) Methods and means to provide sufficient notice to operators of public water systems, and individuals served by such systems, of the introduction of chemical, biological or radiological contaminants and the possible effect of such introduction on public health and the safety and supply of drinking water.

"(3) Methods and means for developing educational and awareness programs for community water systems.

"(4) Procedures and equipment necessary to prevent the flow of contaminated drinking water to individuals served by public water systems.

"(5) Methods, means, and equipment which could negate or mitigate deleterious effects on public health and the safety and supply caused by the introduction of contaminants into water intended to be used for drinking water, including an examination of the effectiveness of various drinking water technologies in removing, inactivating, or neutralizing biological, chemical, and radiological contaminants.

"(6) Biomedical research into the short-term and long-term impact on public health of various chemical, biological and radiological contaminants that may be introduced into public water systems through terrorist or other intentional acts.

"(b) Funding.—For the authorization of appropriations to carry out this section, see section 1435(e).

"SEC. 1435. SUPPLY DISRUPTION PREVENTION, DETECTION AND RESPONSE.

"(a) Disruption of Supply or Safety.—The Administrator, in coordination with the appropriate departments and agencies of the Federal Government, shall review (or enter into contracts or cooperative agreements to provide for a review of) methods and means by which terrorists or other individuals or groups could disrupt the supply of safe drinking water or take other actions against water collection, pretreatment, treatment, storage and distribution facilities which could render such water significantly less safe for human consumption, including each of the following:

"(1) Methods and means by which pipes and other constructed conveyances utilized in public water systems could be destroyed or otherwise prevented from providing adequate supplies of drinking water meeting applicable public health standards.

"(2) Methods and means by which collection, pretreatment, treatment, storage and distribution facilities utilized or used in connection with public water systems and collection and pretreatment storage facilities used in connection with public water systems could be destroyed or otherwise prevented from providing adequate supplies of drinking water meeting applicable public health standards.

"(3) Methods and means by which pipes, constructed conveyances, collection, pretreatment, treatment, storage and distribution systems that are utilized in connection with public water systems could be altered or affected so as to be subject to cross-contamination of drinking water supplies.

"(4) Methods and means by which pipes, constructed conveyances, collection, pretreatment, treatment, storage and distribution systems that are utilized in connection with public water systems could be reasonably protected from terrorist attacks or other acts intended to disrupt the supply or affect the safety of drinking water.

"(5) Methods and means by which information systems, including process controls and supervisory control and data acquisition and cyber systems at community water systems could be disrupted by terrorists or other groups.

"(b) Alternative Sources.—The review under this section shall also include a review of the methods and means by which alternative supplies of drinking water could be provided in the event of the destruction, impairment or contamination of public water systems.

"(c) Requirements and Considerations.—In carrying out this section and section 1434—

"(1) the Administrator shall ensure that reviews carried out under this section reflect the needs of community water systems of various sizes and various geographic areas of the United States; and

"(2) the Administrator may consider the vulnerability of, or potential for forced interruption of service for, a region or service area, including community water systems that provide service to the National Capital area.

"(d) Information Sharing.—As soon as practicable after reviews carried out under this section or section 1434 have been evaluated, the Administrator shall disseminate, as appropriate as determined by the Administrator, to community water systems information on the results of the project through the Information Sharing and Analysis Center, or other appropriate means.

"(e) FUNDING.—There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section and section 1434 not more than $15,000,000 for the fiscal year 2002 and such sums as may be necessary for the fiscal years 2003 through 2005.".

SEC. 403. MISCELLANEOUS AND TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.

(1) Section 1414(i)(1) is amended by inserting "1433" after "1417".

(2) Section 1431 is amended by inserting in the first sentence after "drinking water" the following: ", or that there is a threatened or potential terrorist attack (or other intentional act designed to disrupt the provision of safe drinking water or to impact adversely the safety of drinking water supplied to communities and individuals), which".

(3) Section 1432 is amended as follows:

(A) By striking "5 years" in subsection (a) and inserting "20 years".

(B) By striking "3 years" in subsection (b) and inserting "10 years".

(C) By striking "$50,000" in subsection (c) and inserting "$1,000,000".

(D) By striking "$20,000" in subsection (c) and inserting "$100,000".

(4) Section 1442 is amended as follows:

(A) By striking "this subparagraph" in subsection (b) and inserting "this subsection".

(B) By amending subsection (d) to read as follows:

"(d) There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out subsection (b) not more than $35,000,000 for the fiscal year 2002 and such sums as may be necessary for each fiscal year thereafter.".

TITLE V—ADDITIONAL PROVISIONS

Subtitle A—Prescription Drug User Fees

SEC. 501. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Prescription Drug User Fee Amendments of 2002".

SEC. 502. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) prompt approval of safe and effective new drugs and other therapies is critical to the improvement of the public health so that patients may enjoy the benefits provided by these therapies to treat and prevent illness and disease;

(2) the public health will be served by making additional funds available for the purpose of augmenting the resources of the Food and Drug Administration that are devoted to the process for the review of human drug applications and the assurance of drug safety;

(3) the provisions added by the Prescription Drug User Fee Act of 1992, as amended by the Food and Drug Administration Modernization Act of 1997, have been successful in substantially reducing review times for human drug applications and should be—

(A) reauthorized for an additional 5 years, with certain technical improvements; and

(B) carried out by the Food and Drug Administration with new commitments to implement more ambitious and comprehensive improvements in regulatory processes of the Food and Drug Administration, including—

(i) strengthening and improving the review and monitoring of drug safety;

(ii) considering greater interaction between the agency and sponsors during the review of drugs and biologics intended to treat serious diseases and life-threatening diseases; and

(iii) developing principles for improving first-cycle reviews; and

(4) the fees authorized by amendments made in this subtitle will be dedicated towards expediting the drug development process and the process for the review of human drug applications as set forth in the goals identified for purposes of part 2 of subchapter C of chapter VII of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, in the letters from the Secretary of Health and Human Services to the chairman of the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the chairman of the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions of the Senate, as set forth in the Congressional Record.

SEC. 503. DEFINITIONS.

Section 735 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 379g) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), in the matter after and below subparagraph (C), by striking "licensure, as described in subparagraph (D)" and inserting "licensure, as described in subparagraph (C)";

(2) in paragraph (3)—

(A) in subparagraph (A), by striking "and" at the end;

(B) in subparagraph (B), by striking the period and inserting ", and";

(C) by inserting after subparagraph (B) the following subparagraph:

"(C) which is on the list of products described in section 505(j)(7)(A) or is on a list created and maintained by the Secretary of products approved under human drug applications under section 351 of the Public Health Service Act."; and

(D) in the matter after and below subparagraph (C) (as added by subparagraph (C) of this paragraph), by striking "Service Act," and all that follows through "biological product" and inserting the following: "Service Act. Such term does not include a biological product";

(3) in paragraph (6), by adding at the end the following subparagraph:

"(F) In the case of drugs approved after October 1, 2002, under human drug applications or supplements: collecting, developing, and reviewing safety information on the drugs, including adverse event reports, during a period of time after approval of such applications or supplements, not to exceed three years."; and

(4) in paragraph (8)—

(A) by striking the matter after and below subparagraph (B);

(B) by striking subparagraph (B);

(C) by striking "is the lower of" and all that follows through "Consumer Price Index" and inserting "is the Consumer Price Index"; and

(D) by striking "1997, or" and inserting "1997.".

SEC. 504. AUTHORITY TO ASSESS AND USE DRUG FEES.

(a) TYPES OF FEES.—Section 736(a) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 379h(a)) is amended—

(1) in the matter preceding paragraph (1), by striking "fiscal year 1998" and inserting "fiscal year 2003";

(2) in paragraph (1)(A)—

(A) in each of clauses (i) and (ii), by striking "in subsection (b)" and inserting "under subsection (c)(4)"; and

(B) in clause (ii), by adding at the end the following sentence: "Such fee shall be half of the amount of the fee established under clause (i).";

(3) in paragraph (2)(A), in the matter after and below clause (ii)—

(A) by striking "in subsection (b)" and inserting "under subsection (c)(4)"; and

(B) by striking "payable on or before January 31" and inserting "payable on or before October 1"; and

(4) in paragraph (3)—

(A) by amending subparagraph (A) to read as follows:

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), each person who is named as the applicant in a human drug application, and who, after September 1, 1992, had pending before the Secretary a human drug application or supplement, shall pay for each such prescription drug product the annual fee established under subsection (c)(4). Such fee shall be payable on or before October 1 of each year. Such fee shall be paid only once for each product for a fiscal year in which the fee is payable."; and

(B) in subparagraph (B), by striking "The listing" and all that follows through "filed under section 505(b)(2)" and inserting the following: "A prescription drug product shall not be assessed a fee under subparagraph (A) if such product is identified on the list compiled under section 505(j)(7)(A) with a potency described in terms of per 100 mL, or if such product is the same product as another product approved under an application filed under section 505(b)".

(b) FEE AMOUNTS.—Section 736(b) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 379h(b)) is amended to read as follows:

"(b) FEE REVENUE AMOUNTS.—Except as provided in subsections (c), (d), (f), and (g), fees under subsection (a) shall be established to generate the following revenue amounts:

"Type of Fee Revenue	Fiscal Year 2003	Fiscal Year 2004	Fiscal Year 2005	Fiscal Year 2006	Fiscal Year 2007
Application/Supplement	$74,300,000	$77,000,000	$84,000,000	$86,434,000	$86,434,000
Establishment	$74,300,000	$77,000,000	$84,000,000	$86,433,000	$86,433,000
Product	$74,300,000	$77,000,000	$84,000,000	$86,433,000	$86,433,000
Total Fee Revenue	$222,900,000	$231,000,000	$252,000,000	$259,300,000	$259,300,000

If, after the date of the enactment of the Prescription Drug User Fee Amendments of 2002, legislation is enacted requiring the Secretary to fund additional costs of the retirement of Federal personnel, fee revenue amounts shall be increased in each year by the amount necessary to fully fund the portion of such additional costs that are attributable to the process for the review of human drug applications.".

(c) ADJUSTMENTS.—Section 736(c) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 379h(c)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1)—

(A) in the matter preceding subparagraph (A), by striking "fees and total fee revenues" and inserting "revenues";

(B) in subparagraph (A)—

(i) by striking "during the preceding fiscal year"; and

(ii) by striking ", or" and inserting the following: "for the 12 month period ending June 30 preceding the fiscal year for which fees are being established, or";

(C) in subparagraph (B), by striking "for such fiscal year" and inserting "for the previous fiscal year"; and

(D) in the matter after and below subparagraph (B), by striking "fiscal year 1997"; and inserting "fiscal year 2003";

(2) by redesignating paragraphs (2) and (3) as paragraphs (4) and (5), respectively;

(3) by inserting after paragraph (1) the following paragraphs:

"(2) WORKLOAD ADJUSTMENT.—Beginning with fiscal year 2004, after the fee revenues established in subsection (b) are adjusted for a fiscal year for inflation in accordance with paragraph (1), the fee revenues shall be adjusted further for such fiscal year to reflect changes in the workload of the Secretary for the process for the review of human drug applications. With respect to such adjustment:

"(A) The adjustment shall be determined by the Secretary based on a weighted average of the change in the total number of human drug applications, commercial investigational new drug applications, efficacy supplements, and manufacturing supplements submitted to the Secretary. The Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register the fee revenues and fees resulting from the adjustment and the supporting methodologies.

"(B) Under no circumstances shall the adjustment result in fee revenues for a fiscal year that are less than the fee revenues for the fiscal year established in subsection (b), as adjusted for inflation under paragraph (1).

"(3) FINAL YEAR ADJUSTMENT.—For fiscal year 2007, the Secretary may, in addition to adjustments under paragraphs (1) and (2), further increase the fee revenues and fees established in subsection (b) if such an adjustment is necessary to provide for not more than three months of operating reserves of carryover user fees for the process for the review of human drug applications for the first three months of fiscal year 2008. If such an adjustment is necessary, the rationale for the amount of the increase shall be contained in the annual notice establishing fee revenues and fees for fiscal year 2007. If the Secretary has carryover balances for such process in excess of three months of such operating reserves, the adjustment under this paragraph shall not be made."; and

(4) in paragraph (4) (as redesignated by paragraph (2) of this subsection), by amending such paragraph to read as follows:

"(4) ANNUAL FEE SETTING.—The Secretary shall, 60 days before the start of each fiscal year that begins after September 30, 2002, establish, for the next fiscal year, application, product, and establishment fees under subsection (a), based on the revenue amounts established under subsection (b) and the adjustments provided under this subsection.".

(d) FEE WAIVER OR REDUCTION.—Section 736(d)) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 379h(d)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1)—

(A) in subparagraph (C), by inserting "or" after the comma at the end;

(B) by striking subparagraph (D); and

(C) by redesignating subparagraph (E) as subparagraph (D); and

(2) in paragraph (3), in each of subparagraphs (A) and (B), by striking "paragraph (1)(E)" each place such term appears and inserting "paragraph (1)(D)".

(e) ASSESSMENT OF FEES.—Section 736(f) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 379h(f)) is amended—

(1) in the heading for the subsection, by striking "ASSESSMENT OF FEES.—" and inserting "LIMITATIONS.—"; and

(2) in paragraph (1), by striking the heading for the paragraph and all that follows through "fiscal year beginning" and inserting the following: "IN GENERAL.—Fees under subsection (a) shall be refunded for a fiscal year beginning".

(f) CREDITING AND AVAILABILITY OF FEES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 736(g)(1) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 379h(g)(1)) is amended by striking "Fees collected for a fiscal year" and all that follows through "fiscal year limitation." and inserting the following: "Fees authorized under subsection (a) shall be collected and available for obligation only to the extent and in the amount provided in advance in appropriations Acts. Such fees are authorized to remain available until expended.".

(2) COLLECTIONS AND APPROPRIATION ACTS.—Section 736(g)(2) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 379h(g)(2)) is amended—

(A) by redesignating subparagraphs (A) and (B) as clauses (i) and (ii), respectively;

(B) by striking "(2) COLLECTIONS" and all that follows through "the amount specified" in clause (i) (as so redesignated) and inserting the following:

"(2) COLLECTIONS AND APPROPRIATION ACTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The fees authorized by this section—

"(i) shall be retained in each fiscal year in an amount not to exceed the amount specified";

(C) by moving clause (ii) (as so redesignated) two ems to the right; and

(D) by adding at the end the following subparagraph:

"(B) COMPLIANCE.—The Secretary shall be considered to have met the requirements of subparagraph (A)(ii) in any fiscal year if the costs funded by appropriations and allocated for the process for the review of human drug applications—

"(i) are not more than 3 percent below the level specified in subparagraph (A)(ii); or

"(ii)(I) are more than 3 percent below the level specified in subparagraph (A)(ii), and fees assessed for the fiscal year following the subsequent fiscal year are decreased by the amount in excess of 3 percent by which such costs fell below the level specified in such subparagraph; and

"(II) such costs are not more than 5 percent below the level specified in such subparagraph.".

(3) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Section 736(g)(3) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 379h(g)(3)) is amended by striking subparagraphs (A) through (E) and inserting the following:

"(A) $222,900,000 for fiscal year 2003;

"(B) $231,000,000 for fiscal year 2004;

"(C) $252,000,000 for fiscal year 2005;

"(D) $259,300,000 for fiscal year 2006; and

"(E) $259,300,000 for fiscal year 2007;".

SEC. 505. ACCOUNTABILITY AND REPORTS.

(a) PUBLIC ACCOUNTABILITY.—

(1) CONSULTATION.—In developing recommendations to the Congress for the goals and plans for meeting the goals for the process for the review of human drug applications for the fiscal years after fiscal year 2007, and for the reauthorization of sections 735 and 736 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services (referred to in this section as the "Secretary") shall consult with the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives, the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions of the Senate, appropriate scientific and academic experts, health care professionals, representatives of patient and consumer advocacy groups, and the regulated industry.

(2) RECOMMENDATIONS.—The Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register recommendations under paragraph (1), after negotiations with the regulated industry; shall present such recommendations to the congressional committees specified in such paragraph; shall hold a meeting at which the public may present its views on such recommendations; and shall provide for a period of 30 days for the public to provide written comments on such recommendations.

(b) PERFORMANCE REPORT.—Beginning with fiscal year 2003, not later than 60 days after the end of each fiscal year during which fees are collected under part 2 of subchapter C of chapter VII of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 379g et seq.), the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall prepare and submit to the President, the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions of the Senate a report concerning the progress of the Food and Drug Administration in achieving the goals identified in the letters described in section 502(4) during such fiscal year and the future plans of the Food and Drug Administration for meeting the goals.

(c) FISCAL REPORT.—Beginning with fiscal year 2003, not later than 120 days after the end of each fiscal year during which fees are collected under the part described in subsection (b), the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall prepare and submit to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions of the Senate, a report on the implementation of the authority for such fees during such fiscal year and the use, by the Food and Drug Administration, of the fees collected during such fiscal year for which the report is made.

SEC. 506. REPORTS OF POSTMARKETING STUDIES.

Section 506B of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (21 U.S.C. 356b) is amended by adding at the end the following subsections:

"(d) DISCLOSURE.—If a sponsor fails to complete an agreed upon study required by this section by its original or otherwise negotiated deadline, the Secretary shall publish a statement on the Internet site of the Food and Drug Administration stating that the study was not completed and, if the reasons for such failure to complete the study were not satisfactory to the Secretary, a statement that such reasons were not satisfactory to the Secretary.

"(e) NOTIFICATION.—With respect to studies of the type required under section 506(b)(2)(A) or under section 314.510 or 601.41 of title 21, Code of Federal Regulations, as each of such sections was in effect on the day before the effective date of this subsection, the Secretary may require that a sponsor who, for reasons not satisfactory to the Secretary, fails to complete by its deadline a study under any of such sections of such type for a drug or biological product (including such a study conducted after such effective date) notify practitioners who prescribe such drug or biological product of the failure to complete such study and the questions of clinical benefit, and, where appropriate, questions of safety, that remain unanswered as a result of the failure to complete such study. Nothing in this subsection shall be construed as altering the requirements of the types of studies required under section 506(b)(2)(A) or under section 314.510 or 601.41 of title 21, Code of Federal Regulations, as so in effect, or as prohibiting the Secretary from modifying such sections of title 21 of such Code to provide for studies in addition to those of such type.".

SEC. 507. SAVINGS CLAUSE.

Notwithstanding section 107 of the Food and Drug Administration Modernization Act of 1997, and notwithstanding the amendments made by this subtitle, part 2 of subchapter C of chapter VII of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of this Act, continues to be in effect with respect to human drug applications and supplements (as defined in such part as of such day) that, on or after October 1, 1997, but before October 1, 2002, were accepted by the Food and Drug Administration for filing.

SEC. 508. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this subtitle shall take effect October 1, 2002.

SEC. 509. SUNSET CLAUSE.

The amendments made by sections 503 and 504 cease to be effective October 1, 2007, and section 505 ceases to be effective 120 days after such date.

Subtitle B—Funding Provisions Regarding Food and Drug Administration

SEC. 521. OFFICE OF DRUG SAFETY.

Of the amounts appropriated for the Food and Drug Administration for a fiscal year, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall reserve for the Office of Drug Safety (within such Administration), the following amounts:

(1) For fiscal year 2003, an amount equal to the sum of $5,000,000 and the amount made available under appropriations Acts for such Office for fiscal year 2002.

(2) For fiscal year 2004, an amount equal to the sum of $10,000,000 and the amount made available under appropriations Acts for such Office for fiscal year 2002.

(3) For each subsequent fiscal year, an amount equal to the sum of the amount made available under appropriations Acts for such Office for fiscal year 2004 and an amount sufficient to offset the effects of inflation occurring after the beginning of fiscal year 2004.

SEC. 522. DIVISION OF DRUG MARKETING, ADVERTISING, AND COMMUNICATIONS.

For the Division of Drug Marketing, Advertising, and Communications (within the Office of Medical Policy, Food and Drug Administration), there are authorized to be appropriated the following amounts, stated as increases above the amount made available under appropriations Acts for such Division for fiscal year 2002:

(1) For fiscal year 2003, an increase of $2,500,000.

(2) For fiscal year 2004, an increase of $4,000,000.

(3) For fiscal year 2005, an increase of $5,500,000.

(4) For fiscal year 2006, an increase of $7,500,000.

(5) For fiscal year 2007, an increase of $7,500,000.

SEC. 523. OFFICE OF GENERIC DRUGS.

For the Office of Generic Drugs (within the Food and Drug Administration), there are authorized to be appropriated the following amounts, stated as increases above the amount made available under appropriations Acts for such Office for fiscal year 2002:

(1) For fiscal year 2003, an increase of $3,000,000.

(2) For fiscal year 2004, an increase of $6,000,000.

(3) For fiscal year 2005, an increase of $9,000,000.

(4) For fiscal year 2006, an increase of $12,000,000.

(5) For fiscal year 2007, an increase of $15,000,000.

Subtitle C—Additional Provisions

SEC. 531. TRANSITION TO DIGITAL TELEVISION.

(a) PAIR ASSIGNMENT REQUIRED.—In order to further promote the orderly transition to digital television, and to promote the equitable allocation and use of digital channels by television broadcast permittees and licensees, the Federal Communications Commission, at the request of an eligible licensee or permittee, shall, within 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, allot, if necessary, and assign a paired digital television channel to that licensee or permittee, provided that—

(1) such channel can be allotted and assigned without further modification of the tables of allotments as set forth in sections 73.606 and 73.622 of the Commission's regulations (47 CFR 73.606, 73.622); and

(2) such allotment and assignment is otherwise consistent with the Commission's rules (47 CFR part 73).

(b) ELIGIBLE TRANSITION LICENSEE OR PERMITTEE.—For purposes of subsection (a), the term "eligible licensee or permittee" means only a full power television broadcast licensee or permittee (or its successor in interest) that—

(1) had an application pending for an analog television station construction permit as of October 24, 1991, which application was granted after April 3, 1997; and

(2) as of the date of enactment of this Act, is the permittee or licensee of that station.

(c) REQUIREMENTS ON LICENSEE OR PERMITTEE.—

(1) CONSTRUCTION DEADLINE.—Any licensee or permittee receiving a paired digital channel pursuant to this section—

(A) shall be required to construct the digital television broadcast facility within 18 months of the date on which the Federal Communications Commission issues a construction permit therefore, and

(B) shall be prohibited from obtaining or receiving an extension of time from the Commission beyond the construction deadline established by paragraph (1).

(2) PROHIBITION OF ANALOG OPERATION USING DIGITAL PAIR.— Any licensee or permittee receiving a paired digital channel pursuant to this section shall be prohibited from giving up its current paired analog assignment and becoming a single-channel broadcaster and operating in analog on such paired digital channel.

(d) RELIEF RESTRICTED.—Any paired digital allotment and assignment made under this section shall not be available to any other applicant unless such applicant is an eligible licensee or permittee within the meaning of subsection (b).

SEC. 532. 3-YEAR DELAY IN LOCK IN PROCEDURES FOR MEDICARE+CHOICE PLANS; CHANGE IN CERTAIN MEDICARE+CHOICE DEADLINES AND ANNUAL, COORDINATED ELECTION PERIOD FOR 2003, 2004, AND 2005.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3448), to improve the ability of the United States to prevent, prepare for, and respond to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment struck all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment that is a substitute for the House bill and the Senate amendment. The differences between the House bill, the Senate amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clerical changes.

TITLE I—NATIONAL PREPAREDNESS FOR BIOTERRORISM AND OTHER PUBLIC HEALTH EMERGENCIES

As approved by the conference Managers, Title I addresses core public health concerns associated with preparedness for and effective response to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies in a number of different ways. First Title I improves communications between and among all levels of government, public health officials, first responders, and health care providers and facilities during emergencies. The Managers have authorized substantial sums in FY 2002 and beyond in grants to States, local governments, and other public and private health care facilities and other entities to improve planning and preparedness activities, and educate and train health care personnel. Under Title I, the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) will have a new focus, and improved coordination and accountability, through a new Assistant Secretary for Public Health emergency preparedness. The legislation also authorizes the National Disaster medical system, new planning and reporting provisions, training exercises, and improved communications strategies and networks. The Managers also believe that the provisions of Title I will ensure that the nation has sufficient drugs, vaccines, and other supplies for our emergency health security. The Managers intend for activities under Title I to enhance the Nation's public health infrastructure at the national, state, and local levels. The Managers believe that an effective public health system is essential to responding effectively to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies.

Subtitle A—National Preparedness and Response Planning, Coordinating, and Reporting

Section 101. National Preparedness and Response

House provision: The House provision requires the Secretary of HHS to continue the process of developing and implementing a coordinated strategy, including the preparation of a national plan for carrying out health-related activities to prepare for and respond effectively to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies. The plan would be in consultation with other Federal agencies and other appropriate public and private entities. The plan also would be coordinated with activities of State and local governments to meet preparedness goals set out under the Act. National preparedness goals include providing effective assistance to State and local governments to ensure that they and their health care facilities have adequate capacity and properly trained response personnel; a coordinated plan, effective communications networks, and laboratory readiness, training and surveillance; developing and maintaining medical countermeasures against biological agents; and effective coordination at all levels of government. There would be evaluations and reports of progress.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment contains similar provisions.

Conference substitute: The Conference adopts the House provisions with certain modifications to clarify the provision does not expand regulatory or other authority, and to incorporate various advisory committee and study provisions. A study to emergency response services and their use during public health emergencies, formerly located in section 114 of the House bill, is now located in this section.

Section 102. Assistant Secretary for Public Health Emergency Preparedness; National Disaster Medical System

House provision: The House provision establishes the new position of Assistant Secretary for Emergency Preparedness to coordinate HHS activities under the new Act. The provision also would authorize the National Disaster Medical System, under the new Assistant Secretary to provide for further National capacity during public health emergencies.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment contains a similar provision in section 211 of the Senate amendment.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute uses the House language with modification. The managers believe that there is a need to increase coordination of the Department of Health and Human Services' efforts in responding to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies, and thus has provided for the creation of an Assistant Secretary for Public Health Emergency Preparedness. The substitute also formally establishes the National Disaster Medical System (NDMS), recognizing the important role already played by the NDMS in the Federal government's response to all types of emergencies and disasters. The substitute also addresses a number of critical personnel issues within the NDMS, including liability protections, employment rights, and compensation for work injuries. In addition, the Secretary shall take into account the role and expertise of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry.

Section 103. Improving Ability of Centers for Disease Control and Prevention

House provision: The House bill provides authorization and multi-year contracting authority for the renovation, development and security at facilities for the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC). The House bill also enhances training and nationwide laboratory capacity, and the establishment of integrated, national public health communications and surveillance networks.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment, in section 202, also contains provisions for upgrading CDC's activities and facilities.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House provision with modifications. The substitute recognizes the critical role played by CDC in the nation's efforts to defend against bioterrorism and other public health emergencies. The Managers are concerned by extreme disrepair at many CDC laboratories and believe that repair and modernization funds are desperately needed. To that end, the substitute has provided multi-year contracting authority for CDC and has authorized an accelerated program of facilities funding. The substitute also recognizes the central role played by CDC in maintaining robust public health alert communications and surveillance networks, and has provided for grants, contracts, and cooperative agreements to further strengthen a national network that includes public health laboratories and other health care facilities. Provisions concerning priorities for public health lab enhancements have been moved to the general grants section, section 131, of the Conference substitute.

Section 104. Advisory Committees and Communications; Study Regarding Communications Abilities of Public Health Agencies

House provision: Section 104 of the House bill establishes an advisory committee on children and terrorism and also one on emergency public information and communications. The provision also requires a coordinated strategy on public health communications during a bioterrorism attack. Section 111 also contains a provision for a study regarding the communications ability of public health agencies and to improve telecommunications infrastructure and connectivity during public health emergencies.

Senate amendment: Section 213 of the Senate amendment contains similar provisions. Section 214 of the Senate amendment also contains a provision establishing the official Federal Internet Site on Bioterrorism.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts, with minor modification, the provisions from the House and Senate establishing an advisory committee on children and terrorism; an advisory committee on emergency public information and communications; a coordinated strategy on public health communications during a bioterrorism attack; and the official Federal Internet Site on Bioterrorism.

Section 105. Education of Health Care Personnel; Training Regarding Pediatric Issues

House provision: The House bill requires the establishment of core curriculum materials for public health emergencies, for the purpose of education and training of health care personnel.

Senate amendment: Section 105 of the Senate amendment contains a similar provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House provision with minor modification. The Managers intend that the eligible entity phrase "other appropriate educational entities" includes medical schools that have established departments of medical education.

Section 106. Grants Regarding Shortages of Certain Health Professionals

House provision: The House bill provides grants for training and education to certain categories of health care professionals for which there exist shortages impacting the ability to respond to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment contains no analogous provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference adopts the House provision without modification.

Section 107. Emergency System for Advance Registration of Health Professions Volunteers

House provision: The House bill establishes a national system to help verify the licenses, credentials and hospital privileges of health professionals who volunteer to respond during public health emergencies.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment contains no analogous provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference adopts the House provision with modifications to make clear that use of the verification database is entirely voluntary, and that nothing in the section changes the roles of States in licensing or hospitals in establishing privileging requirements.

Section 108. Working Groups

House provision: House section 108 makes modifications to the existing working groups in section 319 of the Public Health Service Act (PHSA).

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment also makes modifications and additions to the working group provisions. The Senate amendment also consolidates the two existing working groups in sections 319F of the Public Health Service Act.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts a single working group, but allows for subcommittees to represent the working group with respect to particular matters. The authority of the working group is limited through various savings clauses. The primary purposes of the working group are consultation, assisting in coordination, and making recommendations on a variety of topics related to preparedness for and response to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies. The Managers expect the working group to take into account the role and expertise of the Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry. Additionally, the Managers encourage the working group to recognize the role of private ambulance services, especially when they may be the only ambulance services in the area.

Section 109. Antimicrobial Resistance

House provision: The House bill authorizes further research and DNA analysis of priority pathogens that may be used by bioterrorists, and contains other provisions concerning antimicrobial resistance.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment contains no analogous provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House provision on antimicrobial resistance. The provision concerning priority pathogens has been moved to section 125 of the Conference substitute.

Section 110. Supplies and Services in Lieu of Award Funds

House provision: The House bill provides flexibility to allow the Secretary of HHS to supply actual supplies, equipment, or services instead of, or in conjunction with, grants.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment contains no analogous provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House provision.

Section 111. Additional Amendments

House provision: The House bill makes revisions to time frames to accelerate preparedness planning.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment contains no analogous provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House provision.

Section 121. Strategic National Stockpile

House provision: The House bill authorizes a national stockpile or stockpiles of drugs, vaccines, biologic products, medical devices and supplies to meet the health security needs of the United States. It requires enhanced procedures for coordination, maintenance, delivery, and distribution. House authorization language in section 151 of the House bill specifies specific sums for smallpox vaccines.

Senate amendment: Section 201 of the Senate amendment also authorizes a national stockpile, and separately has a provision under section 402 for authorizing smallpox vaccines for the stockpile.

Conferece substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House provision with modifications and inclusion of a specific provision on smallpox vaccines. The Managers believe that antiviral products may be appropriate for the strategic national stockpile and may include antiviral products reviewed by the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) or National Institutes of Health (NIH).

Section 122. Accelerated Approval of Priority Countermeasures

House provision: The House bill clarifies certain fast-track authority for drug priority countermeasures under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act.

Senate amendment: Section 405 of the Senate amendment contains a similar provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision with modification.

Section 123. Issuance of Rule on Animal Trials

House provision: The House bill requires the FDA to issue a final rule within six months allowing reliance on animal trials for certain priority countermeasures for public health emergencies.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment contains a similar requirement with a 30-day time frame.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House provision with modifications to provide the rule within 90 days of the date of enactment.

Section 124. Security for Countermeasure Development and Production

House provision: The House bill authorizes the Secretary, in consultation with the Attorney General and Secretary of Defense, to provide technical or other assistance to enhance security at facilities that conduct development, production, distribution, or storage of priority countermeasures.

Senate amendment: Section 402 of the Senate amendment contains a similar provision and also provides for best practices guidelines.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House provisions without a requirement for best practices guidelines.

Section 125. Accelerated Countermeasure Research and Development

House provision: The House bill directs the Secretary to conduct an accelerated countermeasure development program, and to award grants for biomedical research, development of vaccines, and diagnostic tests for priority countermeasures.

Senate amendment: Section 404 of the Senate amendment contains similar provisions.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provisions with modifications. The House provision concerning priority pathogens is included. The Managers encourage the Secretary to consider novel methods for detecting and identifying viral and bacterial pathogens, and developing and manufacturing effective therapeutic responses, including both vaccines and antibiotics. The Managers also encourage the Secretary to consider the use of emerging biophysical and biomanufacturing technologies that hold the promise of producing rapid detection/response programs that can achieve accelerated responses to bioterrist attacks or threats. In addition, the Managers encourage the Secretary, in coordination with the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, to develop protocols for and enhance facilities for testing technologies used to decontaminate facilities contaminated as a result of bioterrorism.

Section 126. Evaluation of New and Emerging Technologies Regarding Bioterrist Attack and Other Public Health Emergencies

House provision: The House bill requires the Secretary to evaluate new and emerging technologies to help detect, identify, diagnose, or conduct public health surveillance activities for public health emergencies, and prioritize development and deployment where warranted.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment contains no analogous provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House provision with limiting modifications.

Section 127. Potassium Iodide

House provision: The House bill requires the Secretary to make potassium iodide available to States and local governments that submit a plan for local stockpile and distribution for the population within 20 miles of a nuclear power plant.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment contains no analogous provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House provision with modifications that include authority provided to the President; additional restrictions on the eligibility of local governments; and a different schedule for effective dates, and other modifications.

Subtitle C—Improving State, Local, and Hospital Preparedness for and Response to Bioterrorism and Other Public Health Emergencies

Section 131. Grants to Improve State, Local, and Hospital Preparedness for and Response to Bioterrorism and Other Public Health Emergencies

House provision: The House bill modifies current authorities under section 319 of the PHSA and otherwise authorized grant funding to improve State, local, and hospital preparedness for and response to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies through the existing mechanisms of the PHSA. Authorization was provided from FY 2002–2006.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment contains a provision for State block grants for fiscal years 2002–2003 for bioterrorism activities only, and the authorization would not continue past FY 2003. It also provides an authorization for bioterrorism medical centers with authorization from FY 2002–2006, limited to bioterrorism activities. Finally, the Senate amendment maintains and authorizes a portion of funding under section 319 for a broader list of purposes and eligible entities.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute reflects a compromise between House and Senate approaches. For FY 2003, there is a modified State block grant provision. Beyond FY 2003, greater flexibility is provided to the Secretary to either continue the same approach or modify the approach without the restrictions of the FY 2003 formulas. The substitute also provides authorization for the purpose of enhancing the preparedness of hospitals (including children's hospitals), clinics, health centers, and primary care facilities, and for planning and administrative purposes relating to such authorizations. For FY 2004–2006, there is a new section 319 C–2.

The Managers want to ensure that section 131 does not delay or disrupt the current grants and cooperative agreements that the Administration has been using in FY 2002, including those programs administered by CDC and the Health Resources and Services Administration (HRSA). It is the Managers' intent to allow the Administration to continue this approach. The Managers expect the Administration to evaluate the effectiveness of the program and make revisions where necessary to improve effectiveness and accountability.

The Managers intend that a permissible use of funds under this section includes grants to one or more centers of excellence to develop appropriate innovative technology projects—for example, the development of a web-based computerized planning application that incorporates standardized language and utilizes wireless mobile technology. The Managers intend that training programs pursuant to this section could include the use of virtual reality training methods, human patient simulators, computer-assisted training modalities, and internet-based training and modeling capabilities. One or more centers of excellence could be established to develop, deploy, and evaluate virtual and augmented reality-based, internet-ready training capabilities.

Subtitle D—Emergency Authorities; Additional Provisions

Section 141. Reporting Deadlines

House provision: The House bill provides extensions for certain reporting deadlines during a public health emergency, and for transfer authority for funds during a public health emergency.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment contains an analogous provision on reporting deadlines and no new transfer authority.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the Senate provision on reporting deadlines with minor modifications.

Section 142. Streamlining and Clarifying Communicable Disease Quarantine Provisions

House provision: The House bill changes existing law to expand the authority of the Secretary, in consultation with the Surgeon General, and under certain conditions, to specify diseases that are subject to individual detention orders.

Senate amendment: The senate amendment contains no analogous provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House provision with modifications to the standards required before the Secretary may exercise this authority.

Section 143. Emergency Waiver of Medicare, Medicaid, and SCHIP Requirements

House provision: Section 143 allows the Secretary of Health and Human Services to waive certain requirements (and related regulations) in of titles XVIII, XIX, and XXI of the Social Security Act (as well as requirements and regulations under title XI of the Social Security Act, only as necessary to effectuate the waiver of the enumerated requirements of titles XVIII, XIX, and XXI to meet the purposes of this section) in the event of an emergency or disaster in order to: (1) facilitate the provision of health services in the emergency or disaster area, and (2) ensure that health care providers who furnish care in good faith to individuals enrolled in these programs during an emergency or disaster may be reimbursed without penalty. The Secretary can waive requirements pertaining to: conditions of participation for providers; provider licensing requirements; sanctions for physician self-referral; sanctions relating to transferring patients in an emergency; and deadlines for filing reports for periods of up to 90 days.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment contains no analogous provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House provision with modifications. The Managers agree that the Secretary shall provide written notice to Congress, including a certification that a waiver is necessary. This notice shall be issued before the waiver authority is exercised. Additionally, the Secretary must report to Congress within a year evaluating the effectiveness of the approaches used during the operation of the waiver. The time frame for such waivers shall be 60 days.

Section 144. Provision for Expiration of Public Health Emergencies

House provision: The House bill provides that public health emergencies expire by announcement of the Secretary, or after 90 days. The Secretary may renew emergency declarations at his or her discretion.

Senate amendment: Section 212 of the Senate Amendment contains a similar provision, but with a 180-day expiration period.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House provision with amendments, including clarifying the status of any existing declaration of public health emergencies.

Subtitle—Additional Provisions

Section 151. Designated State Public Emergency Announcement Plan

House provision: Section 135 of the House bill amends the Stafford Act to provide for coordinated communications response.

Senate amendment: Section 312 of the Senate amendment contains an identical provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the identical House and Senate provisions.

Section 152. Expanded Research by Secretary of Energy

House provision: The House bill expands current research at the Department of Energy (DOE) and the National Nuclear Security Administration (NNSA) on rapid detection of pathogens likely to be used in bioterrorist attacks or other agents that may cause a public health emergency.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment contains no analogous provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House provision.

Section 153. Expanded Research on Worker Health and Safety

House provision: The House bill authorizes the National Institutes of Occupational Safety and Health (NIOSH) to expand research on health and safety of workers who are at risk for bioterrorist threats or attacks in the workplace.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment contains an analogous provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the Senate Amendment with minor modification.

Section 154. Enhancement of Emergency Preparedness of Department of Veterans Affairs

House provision: The House bill has no analogous provision.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment has no analogous provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute instructs the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to take appropriate actions to enhance the readiness of the Department's medical centers and research facilities for a chemical or biological attack, based on the results of an evaluation to be conducted by the Secretary on the security needs at these facilities.

Section 155. Reauthorization of Existing Program

House provision: The House bill has no analogous provision.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment has no analogous provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute amends section 582(f) of the Public Health Service Act by reauthorizing a grant program through 2006 that provides awards to public and private entities, as well as Indian tribes and tribal organizations, that develop programs focusing on the behavioral and biological aspects of psychological trauma response and research that will help treat psychiatric disorders of children and youth resulting from witnessing or experiencing a traumatic event.

Section 156. Sense of Congress

House provision: The House bill has no analogous provision.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment states that Congress recognizes that many university-based programs are already functioning and developing important biodefense products and solutions. Congress should recognize the importance of supporting work done at university centers and laboratories. In addition, Congress should recognize the importance of existing public and private university-based research, training, public awareness, and safety-related biological defense programs in the awarding of grants and contracts made in accordance with this Act.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute contains one modification to the Senate amendment, which clarifies that the Secretary of Health and Human Services may recognize the importance of existing public and private university-based efforts in grants and cooperative agreements.

Section 157. General Accounting Office Report

House provision: The House bill has no analogous provision.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment requires a General Accounting Office (GAO) report to Congress on Federal bioterrorism-related activities.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute amends section 319F of the Public Health Service Act to require GAO to report on Federal bioterrorism-related activities, including research, preparedness, and response, to the following committees: Senate Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions; Senate Appropriations; House Energy and Commerce; and House Appropriations.

Section 158. Certain Awards

House provision: The House bill has no analogous provision.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment has no analogous provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute amends section 319(a) of the Public Health Service Act by inserting after "grants," "providing awards for expenses, and."

Section 159. Public Access Defibrillation Programs and Public Access Defibrillation Demonstration Projects

House provision: The House bill contains no such analogous provision.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment contains no such analogous provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute amends section 243 of title 42, United States Code, to enact the "Community Access to Emergency Defibrillation Act of 2002." The Conference substitute directs the Secretary to establish a new grant program for States, political subdivisions of States, Indian tribes, and tribal organizations to develop and implement public access defibrillation programs. These grants may be used to purchase automated external defibrillators (AEDs), to provide automated external defibrillation and basic life support training in AED usage, to provide information to community members about the public access defibrillation program, to provide information to the local emergency medical system regarding the placement of AEDs, and to produce materials to encourage private companies to purchase AEDs. For this new grant program, the Conference substitute authorizes the appropriation of $25 million in fiscal year 2002, and such sums as may be necessary for each of the fiscal years 2004 through 2006. The Conference substitute also establishes a new grant program for political divisions of States, Indian tribes, and tribal organizations to develop and implement innovative, comprehensive, community-based public access defibrillation demonstration projects. These grants may be used to purchase AEDs, to provide basic life training in automated external defibrillator usage, to provide information to community members about the public access defibrillation demonstration project, and to provide information to the local emergency medical services system regarding the placement of AEDs. For these demonstration projects, the Conference substitute authorizes the appropriation of $5 million for fiscal years 2003 through 2006. The Managers intend that the "Good Samaritan" protections regarding emergency use of AEDs outlined in section 238(q) of title 42, United States Code will apply to this section. It is the intent of the Managers that this new program coordinates its activities with the Rural AED program and avoid duplication of effort.

TITLE II—ENHANCING CONTROLS ON DANGEROUS BIOLOGICAL AGENTS AND TOXINS

Subtitle A—Department of Health and Human Services

Section 201. Regulation of Certain Biological Agents and Toxins

House provision: The House bill requires all persons who possess, use or transfer "select agents"—the 36 biological agents or toxins currently determined by the Secretary of the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) to pose "a severe threat to public health and safety"—to register with the Secretary and be subject to reasonable safety and security requirements and inspections. Current law requires registration only of those entities transferring such agents. The House bill also directs that the Secretary maintain a national database of all such agents, with sufficient information to facilitate their identification and traceability. The Secretary, in consultation with the Attorney General, must establish specific security requirements for registered facilities and a personnel screening protocol to ensure that access to such agents is not permitted by individuals who are "restricted persons" under the USA PATRIOT Act (18 U.S.C. 175b), are named in a warrant for violent criminal or terrorist activity, are under investigation for involvement in domestic or international terrorist or criminal organizations, or suspected of spying for the military or intelligence operations of a foreign nation. The Secretary is granted authority to assist public and nonprofit private entities in meeting such security requirements. The House bill also imposes civil penalties for those who violate the regulations, up to $500,000.

The House bill grants the Secretary discretion to make exemptions to the registration requirements only where those exemptions are consistent with protecting the public health and safety—for example, with respect to inactivated or attenuated strains of select agents used in vaccines or other products for legitimate medical research or use—or when the agent is presented for diagnosis, verification or proficiency testing purposes at a clinical laboratory and is promptly destroyed or transferred to a registered facility after such identification. The House bill also exempts from mandatory disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) site-specific or identifying information submitted under these regulations concerning registered persons, select agents, and security mechanisms.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment is substantially similar to the House bill but differs in a few respects. First, in developing the list of select agents, the Secretary is directed to consider the needs of children and other vulnerable populations. Second, individuals who seek access to select agents are screened only to identify if they are "restricted persons" under the USA PATRIOT Act, or are named in a warrant for participation in a domestic or international act of terrorism. Third, the Secretary is permitted to exempt certain attenuated or inactive biological agents or toxins and certain approved medical products from the list of select agents.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts provisions of both bills, with significant modifications. The primary goals of this subtitle are to ensure the prompt reporting to the Federal government of possession of select agents (including by those who were in possession prior to April 15, 1997, the effective date for reporting transfers of select agents), to increase the security over such agents (including access controls and screening of personnel), and to establish a comprehensive and detailed national database of the location and characterization of such agents and the identities of those in possession of them. To effectuate these goals, the substitute requires that, at a minimum, all possession of select agents (unless exempt under the provisions of this subtitle) must be registered with the Secretary. The Managers expect that most "persons" who register under this subtitle will be public and private entities, rather than individuals. But these provisions also will cover individuals possessing, using or transferring select agents who have not been granted authority to do so by registered persons. If an individual has not been granted such authority, then that individual would be a person required to register under this subtitle. If an individual has been granted such authority without proper authorization from the Secretary, as required by this subtitle, then the registered person is subject to any penalties provided for violation of such regulations. The Managers emphasize that the primary responsibility for registration and the screening of employees working with select agents is with the entity or employer, not the individual employee. The Secretary also is required to promulgate regulations establishing safety requirements for the possession, use, and transfer of select agents. These regulations must include procedures to protect the public safety in the event the safety requirements for possession, use or transfer are violated.

The Managers recognize that some select agents may pose a greater threat to the public health and safety than others. Accordingly, the Conference substitute amends the security requirements of both bills by adding the phrase "commensurate with the risk such agent or toxin poses to public health and safety (including the risk of use in domestic or international terrorism)." The Secretary will have flexibility to impose different levels of security requirements on different select agents based on his or her evaluation of the level of threat to the public, as is currently done with respect to laboratory biosafety levels. Because an agent must pose a severe threat to human health to be placed on the select agent list, the Secretary may not decide that security requirements or registration of possession are unnecessary for a particular select agent.

The substitute also modifies the existing statutory requirements for the transfer regulations by adding "and security measures" after "safeguards" in the term "safeguards to prevent access . . . for use in domestic or international terrorism or for any other criminal purposes" to clarify that such regulations include the imposition of security requirements. The substitute also requires that registered persons promptly notify the Secretary whenever a select agent is lost, stolen, or released outside of a biocontainment area of a facility. Current HHS regulations do not mandate such notifications.

The Conference substitute adds new provisions regarding the screening of entities and individuals seeking to register their possession, use or transfer of select agents. While both the House and Senate bills mandate screening of individuals seeking access to agents through a registered person, neither bill required screening of the registered persons themselves. The substitute provides for such screening in a similar manner to that performed for individuals working at the facilities of registered persons. Further with respect to screening, the substitute drops the provision in both bills relating to outstanding warrants, as duplicative of the fugitive provision in the restricted person categories of the USA PATRIOT Act, and adds a screening category that was in neither bill—those reasonably suspected of committing Federal crimes of terrorism. The substitute includes but makes revisions to the two additional screening categories contained in the House bill to ensure an objective basis for governmental suspicion of involvement with terrorist or criminal organizations, or with foreign powers. In the case of restricted persons, the substitute mandates that access to select agents be denied, because of the criminal prohibition on possession by such persons. In the case of persons falling within the other three specified categories, the substitute grants the Secretary and Attorney General discretion in determining how to proceed, given the law enforcement sensitivity of such situations. By making this distinction between the handling of restricted persons and other screening categories, the Managers do not intend that potential terrorists or foreign agents should be subject to a less strict screening standard than restricted persons. The substitute also clarifies that the screening performed by the Attorney General is for the sole purpose of identifying—through the use of official, electronic databases available to the Federal government—whether an individual or entity falls within any of the specified categories, and for notifying the HHS Secretary of such identification. It is the Managers' intent that the term "electronic databases" is not meant to preclude the use of other databases or files by the Attorney General to clarify or confirm information obtained during the electronic database search.

To address concerns within the academic and research communities about the timeliness and accuracy of the background screening process, the Conference substitute amends both bills by requiring "prompt" action by the Attorney General and the Secretary with respect to screening of and notification to affected individuals, and by providing for an expedited review process where good cause has been demonstrated by the registered person. The substitute also provides for a review of denials by the Secretary based on the screening process, and subsequent judicial review—with provisions to ensure that classified or sensitive law enforcement information is not compromised during such reviews. Specifically, the substitute allows for ex parte review by the Secretary in administrative proceedings, and the court during judicial review, whenever a denial is challenged. In providing the right for ex parte review, the Managers intend to protect classified and law enforcement sensitive information, including through the use of in camera proceedings. Moreover, the Managers intend that a reviewing court should not order the disclosure of any information that the United States believes may compromise national security or an ongoing law enforcement investigation without affording the United States an opportunity for further review in accordance with this subtitle. It is the Managers' overall expectation that the screening process be conducted in a timely and fair manner, and that the Secretary and the Attorney General will work closely together to effectuate such intent.

With respect to the national database of select agents that the Secretary must develop pursuant to this section, the Conference substitute slightly alters the language used in both bills with respect to the database's purpose. The object of the registration and database requirements is to provide information about all persons possessing, using or transferring select agents, and to collect sufficiently detailed characterization information on the registered select agents so that the database can differentiate between and within strains of a given agent or toxin. Such information should be in a format that public health and law enforcement officials can use to identify the origin or source of an agent or toxin that is used to cause harm to the public. Because of concerns over the potential for misconstruction, the term "traceability"—which could imply a chain of custody or tracking requirement—was eliminated, and was replaced with the concept of "source."

Significant modifications were made to both bills with respect to exemptions from the statutory and regulatory requirements governing select agents. The Conference substitute establishes several exemptions from the regulatory regime for select agents, most of which are consistent with the Secretary's current regulations and practices. First, the Conference substitute adopts, with modifications, the Senate amendment's language with respect to product exemptions. The substitute directs the Secretary to exempt from such regulations products that are, bear or contain a select agent and are licensed or approved under several specified Federal laws, unless the Secretary determines that additional regulation is necessary for a specific product to ensure protection of public health and safety. The Managers intend that the Secretary will exempt by regulation categories of products, consistent with current regulations, and will act to regulate a specific product, or a particular application of a specific product, only when existing regulation under other Federal laws is inadequate. For example, HHS currently exempts the FDA-approved medical product Botox, which is the select agent botulinum toxin, when it is used by licensed physicians in the treatment of patients. However, when it is used in purely research settings or as part of early-stage clinical trials, HHS has chosen not to exempt Botox from current regulations. The Managers do not intend to alter this flexibility.

Second, the Conference substitute adds a provision granting the Secretary discretionary authority to exempt, on a case-by-case basis, investigational products when they are being used in investigational or clinical trials authorized under other Federal laws, such as the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act. Given the time sensitivity of such trials, the substitute also includes a provision mandating a prompt determination by the Secretary of such an exemption request—within 14 days after the applicant has submitted a complete exemption request and has notified the Secretary that the investigation may proceed as authorized under Federal law.

Third, with respect to clinical or diagnostic laboratories that may come into possession of select agents when conducting specimen diagnosis, verification or proficiency testing, the substitute adopts with minor changes the comparable provisions in the House and Senate bills. The Secretary shall exempt such laboratories from registration requirements, but only if they report the identification of select agents to the Secretary and either promptly transfer the agent to a registered person or destroy the agent on site, in accordance with regulations established by the Secretary. While HHS currently exempts such laboratories, existing regulations permit them to transfer, destroy, or store the agent on site for reference purposes. The Conference substitute expressly rejects that regulatory approach, as it is inconsistent with the fundamental premise of this title—that all those who maintain possession of a select agent must register and be subject to appropriate security and safety requirements. The Secretary may not exempt laboratories that possess select agents for reference purposes, or any other clinical or diagnostic laboratories that do not qualify for an exemption under the terms of this title. In addition, the Conference substitute creates two temporary exemption authorities to deal with public health emergencies and agricultural emergencies, whether domestic or foreign.

With respect to funding, the Conference substitute authorizes such sums as may be necessary to carry out these new and expanded functions. The Managers note that, historically, HHS has had insufficient resources to properly run the existing select agent transfer program. While current regulations permit inspections, only 20 percent of all registered facilities have been inspected since the inception of the program in 1997, and virtually none of these inspections were conducted prior to registration. The Managers also note that HHS received a large increase in funding for this program in the Fiscal Year 2002 supplemental appropriations bill. Given the broader, but uncertain scope of the new regulatory regime, it is unclear whether additional funds beyond current appropriations will be necessary for Fiscal Year 2003. Once all persons possessing select agents notify the Secretary of such possession 90 days after enactment of this title, the appropriations level may need to be re-evaluated.

Section 202. Implementation by Department of Health and Human Services

House provision: The House bill requires notification to the Secretary by all persons possessing select agents within 60 days of enactment, and an interim final rule establishing a regulatory structure to be issued within 120 days of enactment.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment requires the Secretary to issue an interim final rule within 180 days of enactment, and requires all persons possessing select agents to register within 60 days of issuance of the rule.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House bill with modifications. The substitute requires notification to the Secretary by all persons possessing select agents within 90 days of enactment, based on guidance issued by the Secretary within 30 days of enactment, and the issuance of an interim final rule within 180 days of enactment. The substitute also provides that the interim final rule shall include time frames for applicability of the rule that minimize disruption of research or educational projects that involves select agents and that were underway as of the effective date of such rule. The Managers note that the interim final rule and effective date provisions will result in these new regulations going into effect at approximately the same time as the National Institutes of Health (NIH) begins to award Fiscal Year 2003 grants for research, some of which will be in the select agent area. The Managers expect that the Secretary will encourage those seeking such grants to begin the registration and screening process under this title concurrently with the NIH grant process, and that the Secretary will ensure the timely registration and screening of such grantees, so as not to delay this important research.

Section 203. Effective dates

House provision and Senate amendment: both the House bill and the Senate amendment provide that regulations promulgated by the Secretary under section 511 of the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 are deemed to have been promulgated under section 351A of the Public Health Service Act, as added by this Act. They both also provide that the FOIA exemptions apply retroactively to the effective date of the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the same provisions.

Section 204. Conforming Amendment

House provision and Senate amendment: Both the House bill and the Senate amendment repeal those provisions of the Antiterrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act of 1996 that have been codified in section 351A of the Public Health Service Act by this Act.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the same provisions.

Subtitle B—Department of Agriculture

Section 211. Short Title

House provision and Senate amendment: Neither the House bill nor the Senate amendment contain any analogous provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute includes a new subtitle, with its own short title—the Agricultural Bioterrorism Protection Act of 2002.

Section 212. Regulation of Certain Biological Agents and Toxins

House provision and Senate amendment: Neither the House bill nor the Senate amendment contain any analogous provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts provisions that would grant comparable regulatory authorities to the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) as those granted to HHS under subtitle A of this title for the regulation of possession, use or transfer of listed biological agents and toxins that present a severe threat to plant or animal health, or animal or plant products. In an effort to minimize regulatory duplication and burden, the substitute seeks to ensure, to the greatest extent practicable, uniformity in the statutory authority that the two departments will administer. Exceptions exist in the criteria to be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in developing a list of agriculturally significant biological agents and toxins; considerations to be made in granting exemptions from regulation under the statute; procedures related to civil monetary penalties; and the time frames for promulgation of a biological agents and toxins list and the accompanying requirement that individuals who possess these agents notify the Secretary of such possession. In addition, with respect to the screening of persons registering or accessing listed agents, the substitute uses the same screening categories as are in subtitle A, but does not mandate any denials of access, given that possession of USDA-listed agents by restricted persons is not a Federal crime. Instead, the Secretary and Attorney General are granted discretion as to how to proceed in such situations.

The Managers recognize that, under provisions of current law, biologics manufacturers have had to register, maintain associated paperwork, and be subject to inspections and requirements from both USDA and HHS. Likewise, the Managers are aware that the inadequacy of the penalty provisions of the Virus-Serum-Toxin Act—enacted in 1913 and under which USDA currently regulates these dangerous agents—as well as the lack of authority for the Secretary of Agriculture to regulate possession of biological agents and toxins that pose a severe threat to plant or animal health may expose the United States to potential acts of bioterrorism that could have a devastating impact on animal and plant health, or the domestic agricultural economy.

The Managers intend that, in developing the list of agents and toxins to be regulated under this subtitle, the USDA Secretary shall consult with other appropriate Federal agencies. With regard to zoonotic agents, which pose a threat to both animals and humans, the Managers expect that the USDA Secretary will consult with the HHS Secretary in developing such a list. The Managers also intend that the USDA Secretary will develop the list of regulated agents and toxins based solely on the risk to animals or plants, or to animal or plant products, including consideration of the effect of exposure on the production and marketability of such products. The Managers do not intend that the USDA Secretary will include an agent or toxin on the USDA list because of the effect of that agent or toxin on human health, which is governed by the statutory provisions of section 351A of the Public Health Service Act, as amended by this title.

The Managers expect that most "persons" who register under this subtitle will be public and private entities, rather than individuals. But these provisions also will cover individuals possessing, using or transferring listed agents who have not been granted authority to do so by registered persons. If an individual has not been granted such authority, then that individual would be a person required to register under this subtitle. If an individual has been granted such authority without proper authorization from the Secretary, as required by this subtitle, then the registered person is subject to any penalties provided for violation of such regulations. The Managers emphasize that the primary responsibility for registration and the screening of employees working with listed agents is with the entity or employer, not the individual employee.

Procedures for the registration of persons, review of individuals, and inspection of facilities have been described in the statutory language in some detail. Of equal importance to the Managers are the regulations, to be established by the Secretary, which, to ensure compliance with this substitute, shall include provisions for the revocation and suspension of registrations for failure to maintain safe and secure facilities.

Section 213. Implementation by the Department of Agriculture

House provision and Senate amendment: Neither the House bill nor the Senate amendment contain any analogous provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute provides that, within 60 days of enactment, the Secretary of Agriculture shall promulgate an interim final rule that establishes an initial list of agents and toxins meeting the statutory criteria for enhanced regulation. Within 60 days of the publishing of the interim final rule, all persons (unless exempt) must notify the Secretary of such possession. Within 180 days of enactment, the Secretary shall promulgate an interim final rule for carrying out the remainder of section 212, which such rule shall include time frames that minimize disruption of ongoing research and education with listed agents and toxins.

Subtitle C—Interagency Coordination Regarding Overlap Agents and Toxins

Section 221. Interagency Coordination

It is the Managers' intent that the two Secretaries will coordinate closely with respect to exemptions from these new regulatory regimes for overlap agents, so as to create a uniform and consistent approach. The Managers also intend that, under the Memorandum of Understanding, a regulated party will interact with one agency with respect to all matters—including registration, screening, and inspections—so as to avoid confusion and forum shopping. The Managers also expect that the two Departments will coordinate and consult with respect to overlap agent registration, screening, and exemptions in a timely manner, particularly in situations of public health or agricultural emergencies.

Within 18 months of the implementation of a Memorandum of Understanding between USDA and HHS, the Managers intend that a formal, joint regulatory system shall be implemented by the two Departments for agents and toxins that appear on both the USDA and HHS lists. Once implemented, the Managers intend that these joint regulations shall supercede the Memorandum of Understanding with respect to matters covered by such regulations.

Subtitle D—Criminal Penalties Regarding Certain Biological Agents and Toxins

Section 231. Criminal Penalties

House provision: The House bill authorizes amendments to current law to require all persons who possess, use of transfer biological agents or toxins that have been listed as select agents by the HHS Secretary to register with the Secretary. To enforce these new regulatory provisions, subsection (a) of section 231 of the House bill provides that any person who knowingly transfers a select agent to any person without first verifying such registration with the Secretary could be fined or imprisoned up to five years, or both. The subsection also provides that any person who knowingly possesses a biological agent or toxin, where such agent or toxin is a select agent for which such person has not obtained a registration required by the Secretary, could be fined or imprisoned for up to five years, or both.

The House bill makes technical changes to 18 U.S.C. 175b to renumber current subsection (a) as (a)(1), and to redesignate subsection (c) as (a)(2). This change will result in the description of the possible penalties being placed immediately following the description of the unlawful conduct. The House bill also redesignates subsection (b) as subsection (d). The two new criminal provisions added under this bill are designated subsections (b) and (c) of section 175b. The House bill also makes conforming amendments to clarify the definition of the term "select agent." The House bill also changes the title of section 175b from "Possession by restricted persons" to "Select Agents."

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment includes the same criminal provision relating to those who possess select agents without being registered, but differs with respect to the criminal penalty for unauthorized transfers. The Senate amendment criminalizes transfers to unregistered persons when the transferor has reason to believe that the recipient is not registered. The Senate amendment also differs by including the unlawful conduct in 18 U.S.C. 175, rather than 175b. The Senate amendment makes conforming changes to 18 U.S.C. 175 to make the sections technically correct and to eliminate a definition that is already provided in another section. The Senate amendment provides that current 18 U.S.C. 175(b) and (c) are redesignated as (c) and (d). New subsection (b) creates the criminal penalties referenced above. New subsection (d), which contains the definitions, amends current law to provide new definitions for the following terms: "biological agent," "for use as a weapon," and "select agent."

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House language with regard to technical changes to 18 U.S.C. 175b, but adopts the Senate language with respect to new criminal penalties with modifications. The Conference substitute adopts the common language dealing with unlawful possession. However, the Conference substitute amends the Senate language regarding transfers to provide that any person who transfers a select agent to any person one knows or has reasonable cause to believe has not registered with the HHS Secretary could be fined or imprisoned up to five years, or both.

The Conference substitute also amends both bills by adding language that requires all persons who possess, use or transfer biological agents that have been listed as agents that pose a threat to agriculture by the Secretary of Agriculture to register with such Secretary. The Conference substitute provides that knowing possession of a biological agent or toxin, where such agent or toxin is listed by the Secretary of Agriculture under this Act and for which a required registration has not been obtained, is punishable by a fine or up to five years imprisonment, or both. Similarly, transfer of a biological agent or toxin listed by the Secretary of Agriculture to a person one knows or has reasonable cause to believe has not registered with the Secretary is punishable by a fine or up to five years imprisonment, or both.

The Conference substitute also makes additional conforming and technical amendments to title 18, including providing a comma in 18 U.S.C. 175(c); specifically describing what activities restricted persons are prohibited from engaging in under this section; referring to the correct code section for the definition of "alien"; replacing legislative language in 176(a)(1)(A); modifying the definitions in 18 U.S.C. 178 for "biological agent", "toxin", and "vector" to make each more accurate; and modifying 18 U.S.C. 2332a regarding use of weapons of mass destruction to make it clear it refers to use of biological agents or toxins.

The Managers expect that most "persons" who register under this title will be public and private entities, rather than individuals. When an entity fails to register as required, the new criminal possession statutes will apply to that entity. These provisions also will cover individuals possessing select or listed agents who are unregistered and who have not been granted access to such agents by registered persons. If an individual has not been granted access by a registered person, then that individual would be a person required to register under this title for purposes of these criminal possession provisions. If an individual is granted access to a select or listed agent by a registered person without proper authorization from the Secretary, as required by this title, then the registered person is subject to any penalties provided for violation of such regulations. The Managers emphasize that the primary responsibility for registration and the screening of employees working with select or listed agents is with the entity or employer, not the individual employee. This same analysis applies to the criminal transfer provisions set forth in this section.

TITLE III—PROTECTING THE SAFETY AND SECURITY OF THE FOOD AND DRUG SUPPLY

Subtitle A—Protection of Food Supply

For purposes of this Title, the term "Secretary" refers to the Secretary of Health and Human Services, unless otherwise indicated.

Section 301. Food Safety and Security Strategy

House provision: The House bill contains no analogous provision.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment expands the responsibilities of the President's Council on Food and Safety (established by Executive Order 13100) by directing the Council, with the Secretary of Commerce and the Secretary of Treasury to develop a crisis communications and education strategy with respect to bioterrorist threats to the flood supply. The Senate amendment authorizes to be appropriated $500,000 to develop such a strategy.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the Senate amendment with modification. The Conference substitute expands the scope of consultation between the President's Council on Food Safety and other entities to include any other relevant Federal agencies, including law enforcement and intelligence related agencies, and scientific organizations. The Conference substitute also expands the scope of the food safety and security strategy to address technologies, threat assessments, risk communication, and procedures for securing food processing and manufacturing facilities and modes of transportation. The Conference substitute increases the amount of funds that are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 2002 to $750,000 to develop such a strategy.

Section 302. Protection Against Adulteration of Food

House provision: The House bill authorizes to be appropriated $100,000,000 for fiscal year 2002, and such sums as may be necessary for each year from fiscal year 2003 thorugh fiscal year 2006, for the Secretary to carry out increased activities to ensure the safety of the food supply. Specifically, the House bill amends section 801 of the Federal Food Drug and Cosmetic act (FFDCA) directing the Secretary to give high priority to increasing the number of food safety inspections at ports of entry, with highest priority on inspections to detect intentional adulteration of food. The House bill also directs the Secretary to give a high priority to improving the information management systems that support food safety inspection programs for the purpose of improving the ability of the Secretary to detect intentional adulteration of food and to facilitate the importation of food that is in compliance with the Act. Further, the House bill directs the Secretary to give high priority to researching and developing improved tests and sampling methods for the purpose of rapidly detecting adulterated foods, with highest priority on detection of intentional adulteration. Finally, the House bill directs the Secretary to complete an assessment of potential threats to the food supply posed by efforts to intentionally adulterate food, and to report the findings on such assessment to Congress within six months.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment authorizes to be appropriated $59,000,000 for fiscal year 2002 and such sums as may be necessary for each year thereafter to expand the capacity of the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) to increase inspections to ensure the safety of the food supply and to improve linkages between the FDA and other Federal regulatory agencies, the States, and Indian tribes.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House bill with modification. The Conference substitute directs the Secretary to improve linkages with other Federal regulatory agencies that share responsibility for food safety, and directs the Secretary to improve linkages with the States and Indian tribes with respect to food safety. The Managers intend that the Secretary in making improvements to the information management systems that support food safety inspection programs, including the OASIS system, may include improvements that assist food importers and filers in providing accurate and timely information on entries filed on food import shipments. The Managers also intend that in conducting research to develop improved tests and sampling methods for the purpose of rapidly detecting adulterated foods, the Secretary may involve institutions of higher education, including such institutions that receive Federal funding to operate consortiums within the food industries, for the purpose of conducting research and development in food safety and food security. Finally, it is the understanding of the Managers that FDA already has underway (under agreement with Battelle Laboratories) an assessment of potential threats to the food supply posed by efforts to intentionally adulterate food. For purposes of this section, the requirement to conduct an assessment of potential threats to the food supply posed by efforts to intentionally adulterate food refers to such threat assessment that is already underway or very recently completed.

Section 303. Administrative Detention

House provision: The House bill amends section 304 of the FFDCA by authorizing the Secretary to administratively detain an article of food that is found during an inspection, examination or investigation under this Act if the Secretary has credible evidence or information indicating that the article presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death to humans or animals. Such food may be detained for a reasonable period of up to 20 days, and where needed up to 30 days, for the purpose of enabling the Secretary to institute a seizure action under section 304(a) or injunctive relief under section 302, as warranted. The House bill authorizes the Secretary to move detained food from the place at which it has been detained to a secured facility, as appropriate, for the period of detention or until released by the Secretary. The House bill also authorizes a claimant of an article of food that has been detained under this section to appeal the detention of the article. In addition, where the Secretary already has credible evidence or information indicating that an imported article of food presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death to humans or animals, this section also requires the Secretary to request the Secretary of Treasury to temporarily hold imported food at a port of entry for up to 24 hours to enable the Secretary to inspect, examine or investigate the food. For an article of food temporarily held under this section, the Secretary is also required to notify the State in which the port of entry is located about such request or that such food is being temporarily held.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment provides authority to administratively detain food that is similar to the House bill. The Senate amendment allows the Secretary to detain food that violates the FFDCA and that presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death, and requires that the Secretary provide an opportunity for a hearing (and to confirm or to revoke) a detention order within 15 days of the filing of an appeal by a claimant. Unlike the House bill, the Senate amendment does not include additional authority to temporarily hold food, nor does it require the Secretary to notify a State regarding the port of entry within such State at which food is being temporarily held.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House bill with modification. The Conference substitute clarifies that food that is detained under this section may not be delivered pursuant to an execution of a bond in accordance with section 801 of the FFDCA (if the detained food is imported) or otherwise (if the detained food is domestically produced), while the food is subject to the detention order, unless released by the Secretary. The Conference substitute requires the Secretary in response to an appeal filed by a claimant challenging the detention of an article of food to conduct an informal hearing and confirm or terminate a detention order within five days after an appeal is filed, at which time the Secretary's determination is subject to judicial review in accordance with section 702 of title 5, United States Code. The Conference substitute amends section 304 of the FFDCA by authorizing the Secretary to detain an article of food for the purpose of enabling the Secretary to institute a seizure action under section 304(a) or to seek injunctive relief under section 302 of the Act. This section provides a claimant of the food the right to appeal a detention order, but that right of appeal terminates if the Secretary institutes either a seizure action under section 304(a) or injunctive relief under section 302 of the Act. The Managers do not intend to terminate the claimant's right to appeal a detention order under paragraph 4(B) of such subsection, unless the basis for the seizure action instituted under section 304(a) or the injunctive relief sought under section 302 is related to the original basis for detention under this section.

The Conference substitute provides that an article of food subject to detention shall be held in a secure facility, as appropriate. Under this title, in instances where the Secretary moves food that has been refused admission to a secure facility, the Secretary should ensure that such food will be held under appropriate conditions of cleanliness, temperature, humidity and other such considerations that are necessary so as not to erode the safety and wholesomeness of the detained article.

The Managers recognize that perishable foods may be detained under this section. As a result, the Secretary is required to promulgate a rule to establish expedited procedures for instituting an action under section 304(a) or section 302 of the FFDCA for perishable foods, such as fresh produce, fresh fish and fresh seafood products. The Secretary should promptly complete such rule making.

The Conference substitute requires the Secretary to temporarily hold food for not longer than 24 hours, where the Secretary has credible evidence or information indicating that such article of food presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death to humans or animals. The period of temporary hold is intended to allow the Secretary time to dispatch an inspector to the port of entry in order to conduct the needed inspection, examination or investigation.

Section 304. Debarment For Repeated or Serious Food Import Violations

House provision: The House bill provides authority to the Secretary to debar from importing articles of food, any person that is convicted of a felony relating to food importation or any person that repeatedly imports food and who knew, or should have known, that such food was adulterated. The House bill treats the importation or offer for importation of an article of food by a debarred person as a prohibited act under section 301 of the FFDCA.

Senate amendment. The Senate amendment includes permissive debarment authority for food importers that is similar to the permissive debarment authority of the House bill, but replaces the standard in the House bill, allowing debarment for repeatedly importing unsafe food, with a different standard allowing debarment of food importers for engaging in a pattern of importing unsafe food. Unlike the House bill, the Senate amendment treats food that is imported by a debarred person as adulterated.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the Senate amendment with modification. Unlike the Senate amendment, the Conference substitute does not treat food that is imported by a debarred person as adulterated solely on the basis of its importation by a debarred person. Rather the Conference substitute treats the importation or offering for importation into the United States of an article of food by, and with the assistance of, or at the direction of, a debarred person as a prohibited act under section 301 of the FFDCA. In addition, the Conference substitute requires food imported by a debarred person to be refused admission and held in a secure facility as appropriate, unless a person, other than a debarred person, affirmatively establishes that such food complies with the requirements of the FFDCA. The Conference substitute also clarifies that imported food that is refused admission may not be delivered pursuant to the execution of a bond under subsection (b) of section 801 of the FFDCA. For purposes of this section, the person other than the debarred person who may established that food, which has been refused admission under this section, is in compliance with this Act is intended to be an innocent purchaser of food, not a person that is engaged in the improper importation of food with a debarred person. In addition, the classification as a prohibited act (under section 301 of the FFDCA) of the importation or offer for importation of food "with the assistance of" a debarred person is not intended to include an innocent purchaser who did not have knowledge, actual or constructive, of the importer's debarred status. Finally, the Conference substitute clarifies that the Secretary has the authority to terminate the debarment of corporations or persons under this subsection.

Section 305. Registration of Food Facilities

House provision: The House bill requires facilities (excluding farms) that manufacture, process, pack or hold food for consumption in the United States to file with the Secretary, and keep up to date, a registration that contains the identity and address of the facility and, when the Secretary determines appropriate the general category of food manufactured, processed, packed or held at the facility. The House bill also authorizes the Secretary to exempt certain retail establishments only if the Secretary determines that the registration of such facilities is not needed for effective enforcement. Enforcement of this section is delayed one hundred and eighty days from the date of enactment, and this section requires the Secretary to notify and issue guidance within sixty days identifying facilities that are required to register under this section.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment includes a requirement for certain food facilities to register with the Secretary that is similar to the registration requirement for food facilities that is contained in the House bill. The Senate amendment exempts types of farms or retail establishments but, unlike the House bill, farms can be exempted only if the Secretary determines that the registration of such facilities is not needed for effective enforcement of the FFDCA. The Senate amendment also lacks the requirements of the House bill relating to notice to those who must register and relating to electronic registration.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the Senate amendment with modification. The Conference substitute requires the Secretary to establish registration requirements for specified food facilities by regulation not later than eighteen months after the date of enactment of this Act. If such regulations are not effective prior to the conclusion of such eighteen-month period, the requirements of this section are self-executing and enter into effect at such time and remain in effect unless superseded by such final regulations. The Managers strongly encourage the Secretary to complete this rule making in a timely manner in order to enable the efficient operation of these registration requirements.

The Conference substitute treats the failure of a specified facility to register under this section as a prohibited act under section 301 of the FFDCA. The Conference substitute requires the Secretary to refuse admission to food imported from foreign facilities that have failed to register in accordance with this section until such facility is registered, and requires the Secretary to remove such food to a secure facility, as appropriate. The Conference substitute clarifies that imported food that is refused admission under this section shall not be delivered pursuant to the execution of a bond under subsection (b) of section 801 of the FFDCA.

The Conference substitute exempts from the requirements of registration farms, restaurants, other retail food establishments, non-profit food establishments in which food is prepared for, or served directly to, the consumer, and fishing vessels not engaged in processing, as defined in section 123.3(k) of title 21, Code of Federal Regulations. The Managers intend that, for purposes of this section, the term "retail food establishments" includes establishments that store, prepare, package, serve or otherwise provide articles of food directly to the retail consumer for human consumption, such as grocery stores, convenience stores, cafeterias, lunch rooms, food stands, saloons, taverns, bars, lounges, catering or vending facilities, or other similar establishments that provide food directly to a retail consumer. The term does not include a warehouse that does not provide articles of food directly to a retail consumer as its primary function. The Managers intend that, for purposes of this section, the term "non-profit food establishments" includes not-for-profit establishments in which food is prepared for, or served directly to the consumer, such as food banks, soup kitchens, homebound food delivery services, or other similar charitable organizations that provide food or meals for human consumption. In addition, the Managers intend that, for purposes of this section, "facility" does not include trucks or other motor carriers, by reason of their receipt, carriage, holding, or delivery of food in the usual course of business as carriers. In addition, nothing in this section shall be construed to alter or amend the treatment of carriers under section 703 of the FFDCA.

Finally, the Conference substitute calls for one-time registration of covered facilities, rather than annual registration of such facilities. Once a facility is registered it should amend its original registration in a timely manner to reflect any changes. The Conference substitute encourages electronic registration to help reduce paperwork and reporting burden, but registration is also promitted using a paper form.

Section 306. Maintenance and Inspectionse informa of Records for Foods

House provision: The House bill provides the Secretary with authority to inspect and copy all records relating to an article of food if the Secretary has credible evidence or information indicating that an article of food presents a threat of serious health consequences or death to humans or animals. The House bill contains certain limitations on the Secretary's authority, including limitations to ensure the protection of trade secrets and confidential information. The House bill provides the Secretary with the discretion to issue a regulation requiring maintenance of additional records that are needed to identify the source and chain of distribution of food, in order to address credible threats of serious adverse health consequences or death to humans or animals. The House bill excludes restaurants and farms, and the Secretary is provided the authority to take into account the size of the business when imposing any record keeping requirements.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment includes records access authority that is similar to the records access authority granted to the Secretary in the House bill. The Senate amendment authorizes the Secretary to inspect and copy records relating to the violation when he has a reason to believe that an article of food is adulterated or misbranded and presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death. The Senate amendment also includes record keeping authority that is similar to the record keeping authority in the House bill. The Senate amendment requires the Secretary to issue a regulation to require the maintenance and retention of records to trace the chain and distribution of food within 18 months of enactment of the Act. In addition, the Senate amendment allows the Secretary to require maintenance and retention of records necessary to determine if a food may be adulterated or misbranded to the extent that it presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death. The Senate amendment limits the Secretary's authority to require the retention of either type of records for not longer than two years. The Senate amendment also criminalizes the release of trade secret information obtained by inspection of records under this section.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House bill with modification. The Conference substitute replaces the standard for records acccess in the House bill with a different standard that grants the Secretary records access if the Secretary has a reasonable belief that an article of food is adulterated and presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death to humans or animals. The Conference substitute limits access to those records relaitng to such artricle of food that are needed to assist the Secretary in determining whether food is adulterated and presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death to humans or animals.

The Conference substitute amends the scope of record keeping authority contained in the House bill by clarifying that the authority under this section applies to both the establishment and maintenance of records that meet the standard under this section and by limiting the record retention requirement to a period of not longer than 2 years. The Conference substitute also adopts the requirement of the Senate amendment to criminalize the disclosure of trade secrets obtained under this section.

The Conference substitute authorizes the issuance of regulations to require establishment and maintenance of chain of distribution records. This authority should not be used to require a business to maintain records regarding transactions or activities to which it was not a party. The Managers intend that those records that document the person from whom food was directly received, and to whom food was directly delivered, are adequate to enable identification of the source and distribution of food. As a result, for purposes of this section, the terms "immediate previous sources" and "immediate subsequent recipients" refer to the person from whom the food was received and the person to whom the food was delivered, respectively.

The Managers did not adopt a Senate proposal to authorize the Secretary to require the maintenance and retention of other records for inspection relating to food safety, because the Secretary has authority under section 701(a) of the FFDCA to issue regulations for the "efficient enforcement of this Act" and this authority, in combination with other provisions (such as section 402), gives the Secretary the authority to require appropriate record keeping in food safety regulations.

Section 307. Prior Notice of Imported Food Shipments

House provision: The House bill directs the Secretary by regulation to require importers of articles of food to provide up to seventy-two hours, but not less than twenty-four hours, prior notice that food will be imported or offered for import into the United States. The House bill requires that the notice contain the following information: a description of food to be imported; the identity of the manufacturer and shipper; and, if known within the specified period of time that notice is required to be provided, the identity of the grower; the country of origin of the article; the country from which the food is being shipped; and the anticipated port of entry into the United States. In the event notice is not provided in advance of importation in accordance with the Secretary's regulation, the food shall be held at the port of entry until notice is properly provided and the Secretary determines whether there is credible evidence or information in his possession indicating that the article presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death to humans or animals.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment, like the House bill, includes a requirement that food importers provide prior notice to the Secretary of incoming food imports. The Senate amendment differs from the requirement in the House bill, because the prior notice requirement in the Senate amendment is self-effectuating upon enactment of the Act and requires at least four hours minimum prior notice and no limitation on the maximum notice allowable. The Senate amendment requires that the notification contain the identity of the food, the food's country of origin, the quantity imported, and other information that the Secretary may require by regulation. Finally, if an importer fails to provide the required prior notice, under the Senate amendment the Secretary is provided with discretion to refuse admission into the United States of the food.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House amendment with modification. The Conference substitute requires the Secretary to establish by regulation the period of time for prior notice, that must be no less than the minimum amount of time necessary for the Secretary to receive, review, and appropriately respond to the notice, but that may not exceed five days. In determining the specified period of time for prior notice, by regulation, the Conference substitute identified several factors the Secretary may take into account, including the effect on commerce, the locations of various ports of entry, the various modes of transportation, the types of food imported into the United States, and other such considerations. Nothing in the preceding sentence may be construed as a limitation on the obligation of the Secretary to receive, review, and appropriately respond to any notice under this section.

The Conference substitute treats the failure to provide adequate prior notice under this section as a prohibited act under section 301 of the FFDCA. The Conference substitute requires the Secretary to refuse admission to food imported without properly providing prior notice in accordance with this section until such prior notice is properly provided. In addition, the Conference substitute requires the Secretary to remove such food to a secure facility, as appropriate and clarifies that imported food that is refused admission under this section shall not be delivered pursuant to the execution of a bond under subsection (b) of section 801 of the FFDCA.

The Conference substitute directs the Secretary to establish prior notice requirements for imported foods by regulation not later than eighteen months after the date of enactment of this Act. If such regulations are not effective prior to the conclusion of such eighteen-month period, the requirements of this section are self-executing and enter into effect at such time and remain in effect unless superseded by such final regulations. In addition, at the conclusion of the eighteen-month period, if such final regulations are not effective, the Conference substitute establishes a default period of time for prior notice of not less than 8 hours and not more than 5 days that remains in effect unless superseded by such final regulations. The Managers strongly encourage the Secretary to complete this rule making in a timely manner in order to enable the efficient operation of these requirements.

The Managers intend that the requirements of this section should not be construed to apply to packaging materials if, at the time of importation, such materials will not be used for, or in contact with, food as defined under section 201 of the FFDCA. Nothing in this section shall be construed to alter or amend the regulatory treatment of food packaging materials or food contact substances under the FFDCA. Also, the Conference substitute requires the importer of an article of food to provide information about the grower of the article of food, but this provision only requires the importer to provide the identity of the grower of the article of food if known during the period of time in which prior notice is required to be provided. Finally, the Secretary shall consult and coordinate with the Secretary of Treasury in developing the prior notice regulation. This section of the Conference substitute contains prior notice requirements for imported food and is not intended as a limitation on the port of entry for an article of food.

Section 308. Authority to Mark Articles Refused Admission into United States

House provision: The House bill requires that food that has been refused admission to the United States, but has not been ordered destroyed, may have a label affixed to its container at the expense of the owner or consignee indicating that it has been refused admission.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment, similar to the House bill, includes authority regarding the marking of food that has been refused admission into the United States. Unlike the House bill, the Senate amendment provides the Secretary with a broader authority than the House bill to mark foods as refused admission, including foods that have not been determined to present a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death to humans or animals. The Senate contains an enforcement provision under which food that has been refused admission but that has not been properly marked as refused admission is treated as misbranded if it is determined that it presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death to humans or animals.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House bill with modification. The Conference substitute provides the Secretary with discretionary authority to require that items that have been refused admission to the United States under section 801 of the FFDCA shall be so marked. The Conference substitute clarifies that the marking of such items may be applied to the container of the food. The Conference substitute also requires the Secretary to notify the owner or consignee of an article of food that has been refused admission and that has been required to be so marked under this section, if at some time subsequent to requirement to mark the food, the Secretary determines that the food is misbranded and presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death to humans or animals.

Nothing in this section shall be construed to alter or amend the authority of the Secretary to authorize the admission of an article of food that has been relabeled, reconditioned or otherwise brought into compliance with the Act in accordance with subsection (b) of section 801 of the Act.

Section 309. Prohibition Against Port Shopping

House provision: The House bill requires any person attempting to re-offer for admission an article of food at a port of entry into the United States, after it has been previous refused admission at another port of entry into the United States, to affirmatively establish that the food is not adulterated.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment contains a prohibition against port shopping that is comparable to the prohibition contained in the House bill. The Senate amendment prohibits a person from port shopping with respect to food that has been refused admission, by requiring that the person show that food that has been refused admission previously, has been brought into compliance with the applicable requirements of the FFDCA.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the Senate amendment without modification.

Section 310. Notice to States Regarding Imported Food

House provision: The House bill requires that where the Secretary has credible evidence or information indicating that an article of food presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death to humans or animals, the Secretary shall provide notice regarding the threat posed by such food to those States in which the food is held or will be held and shall request that such States take appropriate remedial action.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment contains no analogous provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House bill with modification. The Conference substitute clarifies the scope of the rule of construction included in subsection (b) of this section.

Section 311. Grants to States for Inspections

House provision: The House bill authorizes the Secretary to make grants for increased food safety inspections, examinations, investigations and related activities and to assist States in taking appropriate actions to respond to any Federal notice received pursuant to section 309 (governing notice to States) of the House bill. The House bill authorizes to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for fiscal year 2002 through fiscal year 2006 to establish and carry out the grants under the section.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment authorizes the Secretary to make grants to States, territories, and Federally recognized tribes to cover the cost of food safety examinations, inspections, investigations, and related activities under section 702 of the FFDCA, and it authorizes to be appropriated $10 million in fiscal year 2002 and such sums as may be necessary for each year thereafter for such purpose.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House bill with modification. The Conference substitute extends the grants made available under this section to Indian tribes to the extent they undertake inspections, investigations or examinations under section 702 of the FFDCA. The Conference substitute authorizes to be appropriated $10 million in fiscal year 2002 and such sums as may be necessary for each fiscal year 2003–2006 for such purpose.

Section 312. Surveillance and Information Grants and Authorities

House provision: The House bill contains no analogous provision.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment authorizes the Secretary to award grants to States to increase participation in Pulsenet, the Foodborne Diseases Active Surveillance Network, and other such networks, and authorizes to be appropriated $19.5 million in fiscal year 2002, and such sums as may be necessary each year for such purpose from fiscal year 2003 through fiscal year 2006.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the Senate amendment with modification. The Managers intend that funds awarded under this section shall be used by States and Indian tribes to assist in meeting the costs of establishing and maintaining the food safety surveillance, technical and laboratory capacity needed to participate in programs, including Pulsenet, Foodborne Diseases Active Surveillance Network, and other networks to enhance Federal, State, and local food safety efforts.

Section 313. Surveillance of Zoonotic Disease

House provision: The House bill contains no analogous provision.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment requires the Secretary of Health and Human Services and the Secretary of Agriculture to develop and implement a plan for the surveillance of zoonotic and human disease.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the Senate amendment with modification. The Conference substitute directs the Secretary, through the Commissioner of FDA and the Director of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), and the Secretary of Agriculture to coordinate the surveillance of zoonotic diseases.

Section 314. Authority to Commission Other Federal Officials to Conduct Inspections

House provision: The House bill does contain no analogous provision.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment includes authority that is not included in the House bill that allows the Secretary to commission officers and qualified employees of other Federal Departments or Federal agencies to conduct examinations and inspections for the Secretary under section 702 of the FFDCA.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the Senate amendment with modification. The Conference substitute clarifies that the authority of the Secretary to commission other Federal officials to conduct inspections, examinations and investigations under section 702 of the FFDCA shall be carried out pursuant to a memorandum of understanding between the Secretary and the head of the Department or agency of such other Federal employees.

Section 315. Rule of Construction

House provision: The House bill does contain no analogous provision.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment includes a rule of construction that applies to the amendments made in Title V of the Senate amendment that provides that such amendments do not provide the FDA with additional authority over meat, poultry, and egg products, nor do such amendments limit the authority of the Department of Agriculture over such products.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the Senate amendment with modification. The Conference substitute clarifies that nothing in this Title, or an amendment made by this Title, shall be construed to alter the jurisdiction between the Secretary and the Secretary of Agriculture, under applicable statutes and regulations.

Subtitle B—Protection of Drug Supply

Section 321. Annual Registration of Foreign Manufacturers; Shipping Information; Drug and Device Listing

House provision: The House bill mandates annual registration of foreign manufacturers engaged in the import of drug and device products into United States. The House bill also requires that the annual registration include information on each importer or carrier transporting the foreign manufacturer's drug or device products. The House bill also directs that the registration and listing numbers be included in the declaration for the products when offered for import.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment contains no analogous provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House bill with modification. The conference substitute requires registration through electronic means. The Conference substitute deletes carrier in the annual registration and replaces with "person who imports or offers for import." The Conference substitute makes non-registration a prohibited act rather than deeming it misbranded. Non-registration is a failure to comply with the Secretary's request to submit registration information. The Conference substitute provides for a non-registered drug or device to be removed to a secure facility until non-registration is cured. For purposes of this section, the Managers intend "person who imports or offers for import" to capture import brokers and other persons who file import-related paperwork with the U.S. Customs Service or the FDA.

Section 322. Requirement of Additional Information Regarding Import Components Intended for Use in Export Products

House provision: The House bill mandates a chain of possession identification and a customs bond for those firms that seek to import components of drugs, devices, food additives, color additives, or dietary supplements for further processing and export. The House bill requires certificates of analysis for components containing any chemical substance or biological substance intended for export.

Senate provision: The Senate amendment contains no analogous provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House bill with modification. The Conference substitute deletes reference to carriers in chain of possession identification. The Conference substitute exempts devices and products covered by section 801(d)(4) of the FFDCA from the certificate of analysis requirement. The Conference substitute clarifies that the provisions permitting import-for-export do not apply to articles for which the Secretary of Health and Human Services determines that there is credible evidence or information indicating the article is not intended to be imported for export.

The Managers understand this section does not change any definitions of regulated articles or the scope of regulation of those articles as set forth in the FFDCA and its implementing regulations.

The Managers intend that this section shall not be construed to restrict or facilitate the entry of articles imported for research and development or quality assurance purposes under subsection 801(d)(3) of the FFDCA beyond the existing authority.

For the purposes of articles subject to subsection 801(d)(4) of the FFDCA, the Managers understand that the collection agency would be considered the first manufacturer under subsection 801(d)(3)(A)(i)(II) of the FFDCA, relating to the chain-of-possession.

The Managers agree that certificates of analysis are not required if the only chemical or biological component of the article imported under subsection 801(d)(3) of the FFDCA is de minimis, incidental and poses no danger to human or animal health. Further, the Managers expect that the Secretary will understand that "certificate of analysis" is a widely understood and utilized document to assure the identity of the substance and its components in the chemical and drug industries. However, the Secretary in consultation with other affected industries may accept documents that convey equivalent assurance as to the identity of the article and its components or substances. For example, the Secretary may determine that for an article of food additive or color additive, a document indicating specification of purity serves as the functional equivalent of a certificate of analysis and meets the requirement of a certificate analysis for purposes of this section. This section exempts devices and blood and blood products covered under subsection 801(d)(4) of the FFDCA from the certificate of analysis requirement.

The Managers do not intend the Secretary of the Treasury to engage in a new rulemaking to specify the requirement for the bonding of goods imported under subsection 801(d)(3) of FFDCA. Existing requirements for the bonding of goods imported for further processing and export should be applied.

The Managers agree that articles imported for export under this section 322 which otherwise meet the requirements of this section should be permitted entry unless the Secretary determines there is credible evidence or information that an article offered for import is not intended to be imported for export. In this regard, the Managers believe that refusal of entry should not involve shipments between known shippers and known recipients unless the Secretary has received credible evidence or information that suggests such shipments may not be legitimate. The Managers intend to permit the Secretary to refuse admission of articles if the Secretary determines there is credible evidence or information that the articles may be used as instruments of terror. Such evidence might include highly toxic or otherwise exceptionally dangerous products going to recipients unknown to the Secretary or to recipients believed to lack the capacity to further process such dangerous articles, for example, nitroglycerin imported under this section for delivery to a business other than a pharmaceutical manufacturer. Such standard may also include, for example, presentation for entry of articles not consistent with the accompanying documentation.

Subtitle C—General Provisions Relating to Upgrading of Agricultural Security

Section 331. Expansion of Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service Activities

House provision: The House bill contains no analogous provision.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment requires the Secretary of Agriculture to enhance and expand the capacity of the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service (APHIS) to protect against the threat of bioterrorism, including through increased inspection capacity internationally, improved surveillance at ports of entry, and enhanced protections against terrorist use of plant and animal disease organisms. The Senate amendment also requires the Secretary of Agriculture to implement and then expand a high-tech agriculture early warning and emergency response system, as well as an automated record keeping system to track animal and plant shipments. The Senate amendment authorizes the appropriation of $30 million in fiscal year 2002 and such sums in each year thereafter, as may be necessary for such purposes.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the Senate amendment with modification. The Conference substitute clarifies that this section provides additional authorization of appropriations to the Secretary of Agriculture to utilize existing authorities to give high priority to enhancing and expanding the capacity of APHIS to conduct the specified activities and to otherwise improve the capacity of APHIS to protect against the threat of bioterrorism. The Conference substitute authorizes to be appropriated $30 million for fiscal year 2002, and such sums as may be necessary for each subsequent fiscal year.

Section 332. Expansion of Food Safety Inspection Service Activities

House provision: The House bill contains no analogous provision.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment requires the Secretary of Agriculture to enhance and expand the capacity of the Food Safety Inspection Service (FSIS) to protect against the threat of bioterrorism, including through enhanced ability to inspect meat and poultry products and increased inspections of meat and meat products, poultry and poultry products, and egg products at ports of entry. The Senate amendment authorizes the appropriation of $15 million in fiscal year 2002 and such sums in each year thereafter, as may be necessary for such purposes.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the Senate amendment with modification. The Conference substitute authorizes to be appropriated $15 million in fiscal year 2002 and such sums in each year thereafter, as may be necessary for the the purpose of providing additional authorization to the Secretary of Agriculture to utilize existing authorities to give high priority to enhancing and expanding the capacity of FSIS to conduct the specified activities and to otherwise improve the capacity of FSIS to protect against the threat of bioterrorism.

Section 333. Biosecurity Upgrades at the Department of Agriculture

House provision: The House bill contains no analogous provision.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment authorizes to be appropriated $180 million in fiscal year 2002 to update, renovate, and expand the Department of Agriculture laboratory and research facilities at Plum Island Animal Disease Center and the Agricultural Research Service and Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service facility in Ames, Iowa, and also authorizes such sums as may be necessary in each year from fiscal year 2003 through fiscal year 2006, for those facilities, and for similar improvements at two other Department of Agriculture facilities, one in Athens, Georgia, and the other in Laramie, Wyoming.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the Senate amendment without modification. In addition to the biosecurity upgrades at the Department of Agriculture authorized in this section, the Managers intend that the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall also continue to take such actions as may be necessary to secure existing facilities of the Department of Health and Human Services where potential animal and plant pathogens are housed and researched.

Section 334. Agricultural Biosecurity

House provision: The House bill contains no analogous provision.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment requires the Secretary of Agriculture to establish minimum security standards and award grants of up to $50,000 to land grant universities to assess security needs and plan upgrades of both security of facilities where hazardous biological agents or toxins are stored or used, and communication networks about such agents or toxins, as well as to develop a national inventory of such agents and toxins. The Senate amendment also requires the Secretary of Agriculture to provide for screening of personnel who require access at agricultural research facilities, and to develop and implement educational programs directed at biosecurity at agricultural facilities, including farms, livestock confinement operations, and crop producers, handlers, processors, and transporters, as well as educational programs related to animal quarantine and testing. The Senate amendment authorizes to be appropriated $20 million in fiscal year 2002 and such sums in each year thereafter, as may be necessary for such purposes.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the Senate amendment with modification. The Conference substitute authorizes to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary for the Secretary of Agriculture to award grants of up to $50,000 each, to colleges and universities that have food and agricultural science programs to review security standards and practices at their facilities in order to protect against bioterrorist threats. The Conference substitute also authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to award grants, of up to $100,000 per association, to associations of food producers or consortia of such associations for the development and implementation of educational programs to improve bio-security on farms against bioterrorist attacks.

Section 335. Agricultural Bioterrorism Research and Development

House provision: The House bill contains no analogous provision.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment requires the Secretary of Agriculture, to the maximum extent practicable, to expand research and development programs of the Agricultural Research Service and the Cooperative State Research Education and Extension Service to protect the nation's food supply from bioterrorism, including by enhancing their capability to respond to the needs of other food and agricultural regulatory agencies, continuing existing partnerships with institutions of higher education with programs related to agricultural biosecurity, and by strengthening linkages with the intelligence community. The Senate amendment authorizes the appropriation of $190 million in fiscal year 2002 and such sums in each year thereafter, as may be necessary for such purposes.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the Senate amendment with modification. The Conference substitute authorizes to be appropriated $190 million in fiscal year 2002 and such sums in each year thereafter, as may be necessary for the Secretary of Agriculture to utilize existing research authorities and programs to protect the food supply of the United States by conducting various research activities, including developing new and continuing partnerships with institutions of higher education and other institutions to establish and enhance bio-security and food safety programs, with special emphasis on vulnerability analyses, incident response, detection and prevention technologies. The Conference substitute also authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to continue research to develop improved rapid detection field test kits to detect biological threats to plants and animals for use in responding to bioterrorism, and to develop an agriculture bioterrorism early warning surveillance system by enhancing the capacity of and coordination between State veterinary diagnostic laboratories, Federal and State agricultural research facilities, and public health agencies.

Section 336. Animal Enterprise Terrorism Penalties

House provision: The House bill contains no analogous provision.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment contains no analogous provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute amends section 43(a) of title 18, United States Code, establishing a Federal criminal offense against a person traveling in interstate or foreign commerce for intentionally damaging or causing the loss of any property used by the animal enterprise, or conspiring to do such activities. The Conference substitute establishes penalties for such criminal offense and authorizes restitution for economic damage resulting from the loss.

TITLE IV—DRINKING WATER SECURITY AND SAFETY

The conference agreement builds upon title IV of the House bill to ensure that drinking water systems across the country assess their vulnerability to terrorist attack and develop emergency plans to prepare for and respond to such attacks. Americans deserve to know that the water they drink everyday is safe. The legislation will lay the groundwork for developing the necessary information, and emergency planning and response efforts that are needed to address potential terrorist attacks at drinking water systems.

Section 401. Terrorist and Other Intentional Acts

House provision: The House bill requires community water systems serving over 3,300 persons to conduct vulnerability assessments. These requirements are phased-in, depending on the size of the community water system. Community water systems serving over 100,000 persons must complete a vulnerability assessment by December 31, 2002; community water systems serving over 50,000 persons must complete a vulnerability assessment by June 30, 2003; community water systems serving over 3,300 persons must complete a vulnerability assessment by December 31, 2003. Each community water system must certify to the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) that they have conducted a vulnerability assessment. The Administrator of EPA is also required to provide baseline information by June 1, 2002 regarding which kinds of terrorist attacks or other intentional acts are probable threats.

The House bill also requires community water systems to prepare or revise emergency response plans that incorporate the results of the vulnerability assessments. Community water systems must certify to the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency within 6 months of the completion of a vulnerability assessment that they have completed an emergency response plan. To the extent possible, community water systems are to coordinate with Local Emergency Planning Committees when preparing or revising an emergency response plan. The House bill additionally requires EPA to provide guidance to community water systems serving under 3,300 persons on how to conduct vulnerability assessments and prepare emergency response plans.

In order to carry out the provisions of the section, the House bill authorized $120 million in Fiscal Year 2002 and such sums as necessary in Fiscal Years 2003 and 2004. The funds are made available for purposes of complying with vulnerability assessment and emergency response plan requirements and to address basic security enhancements of critical importance and significant threats to public health as determined by a vulnerability assessment.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment contains no analogous provision.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House provision with modifications. The Conference substitute extends dates for certifying that systems have completed a vulnerability assessment by three months for systems serving over 100,000 persons and by six months for all other systems. The substitute also extends the time for EPA baseline information to August 1, 2002 to reflect the passage of time between House action and conference agreement.

The Conference substitute also adds the requirement that community water systems provide a copy of their vulnerability assessment to the Administrator of the EPA. Under the conference substitute, however, information that is provided by a community water system to EPA and information that is derived thereof is exempt from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act except for information that identifies the community water system and the date on which a community water system certifies to EPA that it has completed a vulnerability assessment. In addition, no community water system shall be required under State or local law to provide an assessment to any State, regional or local governmental authority solely by reason of the requirements to submit such assessment to the Administrator of EPA.

The Administrator of the EPA is also required, by November 30, 2002 to develop protocols to protect the assessments from unauthorized disclosure. These protocols shall ensure that all assessments and information are kept in a secure location, only individuals designated by the Administrator have access and that assessment in whole or in part or information contained or derived from such assessments shall not be available to anyone other than individuals designated by the Administrator.

The Conference substitute also provides that any individual designated by the Administrator who acquires assessments or information derived from assessments and who knowingly or recklessly reveals such information other than to an individual designated by the Administrator shall be subject to up to 1 year imprisonment, or a fine in accordance with 16 U.S.C. 227 and shall be removed from Federal office or employment unless the information is revealed for purposes of section 1445 of the Act, or actions taken under section 1431 of the Act, or for use in any administrative or judicial proceeding to impose a penalty to failure to comply with section 1433 of the bill. The substitute further provides that an individual designated by the Administrator who is an employee or officer of the United States may discuss the content of a vulnerability assessment submitted under this section with a State or local official. The Conference substitute provides that nothing authorizes any person to withhold any information from Congress.

The Conference substitute adds the requirement that each community water system maintain a copy of the emergency response plan it has completed for 5 years after it certifies to the Administrator of the EPA that it has completed such plan. The Conference agreement also increases authorized funding for Fiscal Year 2002 to $160 million and adds additional specification of basic security enhancements. The Conference Agreement also extends authorizations in this section through Fiscal year 2005. Finally, the Conference agreement provides that not more than $5,000,000 of the funds made available under the section may be used by the Administrator of EPA for immediate and urgent security needs and for grants for community water systems under 3,300 in accordance with the guidance provided by EPA under the section.

Section 402. Other Safe Drinking Water Act Amendments

House provision: The House bill provides for a review of current and future methods to prevent, detect and respond to the intentional introduction of chemical, biological and radiological contaminants into community water systems and source water for community water systems. The review is to encompass methods and means to detect contaminants, to provide sufficient notice of contaminated drinking water, to negate or mitigate deleterious effects on public health and to conduct biomedical research.

The House bill also provides for a review of methods and means by which terrorists or other individuals or groups could disrupt the supply of safe drinking water or render a public water system significantly less safe for human consumption. The House bill required a review of the methods and means by which pipes, constructed conveyances, collection, pretreatment, storage or distribution facilities would be destroyed or otherwise prevented from providing adequate supplies of drinking water and methods and means by which they could be protected. The House bill also required a review of methods and means by which such items could be subjected to cross-contamination and a review of methods and means by which alternative supplies of water could be provided in the event of destruction, impairment or contamination of public water systems. The House bill authorized $15,000,000 in Fiscal Year 2002 to carry out sections 1434 and 1435 and such sums as may be necessary for Fiscal Years 2003 and 2004.

Conference substitute: The Conference substitute adopts the House provision with modifications. The Conference substitute includes further specification in section 1434 as to the detection of various levels of contaminants and indicators of contaminants using methods, means and equipment that include real time monitoring systems. The Conference substitute additionally requires methods and means for developing education and awareness programs for community water systems.

The conference substitute also adds additional specification to the reviews undertaken under section 1435 to include methods and means by which information systems, including process controls, supervisory control and data acquisition and syber systems could be disrupted by terrorists or other groups. The Conference substitute also includes additional requirements and considerations that are applicable in the implementation of sections 1434 and 1435. These requirements and considerations include the assurance that reviews reflect the needs of various community water system sizes and geographical locations, the vulnerability of regions or service areas, including the National Capitol area, and that the Administrator of EPA disseminate certain information through the Information Sharing and Analysis Center. The Conference substitute also provides such sums as may be necessary in Fiscal Year 2005.

Section 403. Miscellaneous and Technical Amendments

House provision: The House bill provides that section 1433 be included as a cross-reference in section 1414(i)(1) on the Safe Drinking Water Act (SDWA), that section 1431 of the SDWA be amended, that existing penalties for tampering with drinking water systems under section 1432 be increased and that section 1442 of the SDWA be amended to provide authorization for $35 million in Fiscal Year 2002 and such sums as may be necessary in fiscal years thereafter.

Senate amendment: The Senate amendment contains no analogous provision.

Conference substitute: The conference substitute adopts the House provisions. The conferees encourage the committees of jurisdiction in the House and Senate to develop comparable legislation covering publicly owned treatment works in this legislative session. The conferees encourage EPA to work closely with organizations representing small and rural water systems to implement the provisions of this Title.

TITLE V—ADDITIONAL PROVISIONS

The Managers agree to the following provisions.

Subtitle A—Prescription Drug User Fees

Section 501. Short Title

Designates the name of this title as the "Prescription Drug User Fee Amendments of 2002."

Section 502. Findings

Declares the findings of Congress related to the reauthorization of prescription drug user fees.

Section 503. Definitions

The following terms in section 735 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (FFD&C Act) (21 U.S.C. 379g) are modified by this section: human drug application, prescription drug product, process for the review of human drug applications, and adjustment factor. These modifications are necessary to give effect to the changes instituted by the reauthorization of the Prescription Drug User Fee Act (PDUFA).

The term "human drug application" is modified to make a technical correction.

The term "prescription drug product" is modified to allow the Secretary to use the Prescription Drug Product List (the active portion) in the "Approved Drug Products with Therapeutic Equivalence Evaluations," (the Orange Book) as the basis for identifying which products should be considered to be prescription drug products for fee assessment purposes. The Managers expect that these proposed changes will lead to a more efficient, less burdensome, billing procedure. Under current law, any prescription drug product eligible for drug listing is subject to product fees. Determining eligibility for listing is administratively complex and sometimes resource intensive. In addition, listing is often controlled by a re-packer or distributor rather than by the sponsor, but the sponsor must nonetheless pay the product fee. The Managers expect that the use of the Orange Book, which is found on FDA's Internet site, as the basis to identify products for user fee assessment purposes will not be construed to affect the legal status of the book or the products in the book. The purpose of using this method is merely a tool for the Secretary to provide a public, efficient billing process. It also provides sponsors an easier way to remove products from the list that is the basis for billing.

Also, the addition of the reference to the list of products approved under human drug applications under section 351 of the Public Health Service Act created and maintained by the Secretary refers to the current FDA method of identifying biological products considered to be prescription drug products for fee assessment determinations. The Managers do not intend this to be a change in practice; rather it documents FDA's current practice. The list is to be provided on FDA's Internet site.

A further change to the term "prescription drug product" deletes the clause "does not include a large volume parenteral drug product approved before September 1, 1992." As a result, any large volume parenteral (LVP) product is treated as a prescription drug product and is subject to a fee. However, when coupled with a corresponding change proposed to section 736(a)(3)(B), all LVP's would be exempt from product fees in this reauthorization, including products approved after September 1, 1992. The Managers intend this change to decrease FDA's administrative burden in determining which products should be billed.

The term "process for the review of human drug applications" is modified to allow the use of funds, for a period of up to three years after approval, to cover risk management activities for products approved after October 1, 2002. This change is highly important to the Managers, as improving drug and biological product safety is a goal shared by all.

The term "adjustment factor" is modified to eliminate obsolete provisions.

Section 504. Authority to Assess and Use Drug Fees

Subsection (a) of this section allows fees authorized by the Act to be assessed beginning on October 1, 2002. With respect to prescription drug establishment fees and prescription drug product fees, the subsection advances the date by which fees are payable to October 1 of each year.

Under the second Prescription Drug User Fee Act (PDUFA), prescription drug establishment and product fees, which represent two-thirds of PDUFA fees were due January 31, four months into the fiscal year. This necessitated carrying forward funds from a previous year to sustain operations for the first four months of each new fiscal year. By advancing the date for annual fees to be paid to FDA, the necessity of carrying forward these large cash surpluses from year to year is eliminated. Also, by making this change effective for FY 2003, FDA will have access to revenue as early in FY 2003 as invoices can be issued and fees collected rather than having to wait until January 31 to collect funds. This is especially important for FDA operations in FY 2003 because the agency does not expect to have any appreciable carryover funds at the end of FY 2002.

Making the fee due and payable on October 1 necessitates other changes to the FFD&C Act that are executed in subsection (e) and (f) of this section.

This section sets forth a table containing the application, establishment, and product fee revenues, and total fee revenue, for fiscal years 2003 through 2007. The subsection further authorizes an increase in fee revenue amounts to fully fund the portion of additional costs attributable to the cost of the retirement of Federal personnel. This provision would go into effect, if, after the enactment of the Prescription Drug User Fee Amendments of 2002, legislation is enacted requiring the Secretary to fund additional costs of the retirement of Federal personnel.

This section also authorizes inflation adjustments, workload adjustments, and a final year adjustment. Under present law, annual inflation adjustments were based on the higher of the federal pay raise applicable for employees in the fiscal year for which the fees were set or the CPI for the previous year. In order to collect fees on October 1, FDA will have to set fees and issue invoices in August of each year well before the payraise determination for the next fiscal year is made. For this reason the inflation adjustment factors have been changed to the Federal pay raise for employees in the Washington, D.C., area for the previous fiscal year or the change in the CPI for the 12 month period ending June 30, whichever is higher. Both of these figures will be available in August when fees must be set. As has been the case in the past, these inflationary changes will continue to be cumulative and compounded.

Under the workload adjustment, annual revenue adjustments are made that reflect changes in review workload, after inflation adjustments. the workload adjustment is to be determined by the Secretary based on a weighted average of the changes in the total number of (1) human drug applications, (2) commercial investigational new drug applications, (3) efficacy supplements, and (4) manufacturing supplements. The subsection provides that the Secretary shall publish in the Federal Register the fees resulting from this adjustment and the supporting methodologies. Each of the 4 components used to develop the workload adjustment is a defined category of applications that FDA currently counts. Each component will be given a weighting factor that corresponds to its percent of FDA review workload.

The workload adjustment envisioned for each component has as its base the average number of applications of each particular type that FDA received over the five-year period of current law. It requires that a rolling average of submissions also be calculated each year for the latest five-year period that ends on June 30 before the end of each fiscal year beginning on or after October 1, 2002. The percent change in the latest five-year average, compared to the base year is then multiplied by the weighting factor for that component. Then all four components of the workload adjuster are added together and the total percent that results is the workload adjuster that will be used to further adjust the inflation-adjusted statutory revenue levels each year after FY 2003. Use of five year rolling averages in this process dampens the impact of revenue fluctuations—both up and down.

Under this section, the revenue adjuster will never result in lower revenues than the inflation-adjusted statutory revenue levels.

Nonetheless, in years when fee-paying applications fall below projections, FDA will automatically experience a shortfall in revenues due to the shortfall in fee-paying applications. Further downward adjustment of the revenues would over-compensate for such a decline in workload and is not authorized under the subsection. This is a lesson learned from experience during 1998 through 2002. If such a model had been in place for the past five years, revenues during PDUFA II would have been much more predictable year to year rather than exhibiting the volatility FDA experienced.

Also under this section, FDA is allowed to make a one-time increase in fees in FY 2007, if necessary, to assure that the agency will have no less than three months of operating reserves on hand at the end of FY 2007, when this legislation will expire. This final year adjustment will allow the agency sufficient fees to operate for up to 3 months in FY 2008 if there is any delay in the reauthorization of PDUFA at the end of FY 2007. Further, delaying this payment from industry until FY 2007 minimizes the need for FDA to carry large balances over from year to year, reducing industry outlays until they are necessary to support operations.

Finally, this section provides that application, product, and establishment fees are to be established 60 days before the start of the fiscal year based on the revenue amounts previously established in this section.

Under subsection (d), the waiver or fee reduction for supplements filed under section 505(b)(1) of the FFD&C Act is eliminated.

In this section the word "assessed" in section 736(f) of the FFD&C Act has been changed to "retained." This change is part of a series of changes made to permit FDA to issue invoices and collect fees before an appropriation is actually made for the fiscal year. The change maintains the original intent of this and related provisions, however, by providing that the conditions originally specified in these sections must be fulfilled once all appropriations for the fiscal year, including any supplemental appropriations, are enacted. If the conditions are not fulfilled, FDA may not retain the fees it collects. Further, under this section, the word "collected" in section 736(g)(2)(A) of the FFD&C Act is changed to "retained." Once again, this change is part of a series of changes made to permit FDA to issue invoices and collect fees before an appropriation is actually made for the fiscal year. The change maintains the original intent of this and related provisions by asserting that the conditions originally specified in these sections must be fulfilled once all appropriations for the fiscal year, including any supplemental appropriations, are enacted.

This section also responds to the problems associated with FDA's inability under the FFD&C Act to collect and spend fees in any year that FDA fails to spend from appropriations as much as it spend in FY 1997, adjusted for inflation. Failing to meet this obligation by as little as one dollar causes FDA to lose the authority to collect application, product and establishment fees for a given fiscal year. The consequence of failing to meet this "trigger" would be catastrophic. Since the trigger is based on the amount FDA spends, the agency can never identify exactly how much it has actually spend until after the end of the fiscal year. As a result, FDA consistently overspends by a substantial amount to be certain that FDA expenditures do not fall below the trigger amount and thereby cause the agency to lose the authority to collect fees.

Modifications to section 736(g)(2)(B) are proposed to provide FDA a margin of error in its effort to meet this requirement of the law. This section is being modified so that if FDA's spending is within five percent of the amount required by this section of the Act, the requirement of this section is considered to be satisfied. If FDA under-spends by three percent or less, there are no consequences. If FDA under-spends by more than three percent but not more than five percent, FDA will be required to reduce collections in the fiscal year following the subsequent fiscal year by the amount in excess of three percent by which FDA under-spent from appropriations. The intent is to relieve FDA of the need to overspend from appropriations each year, as it has done consistently since 1993 to assure that this trigger is met. Spending from appropriations on the drug review process each year is still expected to be at or very close to the amount specified by this trigger, and may never be more than five percent below the trigger amount.

This section also authorizes appropriations for fiscal years 2003 through 2007 in amounts consistent with the total fee revenue amounts set forth in subsection (b).

Section 505. Accountability and Annual Reports

This section for the first time requires the agency to meet with interested public and private stakeholders when considering the reauthorization of this program before its expiration. The Managers believe that the agency will be in the best position to recognize what best serves the public health by meeting with representatives of consumer and patient advocacy groups, industry, the Congress, health care professionals, and academic experts prior to the next reauthorization of PDUFA. Further, the Managers believe that it is very important for the agency to make any recommendations to the Congress public, so this section requires that the FDA both publish the recommendations, as well as hold a public hearing at which time the agency can receive public feedback.

This section also requires an annual Performance Report and a Financial Report.

Section 506. Reports of Postmarketing Studies

Under this section, the Managers intend that in instances wherein a study subject to the reporting requirements of Section 130 is not completed by the original or otherwise negotiated deadline agreed upon by the sponsor and if the reasons for such failure to complete the study were not satisfactory to the Secretary, the Secretary shall so note on the agency website. The Managers intend that the Secretary would not find the delay or termination of a study unsatisfactory if the Secretary determined that the delay or termination occurred through no fault of the sponsor (such as ethical concerns, or the study is no longer needed).

This section also empowers the Secretary to require a sponsor of a study required under section 505(b)(2)(A) or sections 314.510 or 601.41 of Title 21, Code of Federal Regulations, to notify health care practitioners who prescribe such drugs or biological products of the sponsor's failure to complete the study, and the questions of clinical benefit and, where appropriate, questions of safety, that remain unanswered as a result of such failure. The Managers intend that this authority not be utilized in cases where, through no fault of the sponsor (such as ethical concerns, or the study is no longer needed), the study has been delayed or terminated.

Section 507. Savings Clause

This section authorizes user fees to be assessed and collected after October 1, 2002 for human drug applications and supplements accepted for filing prior to October 1, 2002. For example, in the event that application fees are owed but have not been collected prior to the expiration date for PDUFA II established by section 107 of the Food and Drug Administration Modernization Act (FDAMA), the section will allow these fees to be collected after October 1, 2002. The section further authorizes assessment and collection of product and establishment fees after October 1, 2002 that are owed but have not been collected.

Section 508. Effective Date

Section 508 provides that the Prescription Drug User Fee Amendments of 2002 shall take effect October 1, 2002.

Section 509. Sunset Clause

Section 509 provides that the amendments made by sections 503 (relating to definitions) and 504 (relating to the authority to assess and use drug fees) shall cease to be effective on October 1, 2007.

The section further provides that the amendments made by section 505 (relating to annual reports) shall cease to be effective 120 days after October 1, 2007. The additional 120 days will allow the prescription drug user fee reports for fiscal year 2007 to be prepared and submitted.

Subtitle B—Additional Authorizations of Appropriations Regarding Food and Drug Administration

Section 521. Office of Drug Safety

This section will help the FDA fulfill its vitally important role of ensuring drug safety. The Managers are highly supportive of the postmarket surveillance activities conducted by the Office of Drug Safety (ODS), and to that end other provisions in this legislation ensure for the first time that user fee monies will be available for postmarket purposes. This section complements those efforts by ensuring that not only will new user fee monies be available for this very important purpose, but so will new appropriated monies.

Section 522. Division of Drug Marketing, Advertising, and Communications

This section provides an increased authorization for the Division of Drug Marketing, Advertising, and Communications (DDMAC) within the Office of Medical Policy, Center for Drug Evaluation and Research at the FDA. DDMAC plays a vital role in ensuring that promotional drug material is not false or misleading, and they do so on a limited budget. The authorized amounts will better ensure that DDMAC can perform its mission.

Section 523. Office of Generic Drugs

This section provides an increased authorization for the Office of Generic Drugs (OGD) within the Center for Drug Evaluation and Research at the FDA. OGD is vitally important to ensuring that Americans have access to safe, effective generic drugs. This Office needs increased funding, however, due to the fact that it presently takes OGD nearly 18 months to review the typical ANDA. This section will lead to increased funding, so that these review times can be decreased without compromising health and safety.

Subtitle C—Additional Provisions

Section 531. Transition to Digital Television

In an effort to further promote the orderly transition to digital television, and to promote the equitable allocation and use of digital channels by television broadcast permittees and licensees, the Managers direct the Federal Communications Commission, at the request of an eligible licensee or permittee, to, within 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, allot, if necessary, and assign a requested and identified paired digital television channel to that licensee or permittee. In order to avoid any undue burden to the Commission, which is required to allot and assign the paired digital television channel within a short timeframe, the Managers expect all eligible applicants to file their applications as soon as practicable after the date of enactment. The FCC shall only do this if such channel can be allotted and assigned without further modification of the tables of allotments as set forth in sections 73.606 and 73.622 of the Commission's regulations (47 CFR 73.606, 73.622) and such allotment and assignment is consistent with the Commission's technical rules (47 CFR part 73). The only licensees or permittees eligible for this digital allotment are those that are full power television broadcast licensee or permittees (or their successors in interest) that had an application pending for an analog television station construction permit as of October 24, 1991, which application was granted after April 3, 1997; and as of the date of enactment of this Act, is the permittee or licensee of that station. This provision enables such licensees or permittees an opportunity to realize their expectations created by prior FCC action to foster a digital audience during the transition period to digital television without having to terminate abruptly analog service now enjoyed by their viewers. Without this change, those broadcast licensees or permittees would be denied the flexibility to operate an analog and a digital facility simultaneously in the near term, especially in a major market. This is contrary to the Congressional goals of increasing competition and accelerating the digital television transition. The Managers are ensuring that eligible licensees or permittees will meet the intended objectives by doing two important things. First, the Managers impose an unequivocally hard 18-month deadline for the construction of the digital facility from the time of the FCC's issuance of the construction permit for the new digital channel. In this regard, eligible licensees are absolutely prohibited from obtaining or receiving an extension of time from the Commission pursuant to 47 C.F.R. 73.624(d)(3). Second, the Managers safeguard against eligible licensees from using the newly granted "in-core" digital channel allotment and assignment to provide analog service.

Section 532. 3-Year Delay in Lock in Procedures for Medicare+Choice Plans; Change in Medicare+Choice Reporting Deadlines and Annual, Coordinated Election Period for 2003, 2004, and 2005

This section changes the deadline for Medicare+Choice plans to submit information to the Secretary on Medicare benefits, premiums, cost sharing, supplemental benefits, and actuarial values of such coverage from July 1 to the second Monday in September for the years 2002, 2003, and 2004. It would also delay the annual election period for Medicare enrollees to select a M+C plan to the period of time beginning on November 15 and ending on December 31 in 2002, 2003, and 2004. This section also delays the phase in of the limitation on Medicare beneficiaries changing health plans more than once a year (the "lock-in"). This requirement, enacted in the Balanced Budget Act of 1997, was scheduled to phase in incrementally beginning in 2002. The substitute would postpone the lock-in requirements until 2005.

TITLE III—NATIONAL COMMISSION ON TERRORIST ATTACKS UPON THE UNITED STATES.

SEC. 3001. ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION.

There is established the National Commission on Terrorist Attacks Upon the United States (in this title referred to as the "Commission").

SEC. 3002. PURPOSES.

The purposes of the Commission are to—

(1) examine and report upon the facts and causes relating to the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, occurring at the World Trade Center in New York, New York and at the Pentagon in Virginia;

(2) ascertain, evaluate, and report on the evidence developed by all relevant governmental agencies regarding the facts and circumstances surrounding the attacks;

(3) make a full and complete accounting of the circumstances surrounding the attacks, and the extent of the United States' preparedness for, and response to, the attacks; and

(4) investigate and report to the President and Congress on its findings, conclusions, and recommendations for corrective measures that can be taken to prevent acts of terrorism.

SEC. 3003. COMPOSITION OF THE COMMISSION.

(a) Members.—Subject to the requirements of subsection (b), the Commission shall be composed of 10 members, of whom—

(1) 3 members shall be appointed by the majority leader of the Senate;

(2) 3 members shall be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives;

(3) 2 members shall be appointed by the minority leader of the Senate; and

(4) 2 members shall be appointed by the minority leader of the House of Representatives.

(b) Qualifications.—

(1) Political party affiliation.—Not more than 5 members of the Commission shall be from the same political party.

(2) Nongovernmental appointees.—No member of the Commission shall be an officer or employee of the Federal Government or any State or local government.

(3) Other qualifications.—It is the sense of Congress that individuals appointed to the Commission should be prominent United States citizens, with national recognition and significant depth of experience in such professions as governmental service, law enforcement, the armed services, legal practice, public administration, intelligence gathering, commerce, including aviation matters, and foreign affairs.

(c) Chairperson; Vice Chairperson.—

(1) In general.—Subject to the requirement of paragraph (2), the Chairperson and Vice Chairperson of the Commission shall be elected by the members.

(2) Political party affiliation.—The Chairperson and Vice Chairperson shall not be from the same political party.

(d) Initial Meeting.—If 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act, 6 or more members of the Commission have been appointed, those members who have been appointed may meet and, if necessary, select a temporary Chairperson and Vice Chairperson, who may begin the operations of the Commission, including the hiring of staff.

(e) Quorum; Vacancies.—After its initial meeting, the Commission shall meet upon the call of the Chairperson or a majority of its members. Six members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum. Any vacancy in the Commission shall not affect its powers, but shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made.

SEC. 3004. FUNCTIONS OF THE COMMISSION.

(a) In General.—The functions of the Commission are to—

(1) investigate the relevant facts and circumstances relating to the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, including any relevant legislation, Executive order, regulation, plan, policy, practice, or procedure;

(2) identify, review, and evaluate the lessons learned from the terrorist attacks of September 11, 2001, regarding the structure, coordination, management policies, and procedures of the Federal Government, and, if appropriate, State and local governments and nongovernmental entities, relative to detecting, preventing, and responding to such terrorist attacks; and

(3) submit to the President and Congress such reports as are required by this title containing such findings, conclusions, and recommendations as the Commission shall determine, including proposing organization, coordination, planning, management arrangements, procedures, rules, and regulations.

(b) Scope of Investigation.—For purposes of subsection (a)(1), the term "facts and circumstances" includes facts and circumstances relating to—

(1) intelligence agencies;

(2) law enforcement agencies;

(3) diplomacy;

(4) immigration, nonimmigrant visas, and border control;

(5) the flow of assets to terrorist organizations;

(6) commercial aviation; and

(7) other areas of the public and private sectors determined relevant by the Commission for its inquiry.

SEC. 3005. POWERS OF THE COMMISSION.

(a) Hearings and Evidence.—The Commission may, for purposes of carrying out this title—

(1) hold hearings, sit and act at times and places, take testimony, receive evidence, and administer oaths; and

(2) require, by subpoena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, and documents.

(b) Subpoenas.—

(1) Service.—Subpoenas issued under subsection (a)(2) may be served by any person designated by the Commission.

(2) Enforcement.—

(A) In general.—In the case of contumacy or failure to obey a subpoena issued under subsection (a)(2), the United States district court for the judicial district in which the subpoenaed person resides, is served, or may be found, or where the subpoena is returnable, may issue an order requiring such person to appear at any designated place to testify or to produce documentary or other evidence. Any failure to obey the order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt of that court.

(B) Additional enforcement.—Sections 102 through 104 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (2 U.S.C. 192 through 194) shall apply in the case of any failure of any witness to comply with any subpoena or to testify when summoned under authority of this section.

(c) Closed Meetings.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law which would require meetings of the Commission to be open to the public, any portion of a meeting of the Commission may be closed to the public if the President determines that such portion is likely to disclose matters that could endanger national security.

(d) Contracting.—The Commission may, to such extent and in such amounts as are provided in appropriation Acts, enter into contracts to enable the Commission to discharge its duties under this title.

(e) Information From Federal Agencies.—The Commission may secure directly from any department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States any information related to any inquiry of the Commission conducted under this title. Each such department, agency, or instrumentality shall, to the extent authorized by law, furnish such information directly to the Commission upon request.

(f) Assistance From Federal Agencies.—

(1) General services administration.—The Administrator of General Services shall provide to the Commission on a reimbursable basis administrative support and other services for the performance of the Commission's functions.

(2) Other departments and agencies.—In addition to the assistance prescribed in paragraph (1), departments and agencies of the United States are authorized to provide to the Commission such services, funds, facilities, staff, and other support services as they may determine advisable and as may be authorized by law.

(g) Gifts.—The Commission may, to such extent and in such amounts as are provided in appropriation Acts, accept, use, and dispose of gifts or donations of services or property.

(h) Postal Services.—The Commission may use the United States mails in the same manner and under the same conditions as departments and agencies of the United States.

(i) Powers of Subcommittees, Members, and Agents.—Any subcommittee, member, or agent of the Commission may, if authorized by the Commission, take any action which the Commission is authorized to take by this section.

SEC. 3006. STAFF OF THE COMMISSION.

(a) Director.—The Commission shall have a Director who shall be appointed by the Chairperson and the Vice Chairperson, acting jointly.

(b) Staff.—The Chairperson, in consultation with the Vice Chairperson, may appoint additional personnel as may be necessary to enable the Commission to carry out its functions.

(c) Applicability of Certain Civil Service Laws.—The Director and staff of the Commission may be appointed without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and may be paid without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates, except that no rate of pay fixed under this subsection may exceed the equivalent of that payable for a position at level V of the Executive Schedule under section 5316 of title 5, United States Code. Any individual appointed under subsection (a) or (b) shall be treated as an employee for purposes of chapters 63, 81, 83, 84, 85, 87, 89, and 90 of that title.

(d) Detailees.—Any Federal Government employee may be detailed to the Commission without reimbursement from the Commission, and such detailee shall retain the rights, status, and privileges of his or her regular employment without interruption.

(e) Consultant Services.—The Commission is authorized to procure the services of experts and consultants in accordance with section 3109 of title 5, United States Code, but at rates not to exceed the daily rate paid a person occupying a position at level IV of the Executive Schedule under section 5315 of title 5, United States Code.

SEC. 3007. COMPENSATION AND TRAVEL EXPENSES.

(a) Compensation.—Each member of the Commission may be compensated at not to exceed the daily equivalent of the annual rate of basic pay in effect for a position at level IV of the Executive Schedule under section 5315 of title 5, United States Code, for each day during which that member is engaged in the actual performance of the duties of the Commission.

(b) Travel Expenses.—While away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the Commission, members of the Commission shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, in the same manner as persons employed intermittently in the Government service are allowed expenses under section 5703(b) of title 5, United States Code.

SEC. 3008. SECURITY CLEARANCES FOR COMMISSION MEMBERS AND STAFF.

The appropriate executive departments and agencies shall cooperate with the Commission in expeditiously providing to the Commission members and staff appropriate security clearances in a manner consistent with existing procedures and requirements, except that no person shall be provided with access to classified information under this section who would not otherwise qualify for such security clearance.

SEC. 3009. REPORTS OF THE COMMISSION; TERMINATION.

(a) Initial Report.—Not later than 1 year after the date of the first meeting of the Commission, the Commission shall submit to the President and Congress an initial report containing such findings, conclusions, and recommendations for corrective measures as have been agreed to by a majority of Commission members.

(b) Final Report.—Not later than 6 months after the submission of the initial report of the Commission, the Commission shall submit to the President and Congress a final report containing such findings, conclusions, and recommendations for corrective measures as have been agreed to by a majority of Commission members.

(c) Termination.—

(1) In general.—The Commission, and all the authorities of this title, shall terminate 60 days after the date on which the final report is submitted under subsection (b).

(2) Administrative activities before termination.—The Commission may use the 60-day period referred to in paragraph (1) for the purpose of concluding its activities, including providing testimony to committees of Congress concerning its reports and disseminating the second report.

SEC. 3010. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There are authorized to be appropriated to the Commission to carry out this title $3,000,000, to remain available until expended.

H.R. 4775

Offered By: Mr. Strickland

Amendment No. 10: At the end of the bill (before the short title), insert the following:

TITLE III—ADDITIONAL GENERAL PROVISIONS

Sec. 3001. None of the funds made available in this Act may be used by the Department of Veterans Affairs to require a copayment in excess of $2 for any 30-day or less supply of medication provided to a veteran by the Department.

SENATE—Wednesday, May 22, 2002

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m. and was called to order by the Honorable JOHN EDWARDS, a Senator from the State of North Carolina.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Dr. Lloyd John Ogilvie, offered the following prayer:

Gracious God, You open Your heart to us. You assure us of Your unqualified and unlimited love. In spite of all the changes in our lives, You never change. We hear Your assurance, "I love you. I will never let you go. You are mine. I have chosen and called you to know, to love, and to serve Me."

In response, we open our hearts to You. We choose to be chosen. We accept Your love and forgiveness and turn our lives over to Your control. We confess anything we have said or done that deserves Your judgment. Cleanse our memory of any failures that would haunt us today and give us the courage to act on specific guidance You have given but we have been reluctant to put into action. We commit to You our families, our friends, and those with whom we work. Help us to communicate Your creative delight in each person's uniqueness and potential.

We dedicate this day's work of this Senate. Bless the Senators with a renewed sense of Your presence, a rededication of their calling to serve You and our Nation, and a reaffirmation of their dependence on You. Through our Lord and Saviour. Amen.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The Honorable JOHN EDWARDS led the Pledge of Allegiance, as follows:

> I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. BYRD).

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, May 22, 2002.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, paragraph 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable JOHN EDWARDS, a Senator from the State of North Carolina, to perform the duties of the Chair.

ROBERT C. BYRD,
President pro tempore.

Mr. EDWARDS thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE ACTING MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The acting majority leader, the Senator from Nevada, is recognized.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE—H.R. 3009

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent the mandatory quorum under rule XXII be waived with respect to the cloture motion filed on H.R. 3009.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SCHEDULE

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the Senate is going to be in a period of morning business until 10:30. Senator KENNEDY has the first half hour. At 10:30 the Senate will resume consideration of the trade bill, with 60 minutes of debate equally divided between the two leaders or their designees. At 11:30 we will vote on cloture on the Baucus substitute amendment. Senators have until 10:30 today to file.

If cloture is invoked today, we will go under the postcloture procedure. There are a number of germane amendments. We hope we can work our way quickly through those.

The Appropriations Committee, at 2 o'clock today, is going to meet to mark up, we hope, the supplemental appropriations bill which Senator BYRD and the leader have indicated they would like to try to finish before the week's end.

We have a lot of work to do and not a lot of time to do it, so everyone is going to have to be cooperative if we are going to depart at a decent hour on Friday.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 10:30 a.m. with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each.

Under the previous order, the first half of the time shall be under the control of the majority leader or his designee.

The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, we have 15 minutes, is that correct, or do we have the whole half hour?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has 27 minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. It is 27 minutes. I ask unanimous consent I be in control of that time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EDUCATION

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, as I have done on other occasions, I want to bring attention of the Senate to where we are in education funding, an issue which is of central concern to families all over this country. I think if we asked the families across America—I know around Massachusetts—they are obviously concerned, particularly in the last few days and certainly in the last few months about the dangers of terrorism. They want to be sure we are going to be able to support our forces overseas. They are very concerned about it.

In my State, even with the rosy predictions of some, we still have communities with sizable unemployment. Families have a great deal of uncertainty about their future.

But right underneath the surface are two other major issues. One is health care, and that is reflected in the cost of prescription drugs and the availability of prescription drugs, but, second, and equal to that, is the question of ensuring their children will receive a quality education.

We addressed that issue in the Elementary and Secondary Education Act last year. We worked together with President Bush. We are proud of the fact we were effective in working together, bridging many of the differences. We were able to get a sizable downpayment for that legislation.

We have still left many children behind. Even though the bill is called No Child Left Behind, we are still leaving millions of children behind. Under the administration's proposal, we are going to even leave additional children behind.

As this chart shows, as we started the proposal last year, the Bush proposal was 3.5 percent. We were able to effectively get it up to 20 percent.

All of us are very familiar with the statements, the comments the President has made about how we all have responsibility. Students have responsibility and accountability; schools have responsibility; parents have responsibility.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

That raises another issue. In the drafting of the rules, I think all of us understand the first educator for a child is the parents. We have put a special requirement in the legislation to make sure parents will be involved every step along the way in the implementation of the act we passed last year.

So it brings us some dismay that the administration has failed to do that, and done this in such a way that the parents are now bringing a suit against the administration because they are being excluded at the local level. That makes no sense. We should welcome parents in at the local level. We should welcome parents into the process of the education of their children.

But very quickly, before leaving this chart, I, again, want to show from the 3.5-percent increase, we were able to raise that up to 20 percent. We heard the administration talk a great deal, with the great sense of pride they had, with all the additional resources, and now it is back to 2.8 percent.

Mr. DURBIN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KENNEDY. Please.

Mr. DURBIN. I think the Senator has hit an important point when we talk about the future of education and teachers. That chart tells an interesting story.

In Illinois, when I went to one of the universities that graduates more teachers than other schools, I said: What are we going to do about the shortage of teachers which we are facing in America? How are we going to find more teachers?

They said: Certainly we need more teachers, and good teachers, but our biggest problem is retaining teachers. Teachers who are educated, who graduate with student loans and the burdens that they face, start teaching in a classroom and after 2 or 3 years get discouraged, leave the classroom and go into the private sector. They said that we have to find a way to retain good teachers.

That is also an important element.

What the Senator pointed out here is that if the Bush administration will not continue its funding level for teachers, there is going to be unpredictability, unreliability for the teacher in the future.

My State is facing budget problems. Most are. They are going to be cutting back on education. So the double hit from both State funding and the Bush administration's refusal to fund its own education bill is going to jeopardize the number of teachers who are going to be available.

I think that is going to create problems far beyond next year.

Mr. KENNEDY. I appreciate what the Senator has pointed out. This chart indicates that $742 million was added by the Congress last year for teacher quality. That is effectively zeroed out in terms of this year for teachers, in terms of recruiting teachers and in terms of retaining teachers. This is professional development.

I want to remind the American people that we have an administration which says, with the No. 1 domestic priority of education, we are confined to $600 billion in tax cuts that they asked us to verify and make permanent for the future. And here we have virtually zero in terms of increasing the retention of teachers, training of teachers, and professional development.

Do the American people really believe this is the first domestic priority for the administration when they don't fund it and they asked the Congress to make permanent $600 billion in tax cuts over the next 7 years?

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield on another question?

Mr. KENNEDY. I am happy to yield to the leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I appreciate very much what the Senator from Illinois said. Last weekend I spoke in South Dakota at the last graduation of a high school at Hecla in my State. Hecla is closing its doors. They will no longer have a high school in that small town. What I find is that what is happening in Hecla is happening in places all over my State and in the country. Budgets are collapsing at the local level. They are not able to fund the priorities because the property tax base is shrinking. Every school administrator and every school district president I have talked to says they no longer have the budget they had just a couple of years ago. The situation is exacerbated by the tremendous loss of revenue at the local level.

On top of that, we now see a loss of revenue at the Federal level. Schools are getting caught in the squeeze. There is less money at the local level to hire teachers, to do what they have to do to improve the schools, and to ensure they have the proper classroom size at the very time of a double whammy by the administration which comes out with a budget that is sorely lacking in commitment of resources needed to meet the issues and challenges these schools are facing.

We are going to continue to see schools close, schools downsize, classes get larger, and students subjected to teachers who in some cases may not be qualified, in large measure because funding is not there.

We cannot have reform that we hear this administration wants without having resources. I appreciate very much the Senator from Massachusetts calling attention to that fact. But I ask: Does the Senator from Massachusetts have any similar situations he has experienced? Are schools not having that problem now not only in rural areas but in urban areas as well?

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator is absolutely correct. I think the Senator would agree with me that parents back home just want their children educated. They want a partnership. I imagine in South Dakota and Massachusetts they want a partnership to make sure we are going to have investment in children.

It is a question of priorities. The leader has pointed out what was happening in his State. This isn't just something that the Senator from South Dakota has pointed out. Here is an article from the Wall Street Journal. This is not an organ of the Democratic Party. It is a very extensive article about the tight budget posing a threat to the smaller class sizes, which as we have all seen has a direct impact on children learning.

The article says:

> In the prosperous 1990's, cutting class sizes gained importance, fueled by a Clinton-era program providing Federal aid for teacher hiring. But now some districts can't afford smaller classes partly due to unexpected costs of the hiring they've already done, and partly because of the economic slowdown.

And it is escalating dramatically.

It is an extensive article. I ask unanimous consent to have the article printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TIGHT BUDGETS POSE A THREAT TO SMALL CLASSES

(By Robert Tomsho)

The crowded classroom may be coming back.

In the prosperous 1990s, cutting class sizes gained importance, fueled by a Clinton-era program providing federal aid for teacher hiring. But now some districts can't afford smaller classes partly due to unexpected costs of the hiring they've already done, and partly because of the economic slowdown.

Meanwhile, a new federal policy shift soon will permit states to spend federal money formerly dedicated to smaller classes on other school programs.

Districts that stopped maintaining smaller classes may not see class sizes go up for a few years. Still, worried advocates of small classes are starting to take action now to protect a policy widely popular among parents and teachers.

In 1996 the Irvine Unified School District, near Los Angeles, joined California's big push to reduce class sizes in kindergarten through third grade to no more than 20 students per class. With the state picking up 70% of the tab, the district hired about 200 teachers. Since then, related costs have increased as these new teachers moved up the pay scale. Because state funding hasn't kept up, Irvine had to tap local revenue, thereby increasing classes in the higher grades. Since the district began reducing K–3 class sizes in 1996, it has had to raise class sizes in grades 4–12 to an average of 35 students per class, up from 33. The jumps have been sharpest at the high-school level: Some classes have as many as 40 students.

Barbara Kadar, an Irvine first-grade teacher, says the program allowed her to spot individual problems early on. She says she's shocked at the policy reversal. "They found the goose that laid the golden egg, and now they're killing it."

At least nine other California school districts, out of 1,048, including the Cabrillo Unified School District, in Half Moon Bay, and Livermore Valley Joint Unified School District, in Livermore, made similar moves. State education officials expect many more districts to do the same by fall.

Similar funding cuts for class-size reduction programs have been proposed in Massachusetts, Wisconsin and other cash-strapped states. Even in places where state money for them has gone untouched, sharp cuts in state aid have forced districts to consider staff cuts that would result in higher class sizes. Brian Benzel, superintendent of schools in Spokane Wash., said: "We are going to be in a very difficult set of trade-offs."

Parents aren't likely to sympathize. This past month, dozens attended a meeting of the Riverside, Calif., board of education to protect its elimination of class-size reduction for the third grade. Meanwhile, in Memphis, amid a campaign by the local PTA, parents have been driving to the state Capitol in Nashville to demand that Tennessee legislators pass a budget that keeps the state's program. Recent polls show that an overwhelming margin of Florida voters back a constitutional amendment requiring the state to adequately fund a drive for smaller classes. "I can't go anywhere in public without someone coming up to me and saying that we have to do something," says state Sen. Debby Wasserman-Schultz, a Florida Democrat involved in an effort to put the proposed amendment on the November ballot.

For fiscal 2003, the Bush administration has combined the stand-alone federal class-reduction program with a program intended to enhance teacher quality. Now, states and school districts can decide whether to use about $2.85 billion in related funds for new hires or to bolster teacher quality. The move was designed to give states more "flexibility and accountability," says Eugene Hickok, U.S. undersecretary of education.

Critics say the federal move enables states to shrink their own programs and sets the stage for endless wrangling over future funding for such initiatives. "It's going to come down to how much clout the teachers and parents have," says retired Tennessee State University education professor Helen Pate-Bain, a prominent advocate of smaller classes and former head of the National Education Association, a teachers union.

About 25 states have class-size reduction programs. In 1998, President Clinton, who championed the cause, called the hiring of 100,000 new teachers and establishing the federal class-size reduction program.

Research over the years has indicated that smaller class sizes lead to higher achievement in the primary grades, with the most marked improvements occurring when a classroom has 20 or fewer students. The effect of small classes beyond third grade is more mixed. During the 30 years of reduction in the federal ratios, nationwide achievement trends were a mixed bag: Math scores rose steadily as science results fell for some age groups.

California, having already spent nearly $8 billion since 1996 to hire 28,000 new teachers, expects to complete an evaluation of its program by summer. Meanwhile, its program has had some unintended effects: In its hiring binge, the state had to take on more uncertified teachers to fill its classrooms, and about two-thirds of districts cut other programs, such as in music and art, to keep the classes small.

Such side effects haven't blunted support for small classes. Earlier this year, California's program was barely touched by budget cuts. Even as individual districts cut their programs, the California PTA is lobbying the state for more funding for smaller classes. "Parents and teachers still strongly believe that this is good for their kids," says Teri Burns, California's deputy superintendent of education, governmental affairs. "That pressure is still there."

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, this is at a time when the administration is asking for $600 billion more in tax cuts. We cannot help the parents, the small towns, communities, and working families make sure they are going to have a qualified teacher in every classroom in South Dakota, in Illinois, and New Jersey.

Mr. CORZINE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield for an observation?

Mr. KENNEDY. Please.

Mr. CORZINE. Mr. President, the point the Senator from Massachusetts is making with regard to cutting the resources we have available for education and then not funding the mandates really bites in the State of New Jersey. We have a $6 billion budget deficit in the upcoming year. Educational funding is going to have to be cut just to balance the budget. We have serious conflicts going on between teachers and administrations across the State.

If I have heard the Senator correctly, we are going to have virtually no increase in education spending at the Federal level this year at a time when we have decided we want to make permanent these tax cuts which really are going to people who are doing extraordinarily well in society.

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator has defined the choice. This is a question of priority which the Senator has outlined, the challenges in his home State, and what the choices are.

The administration, whatever we think about the past tax cuts, has now requested of this Congress $600 billion more. The administration indicates that they have two priorities: Low-income children and special needs children.

I see both of my colleagues are here on this issue. They have indicated that the President has these two priorities.

Look at the special needs children. If we fund the $1 billion each year, as the administration proposed, it would take 33 years to fully fund IDEA. A first grader at the time IDEA was first enacted would be 67 years old by the time the Republicans' proposal fully funded IDEA.

That is the program that helps communities with special needs children. That program was fully funded when it passed here and went to the conference when the Republicans ran the Senate. When it came back, it was zeroed out. It was called special interest funding.

Then, as a matter of principle, the decision was made by our colleague and friend, the Senator from Vermont, Mr. JEFFORDS. He said that isn't enough. He became an independent because he did not believe meeting our responsibilities to special needs children was a boondoggle or pork spending.

I don't think the Senator from Illinois or the Senator from New Jersey believe that either. I want to know if they believe, as I do, that this is a national priority and should be a national priority, and that we ought to be willing to make sure we meet our commitment to those families who have the special needs children and to the taxpayers in those communities to make sure it is adequately funded.

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, that is the important point, the last statement is the important point, because school districts in Illinois, New Jersey, and Massachusetts are facing a Federal mandate. Children with special needs, with learning disabilities, physical disabilities, and other problems are going to have to be given every opportunity to learn and be productive members of society.

That is something Congress and the Federal Government said to the local school districts. Yet we have not provided them the opportunity to do it.

The Senator from Vermont, Mr. JEFFORDS, and the Senator from Massachusetts, as well as the Senator from New Jersey and I, want the Federal Government to keep its words. We do not want to say to school districts: This is your responsibility; you figure out how to pay for it. In some States, school districts have to move children great distances to find that special learning situation and environment where they can prosper, and at great expense. That is money taken out of the regular classrooms, from the students and teachers. We need to make sure there is quality education for all kids.

The Bush administration says it is a good mandate. But if they want to spend additional money for tax cuts, we can't see it. They want to put $600 billion more into tax cuts primarily for wealthy Americans and not for education, for teachers, for students, and particularly for children with special needs. That is exactly the burden my school districts face in Illinois.

Mr. KENNEDY. There are smaller towns and communities that have children with special needs. When the school districts attempt to provide for children with special needs, suddenly the property tax rates go up in the local towns and communities. Parents feel they are blessed to have children with special needs. They understand the challenges faced in trying to take care of those children. I have never met a parent who does not believe in some way that child gives them an additional sense of purpose in life. All we are trying to say as a nation is we are going to try to help relieve that community from those very special kinds of additional obligations. We are going to provide some help—not all but some help and assistance.

Can either Senator explain to me why that is a lesser priority than trying to have this $600 billion tax cut? That is the choice. Are we going to help small towns? They can be in North Carolina the State of our Presiding Officer, or they can be in South Carolina. They can be in western Massachusetts, southern Illinois, or any part of the State of New Jersey. But these local communities are hurting and hurting deeply.

We have a lot of lip service, but if we are to follow what the administration has said in terms of funding for IDEA, it is going to take us another 33 years in order to do it.

Mr. CORZINE. If the Senator will yield for just a moment, I will make the observation this is not only for small communities. I think about towns such as Camden and Newark in the State of New Jersey, where class sizes average about 30. Many of these children who have special needs are mainstreamed, but they have special programs to try to lift those with learning disabilities.

These towns and cities do not have the tax base to even raise the necessary money. So what happens is, in fact, we are forcing failure to comply with the law, failure to meet the needs of our children. And if we, as a nation, do not begin to prioritize these elements of our population in this educational process, we are going to recycle these problems because it just goes on and on, and it is extraordinarily dangerous in our small towns and cities for our urban kids, particularly where you combine the problem of large class size and special needs for kids who have been mainstreamed in classrooms because there are no other choices.

I hope we can speak strongly about doing what we always argue: That we want to make sure we fully fund IDEA. It is not happening. I commend the Senator from Massachusetts for his effort.

Mr. KENNEDY. I thank the Senator because we have recognized this IDEA program has been built upon the Supreme Court holdings about responsibility. We have the responsibility to make sure education is going to be available and accessible to children with special needs. That is effectively the Court's decision.

So we have said we are going to provide help and assistance. We have failed to do so. As the Senator points out, the fact is, 25 years ago there were 4 million children who were effectively either being kept at home or pushed off in different kinds of settings who never had the opportunity for education. Now we know those children are working their way through.

What we have found, in terms of the graduation rates, employment rates, and even the college graduation rates, they have all dramatically increased. And the difference it has made is extraordinary in terms of their lives, living lives of independence and even being taxpayers.

My friend from New Jersey is in the Chamber. I want to mention one other area in which I know he is interested; that is, what has happened with the Pell grants.

We just have a brief opportunity. We have seen what the cost of education has been, the shrinking buying power of the Pell grants. We know how important this is in terms of children. The average income is $17,000 for those who are eligible for the Pell grants.

We found out back in the mid-1970s that paid for about 80 percent of the tuition for children who went to 4-year public colleges less so in private institutions. Now we have seen that purchasing power go down.

Does the Senator not agree with me that we, at some time, made a decision we were going to try to make sure that children of ability and talent, from wherever they came, whatever part of the country—despite their families' resources—would be able to gain entrance into a fine school or college in New Jersey or Massachusetts or any other State, that they would be able, with their limited means, to put together the Pell grants, have the Work-Study Program, and with their summer income—the extra work they might be able to do—have an education?

Will the Senator comment about what has happened with that Pell grant which has really been the key to opportunity? We will hear a lot of speeches in this body and a lot of speeches being made in America about the importance of education and how that opens the doors of opportunity. Does the Senator from New Jersey not agree with me that effectively we are closing those doors for a very significant number of Americans and, therefore, we are losing, at least for those young Americans, the real hope and opportunity that education provides?

Mr. CORZINE. The Senator from Massachusetts is exactly correct. It is extraordinarily disappointing that we have seen this kind of trend, particularly at our public universities, which were really designed to give every American access to higher education. I have not studied the numbers in the last couple months, but I think the average earnings of a college graduate relative to a high school graduate are almost double for someone who completes a 4-year college degree.

If we do not understand that reflects productivity into our economy and into our society, we are making a huge mistake. This kind of underfunding of access to the American promise, the American dream, I find hard to conceive. I know it has been important in my life, and it has been for many of our colleagues.

Mr. KENNEDY. I appreciate the Senator's comments because this Nation had been committed to that value. We had the land-grant colleges in the 1870s, which was the beginning of the commitment to make sure children with limited means would be able to go to college. We had the GI bill after World War II, and every evaluation shows that those who received the GI bill paid five times as much in taxes as it actually cost.

We had this commitment in the early 1960s with the Pell grants and the Stafford loans to put together, and day after day, when we have failed to fund this program, we are increasingly denying that opportunity for millions of Americans.

We have a responsibility to invest in the children of this country. The choice is clear: Are we going to follow what the President has suggested, $600 billion more in terms of tax cuts, or are we going to invest in the children of this country in K–12 to help provide help and assistance to those families, the special needs children, and the gifted and talented children, to take advantage of the Pell grants, or to otherwise be denied the education?

Mr. President, this is a matter of importance to every family. We want to give them the assurances that we on this side, on the Democratic side, are going to stand with the families. We are going to fight for this funding because it is our priority, their priority, and we will do everything we possibly can to make it a reality.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. STABENOW). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Madam President, parliamentary inquiry: Am I scheduled now in morning business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further use of time on the majority side, the Senator may proceed.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Chair.

(The remarks of Mr. DOMENICI pertaining to the introduction of S. 2540 are located in today's RECORD under "Statements on Introduced Bills and Joint Resolutions.")

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call to the roll.

Mr. THOMAS. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THOMAS. We are in morning business; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

PUBLIC LANDS

Mr. THOMAS. Madam President, we have been very involved in relatively few issues over the past 6 weeks. We were on energy, and for about 3 weeks we have been on trade. Obviously, our attention has been very strongly on terrorism and doing the things that are necessary both overseas and internally. At the same time, we have talked among ourselves, of course, and one of the elements is to do normal business.

Today, I want to talk about an issue that is quite often normal business, particularly for those of us in the West, and that is public lands. Of course, there are a lot of aspects to public lands.

In States such as Wyoming, about 50 percent of the State belongs to the Federal Government, and therefore what is done with public lands has a great deal to do with our economy and our activities. We feel very strongly about it, of course. It is a big issue for us. The idea of multiple use is one that is always debatable and is being discussed. There are different kinds of public lands. There are those set aside for wilderness, for a special use, for a special reason, and there are those with various restrictions, set aside for parks or U.S. forests. So there are constant issues that relate to the use of that land.

Of course, much of our domestic energy is produced on public lands. So we need to make sure we can work on the extraction of energy and domestic production and, at the same time, maintain the quality of the environment. That is a debatable issue. I think we can do that, and we have demonstrated in Wyoming that you can have multiple use and production of resources, and you can have grazing and, at the same time, protect the land and the environment. So energy has become very much an issue.

As you know, the whole question over ANWR was the idea that we now look overseas for about 60 percent of our energy. We need to increase our domestic production so we become less dependent upon others. That continues to be an issue. But it is not only ANWR. That was simply the poster child. The fact is, in the West it is a very continuing and important issue. We are involved in doing EISs right now, and EPA and endangered species issues, which go together to make decisions.

Access is also very important. People like to visit public lands with multiple use. The question of roads comes up. Most people agree that outside of the wilderness, limited roads are the answer. Again, we have to protect the environment.

One of the things we have pushed for and continue to do so—and this administration has promised to do and I think is doing—is to allow for more flexibility and more local input. It is true the locals cannot make the decisions regarding public lands, but they can have very helpful input into how they are managed.

We are also talking about the use of snow machines in Yellowstone Park. Of course, there is some controversy about that. Some people don't think there ought to be anybody in the park in the wintertime. Millions of cars are there in the summer, but there are only a few thousand in the winter and that seems to upset them. Nobody is suggesting we continue to do it as we have in the past. But there are now reliable sources that can make quieter machines so that they can be managed better and separated from cross-country skiers. You can do a number of things to allow the owners to participate in public lands.

Another issue that has been discussed is the matter of fires. We are into that season now and we have already had forest and grass fires in some places. Certainly, we are better prepared for that now, partly because we have had three dry years. The Forest Service has invested a great deal more in personnel and equipment to deal with that problem.

One of the other issues that sometimes is controversial is the idea of trying to prevent forest fires by the removal of excess forage and fuel. It is something that has been done and can be done, and we have not done enough of it perhaps. We ought to be able to do some thinning in various places that will make fires less likely to occur, rather than putting all of our emphasis on fighting a fire after it has begun.

So public lands has a lot of interesting issues and always will, of course. There are people on both sides that sort of take extreme positions. Some say we should not touch those lands; they should be set aside totally. Others are not concerned about damage to the environment. So we need to find a reasonable middle ground so we can have access, so we can have multiple use and, at the same time, we can preserve the resource.

I want to talk briefly today about one aspect of it and that is our national parks. National parks are different, at least for one reason, in that they were set aside as national parks for a specific reason. The reason that is so different is the BLM lands—Bureau of Land Management. Most of the lands in Wyoming were not set aside, they were residual, what was left after the Homestead Act had been completed. So they may or may not have any particular significant character to them. Parks, on the other hand, do have significant character or they would not be designated as parks. So we have been working on that.

In 1998, I was successful in passing Vision 2014 in which we dealt for the first time in a number of years with ways to help strengthen parks, in terms of management and their concessions, and in terms of dealing with the natural resource needs, and dealing with financing of national parks. It provides for improved management, increased accountability. As in any other issue, there has to be accountability when you are talking about millions of dollars. Of course, it has to be management when you are talking about millions of people going there. So we were very pleased with that law. I think it is doing some things that are very useful.

Part of the funding in the past has been what has been called the demonstration fee project, which created park passes. That has been in place now for 3 years. The National Park Foundation has been instrumental in its success. Now there is a very attractive portfolio and picture and so on, and persons can buy this pass, which does two things. One, it gives accessibility to all 385 national parks and also helps to contribute to the sustenance of those parks. We certainly want to continue that program, but we are now going to be working on something that does expire. It is called the Demonstration Fee Program. It expires at the end of this year. It has been in existence for about 5 years. It was an opportunity for some small additional fee on certain parks and allowed for income and the opportunity to make expenditures on what is good for visitors in the parks. It extended not only to the Park Service but also the Bureau of Land Management, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, and the U.S. Forest Service.

It turns out the collection of the fee in many places is very difficult. In fact, with the BLM it is almost impossible. If there is a public land forest, and in some instances there are facilities, they can probably do that, but it is very difficult. On the other hand, parks almost always have an admission site, a gate for entry.

So the idea is the principal support for parks and public lands is provided through taxes from everyone, and then some small contribution made by those visitors. We are trying to avoid the idea of each park having various charges.

Eighty percent of the funds that come from the fees are used in the park where they are collected. Some parks cannot collect, so 20 percent is reallocated generally. But a major part of the fee goes to the park where the fee is collected.

We modified it some. We are making a permanent fee, rather than the demonstration fee which expires. We made provisions and criteria for the charging of the fee. We have a business management plan on the park and determine the feasibility of this program. Not all parks will be involved. We will do away with the nickel-and-dime fees where you pay for every little thing.

This provides a great opportunity. We talk a lot about the lack of funding for parks. Particularly in the infrastructure, that is probably true. This administration has made it clear they intend to increase the funding for the infrastructure, particularly of larger parks such as Yellowstone or Yosemite where there are millions of people visiting, where we have highway problems, sewer problems, facility problems. We have introduced a bill that makes this permanent. It helps fund our parks and keep them strong.

We have over 385 national parks in America. In addition, there are heritage sites and other parks administered by the Park Service. That is one of the real treasures of the United States, our national parks—whether they be in Florida, in the Everglades or elsewhere.

We are working on a fee demonstration program for national parks. The purpose is to keep them the valuable asset they are. They have to be preserved. We changed some concessions so they contribute more, yet make them competitive. We are seeking to get business management in the larger parks. They are big business, operating in millions of dollars each year. Times change. We are seeking to change with it. The purpose is to effectively manage the resources so they are available to their owners to visit.

We look forward to the passage of the fee demonstration project.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

ANDEAN TRADE PREFERENCE EXPANSION ACT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now resume consideration of H.R. 3009, which the clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 3009) to extend the Andean Trade Preference Act, to grant additional trade benefits under that Act, and for other purposes.

Pending:

Baucus/Grassley amendment No. 3401, in the nature of a substitute.

Dorgan amendment No. 3442 (to amendment No. 3401), to require the U.S. Trade Representative to identify effective trade remedies to address the unfair trade practices of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Reid (for Reed) amendment No. 3443 (to amendment No. 3401), to restore the provisions relating to secondary workers.

Reid (for Nelson of Florida/Graham) amendment No. 3440 (to amendment No. 3401), to limit tariff reduction authority on certain products.

Reid (for Bayh) amendment No. 3445 (to amendment No. 3401), to require the ITC to give notice of section 202 investigations to the Secretary of Labor.

Reid (for Byrd) amendment No. 3447 (to amendment No. 3401), to amend the provisions relating to the Congressional Oversight Group.

Reid (for Byrd) amendment No. 3448 (to amendment No. 3401), to clarify the procedures for procedural disapproval resolutions.

Reid (for Byrd) amendment No. 3449 (to amendment No. 3401), to clarify the procedures for extension disapproval resolutions.

Reid (for Byrd) amendment No. 3450 (to amendment No. 3401), to limit the application of trade authorities procedures to a single agreement resulting from Doha.

Reid (for Byrd) amendment No. 3451 (to amendment No. 3401), to address disclosures by publicly traded companies of relationships with certain countries or foreign-owned corporations.

Reid (for Byrd) amendment No. 3452 (to amendment No. 3401), to facilitate the opening of energy markets and promote the exportation of clean energy technologies.

Boxer/Murray amendment No. 3431 (to amendment No. 3401), to require the Secretary of Labor to establish a trade adjustment assistance program for certain service workers.

Boxer amendment No. 3432 (to amendment No. 3401), to ensure that the U.S. Trade Representative considers the impact of trade agreements on women.

Reid (for Durbin) amendment No. 3456 (to amendment No. 3401), to extend the temporary duty suspensions with respect to certain wool.

Reid (for Durbin) amendment No. 3457 (to amendment No. 3401), to extend the temporary duty suspensions with respect to certain wool.

Reid (for Durbin) amendment No. 3458 (to amendment No. 3401), to establish and implement a steel import notification and monitoring program.

Reid (for Harkin) amendment No. 3459 (to amendment No. 3401), to include the prevention of the worst forms of child labor as one of the principal negotiating objectives of the United States.

Reid (for Corzine) amendment No. 3461 (to amendment No. 3401), to help ensure that trade agreements protect national security, social security, and other significant public services.

Reid (for Corzine) amendment No. 3462 (to amendment No. 3401), to strike the section dealing with border search authority for certain contraband in outbound mail.

Reid (for Hollings) amendment No. 3463 (to amendment No. 3401), to provide for the certification of textile and apparel workers who lose their jobs or who have lost their jobs since the start of 1999 as eligible individuals for purposes of trade adjustment assistance and health insurance benefits, and to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to prevent corporate expatriation to avoid U.S. income tax.

Reid (for Hollings) amendment No. 3464 (to amendment No. 3401), to ensure that ISAC Committees are representative of the producing sectors of the U.S. economy.

Reid (for Hollings) amendment No. 3465 (to amendment No. 3401), to provide that the benefits provided under any preferential tariff program, excluding the North American Free Trade Agreement, shall not apply to any product of a country that fails to comply within 30 days with a U.S. Government request for the extradition of an individual for trial in the United States if that individual has been indicted by a Federal grand jury for a crime involving a violation of the Controlled Substances Act.

Reid (for Landrieu) amendment No. 3470 (to amendment No. 3401), to provide trade adjustment assistance benefits to certain maritime workers.

Brownback amendment No. 3446 (to amendment No. 3401), to extend permanent normal trade relations to the nations of central Asia and the south Caucasus, and Russia.

Grassley modified amendment No. 3474 (to amendment No. 3446), to express the sense of the Senate regarding the United States-Russian Federation summit meeting, May 2002.

Reid (for Jeffords) amendment No. 3521 (to amendment No. 3401), to authorize appropriations for certain staff of the U.S. Customs Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the time until 11:30 a.m. shall be for debate only, with the time equally divided and controlled by the two leaders or their designees.

The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, we have had 3 good weeks of debate on this bill. I urge my colleagues now to think about voting to invoke cloture so we can get past this bill and get on to other business. We have already disposed of 19 amendments. A number of other proposed amendments have been addressed through colloquies and will also be included in the managers' amendment at the end of this legislation.

I might say, early in the debate we were able to forge a historic compromise on trade adjustment assistance which expanded the program to deserving groups of workers and, for the first time, provided health care adjustment to TAA recipients.

That is an extremely important development. Currently, trade adjustment assistance—that is, assistance to workers displaced because of trade—is paltry. It doesn't help workers very much. It only applies to primary workers anyway. We made huge, significant improvements to help develop a consensus on trade; that is, so more people get in on the benefits of trade or at least are not harmed when there is natural change in our economy because of globalism and economic readjustment.

This trade adjustment assistance part of it, it should be understood, I might say unpretentiously, is an extremely important part of this bill. As it stands now, I believe this bill is the most forward-looking and significant trade legislation to be considered by this body in over 15 years.

The fast-track extension included in this bill provides authority for the President to negotiate trade agreements, both multilaterally and unilaterally. Using fast track, the President will be able to open new markets for U.S. exporters and for the benefit of U.S. consumers.

As I have noted before, this section of the bill is also the most progressive ever to gain serious consideration by the Congress. Not only is the trade adjustment assistance provision most progressive, but also the fast-track TPA portions of the bill are most progressive. For the first time, labor and environmental issues are part of the core of any future trade agreements. That is monumental.

I cannot tell you, Madam President, the number of years that issue has been debated. Those who did not want labor to be included at all in the negotiating objectives of trade agreements, who did not want environmental issues at all considered, won the day. But, frankly, I think it was the breakdown of the ministerial in Seattle; that is, the trade ministers' meeting in Seattle, which could not cope with all the changes in the world, including the necessary inclusion of labor and environmental provisions, that has now brought this to where, in this legislation, we are doing so.

This bill for the first time includes labor and environmental issues. It also continues U.S. priorities such as opening agricultural markets. We all know one of the biggest challenges we face as Americans is knocking down agricultural trade barriers worldwide. The European Union is one of the greatest offenders.

We also know we want to preserve our U.S. trade laws, such as section 201 of our countervailing duty laws or antidumping, which are there to help keep other countries honest; that is, to help prevent other countries from dumping in America, from subsidizing their production and sending it over to America. We need those laws to help keep those other countries honest because our borders are significantly more open than are the borders of other countries.

So we need our trade laws to help them do what they know is the right thing to do. If we do not have our trade laws, they are unlikely to do it.

The legislation before us, as I mentioned, extends and expands trade adjustment assistance. It is critically important. This is long overdue. Let me just explain in some detail, although not much detail, what that provides.

We extend coverage to ensure workers can complete job retraining. That is an extension. We have a whole new pilot program on wage insurance, so a lot of people who are dislocated on account of trade have the option not to take the trade adjustment benefits but, instead, can take wage insurance, which essentially compensates the employee for half of the difference between his old job and his new job, the beauty of this being it helps people work again; they are back at a job working, as opposed to just receiving benefits.

We also expand coverage to secondary workers—not just primary workers.

For example, if an auto plant lays off employees, what about the supplier of windshields or the supplier of engine parts? They get laid off, too. Those are the secondary workers who are now covered under this bill. It is a huge benefit. We expand it to farmers and to fishermen. They get displaced because of trade many times.

As I mentioned, it is extremely important. For the first time, we provide health insurance for displaced workers. It is critically important in these days where, unfortunately for many people, it is hard to get health insurance anyway.

When you are displaced and lose your job, what are you going to do about your health insurance? You are going to need health insurance. We provide health insurance under trade adjustment assistance.

These matters should not be taken lightly. They are extraordinarily important. Those trade adjustment assistance provisions will be available to people who are displaced because of trade irrespective of whether it was a consequence of a fast-track bill, irrespective of whether that dislocation was a consequence of some trade agreement not subject to fast track—most trade agreements are not subject to fast track—irrespective of whether there is any agreement of any kind because the world economy is so fluid and some changes are almost chaotic. Those benefits in the legislation will be available to anybody who qualifies and loses a job on account of trade, irrespective of any fast track or any trade bill. It is vitally important.

The bill also extends and expands two very vital preference programs. One is the Generalized System of Preferences, GSP, and the other is the Andean Trade Preference Act, which is very important, particularly if we want to increase trade in South America. European countries and others have trade with South America. We need to get moving and have a better trading relationship with at least the Andean countries in South America. This bill extends those preference programs for 5 years, and also rebates tariffs paid since expiration which was the end of last year.

The two I mentioned are also improved. The Andean Trade Preference Act now includes a petition process for reviewing the progress of Andean countries in meeting the objectives set out in the bill. And the GSP Program has been updated to take into account the definition of core worker rights promulgated by the ILO's 1998 declaration. That is an update. It helps to bring ILO standards up to date.

Further, in this debate on this bill, Senators have improved the legislation through their amendments. Senator KENNEDY, for example, won an amendment to ensure that the global AIDS crisis is properly recognized in trade legislation. Senators DAYTON and CRAIG contributed an important amendment to ensure U.S. trade laws are not needlessly treated as bargaining chips in trade negotiations. I intend to see to it that this issue is properly addressed as this legislation moves forward.

Senator EDWARDS added an amendment to ensure that the interests of textile companies and their workers are treated fairly in trade negotiations, and under trade adjustment assistance.

I congratulate each of these Senators for their contributions and hope they will help us in moving their amendments and the entire legislative package forward.

We have had a good and full debate on this trade bill. I plan to continue to work with Senators to see to it that their concerns are addressed.

But it is time to begin to think about passing this bill. It is time to wind down the debate. It is time to invoke cloture. There are always going to be further amendments that some Senators wish to offer. But at some point we need to declare that enough is enough and move this process forward. I believe we are at that time. For the sake of American workers, for the sake of American business, for the sake of every American farmer and rancher, particularly American workers and employees, and because a very important part of this bill is to help those who are dislocated on account of trade, I urge my colleagues to vote for cloture.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BAYH). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. President, I will speak briefly on the pending legislation, which is the trade promotion authority, the trade adjustment authority, the Andean trade agreement, the general agreement on tariffs language.

There is that old adage: If there are two things you do not want to watch being made, one is sausage, the other is law. Regrettably, that applies to this undertaking.

For reasons which still escape me but which appear to be necessary from the standpoint of the administration, there was a negotiation which occurred which involved how this bill would come to the floor. The majority leader decided to, out of the course which is typical, hook three major pieces of legislation together: Andean trade, trade adjustment, and trade promotion.

Traditionally, trade promotion, which has historically been noted as fast track, has been taken up as a single issue. It was not linked to trade adjustment nor with another treaty, which in this case would be the Andean trade promotion agreement. But the majority leader decided to bring the three to the floor, and the administration, working through the leadership on the Republican side of the aisle, working with Senator GRASSLEY, Senator LOTT, and Senator GRAMM, entered into extensive negotiations as to the makeup of the final package.

The result of that was, as I mentioned, something you probably should not watch, whether it is the making of sausage or the making of this piece of legislation because within this bill there are major new initiatives which have very little to do with trade, but a great deal to do with bad public policy, as we try to address issues such as health care and people losing their jobs.

There is no question but that the trade adjustment concept is a very important one. I have used it extensively in my role in public policy. There have been instances in New Hampshire where people have been put out of work because of what appeared to be unfair trade activity, and we have used trade adjustment to assist those individuals. It has been very successful.

Its purpose—the original concept of trade adjustment—was to train people, to give them new talents, new abilities, new capabilities, so they could go back into the workforce after losing their job because the job which they lost no longer existed because trade, competition had basically left it behind. We helped those people get back into the workforce and actually have more talent, more ability, and thus be more productive and actually end up being citizens who have a better earning capacity.

That is the goal of trade adjustment, a very laudable goal, appropriate goal, and something which actually has worked rather well, at least in my experience as it has been applied in New Hampshire. I used it aggressively both as Governor and since then, on occasion, I have had the chance to use it to help people in my role in the Senate.

But this bill takes the trade adjustment concept and moves it into an entirely different exercise. It moves it into an exercise of what basically amounts to welfare, in many instances, and to social engineering, in other instances, and into an attempt to address a health care need which is significant but which, when addressed in the manner in which it is addressed in this bill, puts us on a path which could lead to a radical expansion in the cost of health care for the taxpayers of America who have to bear the burden of these types of initiatives.

The bill has in it two major new entitlements, something called wage subsidy, which is a European model program that essentially says you are going to pay people to take less productive jobs. Somebody who is out there working hard, earning money, paying taxes, they are going to take their tax dollars and pay somebody who is out of work to take a job where that person will be less productive, encourage them to move into a less productive job—just the opposite of what the original purpose of trade adjustment was—a concept which is purely reflective of what is done in our European neighbors' economies, where they basically pay people to be nonproductive citizens.

That is the first entitlement initiative called wage subsidy: A person gets $5,000 to make up the difference between what they were being paid in the job they lose and the job they take. There are no limitations on this. There is no requirement of necessity. There is no requirement that there be an arm's length agreement. There is no requirement, if there is a similar or substantially similar job out there that the person could have taken at an equal amount of pay or better, that the person take that job. There is no requirement the person stay in the community.

There are none of the requirements that are the concepts built around trade adjustment, which are a person should basically be retrained, given new talents, new opportunities to find a new job within the marketplace where they lost their job. None of those protections are there. There are no protections against fraud and abuse, mismanagement of this brand new entitlement. And it opens the door to a massive expansion of this concept, which we see.

It is not as if that is a concern that is not relevant. We see that course of action being followed in our sister states, sister economies around the globe, where you have this concept of: If you pay people to do less and be less productive, that is actually an appropriate government policy where you take taxpayer dollars out of one person's pocket and put them in another person's pocket and don't ask that person to be more productive. You actually ask them to be less productive.

That attitude of governance, which is paternalistic and which is what dominates the continental European economies, has huge impacts on your productivity as a society and, therefore, on your creation of jobs and wealth and, as a result, on your creation, maintenance, and improvement of a standard of living.

There is an interesting article by Paul Johnson, one of the great historians of the last 20 or 30 years, on this specific point which is contained in a book entitled "Our Times." It is one of the reasons he views the European economy as having failed to maintain itself, because the European economy pursued this paternalistic approach toward economic activity on which we are embarking as a result of choosing this type of brandnew entitlement.

The second major entitlement in this bill is the health care entitlement, much more complex and difficult. The wage subsidy is just a pure outrage. If you have any interest in marketplace economics, it is an affront. If you happen to believe in a paternalistic approach to governance, it is a great program. But if you believe in the marketplace, it is an affront.

The health care entitlement in this bill, which has no place in trade promotion—it should be debated in the context of major health care reform—is much more complex but equally problematic because it creates a brandnew major entitlement. Basically what this says is, if you lose your job because of a trade-related activity, the Federal Government will come in and pay you 70 percent of the cost of buying health care under the terms with which you held health care prior to losing your job or under some sort of pooling agreement. It doesn't say you can go out and buy health care in the private marketplace or that you can join some other group such as an association and buy health care through that. It says you have to buy this new health care through your old health care provider or some new pooling agreement, a State-sponsored pooling agreement.

This concept is a prefunded tax credit, essentially a welfare payment. That is a new title for it, such as when someone comes up with a term to try to avoid the real meaning of what is happening. In this instance, what we have is a welfare payment which is being made to an individual who loses their job.

It is perfectly reasonable that we try to figure out some way to give reasonable health care coverage to people who lose their jobs. That is perfectly reasonable. But to do it in this narrow band of activity outside of a more substantive reform of the health care arena is to step us off on a path which is slick and which is clearly downhill and which will probably lead to incredible mismanagement of our health care initiatives and our attempts to correct the health care problems.

Right on the face of it, this creates an unbelievably difficult situation for people who are working and don't have health care. If you are working and you don't have health care today, you are now going to be paying taxes, probably increased taxes, to pay for somebody who is going to get health care who is not working. How fair is that? You can't afford health care. You are paying taxes. Your taxes go up so that somebody who doesn't have a job but who has a variety of different support mechanisms, including an additional 2 years of unemployment, significant benefits in the area of retraining, significant other benefits which are tied to trade adjustment—that person will also now get a 70-percent payment from you, the working American who does not have health care, to that person, the nonworking person who does not have health care, which creates a perverse incentive in the marketplace for the person who doesn't have health care, who is out of a job, to stay out of a job or maybe the person who needs health care who has a job to give up their job in order to get health care coverage.

It is very bad policy. It is unfair. It is extremely unfair to the person paying taxes who does not have health care coverage.

The second problem with it is, by demanding that the person who is getting this new coverage, the 70 percent of tax dollars to pay for that health care insurance—how many people in America today have 70 percent of their health care paid for them by the Federal Government? I guess the Part B premium on Medicare is the only people who will be competitively in the same situation; about 75 percent of your Part B premium under Medicare is paid for by other taxpayers. But in this instance, that 70-percent subsidy which comes from other taxpayers will now have to be used to purchase the highest cost health insurance that is probably out there, which is the health insurance left over from the job you just lost.

You can't buy anything other than a COBRA-based health policy or this new State pooling concept which does not exist. I am willing to almost guarantee it is not going to exist in most States because most States don't have enough people who are affected by trade adjustment to create a pooling agreement which would be viable through which to buy that health care insurance. They would have to set up an entirely different group of people to participate in the agreement. Maybe they will do that, but most States are not going to set one up just for trade adjustment.

As a result, a person will have a 70-percent subsidy to buy the most expensive health care rather than allowing that person to go out in the marketplace and make an intelligent and thoughtful decision as to where they will buy their health care.

You have immediately created an entitlement which is going to be driven perversely in the amount of cost it will incur and where the dollars are going to flow in order to purchase health care, instead of creating an atmosphere where the person without health insurance, who is out of a job, becomes an intelligent consumer of health care where they go out in the marketplace and say: What do I really need? What can I really afford here? And what do I really need in health care insurance? They look around and figure out what their best options are.

You are instead saying to that person: You must go out and buy the highest end insurance out there. You may not need it, but you have to buy it. Of course, 70 percent of it will be paid for by the poor person working down the street who has a job and doesn't have health care at all.

It makes no sense. If you wanted to throw a door open and look out over an abyss of massive complication, this is it. To step into the uninsured health care issue in this manner is to do exactly that. It is a massive new entitlement in its own right but a colossal mistake from the standpoint of health care policy and a major entitlement initiative as it expands from here.

This is going to basically become a roadmap for the future. It will be a rut that is going to be very hard to get out of intelligently as we move down the road of health care reform, especially for uninsured Americans. This is a big issue, something that has to be handled with a little more thought and foresight.

These are the two huge entitlements from a public policy standpoint. Financially, they are not scored that aggressively in this bill. But from a public policy standpoint, these are the two massive new entitlements in this bill. They represent an explosion of new entitlement activity that is incurring in this Congress and under this administration. The farm bill, scored at $80 billion when it first came through here over budget, is now somewhere over $100 billion, probably more than that, and most of it is in a new entitlement program.

There are a variety of other ones in the wings coming at us, whether they are mandated private sector activities or whether they are going to be something such as a drug benefit which now has a floor on it of $350 billion with no ceiling in sight.

When I came here in 1992, having just served as Governor of my State, my focus was mainly on two things. In fact, it was the main focus of four or five of us as new members, as Republicans, including Senators Coverdell, BENNETT, Kempthorne, HUTCHINSON, and later CAMPBELL. The focus was on unfunded mandates that were being put on the States. The second was the explosion of entitlement costs. We took aggressive action because we were facing a significant deficit and had been through many years of it, to try to get entitlements under control. We aggressively pushed that as new Members of the Senate.

It is sort of like "deja vu all over again," to quote Yogi Berra. Here we are facing a deficit, and we don't know how severe it is going to be. We are piling on entitlements, and the most difficult spending to get under control in Government is entitlement spending because it is automatic. It creates interest groups and basically is not capable of being reined in efficiently or effectively in public bodies that go up for election every 2 and 6 years.

I think the trades made in this bill are difficult, to say the least. To get fast-track authority—a procedural process for the President to have an opportunity to make his points on trade agreements, which cannot be amended by the Senate, that is a very important point on administrative prerogative, but it is procedural. In exchange for that procedural right, we are trading away very significant new entitlement initiatives which have explosive potential and are bad public policy.

As a result, I have deep reservations about this package. I regret it has been negotiated in the manner it has been by our leadership in the Senate.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, we will be conducting a vote on cloture at 11:30. Prior to the time we have that vote, I want to make some final comments about what I consider to be the importance of bringing debate on the bill to a close and making sure that we have a good vote on cloture this morning.

We opened the debate with a recognition of how critical it is in this country, with this economy, that we recognize especially the importance of our globalized markets and the need to be competitive in them. Under the strong leadership of Senator BAUCUS and with help from Senator GRASSLEY, we put together a historic package of trade legislation that dealt first with the Andean Trade Preference Act, an act that has already proven itself to be invaluable to not only those countries in South America that have benefited directly from increased trade with the United States, but this country as well—a recognition that this trade partnership ought to be extended, a recognition that it is not only an economic partnership but a strong political one, and that if we can continue to provide political communication and coordination in a way that allows us better economic return, we are going to strengthen those countries politically as well as economically.

That is what ATPA does. It is an opportunity for us to reaffirm our recognition of a partnership of South American countries and our confidence that economic trade is good for both.

Secondly, we added legislation to this package that, for the first time, addresses meaningful assistance to those workers who are displaced as a result of trade. My view has always been that there are far more winners than losers in expanding our trade around the world. But we also recognize that there are some losers and some who, for whatever reason, may have been dislocated. When those occasions occur, I think our country owes those workers a future, owes those workers some safety net to ensure that their health needs and, hopefully, their short-term unemployment needs are addressed.

The Trade Adjustment Assistance Act that we have put into this package addresses that need. It does so very effectively. For the first time, trade adjustment assistance will help those who have lost their jobs get coverage for health care under COBRA at 70 percent of the cost of the program itself. Seventy percent is an unprecedented statement about our commitment to those workers who have lost something as a result of changes in the environment that have been created as a result of job loss because of globalized market development.

We also provide new wage insurance legislation that helps older workers who may just be on the verge of retirement but not quite there. They are too old, perhaps, to get training for job relocation. They may be much closer to retirement than to the possibility of a better job through new training and the acquisition of new training skills. So this wage insurance is something the Heritage Foundation supports, something that trade study groups and think tanks have supported for many years, something that the U.S. Trade Representative also signed onto as an effective tool for assisting those who are also adversely affected.

So there is no doubt, when you look to the first two components, the opportunity for us to address workers who are adversely affected and the opportunity for us to extend the trading partnership with South America, I have no doubt that on that basis alone we have all the reasons we need to pass this legislation.

Finally, let me say the bill itself—the base bill—the TPA, trade promotion authority, provides us with yet another reason we should be supporting cloture this morning. We not only started with a good package; in my view, we improved upon it. We added the Dayton-Craig amendment on trade law that gives Congress an additional role, an opportunity for us to enhance the role as new trade agreements are presented.

We added the Dorgan amendment on transparency for the North American Free Trade Agreement, and the Kennedy amendment which helps us fight the AIDS epidemic all over the world. There were other efforts I supported that didn't become part of the bill, such as the Rockefeller amendment on steelworkers.

I must say that overall we have debated more than a dozen amendments, many of them very consequential. We have adopted eight of them. I believe the Senate has had the opportunity to work its will. There comes a time when the debate has run its course and we are called upon to bring that debate to a close and move on to final passage and other issues. I remind my colleagues that even after cloture we will have 30 hours of debate.

Senator BAUCUS just noted to me that there are a number of amendments still pending that will be debated and voted upon prior to the time we come to final passage of the bill. But this is our opportunity to say as strongly and unequivocally as we can that, first, we recognize the extraordinary importance of U.S. participation in global markets, and we are going to give this President—and any President—the tools with which to ensure that we have the framework in place to do so effectively.

.Secondly, we recognize particularly the important partnership we have created with Latin America. We want to extend that partnership not only for economic, but political and diplomatic reasons as well.

Finally, we recognize there are those who are ultimately going to be adversely affected. And while they may be in the distinct minority of all workers affected and the greater realm of good created in this legislation, we cannot ignore them. We are going to provide them health benefits, wage insurance, and the kind of safety net that they deserve when this kind of circumstance befalls them.

This is a good package. This warrants our support. I hope my colleagues will join in a bipartisan effort to support cloture this morning in an effort to move to the final phase of consideration of this legislation prior to the vote on final passage. I urge my colleagues to support cloture.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, all Senators should recognize the very hard work the majority leader has put into this legislation, particularly, in my judgment, the underlying strongest piece, and that is trade adjustment assistance. The majority leader, along with the occupant of the chair, Senator BAYH, both pushed very effectively to address a large gap, frankly, in American trade policy, and that is the inadequate attention given to those who lose their jobs as a consequence of trade. They built up the trade adjustment assistance.

All American employees who may in the future lose or who have lost a job as a consequence of trade should recognize the efforts of the Senate majority leader, Mr. DASCHLE, as well as the present occupant of the chair, Senator BAYH of Indiana, who were the primary movers in drafting the cornerstone part of this bill. We all owe them a great debt of gratitude.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I will tell my friends and colleagues, both the majority leader and chairman of the Finance Committee, that I join them in urging our colleagues to vote in favor of cloture so we can move this bill on, so we can finish it. We have been on it now for almost a month. We have considered a lot of amendments.

That having been said, I do not agree with the process. The Senator from Montana knows that well. There are three bills that have been jammed into one. It is a very complicated bill. Two of the bills were reported out of the Finance Committee. We marked up those bills. They were included with trade adjustment assistance which was rewritten on the floor. It did not come out of the Finance Committee. So I objected to that, and I objected to some of the amendments that colleagues tried to add. We fought those battles. We have had some good debate. We have won some; we have lost some.

Now is the time to have a cloture vote so we can bring this bill closer to passage and end the debate on trade promotion authority, which I happen to think is the most important provision in the bill.

I also believe the Andean Trade Preference Act needs to pass. Its authorization expired months ago, and tariffs were supposed to be imposed last week on four Andean countries that really need our help, tariffs as high as 15, 25, 30 percent on countries that have not had to pay those tariffs for the last 10 years. We need to assist those countries. It is not fair to Colombia, Bolivia, Peru, and Ecuador. They are our friends and allies. They have negotiated in good faith with the U.S. Government for a reduction in tariffs.

We have abided by that agreement for the last 11 years, and we said we were going to extend it. We have not done so. It is up to the Senate. That is our constitutional responsibility. We need to get that done.

I do not think the Andean Trade Preference Act should be in that package. I lost that debate. Senator DASCHLE and Senator BAUCUS decided to put it together. The only way we can help those countries is to pass this bill. If we do not get cloture, I am afraid the list of amendments will continue and never cease.

The only way I see getting to closure is to vote for cloture. I urge our colleagues, Democrats and Republicans: Let's vote for cloture; let's address those amendments that are still remaining that are germane postcloture.

There will probably be a few. There is no reason we cannot finish this bill either later tonight or tomorrow sometime and get it to conference.

It is going to have a difficult conference because there are big differences. Frankly, the majority insisted on including trade adjustment authority and insisted on adding brandnew entitlements we have never had before in trade adjustment authority, including items such as wage insurance, which is almost anathema to the free enterprise system, but that is in this bill. We have to negotiate that with our House colleagues.

We have to negotiate a whole new tax credit to provide health care benefits that has never been a part of trade adjustment assistance. I am sure that is going to be debated extensively.

Anyway, it is going to be a very difficult conference. We need to begin that conference as soon as possible and hopefully come up with a bill that actually will promote trade, increase jobs, make us competitive, and help us to comply with international agreements.

I urge our colleagues to support this cloture motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader.

Mr. LOTT. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. I believe we have about 6 or 7 minutes remaining. Five minutes. I yield myself some time under my leader time. That will still leave the final 5 minutes for the chairman and ranking member to speak.

I urge my colleagues to vote for cloture. We have been on this legislation for quite some time. I believe this is the fourth week we have been working on it, at least part of the time. We have had a number of amendments. We have won some, we have lost some, depending on your point of view. It has been a good debate. Senators have had a chance to offer amendments. It is time we bring it to a conclusion.

We need trade promotion authority for this President. We needed it for our previous President. I was for it when President Clinton was President. I think it is irresponsible for us not to have this authority to allow our Presidents, our administrations, to negotiate trade agreements that will help America and help our trading partners.

I do not want to get into a philosophical argument, but clearly it is the way America needs to go. We need to open markets, not be closing markets or closing our own markets. We can compete in the world trade market. We can produce more goods and more commodities. Our farmers need these markets, and this is the way to do it.

The second part of this legislation is the Andean Trade Preference Act. These countries in the northern tier and western side of South America are trying very hard to move toward economic growth, democracy, and freedom. They are doing a great job under very difficult circumstances—Ecuador, Bolivia, Peru, and of course Colombia.

It is very unfair that we have not already acted on this legislation. We are in an extension of time right now. Clearly, we need to pass this legislation. We need to separate the Andean Trade Preference Act and move it on in an expeditious way.

Last but not least is trade adjustment assistance. Different people will argue it is too much, it is not enough, but we have had trade adjustment assistance in the past. We do need to give some assistance to our workers, a bridge to the next job, maybe some training. There are health benefits. You can argue whether this is the best way to do it.

The bottom line is, we have done it. We have significant legislation in this area. When you put all of them together, it is time we bring it to a conclusion. If we vote for cloture now, we can finish this bill not later than tomorrow, and it would be a very high note for the Senate to finish up work before we go to the Memorial Day recess.

I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle: We have done a good enough job. We should move to invoke cloture, stop the extraneous amendments, and then move to a conclusion.

I yield the floor, Mr. President. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 3½ minutes remaining.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Three?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Three and a half.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, with today's vote on cloture on the trade bill, we move one step closer to reestablishing the United States global leadership and credibility in trade.

We move one step closer to being better able to advance this country's economic interests in this hemisphere. And we will be one step closer to bringing greater economic prosperity to every American family. That is because with today's vote, the President will be one step closer to getting one of the most important tools he needs to strengthen the American economy, and to create new American jobs.

American leadership in trade has floundered for the last several years. We have seen over 130 preferential trade agreements signed by our trading partners in the last few years, none of which included the United States. This proliferation of preferential trade agreements among other nations—including major U.S. trading partners such as Canada and Mexico—is harmful to U.S. trade interests. These agreements provide their members with preferential access to one another's markets—while disadvantaging American agricultural products, manufactured goods, and many services.

Some American companies overcome these barriers by producing overseas. Many small- and medium-sized companies can't do this however, and because they are less competitive, they lose opportunity after opportunity to their foreign counterparts. This loss of competitive ability by our export-dependent firms, as well as our farmers, means fewer jobs.

It means lost wages or income. It means that hard-working American families aren't able to pay the mortgage, or the farm loan, or provide better education or other opportunities for their children.

Today, as we speak, the United States is engaged in new global trade negotiations in the WTO. We played a central role in launching these negotiations. Last year, we helped draft a Ministerial Declaration—a roadmap for the new round of trade talks—that contained nearly every one of our priority negotiating objectives, particularly in agriculture. As a result, we are poised to win unprecedented new market access for American agricultural products around the world.

In my State of Iowa, we know how important trade is to the family farmer. We export more than $1 billion worth of everything we grow or produce on the farm, accounting for more than one-third of total Iowa exports to the world. Our farmers, our pork producers, our soybean growers all depend on the income they earn from exporting to take care of their families and their communities. And the plain fact is, they would have more export-related income if world agricultural tariffs were lower, and other trade barriers were reduced.

Restored United States leadership in free trade will benefit other as well. An aggressive, American-led effort to open world markets will mean more jobs for our highly competitive manufacturing sector. At the John Deere plant in Waterloo, IA, for example, one out of every five tractors built in the plant is exported, accounting for over 800 export-related jobs. If we gain access to more overseas markets through lower tariffs, we could sell a lot more of these tractors and create more jobs. Our service sector, which provides nearly 8 out of every 10 jobs in the United States, is even more reliant on open world markets.

Because we are so competitive internationally, we have an $83 billion trade surplus in services. Liberalization of trade in services is only 5 years old. The potential to build even more American export growth in services is tremendous. TPA will help us realize this potential. With today's historic vote, America's days on the sidelines are numbered. America is almost back in the game.

I want to commend Senator BAUCUS and his staff for all they have done in moving this bill forward, and for working on a bipartisan basis to help restore America's leadership in world trade.

Mr. President, I strongly urge my colleagues to vote "yes" on cloture.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the White House.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, May 22, 2002.

Hon. MAX BAUCUS,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Finance.
Hon. CHARLES GRASSLEY,
Ranking Member, Senate Committee on Finance, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN BAUCUS AND SENATOR GRASSLEY: On behalf of the Administration, I wanted to thank you for all of your efforts to produce a bipartisan trade package. Those efforts appear to be nearing a successful conclusion with this morning's cloture vote.

It is our hope that a substantial majority of the Senate will vote to close off what has been a full and fair debate and then proceed to final passage of the bill. In that vein, I wanted you to know that the Administration is opposing all further amendments to the bill. We hope that you will join us in order to ensure prompt passage of the bill.

Sincerely,
NICHOLAS E. CALIO,
Assistant to the President for Legislative Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana has 37 seconds.

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield back the remainder of my time.

CLOTURE MOTION

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back. Under the previous order, the clerk will report the motion to invoke cloture.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of Rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close the debate on the Baucus-Grassley substitute amendment for Calendar No. 295, H.R. 3009, the Andean Trade Preference Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. By unanimous consent, the mandatory quorum call has been waived.

The question is, Is it the sense of the Senate that debate on amendment 3401 to H.R. 3009, an act to extend the Andean Trade Preference Act to grant additional trade benefits under that act, and for other purposes, shall be brought to a close? The yeas and nays are required under the rule.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. REID. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE) and the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. TORRICELLI) are necessarily absent.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) is necessarily absent.

I further announce that if present and voting the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) would vote "no."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. CLINTON). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the yeas are 68, the nays are 29. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn having voted in the affirmative, the motion is agreed to.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. REID. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, Senator NELSON from Florida is ready to go with his amendment. I ask unanimous consent that it be in order for Senator NELSON to call up his amendment No. 3440.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is now pending. The Senator from Florida is recognized.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Thank you, Madam President.

May I inquire of the chairman of the Finance Committee, it is my understanding that the number of the amendment that you just asked me to call up—I want to make sure that is applicable postcloture, because I have amendment No. 3454 that I understand is in order. It is the same subject matter, but there was some technical scrivener's reason of why there had to be two amendments instead of one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will come to order. The Senator from Florida has the floor on pending business before the Senate. Please take your conversations off the floor to the cloakroom.

The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. To answer my good friend from Florida, it is my understanding that either of the two could properly be called up at this time.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Reserving the right to object, I want to have a further understanding of where we are parliamentary-wise. The Senator from Florida is asking to take up a different amendment than the amendment that dealt with citrus?

Mr. NELSON of Florida. No. The amendment is the same. It is my understanding that for a technical reason, postcloture, it was to be divided into two amendments instead of one. It is the same amendment. I am just asking, before we start debating the amendment, to make sure we have the proper one called up.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, further answering the basic question of the Senator from Florida, the amendment we have on the list that is ready to be brought up is No. 3440. That was my understanding; that is the amendment to be brought up.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. That is fine with me. I wanted to make sure we were in the proper legal structure because I had filed two other amendments that were the same subject matter that would be correctly drawn to the bill. As long as the chairman indicates that the one we had filed originally is OK, that is fine with me. The subject matter is identical.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Madam President, I have to temporarily object until we have an opportunity to study the amendment.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, the order was already entered and no objection was heard. Amendment 3440 is the amendment that is pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Madam President, I raise a point of order against the pending amendment. It has a drafting error and it amends the bill in two places and is therefore out of order. I raise a point of order.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. The present amendment does not amend the bill in two places. The one that has been called up by the chairman of the Finance Committee is the original one. The junior Senator from Florida is purely trying to get the issue out so that we can discuss it. I was told that postcloture it had to be drafted in a separate way. It is an identical amendment.

I will proceed with the amendment on the reliance of the statement by the chairman of the Finance Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken. The amendment as drafted to amend the bill in two places is out of order on its face.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Madam President, do I have the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida does have the floor.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Madam President, I will continue to speak on the amendment, and for whatever reason you all are objecting, I wish you would find out what technical reasons you have for an objection. I assure everyone, this is the identical matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, I think we can clear this up. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Madam President, I do not want to relinquish the floor. I yield to the Senator from Nevada without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that we go into a quorum call with the Senator from Florida recognized when we come out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3454 TO AMENDMENT NO. 3401

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Madam President, pursuant to the discussions we have had, I call up amendment No. 3454 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Florida [Mr. NELSON], for himself and Mr. GRAHAM, proposes an amendment numbered 3454.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To limit tariff reduction authority on certain products)

At the end of section 2103(b), insert the following new paragraph:

(4) PRODUCTS SUBJECT TO ANTIDUMPING AND COUNTERVAILING DUTY ORDERS.—Paragraph (1) shall not apply to a product that is the subject of an antidumping or countervailing duty order at the time of the agreement referred to in paragraph (1), unless the agreement provides that as a term, condition, or qualification of the tariff concession, the tariff reduction will not be implemented before the date that is 1 year after the date of termination or revocation of such antidumping or countervailing duty order with respect to all exporters of such product.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Madam President, I rise today to address the Senate on trade promotion authority and the opportunity this country has before it to participate in free trade.

I am a free trader. I believe it is a net benefit for both my State and the country to reduce tariff barriers and open markets to other nations.

We must do this in a manner that respects fair trading practices by important industries in the United States that are the engine of our economy. Need I remind everyone that in the war against terrorism, it is not only that we have to be politically and militarily strong, but we have to be economically strong as well?

There is some debate over our last free trade agreement with Mexico and Canada. I was a supporter of NAFTA and believed it was an important part of the economic growth the United States experienced in the decade of the 1990s. But NAFTA arranged for side agreements relating to certain industries our trading partners did not live up to. One of those clearly affected Florida. It was a side agreement that was going to be protective of winter vegetables, specifically tomatoes. That side agreement was not lived up to with regard to the importation of Mexican tomatoes, with the result that whereas Florida used to have a huge percentage of the national market of winter vegetables, we now supply only 30 percent. You can imagine what that has done to some of the fruit and vegetable farmers in Florida.

As we open our markets to all of the countries of the Western Hemisphere, we must consider how we can learn from and prevent these kinds of situations we have had in the past with things such as NAFTA and how we can prevent that from occurring in the future. That is why Senator GRAHAM and I have introduced this amendment to the TPA legislation that cuts right to the heart of free and fair trade.

This amendment says tariffs may not be reduced on commodities on which there is an existing antidumping order or an existing countervailing duty order. What does that mean? Well, I am going to explain it, if I may. When the executive branch, the Congress, or particular industries believe a certain nation is engaging in some kind of unfair trade practice on a particular commodity, then they go out and petition the International Trade Commission to investigate the trade of that particular commodity. That is what has happened with the recent steel case. If a thorough investigation by the International Trade Commission finds that an important product is being sold below fair market value and that a U.S. producer is thereby being harmed, it is considered dumping, an anticompetitive practice. Dumping is, in essence, price discrimination against U.S. consumers.

Now, there is another kind of order. This is an order that if a foreign government is subsidizing a particular commodity—a foreign government subsidizing a particular commodity—then that order would provide that those foreign manufacturers, or exporters—because they have that unfair competition because their government is subsidizing their particular commodity, and they are going to have an unfair competitive advantage; therefore, the Department of Commerce would issue a countervailing duty order.

So it follows that if a country or company is found by the International Trade Commission, or the Department of Commerce, to be actually engaging in unfair trade practices in such a clear-cut manner that it is issued either an antidumping or countervailing duty order, then under this amendment, while those orders are in place, those tariffs would not be reduced on those commodities until that dumping, or subsidizing, had ceased and the order had been removed. That is just as common sense as you can make it.

If you have anticompetitive behavior by a foreign government or foreign countries and there is an order out there put in place by the Department of Commerce or the International Trade Commission, as long as those orders are in place, you are not going to let the tariff be reduced that protects the U.S. consumer because it simply doesn't make sense to reward countries by further opening U.S. markets to commodities that are currently being dumped in the country by our trading partners until the dumping has ceased.

Now, some may argue that this amendment is not compliant with the World Trade Organization, the organization that administers trade agreements among nations, the organization that acts as a forum for trade organizations, the organization that settles trade disputes, and the organization that reviews trade policy. Well, some may argue that this amendment doesn't comply with that. I disagree.

First of all, the World Trade Organization's compliance should be judged based on the substance of trade agreements. This legislation is not the substance of trade agreements; rather, this legislation states the terms by which Congress will consider providing fast-track authority to such trade agreements. World Trade Organization compliance will be assessed later when a trade agreement is completed. So that argument doesn't wash as a counter to BOB GRAHAM's and my amendment.

Second, they might argue that this amendment provides a double penalty upon countries that practice anticompetitive behavior. Well, that argument is not accurate either. It is widely understood that antidumping orders are not viewed by the WTO as punitive. Instead, they are viewed as remedial.

Finally, some would argue against this amendment and act as if tariff reductions are a divine right. Tariff reductions are not a divine right. Tariff reductions should be viewed and approved on their face after consideration of all the facts. They should be viewed as mutually beneficial in a bilateral or multilateral scenario. Withholding a benefit should not be considered assessment of a penalty.

I might also add that this amendment of Senator GRAHAM's and mine does not violate the core basis of the Uruguay Round of tariff negotiations, and ultimately that Uruguay Round created the World Trade Organization. WTO compliance is not an issue in this debate. Instead, it is being used as a red herring to try to defeat this amendment.

For all of these reasons, I submit that this legislation doesn't violate the norms of the WTO and, actually, should strengthen the administration's hand at the negotiating table. Let me say that again to my friends in the administration, who have fought Senator GRAHAM and me tooth and toenail on what is free and fair trade. This amendment will actually strengthen your hand at the negotiating table by being another instrument to help you make sure there is free and fair trade, as we want to open up free and fair trade.

While the $9 billion Florida citrus industry is a concern to this Senator and my senior Senator from Florida, this amendment clearly affects many other commodities, including honey, steel, preserved mushrooms, Atlantic salmon, and sugar, and a whole number of other items I am going to list. We must not reward countries that engage in anticompetitive, predatory trading practices.

Madam President, my concern that we not undermine our antidumping procedures does not make me any less of a proponent of trade promotion authority in the best interests of my State and the country. Florida is an exporting State, and exports mean good jobs. According to the Department of Commerce, 11 greater Florida metropolitan areas posted exports of more than $120 million in 1999: Miami; the Tampa Bay area; Fort Lauderdale; Orlando; the West Palm-Boca area; Jacksonville; Melbourne, my hometown in the Brevard County area; Lakeland; Sarasota; Panama City; and Daytona Beach. Florida exported goods worth $24 billion in that year to more than 200 foreign markets.

These goods include computers, electronic products, machinery transportation equipment, chemical manufacturing, electrical equipment, appliances, and agricultural products. Trade promotion authority has the potential to open markets to Florida's entrepreneurs and small businesses and farmers.

I have been contacted by many Floridians asking me to support TPA, and I have by voting for cloture so we can move on with this bill. I helped out the Senator from Texas yesterday when there was an amendment that was threatening the stability of the bill. I ask my colleagues to support TPA, and I also ask our colleagues to support this amendment of Senator GRAHAM and me that improves the underlying legislation and would ensure we have free and fair trade.

I will tell my colleagues how important this is—other than to Senator GRAHAM and me for frozen orange juice concentrate, of which Brazil has 50 percent of the world market. If that tariff protecting the Florida citrus industry, the California citrus industry, and the Arizona citrus industry from unfair competition by dumping a product is taken away, Brazil, with 50 percent of the market, will take over 100 percent of the market, and that is not free and fair trade.

I do not know why the Senator from Texas and others—we talk about the purity of the legislation. I helped him yesterday. I cannot understand. We are talking about free and fair trade. We are not talking about monopoly trade which will occur to the detriment of California, Arizona, and Florida unless this amendment is adopted. There are plenty of other States, I say to Senators, that better be forewarned and forearmed that if they do not protect this legislation with this amendment, then those orders protecting the commodities from their States are not going to be protected in the future.

Let's talk about some of them. How about Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, Maryland, and Illinois with regard to steel products—steel products including barbed wire, welded carbon steel pipe, line and pressure pipe, oil country tubular goods, hot-rolled carbon steel flat products—all of those products that are manufactured in Senator LUGAR's State of Indiana.

The two Senators from the State of Ohio, Senators DEWINE and VOINOVICH, and the two Senators from Pennsylvania: Are you paying attention?

The Senators from New York: Are you paying attention?

Maryland, Illinois: You are going to lose the protection of your steel products and the orders that are out there protecting them unless you vote for this amendment.

Let's take honey. The Senators from Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, and California—California has a big honey industry: You are going to lose your protection of those existing orders if this amendment is not adopted.

How about sugar? Sugar is going to be threatened by Belgium, France, and Germany, and I am talking about Louisiana, Hawaii, Texas, California, Idaho, Michigan, and Minnesota.

I inquire, Madam President, it is my understanding the side proposing the amendment has 1 hour; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. I thank the Chair.

I want to make sure those interests that are protecting sugar from the European Union, Germany, France, and Belgium, which include Louisiana, Hawaii, Texas, California, Idaho, Michigan, Minnesota, New Mexico, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Washington, Wyoming, Nebraska, and Montana—do you realize that your commodities are threatened if you cannot protect them with your existing orders?

Let's talk about some of the steel products that would be threatened by Brazil. Carbon steel butt welded pipe fittings, iron construction castings, brass sheet and strip—and I could go through a whole list of steel products. Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, Maryland, Illinois, Wisconsin: Senators, are you listening?

How about fresh Atlantic salmon from the States of Maine and Alaska? Senators from Maine, Senator COLLINS, and Senator SNOWE: Are you listening? Your orders protecting the dumping of products out of Chile are not going to protect your salmon.

Senator MURKOWSKI: Are you listening? You are not going to be protected from Chile's dumping of Salmon unless you protect those orders that are outstanding.

How about Oregon's mushrooms being protected from Chile? If they do not keep those orders and they allow those orders to be cast aside and the tariff to be reduced, it is not going to protect them.

How about Alabama, Georgia, Texas, and Kansas on the cement industry being protected from Mexico? Senators from Alabama, Senator SHELBY and Senator SESSIONS: You are not going to be protected on your orders that protect your cement industry unless you protect those orders from being undermined by the adoption of this amendment.

What about the State of New York? Antifriction ball bearings being protected from Singapore. There is an order there.

How about Montana, the Dakotas, and California, as I mentioned earlier on honey? The last time I mentioned honey, it was Argentina. Your products are not going to be protected.

Also in Argentina, they produce hot-rolled carbon steel flat products, and Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, Maryland, Illinois, Senator FITZGERALD, they are not going to be protected, those same States being protected from Brazil on a countervailing duty.

Earlier, I talked about the antidumping orders, honey from Argentina, hot-rolled carbon steel flat products from Argentina; steel products from Brazil has another kind of order against it, according to the Department of Commerce, because they have evaluated the situation and determined those two countries have unfairly subsidized those products I just listed—honey, affecting Montana, the Dakotas and California; Argentina, affecting hot-rolled carbon steel flat products affecting Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, Maryland, and Illinois; and Brazil, affecting a multiplicity of steel products; that the governments were, in fact, subsidizing those products; that the Department of Commerce of the United States would have an order to protect those products.

Folks, this is a foreign country subsidizing against the products coming from your States, the U.S. Department of Commerce issues an order, and that order is going to be in jeopardy of being ignored unless you adopt our amendment. It is a commonsense amendment. It is an amendment that simply states that as long as there is an order from either the International Trade Commission or the U.S. Department of Commerce protecting a commodity because it is being unfairly dealt with in anticompetitive behavior in international trade, that as long as that order exists, this amendment says you cannot reduce the tariff.

Madam President, to retain the floor, since we have had some squabble, I yield to my colleague, and upon the finishing of his remarks, I seek to retain the floor. I yield to my colleague from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator seeking consent to that effect?

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Yes.

Mr. GRAMM. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is heard.

Mr. GRAMM. The Senator cannot control the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The objection is heard.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Then, Madam President, it is interesting we are talking about free and fair trade. What we ought to have is free and fair debate. Earlier, because of some technical reason, people from that side of the aisle were trying to prevent me from offering my amendment that I have been waiting in the queue very patiently for weeks to offer. I have become a constant visitor with the chairman of the Finance Committee and with the ranking member, seeking to protect an industry from Florida facing life or death, an industry that is so important to the State of Florida that the license tag of the State of Florida has emblazoned upon it the emblem of that industry, the Florida orange.

I thought about free and fair trade we could have a free and fair debate. So, Madam President, I have said my piece. I will relinquish the floor. I hope others will accord me the privilege within the span of the hour, that should additional things arise, they will give me the courtesy of being able to speak. I thank the Senate for indulging us and giving us an opportunity in which to air an issue that is most important to all of these States and most important to the United States of America.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Madam President, let me first respond by saying each Senator has a right to the floor. No one can prevent a Senator from having an opportunity to be recognized. Second, the Senator is offering this amendment now because of the willingness of the chairman and the ranking member and every Member of this body to allow him to jump ahead in line of literally dozens of amendments that were filed earlier and that could have been offered before his amendment.

If we had followed the rules of the Senate, instead of granting the Senator special privilege, we would have had a fairly substantial number of amendments that we would have had to deal with before he could have ever presented his amendment. I don't know if there is any perception of a grievance here. A, I am sorry; and, B, I don't think there is a basis for it.

Now, let me address the substance of this amendment. It always amazes me when people are free traders and all they can talk about is your commodities are threatened and you are losing protection. This amendment is a protectionist amendment. This amendment is an effort to take all those products the Senator mentioned off the table in terms of future negotiations, even if the negotiations have to do with eliminating unfair trade practices.

It is also based on a false premise. Every Member of the Senate should understand this false premise. The false premise is that if there currently is a countervailing duty or an antidumping order on a product from Texas—let me take honey; I don't know that there is such an order, and I am not seeking such an order, but for every honey producer I have, I probably have 500,000 honey consumers. So it always is amazing to me that everyone is willing to let consumers pay a higher price by preventing competition, but let me just take my example—say there was a countervailing duty on honey, that we concluded that honey was being sold too cheaply to schoolchildren. It is an excellent source of nourishment, an excellent product people like to eat. But it is being sold too cheaply. We don't want them to have it that cheaply. So we have a countervailing duty on it.

Listening to the Senator from Florida, one would assume that if there is a trade negotiation put into place and is consummated, and in that process we change the duty on honey, that it overrides the antidumping agreement. That is totally and verifiably false. Let me say that again. If there is a countervailing duty on honey, if there is an antidumping order on honey, and under this bill the President negotiates a trade agreement, say, with Chile, that affects honey—it does not override the countervailing duty, does not override the antidumping order—those orders would still stand until they are removed.

In listening to the Senator from Florida, you get the idea that the President can negotiate away these antidumping orders. Not so. They still stand until they are removed.

If you look at the language of the Senator's bill, it is clear his concern is not with countervailing duties and dumping, even if they are removed. Even if the cause of their imposition is eliminated, you cannot negotiate a trade agreement involving those items for 1 year after the problem is fixed. In the end, this amendment takes off the table in trade negotiations literally hundreds of items.

Let me argue why that should not be done. We are trying to promote trade. We are trying to see a benefit from trade through competition.

Second, how can the President negotiate with countries if we are taking all the things they produce—the things they are most sensitive about, the things they are most concerned about, and the things they have a comparative advantage in—off the table? If this amendment were adopted, it would be a body blow to our whole effort to negotiate free trade agreements with countries such as Chile, countries that are major agricultural producers.

I remind my colleagues what the Senator's amendment does is deny the ability to negotiate a trade agreement containing these items, even though the fact they are contained in the agreement does not override a countervailing duty, if the agreement is ratified by the Senate, does not override a dumping order. We simply have this being used as a ruse to take numerous items off the table.

We are down to the point now where we have debated, for many weeks, the effort to give the President fast-track authority. The administration is adamantly opposed to this amendment because they believe it guts the very foundation of trade promotion authority and it does it in two ways. It takes off the table numerous items that are important to other countries, in terms of their negotiation and, quite frankly, important to us.

Part of a trade negotiation can be aimed at unfair trade practices where, if a country is subsidizing steel or some other product, part of the trade negotiation can be to require, as part of what they are giving in return for our opening markets here, they are opening their markets there—part of what they can give up is these subsidies. But the amendment of the Senator would say: No, those negotiations cannot occur within the context of trade promotion authority, even if the negotiations occurred, unless the antidumping order were vacated. Unless the countervailing duty were overturned because the causes of it were changed, nothing in this new free trade agreement would have any impact.

If Chile is dumping honey—and, God forbid, because schoolchildren would be getting honey too cheaply and they would be harmed, I guess—but if Chile is dumping honey, under this amendment you could negotiate a trade agreement that involved honey, even though no trade agreement we could negotiate would overturn the countervailing duty. It would still be in place. Only if it is removed in the future because the underlying cause is removed, then the trade agreement would go into effect.

The Senator talks about life and death of his State. We already have in the bill a limitation on the ability of the President to negotiate in the area of frozen concentrated orange juice, one of America's great foods. Every child in America should drink orange juice every morning. Yet we have prohibited the President from having full power to negotiate with regard to frozen orange juice. Why? Basically because this industry wants protection. We have chosen between orange juice producers—and I have some in my State—and all the children in America who ought to be drinking orange juice in the morning.

Talk about unfair trade practice, that is one of them. The point is, it is not as if we have not already given special protections to the very industries the Senator is talking about. What he is doing is trying to take off the table a massive range of items that, in reality, would say that you could vote for trade promotion authority knowing no trade is going to be promoted. This amendment would destroy the foundations of trade promotion authority and it should, and I believe will, be beaten.

But I finally want to address one point that I have just been dying to address throughout all these debates. Some people act as if you can have trade without having trade; that when you enter into a free trade agreement it is fine to have trade as long as your trading partner doesn't sell anything in your country.

I have been on the Finance Committee for some time now. The Senator from Florida mentioned tomatoes. When we entered into a free trade agreement with Mexico, they started selling a lot more tomatoes. I am a big tomato buyer. I speak with some authority on the subject. Why is Mexico selling all of these tomatoes? For two reasons. No. 1, they are better; they taste better. If you have not compared a Mexican tree-ripened tomato with a domestically produced tomato then you are making a bad mistake. I ask anybody in America to submit to the taste test. The Mexicans have sold more tomatoes for one simple reason—well, two, really, but one is dominant: It is a better product. It is a superior product. You can taste it and you can taste the difference.

The reason they can do it is they handpick these tomatoes and they put them in these cartons like egg cartons. They are ripened when they are picked, they ship them to market, and people buy them.

It is true that the people who were producing tomatoes before we entered into the agreement are not selling as many tomatoes, but what is trade about? If trade is not about letting superior products displace products that are not as good, what is the purpose of it?

The second reason they sell more tomatoes is they are cheaper. So how in the world can we claim we are for free trade, we want more trade, but then we protest, we are self-righteous, we are outraged, when our competitor, producing a better product at a lower price, is successful?

People are for free trade but they are not for trade. They are for opening markets as long as nobody sells anything in the United States. It is amazing to me, the convoluted way we see trade. If we could just send everything we own abroad, people would be happy. Exporting they love—just give it away, let it go—but if we bring anything to America, somehow, something is wrong with it.

I close with this point. It is interesting how differently we view the world today on this issue than it has been viewed historically. I go way back by quoting Pericles. When Pericles spoke in the funeral oration, and he was trying to sum up the greatness of Athens, it is interesting that the example he came down to was imports.

> The luxuries of the world are as freely available in Athens as they are at those places in the world where those items are produced.

The greatness of America is that people we do not even know, who do not even know us, are working to produce things to bring to our market that we can consume. You have products coming on trains and boats, this whole effort, all aimed at bringing to our feet the benefits of trade. Because we are the one nation in the world that understands how we benefit.

Look, I am sympathetic. I have lots of people in my State who have lost from trade, who could not compete. But has the Nation lost? If I had tomato producers in the valley who lost their markets to Mexican tomatoes, they have lost. But has America lost if we have better tomatoes at a cheaper price? And what will Mexico do with that money? Every dollar they get, they are going to spend on American products.

We know from trade data that the wages in those industries where they are going to buy products are 16 percent above the norm.

I submit with all respect that when we focus on trying to protect people from losing from successful trade, rather than focusing on trying to develop more winners, we miss the genius of the product.

Finally, provisions in this bill—which I do not support but are in the bill and I voted for cloture and I am going to vote for the bill—say that if you are a tomato producer and you lose your job, you get 2 years of unemployment benefits, you get 70 percent of your health care cost, you get a wage guarantee. Whereas, if other people lose their jobs because a terrorist blew up a plant they worked at, they get 26 weeks of unemployment and nothing else. So it is not as if we are not trying to cushion people who happen to lose from successful trade.

I submit that this amendment is protectionist and that it aims at protecting industries from competition. It is based on the false premise where it tries to get people to believe that by letting the President negotiate in areas where we have antidumping and countervailing tariffs, somehow those negotiations overturn those tariffs and those countervailing duties. They do not. Those stay in effect until they are removed, even if there is a free trade agreement.

I have not proposed—and I don't know anyone who has proposed—that they be removed because of the free trade agreement. The source of unfair trade has to be eliminated for those countervailing duties and for the antidumping measures to be repealed.

But to simply say, even though they will not be changed by free trade agreements, that you can't even negotiate a free trade agreement that would involve products that are currently subject to these penalties, even if the negotiations are aimed at eliminating the subsidies, and then saying even if you eliminate the penalties, even if you find they have stopped dumping for a year after there is no problem, you still can't negotiate an agreement—it seems to me that the sole purpose of such an amendment is to prevent the President from negotiating agreements.

The problem with it is that we want to negotiate because we want everybody in the world to have an opportunity to fly on a great airline or to use the finest computers or to buy things we produce. But in order for people to be willing to let our products into their markets, we have to let their products into our market. There is no such thing as a single-entry bookkeeping system where people say: Well, whatever is great for you we agree to, but then nothing that is great for us can be considered.

I urge my colleagues to reject this amendment.

Let me tick off some of these States. If you were from Texas—and I am, and I thank God for it every day—and we have honey producers—and I thank God for them, too—and they were subject to protection under antidumping, and the President under this bill negotiated a free trade agreement with Chile—which I hope he will, and I am for it—it would help Chile, and it would help America; it would be good for the world.

Please understand that will not overturn countervailing duties against honey. It will not overturn antidumping measures against honey.

The same is true for steel from Pennsylvania. The same is true for avocadoes from Arizona or from California. Nothing in our bill gives the President the power to negotiate eliminating antidumping measures or countervailing duties. He can negotiate tariff reductions that go into effect once those problems have been solved. But a treaty negotiated under this bill does not override those measures. Since it doesn't override those measures, why in the world would you want to ban the President from negotiating in these areas?

It seems to me there are two reasons. One is you are confused—I don't believe any Member of the Senate is confused—or you want to protect these items from competition. It would be great if you had this view of the world and would not let people competing with us sell anything. We sell everything. That is a strange view of the world. But some people have it. But nobody else will do that.

If you implement all of these restrictions, just understand, when the Senator from Florida went through that long list of things that could not be negotiated—it was a long list; I am sure he has more—and asking if Senators were listening—how would you ever negotiate a trade agreement if you couldn't negotiate any of those items? Those are all items we import. I can assure you that Chile or Europe or whoever is negotiating with us is very interested in those items.

So I urge my colleagues to reject this amendment. We have shown by an overwhelming vote that we want to give the President trade promotion authority. To go back now and enact a gutting amendment that would destroy the whole trade authority for the bulk of items that America buys on the world market would mean it is not useful. It would be like giving the President a car without an engine or wheels. You could say you gave him 90 percent of a car; it just doesn't have a starter. What good is it? You can look at it, you can sit in it, but you can't do with it what cars are supposed to do.

If we give the President this trade authority but we don't let him enter into any agreement in all these different areas, what have we given him? Something nobody will let us use in negotiating with them.

I urge my colleagues to reject the amendment and vote for the motion to table.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. CARNAHAN). The Senator from Florida.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Madam President, it is my understanding that the Senator from Iowa wants to speak. I would simply defer if he would like to speak. But in light of the fact that he is not seeking recognition, let me address some of the points the Senator from Texas, my friend, has just raised.

The Senator from Texas said the President can negotiate. The fact is that this amendment will help the President in his negotiations, for addressing the question of the existing orders in trade negotiations is ultimately going to foster that negotiation. The question is not whether the President and the administration can negotiate. Clearly, the President is unimpeded in that ability to negotiate. The subject of this amendment is whether or not, when there are orders existing, they have to be taken into consideration in the negotiations with regard to the reduction of a tariff.

Mr. GRAMM, the Senator from Texas, asserts that clearly 100 items with existing orders and protection from anticompetitive behavior would be taken off the table. He is right.

The Senator and I agree on two things. First of all, we support the overall legislation as free traders. We certainly agree that there are lots of items. All of these items are covered by antidumping orders or countervailing duty orders. This amendment forces the President to address the anticompetitive behavior that led to the order being issued in the first place.

Who issues the order? If it is anticompetitive behavior through dumping of a product onto a market and trying to drive the U.S. competitor out of business, then it is the U.S. International Trade Commission. If it is the anticompetitive behavior of a foreign government that is subsidizing the product to the disadvantage of the American product, then the order is issued by the U.S. Department of Commerce.

So this amendment does not deny the ability to negotiate. It does assist the negotiations. I think in this arcane language of trade promotion, and so much of which we refer to by acronyms—TPA, and TAA, and whatever the acronym is for the Andean Trade Act, which I support—it is often lost over the bottom line of what is free and fair trade. We, of course, want international trade. We want competition.

So as I see my colleague from Florida in the Chamber, who wants to speak on this amendment, I will just again reiterate the points that I made before in rebuttal to the Senator from Texas.

First of all, in relation to World Trade Organization compliance, whenever anybody says this is going to mess up the process of the WTO, well, the WTO compliance should be judged based on the substance of trade agreements. With this particular amendment, the substance of the trade agreement is not harmed, but, rather, this amendment states the terms by which the Congress will consider providing the fast-track authority to such trade agreements. The World Trade Organization compliance will be assessed later when a trade agreement is completed. It does not impede the President's ability to negotiate at all.

Second, when the opponents of this amendment say this amendment provides a double penalty upon countries that practice anticompetitive behavior, that is not accurate. It is widely understood that antidumping orders are not viewed by the WTO as punitive, that they are viewed as remedial.

Third, let's understand that tariff reductions are not a divine right. Tariff reductions should be viewed as mutually beneficial as we go about the process of bilateral and multilateral negotiations. Withholding of a benefit should not be considered assessment of a penalty. Rather, what we should try to strive for is the goal, at the end of the day, of free and fair trade, not the running of a particular business or industry out of business just for the sake of doing that, when, in fact, there are existing orders to protect them against anticompetitive behavior.

Madam President, I yield the floor and look forward to the comments of my distinguished senior Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Madam President, I am very pleased to join this afternoon with my colleague, Senator NELSON, in offering this amendment to the trade legislation.

I am a strong supporter of expanded trade. I believe in the principle that if the world trades with each other, it will not only give us greater assurance that competition will be in commercial areas, not in military areas, it also gives to the world the opportunity to get the best quality and priced products that are available.

I believe in competition and that the United States will, in the future, as it has in the past, fare very well if that competition is fair. Free trade does not mean trade with rules of anarchy. Free trade is associated with fair trade, trade that is under a rule of law that sets certain standards of behavior for the participants, whether they be nations or individual economic entities in that trade.

Madam President, as you will recall, we spent a considerable amount of time last week debating what is known as the Dayton-Craig amendment. That amendment, offered by our distinguished colleagues from Minnesota and Idaho—one a Democrat, one a Republican—essentially said this: That while we were granting, with the Trade Promotion Act, broad authorities to the President to negotiate, and we were giving to the President our future right to amend those negotiated agreements by accepting the fact that whatever is negotiated we could either provide a green light of "yes" or a red light of "no," but we could not offer a yellow light of "caution" or "modification," but that we were going to exclude certain items. We voted, therefore, for the Dayton-Craig amendment, which said that from that general policy of providing the President broad negotiating authority, we were going to exclude certain items and require that they be brought back to the Congress for a vote on those items, specifically without the protection of fast track.

First, what was it that we protected? We said if our negotiators were to negotiate and alter the basic laws that this Nation has developed over the years, which give us greater assurance that trade will not only be free but fair, those matters would require specific and individual congressional approval.

The first provision was the antidumping provision. Antidumping is where a specific commercial entity is alleged to be trading in a product at a price which is below that company's cost of production in the country in which it produced the product. So that whether it is an agricultural product or an industrial product, America is not going to become the ultimate target for predatory marketing practices, where an entity that has a product of which it cannot otherwise dispose dumps it on the United States market at a price below what it cost them to produce, therefore threatening the survival of American enterprises which have to sell their product at least at what it cost them to produce or they will be out of business and their workers will be out of jobs. That does not seem to be an unreasonable provision.

The second provision that the Dayton-Craig amendment gave special treatment to was countervailing duties. What is that? Those are directed at nations which have practices that subsidize a particular product, so that when it is sold, it is effectively sold at less than what should have been the cost of production. That is where a government provides special benefits that distort the competitive marketplace.

Those are the two areas that were protected from fast track by the Dayton-Craig amendment. Those were adopted by the Senate by a substantial majority. We have done this because we recognize the importance of protecting the international marketplace of commerce from these trade practices which could be so distorting and which would defeat one of the basic principles of free trade which is that you encourage competition on a level playing field and whoever can prevail on that is the victor. This tilts the playing field toward one company or one country because of practices that distort that level playing field.

The amendment that Senator NELSON and I are offering today is the implementation of the objective of the Dayton-Craig amendment. Dayton-Craig intends to assure us that we will continue unless the Congress—and I think it is unlikely—would vote to eliminate our current laws against dumping and against providing government subsidization at below the cost of production—but assuming that those basic principles of fair trade prevail, what our amendment says is that the reduction in tariffs that are provided under the Trade Promotion Act "shall not apply to a product that is" at that time "the subject of an antidumping or countervailing duty order . . . unless"—and the Senator from Texas, my good friend whom I respect and refer to as my Teutonic cousin, did not mention the provision—"unless the agreement"—that is, the trade agreement which purports to change the tariff on a particular product—"provides that as a term, condition, or qualification of the tariff concession, the tariff reduction will not be implemented before the date that is 1 year after the date of termination or revocation of such antidumping or countervailing duty order with respect to all exporters of such product."

Under our amendment, our negotiators would be authorized to negotiate tariff concessions, but at the same time they would have to negotiate appropriate conditions or qualifications that would assure to the United States that those concessions would not be implemented until 1 year after that country or that company has met the requirement to rid itself of the antidumping or anticountervailing duty provision, which means that they had stopped the predatory practices that had disrupted the level playing field of international commerce.

I do not find that to be a radical or extreme position. If you believe we should have these methods of enforcing fair trade, antidumping and countervailing duties, then certainly you have to believe we should have the means of protecting ourselves against a country which has violated those laws, is under a sanction for that violation, and is now trying to get tariff concessions to increase their ability to act in a predatory way against the United States.

This issue should not be partisan. It should not be regional. It should not be a provision which divides the Senate, in my judgment, particularly based on the vote we took last week on Dayton-Craig. It ought to be a unifying amendment.

This issue has been a unifying issue in our State of Florida. I will submit for the RECORD a letter which was sent today by our State Governor, Jeb Bush, to both Senator BAUCUS and Senator GRASSLEY. I will submit it for the RECORD, but let me read in part:

> I fully recognize the importance of supporting free but fair trade for all concerned. However, Florida's citrus industry has been forced to compete for years with countries that implement unfair trade practices, forcing the industry into financial decline. I support legislation that would require trade negotiators to take into consideration agriculture products that have been subject to antidumping or countervailing duty orders before negotiations begin.

I believe this is a very important amendment, if we are dedicated to the principle of providing our President the capability to negotiate to expand trade in the United States. But we have reserved for the Congress the right to review specifically any changes that are made in that process that relate to our ability to enforce fair trade.

And now with this amendment, we would give real teeth to that sanction by saying, having preserved our ability to maintain a level playing field of fair trade through the ability to impose countervailing duties against a nation or antidumping orders against a particular commercial entity, now we can give strength to that by saying, if you are under those sanctions, either one, you would not be eligible for tariff concessions until you had purged yourself for 1 year of those predatory practices.

I believe we should send a very strong signal to our trade partners that if they are willing to play by the basic rules of fair international commerce, we are prepared to open our markets even further to them. But until they are willing to do so, until they are willing to give up their previous practices that have distorted that international market, they will have to pay the price of those actions in the form of their noneligibility to receive any tariff concessions from the negotiations by our President which will be eventually submitted to this Congress for its up-or-down vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, I thank our colleagues from Florida, Senator GRAHAM and, in particular in this case, Senator NELSON. They are really good Senators. Senators are elected to defend the interests of their State and defend their people and try to help economic growth and development in their States. We all do that, all of us as Members of the Senate. For those folks in Florida who may be watching and are interested in this subject, I want them to know that their two Senators are doing a great job. I hear from Senator NELSON and Senator GRAHAM constantly on this issue: What we can do; how can we work this out; how can we compromise; what can we do to help here. I commend the two of them for their very strong, valiant effort.

This is a subject with which we are wrestling. We have to make a judgment as to where we draw the line with respect to helping protect industries and products in our own country and States. The real question is, What about agricultural products which are by their nature sensitive? Under current law, the President does not on his own have the authority to reduce tariffs on such products. He has to get the approval of Congress. That is current law. The other body passed legislation which basically gives the President the authority to reduce tariffs on certain products by proclamation, up to 50 percent of the current tariff rate. The other body added that the President may not reduce tariffs by proclamation with respect to import-sensitive agricultural products; not only not by 50 percent, but not a single percentage point in reduction of tariffs for these products.

Our underlying bill has those same provisions; namely, the President has the authority, by proclamation, to reduce tariffs by up to 50 percent on most products, but not with respect to import-sensitive agricultural products.

There are other provisions in this bill which help address the concerns raised by the Senators from Florida. For example, the bill provides a special consultation procedure for negotiations on import-sensitive agricultural products. That is, before initiating negotiations on these products, the U.S. Trade Representative is required, under the provisions of this bill, to engage in special consultations with the Finance Committee and with the Ways and Means Committee in the other body and also with the Agriculture Committees in both bodies.

This measure is designed to help give that extra protection for those very sensitive industries. I know the Senators from Florida would like to go further. They would like the legislation to provide that the President may not come back to Congress with tariff reductions.

I ask unanimous consent to print the letter from which I quoted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF FLORIDA,
OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR,
Tallahassee, FL, May 22, 2002.

Hon. MAX BAUCUS,
Senate Finance Committee, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN BAUCUS: I am writing to bring to your attention an important issue concerning Florida citrus during your consideration of Presidential Trade Promotion Authority. It is critical that the Congress support the citrus industry's efforts to address unfair trade practices and dumping against Florida's agriculture interests.

As Governor of a state with a large agriculture base and a vibrant international trade sector, I fully recognize the importance of supporting free but fair trade for all concerned. However, Florida's citrus industry has been forced to compete for years with countries that implement unfair trade practices, forcing the industry into financial decline. I support legislation that would require trade negotiators to take into consideration agriculture products that have been subject to antidumping or countervailing duty orders before negotiations begin. The continued encroachment of unfairly traded imports will severely impact the citrus industry.

In seeking to create legislation that will help promote free but fair trade for our country's industries, I hope that you will take into consideration the need to support import sensitive products in pending legislation and future negotiations. I appreciate your consideration of my comments. Please do not hesitate to contact me should you have questions or concerns.

Sincerely,

JEB BUSH,
Governor.

Mr. BAUCUS. Under the Nelson amendment, not only can the President not proclaim tariff reductions on import-sensitive agricultural products, he cannot even negotiate a new agreement reducing tariffs on those products. To be truthful, that presents a lot of problems. It violates the principles of MFN—most-favored-nation trading status—which is, whenever we grant a tariff reduction to one country, it is granted to all countries. That is the basic underlying principle of GATT and WTO for all countries. What you give to one, you give to all. Otherwise, there would be this crazy system where it would be virtually impossible to trade.

This amendment would violate MFN, because, if the United States were trying to negotiate tariff reductions on a certain product in various countries, but at the same time there was an outstanding order on the same product with respect to one particular country, this amendment would say the President cannot reduce tariffs because of that one country. If one particular country were under restrictions, this amendment would prevent the tariff from being reduced on that product for all countries. Therefore, it violates the principles of MFN.

Madam President, I very much understand the efforts of the Senators. They make some good points. I just don't know that it is proper to tie the President's hands to such a great degree. This amendment will prevent the President from coming back to Congress in negotiating tariff reductions when there is an outstanding order.

I urge Senators not to support this amendment. We have given a lot to import-sensitive agricultural products in this bill. The pending amendment goes too far. I think it should be rejected.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Will the Senator from Montana yield?

Mr. BAUCUS. Yes.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. If there is no more debate, I am ready to put the question. If the Senator will instruct Senator GRAHAM and me when to put the question, we will request the yeas and nays.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, in answer to the Senator's question, I know of no other debate. However, due to extraneous circumstances, we cannot have a vote until at least 2:05. We can get the yeas and nays and order the vote for an up-or-down vote on the amendment. The vote can begin at 2:05.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Is it in order to ask unanimous consent to have the yeas and nays and a vote to occur at 2:05?

Mr. REID. Madam President, we would have no objection from the Republican side if that would be a motion to table rather than a straight up-or-down vote.

I amend the request of my friend from Florida by asking unanimous consent that we have a vote at 2:05 on this amendment, that it be on a motion to table that will be made, with no intervening amendment to this, and then we can set this aside and move to something else for the next half hour or so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Reserving the right to object, I would like to put into the RECORD—and intended to do so earlier—a letter from the Florida citrus industry indicating their support for our amendment. I ask unanimous consent that this letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FLORIDA CITRUS INDUSTRY,
May 16, 2002.

Hon. BILL NELSON,
Hart Senate Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR NELSON: First we want to express the appreciation of the Florida citrus industry for all your work on behalf of the industry with respect to Trade Promotion Authority. The industry knows the time and effort you and your staff have devoted to ensuring additional safeguards are placed in TPA for Florida's citrus industry.

We would like to reiterate our support for the Nelson/Graham amendment with respect to anti-dumping and countervailing duties. We appreciate the efforts you and Senator Graham have made with Senator Baucus and the Administration in pursuing this language, and the counterproposals offered by Senator Baucus and the Administration. However, we believe the alternative presented does not adequately address the underlying concerns by the industry. As you recall in your meetings with the industry over the last several months, the growers are clear in their support for an exemption for citrus. We understand the Administration and Senate leadership were clear in opposing those attempts and we are appreciative of your willingness to look for creative ways to provide additional steps in TPA to help our industry.

Again, thank you for offering the Nelson/Graham amendment. It is an important issue for our industry and we appreciate your efforts on this matter and look forward to working with you and your staff as negotiations move forward both in Conference and in FTAA.

Sincerely,

BOB CRAWFORD,
Executive Director, Florida Department of Citrus.

ANDREW W. LAVIGNC,
Executive Vice President/CEO, Florida Citrus Mutual.

BARBARA CARLTON,
Executive Director, Peace River Valley CGA.

DOUG BOURNIQUE,
Executive Director, Indian River Citrus League.

RON HAMEL,
Executive Director, Gulf Citrus GGA.

RAY ROYCE,
Executive Director, Highlands County CGA.

LISA YOUNG RATH,
Executive Vice President, Florida Citrus Processors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. I thank the Chair and thank the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, we have a long list of amendments ahead of us, many of which are not germane, particularly since the invocation of cloture. Clearly, they are not going to get 60 votes to override the point of order that would apply to them.

In the greater interest of moving this bill, which I think is the desire of a very significant majority of Senators—witness the vote for cloture; 68 Senators voted for cloture—beginning 10 minutes from now, I am going to begin calling up amendments that are on the list which will be declared not germane. I will make a point of order against each of those amendments that it is not germane. If the Chair agrees, we will, therefore, dispose of a lot of amendments accordingly.

I give Senators 10-minute notice to come to the Chamber because if their amendment is yet to be called up and they have not yet called it up, it will most likely be declared by the Chair as not germane. I am giving them an opportunity to come over and make their case publicly to the Chair for why they think the amendment should be germane. If they are not here within 10 minutes, I am going to, on behalf of Senators who have amendments, call them up and make a point of order.

Mr. REID. Madam President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAUCUS. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. REID. I say to Senators, this is not something Senator BAUCUS has gone around lobbying, suddenly making these nongermane or raise points of order because of the budget. This is something that has been done by the Parliamentarian.

As the Senator indicated, if it is a germane point of order, it takes a simple majority to override that point of order. As we learned in the past, they are not going to get 51 Senators to override germane points of order. It has created real tangles for the Senate in the past. That is not going to happen.

Those amendments relating to budget matters, if they can get 60 votes, fine. We will have to see how that happens. I hope to facilitate moving this bill. The chairman of the committee, the manager of the bill, is doing the absolutely right thing. It is going to happen at some time. As I indicated, those who are following their amendments know whether it is germane or not germane because the Parliamentarian made that decision a long time ago.

Mr. BAUCUS. In the interest of fairness and notice to Senators who I also hope are fair with respect to the rest of the body—and I know they will be—the amendments I have in mind are amendment No. 3445 offered by Senator BAYH; amendment No. 3447 offered by Senator BYRD; amendment No. 3450 offered by Senator BYRD; amendment No. 3451 offered by Senator BYRD; amendment No. 3452 offered by Senator BYRD; amendment No. 3453 offered by Senator BYRD; amendment No. 3431 offered by Senators BOXER and MURRAY; amendment No. 3432 offered by Senators BOXER, MIKULSKI, and DURBIN; amendment No. 3457 offered by Senator DURBIN, as well as amendment No. 3459 offered by Senator HARKIN.

They have about 6 more minutes. I thank the Chair and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Madam President, I call up amendment No. 3467.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BAUCUS. Reserving the right to object, will the Senator indicate which amendment he is calling up?

Mr. WELLSTONE. This is the amendment on human rights and democracy which is germane. I am trying to get the amendment offered.

Mr. BAUCUS. Can we get a copy of the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3467

Mr. WELLSTONE. Madam President, I call up amendment No. 3467.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WELLSTONE] proposes an amendment numbered 3467.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To protect human rights and democracy)

On page 246, between lines 15 and 16, insert the following new paragraph:

(12) HUMAN RIGHTS AND DEMOCRACY.—The principal negotiating objective regarding human rights and democracy is to obtain provisions in trade agreements that require parties to those agreements to strive to protect internationally recognized civil, political, and human rights.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Madam President, I thank my colleagues for their graciousness.

This amendment which I offer to the fast-track portion of the substitute is critical to ensuring fairness in this global trading regime. It will improve the majority of the lives of Americans and our trading partners.

The amendment adds a principled negotiating objective regarding human rights and democracy. It says to our negotiators that they should obtain provisions in trade agreements under which the parties to the agreements strive to protect internationally recognized civil, political, and human rights. These are rights guaranteed under existing international covenants.

This is not a debate about fast track, and again, I believe it is a profound mistake for us to give up our right to amend trade agreements because these trade agreements are going to have such a critical impact on the lives of the people we represent.

This amendment says: The rules of international trade ought to reflect American values. Our country ought to be a leader when it comes to promoting the values of democracy, when it comes to promoting the values of respect for human rights.

What we are saying is: U.S. trade negotiators, during your negotiations, we want you to obtain a provision in the trade agreement which makes it clear that the parties that they must make a commitment to strive to protect internationally recognized civil, political, and human rights.

I say to Senators, in some ways I do not think this amendment should be controversial.

There are some who say we have to be a part of this international economy. I agree. The international economy is a new reality. I agree. We should not put up walls on our border. I agree. Free trade—or I would argue fair trade—could work well for our consumers and make our businesses more competitive.

As we lead in this new international economy, let's lead with our values. We ought to at least say to our trading partners: We call on you to respect human rights and democratic principles. It is an important proposition and, at a minimum, we should demand countries try to do better. That is what this amendment says.

Here are some examples of the behavior of some of our trading partners. From the State Department Country Reports on Human Rights, 2001 for China: Police and other elements of the security apparatus employ torture and other degrading treatment in dealing with some detainees and prisoners. Former detainees and press reported that officials used electric shocks, prolonged periods of solitary confinement, incommunicado detention, beatings, shackles, and the list goes on.

Is it too much to ask that our trade agreements have a provision that calls upon our partners to strive to meet the standards of recognized international covenants meant to protect the civil, political and human rights of the citizens of the world?

Another example is Russia. Again, this is from our own State Department Country Reports, 2001. There were credible reports that some law enforcement officials used torture regularly to coerce confessions from suspects and that the Government does not hold most officials accountable. Torture that was recognized in the State Department report takes one of four forms: Beating with fists, batons, or other objects; asphyxiation using gas masks or bags sometimes filled with mace; electric shocks; or suspension by body parts.

Again, all I am saying is, if you have governments that engage in the practice of torture, when we enter into trade agreements with those governments, shouldn't we have as a goal of the agreement that the government will strive to protect internationally recognized civil, political, and human rights? Can't we make it a negotiating objective to get that commitment?

Another example is Colombia. From the Amnesty International Global Report of 2001: The human rights crisis continues to deepen. More than 4,000 people were victims of political killings, over 300 "disappeared," and an estimated 300,000 people were internally displaced.

The report notes that some of this was the work of the FARC, the radical left guerilla group, but it also reports that some of the mass killings were done by the paramilitary, often linked to the military.

My point is simple. It is un-American to allow an agreement to come to this body that we cannot change, that we may not even get a decent amount of time to talk about, that allows us to trade unconditionally with nations that torture their citizens, that summarily execute people for exercising their basic right to question the government, that practice forced abortion, and that arbitrarily arrest, detain, and exile their citizens.

I make the point again. It is un-American to allow an agreement to come to this body that we cannot change, that we may not even get a decent amount of time to talk about, that allows us to trade unconditionally with nations that torture their citizens.

We should include in this fast-track bill a negotiating objective that calls upon our trading partners to strive to live up to international civil, political and human rights standards. We ought to do that. We ought to lead with our values. We ought to say this should be a part of any negotiating strategy.

It is un-American to trade unconditionally with nations that deprive citizens of fundamental rights guaranteed by the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the International Covenant on Civil Rights and Political Rights, such as the right to worship and the right to a fair trial.

If we are going to enter into agreements with countries that deny people the right of worship or the right to a fair trial or that torture their citizens, or that summarily execute people because they question these governments, at the very minimum, we should make it clear, the Senate should make it clear, that we want to have a provision in these trade agreements that at least calls upon these countries to strive to live up to these basic standards.

I also argue it is un-American to trade unconditionally with nations that intimidate their citizens and are so corrupt that public participation is out of the question.

It is important to lead with our values. We ought to be promoting human rights. What makes me most proud to be an American citizen, to be a first-generation American, to be a Senator from Minnesota, is the way our country stands for human rights and for democracy and for freedom. I am saying in mild, moderate language, that our trade negotiators should have a principle negotiating objective, like the ones already in this bill for intellectual property rights and agriculture, that calls upon our partners to strive to live up to international human rights standards. Why not have the U.S. Government be part of that?

I am not saying don't trade with them. And my amendment doesn't say don't trade with them. I am saying trade in a way that lives up to American standards. Use trade agreement to get commitments out of trading partners to shape up—to respect the rights of their citizens.

In the January/February 2000 edition of Foreign Affairs National Security Advisor Condoleezza Rice said: "There are no guarantees, but in scores of cases from Chile to Spain to Taiwan, the link between democracy and economic liberalization has proven powerful over the long run." In remarks made to the Society of American Business Editors and Writers last April, USTR Zoellick said: ". . . we have to ensure that trade policies are aligned with our society's values. Free trade is about more than economic efficiency. It promotes freedom abroad." In an address to the Council of the America's earlier this month, he said: "Democracy is more than just holding elections. It is the Liberal idea embodied by the phrase, 'The rule of law, not of men.' It is a neutral, comprehensive framework of rules enforced impartially and justly."

And Monday, when talking about Cuba, the President said:

> Political and economic freedoms go hand in hand . . . Without major steps by Cuba to open up its political system and its economic system, trade with Cuba will not help the Cuban people. It's important for Americans to understand, without political reform, without economic reform, trade with Cuba will merely enrich Fidel Castro and his cronies. With real political and economic reform, trade can benefit the Cuban people and allow them to share in the progress of our times.

It seems the administration has the rhetoric linking political and economic progress—especially when it comes to embargoes. But where is the commitment? Where is the commitment to ensure this progress with our trading partners? It is with our trading partners that we can actually make a difference. How can we stand here and debate a bill that doesn't even demand that our trading partners try to do better when it comes to human rights and political freedom? Economic, political, and social progress have always gone hand-in-hand. If public participation in the political process, if transparency in government, if acknowledgment of the fundamental rights of man come second to trade—to economic property rights—it is exploitation. It is the text book definition of exploitation because someone owns those property rights—rights that affect everyone in society—but very few have had a say in their distribution. Today there are negotiators at the table at the WTO negotiating away rights over which the citizens of those respective nations have absolutely no say.

If that is the case, why does this fast track bill make anti-corruption in the trading regime and transparency at the WTO, principal objectives for U.S. trade negotiators? Why do those advocating this bill think these things are important enough to demand them from countries in the trading arena, but not important enough to demand that these same nations allow such public participation in decisionmaking for their own citizens? Why? I will tell you why—it is because the current trading regime is all about protecting the rights of the investor regardless of the situation of the worker.

When I look at some of the statements made by the administration, in the abstract, there are some I absolutely agree with. We have to promote human rights and democracy. We must insist on it in our foreign relations. But this must be more than rhetoric. We must have a commitment. Including a principle negotiating objective calling upon our trading partners to strive to live up to these standards is a way to show that commitment.

I have been talking about values but I could talk about competitive disadvantages too. A lot of what is going on throughout the world puts our working people at a severe disadvantage. Whether I look at Mexico, Colombia, or many other countries around the world, the situation is the same. People, quite often, if they try to organize and bargain collectively to get a better wage and working conditions, wind up in prison. They end up being tortured.

Who pays the price? The people in the other countries pay the price for it. Our workers pay the price for it. It is hard for working people in our country to compete against a corporation that can go to another country, exploit children, work them 18 hours a day, and not abide by fair labor standards or abide by human rights standards. They can not compete against it and they should not have to. In my opinion, this treatment: persistent violations of human rights, payment of slave wages, exploitation of people at the workplace by making them work under the most uncivilized working conditions, is a trade barrier. I don't think our corporations and our companies and American businesses or American workers should have to compete with this.

Given the floor situation I will make my final two points. This amendment is about values and this amendment is about economics. We should lead with our values. If we are going to enter into trade agreements with other countries, can't we at least have a provision in the trade agreements that calls on them to live up to basic human rights standards? Should we be silent on these questions? Should we be doing business with countries all around the world without at least calling on them to live up to the international covenants respecting basic civil, political, and human rights? I think not.

The United States of America should not be silent when it comes to human rights. We should not be silent when it comes to persecution against people trying to practice their religion. We should not be silent when it comes to people being rounded up and imprisoned for trying to organize a labor union and having decent working conditions and wages to support their families.

Finally, without at least some language dealing with democracy and human rights, we put American companies and American workers at a severe economic disadvantage. We find it very difficult to compete with companies located in countries whose governments violate basic human rights standards, that allow children to be worked to death, that allows slave wages, that allow uncivilized working conditions, and that crack heads when people try to organize and join a union in order to get a better standard of living. This human rights and democracy amendment strengthens this legislation and I urge my colleagues to support it. Since my colleagues were gracious enough to let me speak, I yield the floor and eagerly await their response.

AMENDMENT NO. 3445 WITHDRAWN

Mr. REID. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent amendment No. 3445 that was introduced by Senator BAYH be withdrawn. I have his permission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Madam President, I do not want to interfere with other colleagues who might come out and offer amendments. If colleagues are not anxious to speak now, I would like to make another point or two. Senator GRASSLEY indicates that is fine.

I want to read from the International Confederation of Trade Unions Annual Survey of Violations of Trade Union Rights for 2001.

In Mexico:

> Independent trade unionists faced difficulties in organizing during the year . . . there are frequent abuses in the country's 4000 or so maquiladoras; 1.3 million workers are paid less than six dollars a day to work in often deplorable conditions and only 40% of them stay more than 3 months in their job; unpaid overtime, sexual harrassment, discrimination in employment, non-existent health and safety precautions and unfair dismissals are just a few examples of the daily lot of maquiladora workers.

In Colombia:

> In 2000, more trade unionists were killed in Colombia than in the whole world in 1999! One hundred and thirty-five trade unionists, both leaders and members, were assassinated during the year, bringing the total number of trade unionists killed since 1991 to several thousand. At least another 1,600 have received death threats over the last three years, including 180 in 2000. 37 were unfairly arrested and 155 had to flee their home region; another 24 were abducted, 17 disappeared, and 14 were the victims of physical attack.

The 2002 International Labor Organization (ILO) Global Report on Child Labor has estimated that over 8 million children worldwide are trapped in the unconditional worst forms of child labor—which are internationally defined as slavery, trafficking, debt bondage, and other forms of forced labor, forced recruitment for use in armed conflict, prostitution, and pornography, and illicit activities.

Madam President, 180 million children aged 5–17—or 73 percent of all child laborers—are now believed to be engaged in the worst forms of child labor, comprising hazardous work and the unconditional worst forms of child labor. This amounts to one child in every eight in the world. Of the 171 million children engaged in hazardous work, nearly ⅔ are under 15 and should be immediately withdrawn from this work and rehabilitated.

From an April 2002 Human Rights Report titled "Tainted Harvest: Child Labor and Obstacles to Organizing on Ecuador's Banana Plantations'':

> In 1994, according to government estimates, approximately 38 percent of all children in Ecuador between the ages of 10 and 17 worked, or roughly 808,000 children approximately ½ of these children were between the ages of 10 and 14; in the rural sector, roughly 59 percent of children between ages 10 and 17 worked, or approximately 568,000 children. In 1998, another government survey indicated that the percentage of children at work between the ages of 10 and 17 in Ecuador had risen to 45 percent. Child workers were exposed to toxic chemicals, handled insecticide-treated plastics, worked under fungicide-spraying airplanes in the fields, and directly applied post-harvest pesticides in packing plants. They described using sharp tools, including knives, short curved blades, and machetes, and lacking potable water and sanitation facilities. One child described his situation when he was 11: "I went under the packing plant roof until the [fumigation] plane left—less than an hour. I became intoxicated. My eyes were red. I was nauseous. I was dizzy. I had a headache. I vomited."

Of course nations must be held accountable. But where is corporate accountability?

There are numerous reports that Coca Cola is not taking decisive public action to prevent the killing of union members at its plants in Colombia. You can be certain that if a Coca Cola plant in Colombia found a product defect there, it would call out the dogs. Coca Cola personnel would be on the first plane out of Atlanta and in Colombia doing immediate quality control, figuring out where the problem is and finding a solution. I am outraged there isn't the same response when it comes to credible reports of violence against union leaders and activists in its plants. Is a life worth less than a trademark? A recent investigative report into the closing of a Phillips-Van Heusen Corporation factory in Guatemala by the U.S./Labor Education in the Americas Project found that PVH closed the factory and busted the only union with a collective bargaining agreement in Guatemala in order to shift production to poverty-wage sweatshops that are in flagrant violation of Guatemalan labor law, as well as the White-House-initiated Apparel Industry Partnership code of conduct.

I have many examples of absolutely deplorable working conditions, people who are exploited, people who die at work, many of whom are children.

I will say it one more time: U.S. companies cannot compete with this. More importantly, they should not have to. We ought to at least call upon our trading partners to shape up when it comes to basic worker rights. We ought not be undermining our own economy. We ought not be undermining our own companies. We ought not be undermining Americans with this trade policy.

I say to my colleague from Iowa, this is a perfect marriage of values and economics. There are a lot of governments in this world, at least 70, that systematically torture their citizens. If we know this is the case, and we are entering into trade agreements with these nations, shouldn't we at least have a provision in the trade agreement that calls upon them to strive to live up to internationally recognized human rights standards? How can anybody be against that proposition?

When it comes to economics, I will say it one more time, one of the reasons there is so much suspicion about these trade agreements, which can be very good, is that often times they are not in the best interest of working people. Workers in Minnesota understand this and workers across the country understand it. They know they cannot compete against workers who make $6 a day, or $3 a day, and who work under deplorable working conditions. They cannot compete a country that lacks respect for basic human rights standards, that lacks respect for basic economic conditions, that doesn't allow people to speak up and call for a different policy without ending up in prison and being tortured.

Colleagues, I have a democracy and human rights amendment on the floor. I am calling on the Senate to be its best. I am calling on us to support these values.

I did not say that, as a condition of trade, we should say to these governments that they must live up to these standards though that is my wish. Instead, I am saying, at the very minimum we make it a priority in our trade negotiations and in our trade relations with other countries to at least call upon those countries to strive to meet internationally recognized civil, political and human rights standards. This amendment ask only that countries try. I urge my colleagues to support it.

I yield the floor.

VOTE ON AMENDMENT NO. 3454

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Florida, Mr. NELSON, No. 3454.

The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. I move to table the amendment and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The question is on agreeing to the motion. The clerk will call the roll.

The senior assistant bill clerk called the roll.

Mr. REID. I announce that the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUYE) is necessarily absent.

Mr. NICKLES. I announce that the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CARPER). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, what is the regular order?

AMENDMENT NO. 3474, AS MODIFIED, TO AMENDMENT NO. 3446

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is the Grassley second-degree amendment to the Brownback first-degree amendment.

The Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I want to do a unanimous consent request. I have an amendment that has been offered and is pending, amendment No. 3431. That amendment is not germane postcloture, but I do have a germane version of the amendment. The amendment deals with making sure that the truckdrivers who will lose their jobs when we start having trucks coming into this country driven by noncitizens through the NAFTA agreement would be eligible for help.

I ask unanimous consent to substitute amendment No. 3511 for amendment No. 3431 and that it be considered in the same order as amendment No. 3431.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I am not surprised that my friend would object to this. I will simply make one more unanimous consent request, and then I will yield the floor.

I ask unanimous consent that the pending amendments be set aside temporarily so I might call up amendment

No. 3511. This would put my amendment that is germane on the list at the end of the list.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAMM. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I am very sorry that we can't vote on this issue because I believe truckdrivers, who are some of the hardest working people in this country, are going to be thrown out of work. It is very sad.

Fortunately, I have talked to Majority Leader DASCHLE. He has assured me that we will have a vote on or in relation to this particular issue on the next bill that comes up that is not an appropriations bill.

I am very pleased at that. I thank the majority leader and thank my friends.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President. I rise to support the amendment that Senator GRASSLEY has offered to the Brownback amendment.

On the eve of the President's summit with President Putin, I join my colleagues in recognizing the importance of out ties with Russia and the Central Asian republics. These countries have been very reliable allies in our war on terrorism. They have shared intelligence with us, granted overflight and refueling rights, and cooperated in the stationing of U.S. troops. They also have supported our efforts in the United Nations to undermine terrorist organizations.

All of these efforts warrant our recognition and our gratitude. It is my expectation that President Bush will be conveying the sincere appreciation of the American people for Russia's close cooperation with the U.S. in recent months.

I want to draw attention to a key provision in the resolution. It states that the Senate "supports terminating the application of title IV of the Trade Act of 1974 to Russia in an appropriate and timely manner."

Title IV of the Trade Act refers to the so-called Jackson-Vanik amendment. In order for Russia to have permanent normal trade relations—PNTR—with the U.S. we have to terminate application of Jackson-Vanik. Granting PNTR will be a requirement when Russia joins the WTO, which may still be a year or more away.

I want to be clear about what we mean when we say that PNTR should be granted "in an appropriate and timely manner." It means that we should extend PNTR when we have a clear picture of the terms on which Russia will join the WTO.

That is the responsible thing to do. That is how we approached PNTR for China. It also is how we approached PNTR for other Jackson Vanik countries, including Albania, Bulgaria, Romania, Mongolia, Georgia, and Kyrgyzstan.

I look forward to the day when we can welcome Russia into the WTO, along with other countries covered by this resolution. At that time, I hope and expect that Congress will give its strongest backing for PNTR.

AMENDMENT NO. 3474, AS FURTHER MODIFIED, TO AMENDMENT NO. 3446

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I send a further modification of my amendment to the desk. The purpose of the modification is to make some changes to satisfy the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment, as further modified, is as follows:

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Senate regarding the United States-Russian Federation summit meeting, May 2002)

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted inset the following:

SEC. . SENSE OF THE SENATE REGARDING THE UNITED STATES-RUSSIAN FEDERATION SUMMIT MEETING, MAY 2002.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Senate finds that—

(1) President George W. Bush will visit the Russian Federation May 23-25, 2002, to meet with his Russian counterpart, President Vladimir V. Putin;

(2) the President and President Putin, and the United States and Russian governments, continue to cooperate closely in the fight against international terrorism;

(3) the President seeks Russian cooperation in containing the war-making capabilities of Iraq, including that country's ongoing program to develop and deploy weapons of mass destruction;

(4) during his visit, the President expects to sign a treaty to significantly reduce deployed American and Russian nuclear weapons by 2012;

(5) the President and his NATO partners have further institutionalized United States-Russian security cooperation through establishment of the NATO-Russia Council, which meets for the first time on May 28, 2002, in Rome, Italy;

(6) during his visit, the President will continue to address religious freedom and human rights concerns through open and candid discussions with President Putin, with leading Russian activists, and with representatives of Russia's revitalized and diverse Jewish community; and

(7) recognizing Russia's progress on religious freedom and a broad range of other mechanisms to address remaining concerns, the President has asked the Congress to terminate application to Russian of title IV of the Trade Act of 1974 (commonly known as the "Jackson-Vanik Amendment") and authorize the extension of normal trade relations to the products of Russia.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—The Senate—

(1) supports the President's efforts to deepen the friendship between the American and Russian peoples;

(2) further supports the policy objectives of the President mentioned in this section with respect to the Russian Federation;

(3) supports terminating the application of title IV of the Trade Act of 1974 to Russia in an appropriate and timely manner; and

(4) looks forward to learning the results of the President's discussions with President Putin and other representatives of the Russian government and Russian society.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, on the eve of President Bush's European visit, it is appropriate to point out how attitudes have changed regarding the President's actions with respect to the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty. A little more than a year ago there was widespread concern over President Bush's decision to withdraw the United States from the ABM treaty. Recently there has been a general change of mind. It appears that many of Bush's biggest critics incorrectly guessed Russian President Vladimir Putin's reaction. Instead of renewing cold war tensions by increasing nuclear arsenals, the United States and Russia have continued to strengthen their friendship.

I ask unanimous consent to print a copy of an article in today's Washington Post that underscores President Bush's foresight in dealing with Russia and the ABM treaty.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CRITICISM SOFTENS ON ABM MOVE

(By Dana Milbank)

A year ago, on President Bush's first presidential trip to Europe, allies in Western Europe and congressional Cassandras worried about the administration's plan to abrogate the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty with Russia.

They argued that Bush's plans for a missile defense system, at the same time NATO was expanding to Russia's border, would throw the world into a nuclear arms race. "We need to preserve these strategic balances, of which the ABM Treaty is a pillar," said French President Jacques Chirac. German Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder joined Chirac in issuing a joint statement defending the ABM.

As Bush arrives tonight in Berlin for a seven-day overseas trip, European leaders still oppose the White House's policy on issues ranging from Iraq to global warming. But many concede Bush may have been right about Russia and the ABM.

The United States pulled out of the ABM Treaty, and NATO expansion in the Baltic nations is on track. Instead of an arms race and hostility resulting, Bush and Russian President Vladimir Putin became fast friends. They agreed on an accord reducing nuclear weapons and are pursuing new ways to cooperate in commerce, intelligence and defense.

"We were worried a year ago that Bush's position would create a terrible confrontation," a senior German diplomat said. "Maybe we underestimated Putin's creativeness and farsightedness."

Bush loyalists say the administration had a clearer view than Western Europeans did on Russia. Bush, like Putin, understood the conflict had shifted from one of East against West to a new struggle of wealthy democracies against dictatorial regimes and stateless terrorists. Bush also perceived that Putin wished to be on the side of the wealthy democracies.

"It has been a pattern for 50 years that people yell Chicken Little any time we ask the Russians to do anything," said Kenneth Adelman, who ran the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency in the Reagan administration. "It's all been wrong and predictably wrong."

In the new, "asymmetrical" warfare against rogue states, the Russians are allies, Adelman said. "They'll be with us on these issues probably more than France, and they'll be more important. They fear Islamic radicalism, they fear weapons of mass destruction, and they need Western investment and Western ways and means."

Officially, the Bush administration is not gloating. But Bush aides did compile a list of Chicken Little remarks made by politicians and commentators last year. Its title: "Quotes of Criticism on ABM Withdraw and National Missile Defense."

The list, mostly Democrats, includes Clinton national security adviser Samuel R. "Sandy" Berger saying Bush had put the nation on a "collision course" with Russia and NATO allies.

Senate Majority Leader Thomas A. Daschle (D-S.D.) declared: "I believe it would be a grave mistake for the United States to unilaterally abrogate the ABM treaty in order to deploy a robust national defense system. Unilateral actions will trigger reactions all around the world. Those reactions themselves could make our nation less secure."

House Minority Leader Richard A. Gephardt (D-Mo.) vowed to block any missile defense system that violated the ABM Treaty. "Europeans are worried," Gephardt said, saying the administration may "prevent us from seizing a historic opportunity for engagement with Russia."

And former president Jimmy Carter said Bush's missile defense plan, which required abrogating the ABM Treaty, was "technologically ridiculous" and would "re-escalate the nuclear arms race."

One Republican made the compilation. Sen. John W. Warner (Va.) said Bush should leave "some vestiges of the ABM Treaty in place" to assure allies.

Included in the collection of quotes was a press release quoting Washington arms control expert Daryl G. Kimball predicting Bush's missile defense idea and ABM position would "set off a dangerous action/reaction cycle, involving the United States, Russia, and China."

Gephardt spokesman Erik Smith, asked about his boss's old remarks, acknowledged that "the White House has made progress" with Russia. But he said Bush has yet to make progress with Russia on nuclear proliferation, Iraq and dismantling nuclear weapons. "There were several other points . . . that have not been addressed," Smith said.

Kimball was unrepentant about his earlier words. "I stand behind the quote," he said. "The potential for a dangerous action/reaction cycle remains, especially because the Bush administration has failed to lock in verifiable reductions of Russia's nuclear forces."

Bush aids dismiss such concerns.

"What keeps Russia and the United States from going to war today is not the number of nuclear weapons that they have on either side or the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty or some outdated notion of strategic stability," national security adviser Condoleezza Rice said. "It's that they have nothing to go to war about."

Mr. GRASSLEY. I move adoption of the amendment.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I say to my friend, we are still waiting to hear from one Senator. We should be able to do that momentarily, if he will withhold.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, I rise to speak briefly on the matter in front of the body, the Grassley substitute amendment on granting Russia and central Asian countries permanent normal trade relations. I am glad we have taken up the resolution itself, the sense of the Senate. It is a positive statement. We should take up PNTR. Otherwise, as I stated last night, I recognize that the votes are not here today to deal with that issue for Russia or some of the central Asian countries, but I want to take this opportunity to address the body on this particular point because we really need to recognize what has taken place and move with some speed in the near future to address this topic because of what is taking place in the world.

I realize we are a body that takes time, and it takes some time and effort to move some of these issues. But look at what has taken place. The President of the United States is going to Russia this week. Last week Russia announced a two-thirds reduction in nuclear missile capacity, an enormous agreement. Last week Russia joined closer and closer to NATO, the very organization that previously had been structured to defend against the Soviet Union. Now the successor organization of Russia is joining closer to NATO.

Jackson-Vanik, that is what PNTR is addressed toward—permanent normal trade relations is not granted until a Jackson-Vanik waiver is granted. Jackson-Vanik addresses the issue of whether you allow free immigration of religious minorities, particularly Jews, out of the former Soviet Union. That is what the particular bill was directed toward. That is taking place. There is no question but that is taking place in Russia. As we look to the future and as we seek to reduce dependence on Mideastern oil, Russia and central Asia are going to figure larger and larger into the picture, along with their own domestic production.

I make the point as well that we have granted China PNTR after a long, extended debate about that. Yes, we have granted China permanent normal trade relations. If we look at their human rights record versus that taking place in Russia—you have a number of abuses, a number of people not being allowed to leave China—that is occurring in Russia. But the different standard we are putting forward here is striking.

Even today, there are a number of North Koreans who have gone to China from North Korea, who don't want to go back to North Korea. Yet they are being forced to, by bounties given by the Chinese, to round them up and send them back to North Korea. That is not human rights and religious freedom in China. Yet we have granted permanent normal trade relations with them. I voted for it. I thought we should because the overall issue is about us engaging these places in the world, engaging China.

Now, clearly, we should be engaging Russia. The President has developed a strong relationship with President Putin. President Putin is leaning forward a long way with his country in engaging the West in a remarkable fashion—a fashion that I think anybody here would have to say is nothing short of miraculous, about how far forward he is taking his country in a short period of time in working with the West. These are breathtaking results, really.

The notion that we would hold up and be slow about an issue of permanent normal trade relations when we granted it to China, which has missiles pointed this way, has human rights abuses, and is selling weapons technology to rogue regimes around the world—it is striking that it would be different.

As far as central Asia—and that is what else was in the base bill. In Uzbekistan, we have troops. In Kazakhstan, we have troops. In Azerbaijan, we have landing rights. In Armenia, Armenian Americans are seeking development. What we are talking about with PNTR is the ability of having normal trade relations with this country so they might grow with us.

Realizing the votes are not here today to grant PNTR to these countries, I think it is time we pick up the pace on doing this because of the speed of events taking place, and it is so important that we engage these areas. Hopefully, in the near future, we will reduce our dependence on oil in the Middle East and have more coming from U.S. domestic sources and countries such as Kazakhstan and Russia. There will be a closer economic tie that should be basic in the relationship.

We need to send a strong message of support from the United States to the Russian Duma and President Putin that we deeply appreciate and agree with the actions he has taken on behalf of Russia last week. He did incredible things last week. We are doing a sense of the Senate. It is a positive statement. We should do that. It is a right sort of statement for us to make to Russia. It pales in comparison to what the Russians have done themselves. All we are asking is that we put forward basically a normal trade relationship between the United States and Russia—a country that seeks to grow much closer to the United States. We should encourage that with a great deal of speed and effort on our part.

So I rise in support of the Grassley substitute for Russia and central Asia. The central Asian and south Caucasus nations are a part of this. We should be granting PNTR and engaging as they are with us. They are frontline for us in the war on terrorism. They were in the Afghan conflict when our men were based out of Uzbekistan to go into Afghanistan. Without them, we would have a great deal of difficulty. This is a modest proposal for us to move forward. I support the Grassley substitute. I hope we can be more forward-leaning ourselves in engaging central Asia and Russia in this overall effort. I support the Grassley amendment.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3467

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I am going to try to make the most efficient use of time. When colleagues are ready to do some other work, I will certainly be pleased to yield the floor. There is no surprise here. I say to Senator GRASSLEY, as I said to the Senator from Montana, I am going to speak for a few minutes. When we are ready to get back to business, I will be pleased to yield the floor. This is no 5-hour speech that I have planned right now.

Mr. President, I want to one more time discuss the human rights and democracy amendment. For the life of me, I actually do not understand the basis of opposition.

In the legislation before us, there is a listing of objectives. Believe me, one of the objectives is to do everything we can to protect property rights, to do everything we can to make sure patents are protected—you name it—intellectual property is protected. Fine.

What this amendment says is one of the listed goals of trade policy ought to be the promotion of human rights and democracy. It should be one of our goals. We should list this as a goal of trade policy and then call upon our trading partners to strive to meet these standards.

I want to say in not the hardest hitting way but in a little softer way at first that this is the greatness of our country. We should lead with our values. We should be promoting human rights in the world.

I gave examples of any number of different countries right out of our own State Department report where governments systematically torture citizens, where people who dare to speak up and challenge a government are imprisoned, where people who dare to organize a union to make better wages and support their families wind up in prison. There are at least 70 governments in the world that systematically still use torture against their citizens.

I am saying that I think it would make us a better Senate and would make each Senator a better Senator if we would say one of our goals—that is all this says—should be the promotion of democracy and human rights and that we should at least call upon our trading partners to strive to meet internationally recognized civil, political, and human rights.

I do not understand the opposition. I know we are now in a situation where cloture has been invoked—this is a germane amendment—where we have a limited amount of time. That is why I came to the Chamber now. Other Senators have amendments, and I do not want to crowd out their amendments, but I certainly would like the opposition at some time before a vote to explain the basis of a "no" vote.

I believe as a first-generation American Senator from a human rights State, Minnesota, which has always been at the forefront in promoting human rights and has always been at the forefront in promoting democracy—and, by the way, many refugees who have fled persecution have come to Minnesota—I do not understand why the Senate would not go on record with a 100-to-0 vote that one of the goals of our trade policy should be the promotion of human rights and democracy and that we would call upon our trading partners to strive to meet those goals.

Haven't we read about enough reports dealing with deplorable child labor conditions? How many more children need to die? How many more brave men and women need to be tortured? How many working people in these other countries need to wind up in prison? How many workers need to die at an early age because of the carcinogenic substances they work with because there is no protection, and if they dare to speak out, they wind up in prison?

How many more men and women in our country are going to have to lose their jobs because we have no trade agreements that call upon governments to live up to these standards?

This is a values vote, and it is a working family vote. It is a values vote because we should lead with our values, and we should at least vote to make this a goal of our trade policy.

My colleagues know me. This is my pragmatic best. This is the most pragmatic language I can come up with: That we should list human rights and democracy as a goal and call upon our trading partners to strive to meet that goal.

Now, to be more serious, we should lead with our values. This is what I love about our country: Promoting human rights. I am in awe of the men and women I have met in my life. I do not know how they do it. You live in some of these countries, and you dare to speak up when you know it is not just that you might be rounded up and tortured—here is what is worse, Mr. President, here is how these governments silence citizens: They threaten that they will round up your children or your wife, your husband, your loved ones, and they will be tortured or they will be raped or they will be murdered.

I am saying today in this Chamber that we ought to at least vote to make a goal of our trade policy respect for human rights and democracy.

My second point is a working family point. I am positive that the families I represent with this vote are not lobbying furiously because they are not usually the ones with that much clout. The vast majority of people in our country and the vast majority of people in Minnesota are absolutely for good trade policy, but I think people would like some reassurance that we would strive in our trade agreements with other countries to establish some goals where they do not get put out of work because they are competing with a 13-year-old who has to work 19 hours a day at 30 cents an hour. It is not good for that 13-year-old, and it is not good for workers in our country.

I see colleagues in the Chamber. I will not belabor the point, but I will come back to this again. Frankly, I think opposition to this amendment, unfortunately, tells a larger story about what is profoundly wrong with this legislation. Legislation that does not establish that goal and is afraid to speak out on promoting the goal of human rights and democracy in the world is legislation that does not deserve support. I hope there will be support for this amendment.

I yield the floor.

ORDER FOR RECESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The acting majority leader.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that between 4:30 p.m. and 5:30 p.m. today, the Senate stand in recess and that the hour away from the Senate will be counted against the 30 hours postcloture. The reason for this is that Secretary Rumsfeld is here for a secret briefing and all Senators should go to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3474, AS FURTHER MODIFIED

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I urge adoption of the Grassley second-degree amendment to the Brownback amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment?

If not, the question is on agreeing to amendment No. 3474, as further modified.

The amendment (No. 3474), as further modified, was agreed to.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. BAUCUS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3446

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the first-degree amendment, as amended?

If not, the question is on agreeing to amendment No. 3446, as amended.

The amendment (No. 3446), as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. BAUCUS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. REID. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CORZINE). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I have spoken to the managers of the bill. What we would like to do now is move off the Dorgan amendment No. 3442. Senator DORGAN is going to be here momentarily to deal with that amendment. We would like to move off that and move to amendment No. 3443, the amendment of Senator REED.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3443

Mr. REID. It is my understanding now that we are on this amendment, the Senator from Rhode Island wants to ask unanimous consent for something. After having done that, we will deal with his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I have an amendment that is now pending that, prior to the cloture vote, would have been in order for consideration, but after cloture, at this point I ask unanimous consent I be allowed to substitute another amendment which is in order for consideration if accepted by the body.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRASSLEY. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I appreciate the point that has just been made. My amendment, if I was allowed to proceed, would have dealt with the issue of secondary workers, providing them the same types of protections which are available to workers in facilities that are directly affected by trade actions. This is an amendment that is cosponsored by Senator BINGAMAN, the Presiding Officer, Senator CORZINE, and others. It comes directly from the original legislation that Senator BINGAMAN submitted, S. 1209, which recognizes that the effects of trade are not discretely limited to individual companies but also affect those vendors, suppliers, and workers who support that company. I think that is a principle that is beyond debate.

When a factory closes, it is not just the factory workers, it is the truckers, it is the tradesmen who work in that facility who very often see their livelihoods completely exhausted by the effects of trade.

As a result, this legislation was originally proposed by Senator BINGAMAN. It was part of the proposal Senator DASCHLE made. It was part of the discussions. Unfortunately, regretfully, and I think unfairly, it was deleted from the provision which is in the underlying bill.

As a result, I would have offered either the substitute amendment or, indeed, would offer the amendment now which would have included the effects of the trade adjustment benefits for those secondary workers. Again, I think it makes quite a bit of sense.

Our definition of a secondary worker is someone who must have supplied a service or contract to the firm that has been certified as going out of business due to the direct effect of international trade. Perhaps the most compelling examples are those individual teamsters who service businesses that might, in fact, go out of business because of trade. They, too, lose their livelihood.

I know my colleague, Senator BOXER of California, has offered an amendment that deals directly with the issue of truckers and teamsters. My amendment would apply to any worker who could validly make the claim of being, as I said, by contract or some relationship, related to a factory that is being closed down.

The point I should also make is this provision would only give the workers or their representatives the opportunity to apply for these benefits because they have to be certified. It has to be shown that they have lost their job because of the effects of trade. The certification process, as we all know, is a rather difficult one. It is not presumed. It has to be proven. In this context, we are not opening up the floodgates. We are merely giving people who have lost their livelihood because of trade a fair chance.

The most compelling point I urge in this whole area is we did precisely this under the NAFTA agreement. We provided for TAA benefits for workers, secondary workers, who were affected by the NAFTA agreement.

So I urge very strongly that we overlook any of the procedural impediments and go to the heart of this matter. Give secondary workers the same rights as those factory workers who might lose their jobs because of the adverse effect of trade.

We can do that by accepting the Reed-Bingaman-Corzine amendment. We can do that as we did in NAFTA and give all workers who have lost their jobs because of trade the benefits of the TAA assistance that has been provided on a limited basis in the underlying agreement.

I urge my colleagues to support this effort.

At this time I retain the remainder of my time and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada.

AMENDMENT NO. 3442

Mr. REID. I ask we return to the regular order, which I understand is the Dorgan amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has that right. The regular order is amendment No. 3442.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, the pending business is amendment No. 3442; am I correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

AMENDMENT NO. 3442 WITHDRAWN

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I offered this amendment prior to the cloture vote. I understand a point of order would lie against it postcloture because it is not germane postcloture. I will withdraw it because I do not think at this point the amendment would survive the vote because it is not germane. But I am, frankly, surprised. The first amendment I offered prevailed here in the Senate on a rather significant vote.

This amendment is an interesting amendment. It is very simple. Those who come to the floor of the Senate and talk about trade normally turn the volume up a bit and talk about how this country needs to be able to compete, that we need to be able to do so around the world.

Let me talk about competition for a second and what this amendment is about.

We had an investigation with respect to Canadian wheat. It has flooded into this country unfairly. It has done so for years following the United States-Canada Free Trade Agreement. In fact, that flood, that avalanche of Canadian grain, was in contravention to an agreement that Mr. Yeutter put in writing to the Congress saying: This won't happen. The representation of good faith on both sides of the border post-United States-Canada Free Trade Agreement means we will not have a significant change in the flow of grain across our border. He put that in writing to the Congress.

Guess what happened. That trade agreement was approved—not with my vote. I voted against it. But instantly we had an avalanche of unfairly traded grain coming into this country. Did anyone lift a finger to do anything about it? We have had all of this discussion about helping the American farmer, but no one was willing to lift a finger to do anything.

The farmers had to put their own money together in a 301 investigation that went through the ITC and the U.S. Trade Representative. The U.S. Trade Representative and the ITC concluded that Canada is guilty of unfair trade. It hurt our farmers. So the judgment was guilty.

What is the remedy? The remedy is we are going to say you had better watch it. We are not going to do anything about it. There is no trade remedy, no sanction, and no tariff quota—no nothing.

Here we are. The farmers spent their money in a section 301 action. They won. Canada is guilty of unfair trade and is taking money right out of family farmers' pockets. And we have people prancing around the floor of the Senate talking about we ought to be able to compete anywhere in the world as long as the competition is fair. It is not fair. It has been judged to be unfair. Yet we can't get a trade remedy.

Why is the ambassador unwilling to stand up for family farmers? The trade ambassador stood up for steel. He stood up for lumber. Why is he unwilling to stand up for family farmers and propose a remedy—for example, a tariff quota? Why? Does anyone have an answer to that? I don't think so.

So I offered the softest possible amendment. I offered that precloture. The amendment I understand now postcloture will fall on a point of order. So I shall withdraw it.

But the amendment is very simple. Anyone who says they stand for family farmers ought to support this amendment. It simply says we want the trade ambassador to report back to the Congress within 6 months, telling us what his remedy is going to be for the judgment that has already been rendered that Canada is guilty of unfair trade, yes, unfair trade, and shipping an avalanche of unfairly subsidized Canadian grain into our market at secret prices by a state-sanctioned Canadian Wheat Board which is a monopoly that would be illegal in our country, and also underpricing us in other markets, particularly northern Africa and other places where we have been injured in international trade in other markets.

My amendment simply says the ambassador shall report back to the Congress within 6 months the specific proposed trade remedy that will be administered on behalf of the American farmers who have already been able to achieve through their own filing of a 301 case and through the use of their own money to bring a case and get a guilty verdict against the Canadians.

One is going to ask—and farmers certainly should ask—of what value is it to have a trade remedy if at the end of the day it is judged that farmers are victims of unfair trade and our trade authority? Our legislators say, by the way, the perpetrators of this unfair trade shall not have to bear any responsibility or any burden or be on the receiving end of financial sanctions.

I just do not understand it. I do understand what is going on with respect to the fast-track trade agreement, which I don't support. The effort here is to try to tighten it up, like putting a big tarp on a big truck. You tighten the rubber bands around it, hook it altogether, don't let any wind in, and drive it through as fast as you can.

That is what this is all about. It is good for those who do it.

After this particular legislation is enacted, they will see another increase in America's trade deficit. In every single circumstance in the last 15 years when we bragged about forcing open foreign markets, and when we passed fast-track trade authority and negotiated another trade agreement, our trade deficit increased, yes, with Europe, with Mexico, with Canada, with Japan, and with China. In every single circumstance, that trade deficit is on a relentless path upward. Everybody knows it.

Therefore, while everyone is sitting around saying let us ignore this huge, growing tumor called this trade deficit, over $1 billion a day, every single day, 7 days a week represents the trade deficit. Over $1 billion every day is the amount of goods we bring into this country which exceeds the amount of goods we ship out. Somebody is going to have to pay for that.

I used to teach economics in college. I have told my colleagues many times. But I have been able to overcome that experience and do other things in life as well. But what we taught in college in the field of economics was that you could explain a budget deficit by a deficit that you owe to yourself. That is a plausible explanation. Under the U.S. fiscal policy, a budget deficit is money we owe to ourselves. You cannot make a similar explanation with respect to the trade deficit. The trade deficit is money we owe to others. It will be someday, in some way, paid for by a lower standard of living in the United States. That is inevitable and is not debatable.

The question is: When are we going to care about the trade deficit? When does an American trade deficit of $440 billion-plus begin to matter to our country and to our economy, and, yes, to the children who will inherit that and will have to pay others around the world to settle that trade deficit? Part and parcel of that trade deficit are the trade circumstances in which our producers and our workers are victimized.

One instance of that is America's farmers who produce this grain and lifestyle and find themselves victimized by unfair trade. It is admonished by politicians of virtually every stripe that it is important for them to go forward and to compete: You must compete. You must be competitive. We can be competitive anywhere in the world. I am convinced of that. But you can't do it with one hand tied behind your back. You can't do it with rules that aren't fair, especially with respect to grain.

The judgment is already in. The ITC and the U.S. Trade Representative have already said our farmers are victims of unfair trade. It is just that the remedy is nonexistent.

Unfortunately, I am not able, apparently, to put on this piece of legislation a very simple amendment that would ask the Trade Representative within 6 months to report back a remedy by which people stand up for and support those who are victims of unfair trade with Canada; that is, family farmers and family ranchers across this country.

I regret that. But then there will be other days and other ways to address this issue. This is the place to have addressed it. This is a trade bill. This is the place, and this is the time to have addressed this issue on behalf of family farmers.

I regret that we could not get the 60 votes necessary to overcome the point of order postcloture to stand up for family farmers on this matter. As a result, I will ask consent to withdraw the amendment, and I make such a request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3474, AS FURTHER MODIFIED

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, we just adopted, I understand by UC, a sense-of-the-Senate resolution that relates to Jackson-Vanik. With the permission of my colleagues, I would like to speak to that for just a few minutes.

The sense-of-the-Senate resolution proposed by Senator GRASSLEY reinforces a commitment that I support, which is to extend all efforts to expand our relationship with Russia.

Russia has taken very significant steps toward working with NATO, cooperating with us against terrorism in central Asia and the north Caucasus, providing a stable world oil market, and opening up its domestic markets.

But we have to keep in mind that while Russia, under President Putin, is moving toward greater acceptance of the rule of law, free trade, and a market economy, it is not there yet.

It hopes to join the World Trade Organization, it is seeking foreign investment, and it is working to revise its legal and business structures toward those ends. But it still falls by the wayside on significant points.

Most visibly, on March 1 of this year, Russia imposed an unexpected and arbitrary embargo on imports of U.S. chicken parts, causing serious grief and economic loss to an industry.

Now, chickens and chicken parts are a multibillion-dollar industry, bigger than most of the industries in most of your States. And it is a big deal in my State.

While I appreciate the worldwide problems of finding common health standards, the timing, as well as the arbitrary and sudden imposition of Russia's ban, indicates that political and financial reasons, not the claimed health reasons, were the cause. They came up with a specious argument.

After some intense negotiations and the President basically telling the Russians, "Hey, look, if you want to play in the world of international trade, you have to play by the rules. You have to be fair"—they went ahead and "lifted" the embargo, which was specious from the outset. When they lifted the embargo, though, they lifted it only in principle. The Russian bureaucracy, with or without the approval of the central authorities, continues to delay and limit imports of chicken parts.

Let me explain what I mean. You have to have an importer in Russia to accept the chickens when they get there. They changed the law, and said no more embargo, but—guess what—all importers have to get new licenses. Now we cannot ship from Delaware, Allen Chickens or Perdue Chickens or Tyson Chickens, any chicken parts to Russia unless we are sending them to someone who is going to accept them.

You have to have an importer's license. Guess what. If you lift an embargo, but if you limit or do not give a license to somebody with whom I can deal, then I am still out of the market.

Now, Russian officials and Russian parliamentarians and members of the Russian Senate are very frank with me in my meetings. They have said that the reason this is the way it is, is pure bribery—pure, unadulterated bribery and that the oligarchs have a piece of the action.

There are only a couple of chicken outfits in Russia. I am serious, I am not joking about this. As long as imported chicken parts do not come in, the price of chicken goes up. The oligarchs, who own and purchase those chickens, those chicken dealers—what happens? make money. As long as they can keep this dragging on, they are making money.

So, in my view, it is possible that this isn't something that is being coordinated at the highest levels. But the bottom line is that responsible governments have to react.

Last year, Russia imported $630 million worth of chickens from the United States—8 percent of all U.S. poultry exports. Russian suppliers have not been able to fill that gap, and as a result, many Russian consumers, mostly pensioners who cannot afford the higher prices for Russian chicken, are suffering. Right now, other countries are moving in to take over this lucrative market from our own U.S. suppliers. This move is a direct contradiction to Russia's professed desire to join the world community of fair trade practices and a slap at our efforts to work with Russia in gaining accession into WTO.

As everyone in this Chamber knows, I am a strong supporter of good relations with Russia and its President, the first leader since Peter the Great to look as far west as he has.

I support and commend every effort the administration is making to support good working relations with Russia, including the discussion that will start in Moscow tomorrow.

I met with Condoleezza Rice before they left for an extended period of time to discuss this. I am chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee. I have been one of the guys criticized on this floor for being too supportive of Russia. But before I can support taking steps, of any form, to lift trade limits on Russia, I want to make sure they have their act in order, and make sure Russia's commitment to fair and open trade and the rule of law is in the works.

Now, look, let me make something clear to you: You put a ban on American chicken. You then lift the ban. You then make it difficult or impossible to get a license to move in, but you give other people licenses to move in. We lose the market.

This is not like the drug companies in the State of my friend from New Jersey, or the drug companies in my State of Delaware. If they put a ban on our stuff, we have patents, so they can't get it from anywhere else. We don't lose the market. We lose the profit margin. We lose the market temporarily, but we don't lose it permanently.

This is a big deal. This is a multibillion-dollar deal, over time, to us. So I want to let everybody know, I can either be Russia's best friend or worst enemy. And if they keep fooling around like this, they are going to have me as their worst enemy.

This resolution expresses a sense of the Senate that supports terminating the application of Jackson-Vanik to Russia in an "appropriate and timely manner." I am the guy who has been pushing that for a year—when the Russians are acting appropriately.

But I tell you what. In my view, it will only be appropriate to act on such legislation when it is clear that Russia is living up to its bilateral trade agreements and arrangements with the United States. I am not talking about trade disputes. I am not talking about legitimate trade disputes. I want them not only to live up to the letter of the law, but to the spirit of the law. Only then, only when we can be sure Russia is committed to adhering to commitments already made, should we graduate Russia from Jackson-Vanik, which in principle, I think we should.

I am convinced we will be able to do that because I am convinced that President Putin has gotten the message. And I was told personally that the President of the United States of America is going to raise this issue. Tomorrow it begins. He is going to raise this issue personally with the President of Russia.

So I will be happy, at the appropriate time, to be one of those who moves for Russia's graduation out of Jackson-Vanik. But I am not going to do that, as one Senator—and I think the chairman of the Finance Committee—unless the Russians begin to act appropriately.

I thank my colleagues for their indulgence, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. REED). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, the managers are trying to work out a number of things on this most important issue of postcloture. During the next hour we will work on that.

RECESS

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent the recess previously scheduled begin right now.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 4:24 p.m., recessed until 5:30 p.m. and reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. MILLER).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader is recognized.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT REQUEST—S. 2538

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, Senator KENNEDY and I are going to be involved in a colloquy for a couple of minutes as we await another amendment. It pertains to the minimum wage. I will have a unanimous consent request that I will propound in a moment.

As we are debating new trade practices, we must not forget important protections for America's workers. Many of these protections are addressed through the Trade Adjustment Assistance Act, but for the last 60 years there has been another important protection for workers, and that is the minimum wage.

It has now been over 6 years since Congress voted to increase the minimum wage. In that time, the cost of living has increased 12 percent while the real value of the minimum wage has steadily declined. In fact, by 2003, all of the gain achieved through the last increase will have been wiped out.

Today, minimum wage employees working 40 hours a week 52 weeks a year earn only $10,700—more than $4,000 below the poverty line for a family of three.

In the last 6 years, the purchasing power of the minimum wage has deteriorated to near record low levels. Teacher's aides and health care workers are among the hard-working Americans who are unable to make ends meet on a $5.15 per hour wage.

In fact, the current minimum wage does not provide enough income to allow full-time workers to afford adequate housing in any area of the country. In my State of South Dakota, the minimum wage is hardly enough for a family to make ends meet.

According to the National Low-Income Housing Coalition, a minimum wage earner can afford a monthly rent of no more than $268. In South Dakota, a worker earning the minimum wage must work 79 hours a week in order to afford a typical two-bedroom apartment. In fact, estimates show that for a worker to be able to afford a two-bedroom apartment in South Dakota, they would have to earn $10.12—nearly 200 percent of the present minimum wage.

That is why we need to pass Senator KENNEDY's new minimum wage legislation. It would provide a $1.50 increase over the next 2 years. This is the least we can do, and it is long overdue.

By increasing the minimum wage by $1.50, working families will receive an additional $3,000 per year in income. While this increase would not be enough to lift the family of three above the poverty line, it would provide the resources to buy over 15 months of groceries, 8 months of rent, 7 months of utilities, or tuition at a two-year community college. The reality is that American workers are working harder and harder for less and less.

It is time for Congress to address the needs of America's working families. It is time to act and raise the minimum wage.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I wonder if the majority leader would be kind enough to yield for a few questions.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I would be happy to yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, now we are dealing with the trade bill which will provide benefits, obviously, to many corporations. We also ought to think of the workers, especially those workers at the bottom rung of the economic ladder.

I listened with interest to the Senator from South Dakota. As the Senator pointed out, if we fail to increase the minimum wage, which has not been increased in 6 years, the purchasing power of the minimum wage will near an all-time low.

All we are trying to do is bring it up a little bit, which would be generally below what the average has been over recent years.

Is the Senator aware that if we fail to act with an increase in the minimum wage, it will be virtually at an all-time low if we don't act this year?

Mr. DASCHLE. It is not as well known as I wish it were. But how ironic it would be if in the same Congress that passed tax breaks for those at the very top—tax breaks worth $50,000 a year to those in the top 1 percent—we could not do something to address the needs of those at the lowest end of the income scale.

I certainly appreciate the graphic depiction of the trend of the minimum wage which the Senator from Massachusetts has outlined. That is the whole idea behind this legislation.

Mr. KENNEDY. I would like to ask the Senator a further question. Does the Senator not agree with me that for years this body—Republicans and Democrats—thought that people who worked 40 hours a week, 52 weeks of the year should not have to live in poverty in the United States? Does the Senator understand now that the minimum wage is well below the poverty line for working families?

Some will say we have an earned-income tax credit. But still the fact is for a single mom, or even for families of three, they are still well below the poverty line.

Does the Senator not agree with me, as I believe most Democrats do, that work ought to pay and that those individuals who work 52 weeks of the year, 40 hours a week should at least be at a poverty line, not a living wage even, but a poverty line?

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, the answer to that would be emphatically yes, especially given the stated desire of Members of Congress who have passed welfare reform. The whole idea behind welfare reform was to make work pay, to make work more palatable than welfare. But it is hard for me to understand how a head of household can see how work pays when they are working for the minimum wage, 52 weeks a year, 40 hours a week and earning only $10,700 a year.

That is why we have people in South Dakota—and I am sure in Massachusetts—working two and three jobs. That is why we are concerned about the pressures on families these days. It is hard to raise children, and it is hard to address all of the other familial responsibilities if you are working two and three jobs a week in an effort to rise above that poverty line that the Senator's chart illustrates.

Mr. KENNEDY. Of course, I believe the increase in the minimum wage is a women's issue because the majority of those earning the minimum wage are women. It is a children's issue because so many of those women have children. It is a civil rights issue because great numbers of those who receive the minimum wage are men and women of color, and it is a fairness issue.

In looking over the historic increases that have been enacted by the Congress since 1956, the proposal is an increase of $1.50—60 cents the first year, 50 cents the next year, and 40 cents. This represents in the bar chart what the percentage increase would be going back to 1956. It will be actually one of the lowest over the period of the next 3 years.

When the Senator propounds his unanimous consent request, we will probably hear those who will say this is new legislation when we talk about an increase in the minimum wage. We haven't had a chance to study it. This is something that sort of takes us by surprise.

Will the Senator not agree with me that this issue is as old as the 1930s, effectively, when we first enacted the minimum wage, and that this proposal of $1.50 over 3 years is actually a very modest proposal indeed?

Mr. DASCHLE. The Senator is absolutely right. Not only is it modest but it is overdue.

As I noted in my opening comments, it has been 6 years since we passed an increase in the minimum wage. During that time, as the Senator's chart illustrates, the minimum wage has dramatically declined. The number of hours people have to work goes up and the real value of the money they receive goes down.

More and more people are faced with the prospect of taking two and three jobs in order to climb above that poverty line, at the very time, ironically, when we say that we want work to pay to ensure that they do not go back to welfare.

So I compliment the Senator from Massachusetts for his leadership in this effort and, again, reiterate that the moderate increase that he is proposing is one that is in keeping with past precedent here in the Congress; and it certainly recognizes the need to do something this year.

Mr. KENNEDY. If the majority leader will yield, I thank the leader for the excellent presentations he made this evening on this issue, as well as the excellent speech he made earlier today.

He mentioned that $3,000 may not mean a lot to Members of Congress who have had four pay increases since the last increase in the minimum wage, but for a minimum wage worker it means 15 months of groceries, 8 months of rent, 7 months of utilities, or full tuition for a community college.

This is, as the majority leader pointed out, a family issue. It represents, to those children, the value of work. And it is a fairness issue.

I thank the majority leader. I hope there will not be objection to the proposal he is about to make.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I ask, therefore, unanimous consent that the majority leader, after consultation with the Republican leader, may turn to the consideration of S. 2538, the minimum wage increase bill; that the Senate proceed to its consideration no later than the close of business, June 24; and that it be considered under the following time limitation: That there be one amendment for each leader, or their designee, dealing with minimum wage/taxes; that no other amendments or motions be in order, except possible motions to waive the Budget Act; and that no points of order be waived by this agreement; that upon the disposition of these amendments, the bill be read a third time, and the Senate vote on final passage of the bill, without any intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAMM. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, first of all, we are here debating the trade bill that is all about trying to raise wages. It is interesting, in looking at Senator KENNEDY's charts, that in the period where the minimum wage was not raised, the number of children living in poverty declined by 20 percent in America.

How did that happen? The Government did not raise the minimum wage. Yet we had, in a decade, a precipitous decline in the number of children and people living in poverty.

How is it possible for people to escape poverty without the minimum wage being increased? It is possible because of economic growth. There are many people in this Chamber who have worked at the minimum wage—but they didn't work at it long. A minimum wage job is a steppingstone toward economic progress and success in America.

The plain truth is, we are debating a bill that is more important to working people making low incomes than any minimum wage law that has ever been adopted by any legislative body in history. This bill is about trade, which creates jobs. The average job generated through trade pays wages that are almost 20 percent higher than wages in the other jobs in the American economy.

In dealing with this pro-high-wage bill, we are asked to consider a measure we have never seen; that is not on the calendar; that, as far as I know, has never been introduced; that is not relevant or germane to this debate.

So I have to say, it is hard for me to take this request seriously, though I would say to Senator KENNEDY that we would love to stay and hear him speak on this at length. If he would like to have time set aside from this debate to talk about minimum wage, it is a subject where certainly we have people who are interested in it, who could always be enlightened, who would enjoy hearing Senator KENNEDY talk about it. I would like to do something about wages by passing this trade bill because I think it will do more for people making low incomes than any wage law we could pass.

Let me also say, I have never understood minimum wage laws. If they really work, if we could just pass a law and make wages what we want them to be, why not make wages $1 million an hour? Then people who need many millions of dollars could work all week and be very rich, and people who need only one million dollars could work 1 hour and be rich.

But there is a problem. And the problem is something you learned in the third grade: anything times zero is zero. The cruel hoax of minimum wage laws is, by setting artificially high wages, it prevents people from getting their foot on the first rung of the economic ladder. It prevents them from getting into the most effective training program in history: on-the-job training.

I wonder, if we had the kind of minimum wage that the Senator from Massachusetts is talking about when I was out trying to get jobs—jobs with the Tom Houston Peanut Company, throwing the Columbus Ledger Inquirer and working for Kroger Grocery Store—I might have been protected right out of a job. I did not appear to have any skills, and in fact I did not have any skills.

But I learned great things in those jobs. The most important skill that I acquired was the knowledge that I did not want to do those things for a living.

So we would certainly love to hear about this. My colleague is here from Utah. I think he would like to have something to say about it. But we would be perfectly willing to debate this subject tonight at any length that the Senator from Massachusetts would like to talk about it.

But at the end of the talk, we want action. And the action we want is passing this trade bill because it is going to create new jobs at high wages, with great futures. It is going to share the American dream with more people than have ever had it before, with people who missed it the first time around. We are excited about it. And it is going to happen since we have a certain amount of time that has to run off the clock now. So if people want to debate minimum wage, we do not object to debating it. We just want to deal with this trade bill first because we believe it will do more good.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRAMM. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. Well, the Senator, as I understand from his comments, is prepared to debate it, but he is going to object to any consideration to give the Senate of the United States an opportunity to act on it prior to the July recess, as I understand it.

Am I correct in understanding the Senator's position, that he would welcome the discussion and debate, but he objects to any action on the bill—the Senator was glad to ensure that there was going to be voting on the questions of the trade bill in support for the cloture earlier today to make sure we were going to vote on a trade bill. But, as I understand the Senator's position, he objected to the majority leader's request to permit the Senate to vote on the issue of the minimum wage?

Mr. GRAMM. Reclaiming my time, let me say his problem is not with me but with the fact that we are on a trade bill of which almost 70 Members of the Senate voted for cloture, saying they want to get on with passing this trade bill to create more jobs, more growth, more opportunities.

The Senator has proposed a measure which we have never seen, that he has never filed, that is not on the calendar, that is not relevant or germane. We are being asked to waive the rules of the Senate and delay the creation of new jobs from trade for an amendment that is not in order today.

Mr. KENNEDY. If the Senator will yield for a point, this is not being offered as an amendment. It is just a unanimous consent request. We take action on it later on in the session. It was not an attempt to offer it as an amendment tonight.

Mr. GRAMM. Let me say that——

Mr. KENNEDY. But I understand the Senator has objected to that as well.

Mr. GRAMM. We are in the minority here. You control the flow of legislation. I don't understand why you are asking us for permission to bring up bills. All I know is we are here trying to pass a trade bill, and you are talking about another subject. The point I was making is that thanks to the wisdom of our Members, we now have some—how many hours do we have postcloture?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Twenty-three hours.

Mr. GRAMM. Twenty-two hours?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Twenty-three hours.

Mr. GRAMM. Twenty-three hours. So we have ample time, if the Senator wants to talk about this issue, to do it. I know the Senator from Utah wants to say a word about it.

So I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Texas. I would say to the Senator from Massachusetts if he were still in the Chamber, I would be happy to take action on his bill. The action I would seek to take would be to kill it. That is effectively what we have done with our objection. But if the Senator from Massachusetts can get the majority leader to bring it up in another place, I will be happy to vote to kill it in that place, too.

I do so not because I am hardhearted, not because I think the people who are at the bottom of the economic ladder don't need help, not because I want to hurt them, but because I want to help them. I have often said that if I could control what we carve in marble around here, along with the Latin mottos and the other statements we have, we should probably have before us at all times the statement: You cannot repeal the law of supply and demand.

We keep trying in government to repeal the law of supply and demand. We keep trying to set prices or wages at a level different than the market. Well, I don't have the Ph.D. degree in economics my friend from Texas has, but I learned in Economics I that when government sets a price different from where the market would set it, you get one of two things: either a shortage or a surplus. If government sets the price on a commodity and says, this is what we will pay for this commodity because everybody ought to have access to it, and they set the price by law too low, you get a shortage of that commodity because no one wants to produce it at that artificially low price.

We have seen that. Remember when there was price control on natural gas and there was an insufficient supply of natural gas. You got a shortage. When Ronald Reagan became President, he said: We are going to remove price controls on natural gas, and many people—I was not in the Chamber so I can't tell you whether there are some who are still here who were there at the time—said: Without price regulation, the price of natural gas will go through the roof.

Guess what happened. When we removed the artificial restraint on the price of natural gas, it went up temporarily enough to get a lot of people producing natural gas, and then it came down, ironically, to a price below the price the Government had set, once the market forces took over and people started producing natural gas. You can get a shortage or you can get a surplus.

I remember when my father was on the Banking Committee and the Government set the price of silver for silver coinage. It was higher than the market would pay for silver, and the Government stockpile of silver got bigger and bigger and bigger because people were producing silver, not for the market but for the Government, at an artificially high price.

What does that have to do with the minimum wage? Simply this: If you set the price of unskilled labor by Government fiat at a place where the market would not put it, you are going to create a shortage of jobs. If Government guarantees a price of labor higher than the market, you will get a surplus of people applying for those jobs. It is as simple and as inexorable as that. You cannot repeal the law of supply and demand.

What segment of our economy has the highest level of unemployment? It is the inner cities, among African-American males of teen age. They have the highest level of unemployment of any group measure in the country. Why? Because jobs in the inner city for teenagers who don't have skills have been priced out of the market by minimum wage legislation.

The Senator from Texas talked about his first experience. I went to work at 50 cents an hour when I was 14 years old, and I had the same kind of experience the Senator did. I didn't need the money, but I certainly needed the experience. It taught me the necessity of showing up on time. It taught me the necessity of being dependable, of doing the kinds of things my supervisor wanted me to do whether I wanted to do them or not. It got me involved in a way that I have found valuable all the rest of my life.

If the minimum wage, which was 40 cents an hour at the time—so I was above the minimum wage by 10 cents—had been raised to 65 cents an hour, I would have lost my job. I wasn't worth 65 cents an hour to my employer. Frankly, I was barely worth 50. I would have lost my job.

I cannot understand why some people insist that the poor are better off unemployed at a high rate than working at a slightly lower rate. But that is what we have; that is where we are.

We are talking about this trade bill. We are saying it will help the American economy. At the time when the economy was doing perhaps its best, during the 1990s, and Alan Greenspan came before the Banking Committee, a Senator asked him: In these boom times, Mr. Chairman, who is benefiting the most from America's prosperity?

I could tell by the way the Senator framed the question that he expected Greenspan to say "the people at the top" because the Senator was particularly concerned about what he considered to be an improper gap between the people at the top and the people at the bottom, and he was going to use Greenspan's answer to make a case for raising the minimum wage: The people at the top have gotten well, the people at the top have gotten fat in this time of great economic prosperity; it is the people at the bottom we need to help.

I could tell that was the attitude of the Senator as he asked the question. He was disappointed in Greenspan's answer. Greenspan replied: Unquestionably, Senator, it is the people at the bottom who have benefited from this economic boom.

My memory tells me he said the bottom fifth because, being an economist, he always has to quantify everything. So it was the people in the bottom quintile, to use an economist's phrase, who had benefited the most from the economic boom.

Then the dialog went back and forth between Chairman Greenspan and the Senator, with the Senator saying: Yes, but the people at the top have gotten these enormous financial rewards by virtue of the good economy.

Chairman Greenspan said: Yes, that is true, if you measure the benefit solely in dollars. However, if you measure the benefit in terms of life impact, the people at the bottom, who have had a 40-, 50-, 60-percent blessing in their lives by virtue of the fact that the economy is creating jobs for them, their life has been impacted far more than a millionaire who was at $2 million net worth and then saw his net worth go to $3 million. His lifestyle doesn't change much. His life circumstances don't change, if at all. He has more money to invest, and we hope he invests it in a way that will further stimulate the economy, but in terms of what happens in his life, nothing really changes by virtue of his increase in net worth. But someone who could not get a job or who couldn't see his job increase because the economy was flat, now in these times of prosperity can get a job and can see his opportunities increase.

I remember in those times when I talked to employers in the State of Utah and I would ask them: What is your biggest problem?

They said: We can't find anybody to hire. The economy is so good that everybody can get a job.

I had one employer say to me: We will hold a mass job interview. We will advertise in the paper, and 15 or 20 people come in to listen to our pitch as to why they should come to work for us. We will start through our explanation of what this job is, and half of them will get up and walk out because they know they can walk down the street and hear somebody else's pitch and they can pick and choose. Our problem is, because the economy is so good and there are so many jobs, we are having hard times even filling the entry-level jobs.

Right now, the economy is not so good. Right now, we don't have employers who are complaining about that problem. And right now is not the time to artificially price those entry-level jobs out of the market by attempting to repeal the law of supply and demand.

Who will get hurt the most by an increase in the minimum wage? Ross Perot won't get hurt. Donald Trump won't get hurt. The people at the top won't be affected one way or the other. It is the person who is working for today's minimum wage, whose economic benefit to his employer would not justify the proposed minimum wage, who gets laid off. That is who gets hurt. It is the people at the bottom whom we are trying to help, who will, ironically, suffer the most if the minimum wage goes through.

I can take you to employers in my State who laid people off the last time the minimum wage went up. Employers said: I simply cannot justify it anymore. I would like to pay them, I would like to have them working for me. But, frankly, the economic return I get from them is not worth it when the minimum wage goes up. I am going to lay them off. I can get the same job done with mechanization or some other device, or I can simply do without it in my business. It is just not worth it to me to pay that much.

So those people walked off the job into the unemployment lines, with the cold comfort that their nominal rate was now 50 cents or 75 cents higher than it had been. They were not collecting it, but at least they had the warm feeling of knowing the Government determined that was what they were worth.

The market determines who gets hired. The market determines who gets paid. We cannot repeal the law of supply and demand.

So I say again, the Senator from Massachusetts says he wants action on this bill and he is disturbed that we are not willing to take action. I would be willing to take action, and the action I would want to take for the benefit of the people at the bottom, for the benefit of the African-American teenagers in inner cities who cannot get work, for the benefit of those who are just trying to start out, would be to say let's kill this bill, let's take care of the people at the bottom the best way we can, but one of the things we should not do is price their jobs out of the market and put them in the unemployment lines.

I yield the floor.

ANDEAN TRADE PREFERENCE EXPANSION ACT—Continued

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada is recognized.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, what is the matter now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Amendment No. 3433.

Mr. REID. Is that the Reed of Rhode Island amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

AMENDMENTS NOS. 3456, 3457, 3431, AND 3432 WITHDRAWN

Mr. REID. Mr. President, on behalf of Senators DURBIN and BOXER, I ask unanimous consent that the following amendments be withdrawn: Amendments Nos. 3456, 3457, 3431, and 3432.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GRAMM. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President, I am sorry, we were having a conference in the cloakroom and I didn't hear.

Mr. REID. Four amendments are being withdrawn.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, not only do I not object, I concur.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3443

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I make a point of order against the Reed of Rhode Island amendment, No. 3443, that it is not properly drafted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is well taken, and the amendment falls.

AMENDMENT NO. 3447

Mr. REID. Mr. President, it is my understanding that the next matter in order is the Byrd amendment No. 3447; is that right?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. The amendment is now pending.

AMENDMENT NO. 3527 TO AMENDMENT NO. 3447

Mr. REID. Mr. President I call up amendment No. 3527, a second-degree amendment to the Byrd amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the second-degree amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. REID], for Mr. HOLLINGS, proposes an amendment numbered 3527 to Amendment No. 3447.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(Purpose: To provide for the certification of textile and apparel workers who lose their jobs or who have lost their jobs since the start of 1999 as eligible individuals for purposes of trade adjustment assistance and health insurance benefits)

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

SEC. . TRADE ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE AND HEALTH BENEFITS FOR TEXTILE AND APPAREL WORKERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—An individual employed in the textile or apparel industry before the date of enactment of this Act who, after December 31, 1998—

(1) lost, or loses, his or her job (other than by termination for cause); and

(2) has not been re-employed in that industry, is deemed to be eligible for adjustment assistance under subchapter A of chapter 2 of title II of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2271 et seq.).

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—This section takes effect on the day after the date of enactment of this Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, what is the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Amendment No. 3527 to amendment No. 3447.

Mr. BYRD. Is amendment No. 3447 my amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BYRD. The pending amendment is the second-degree amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I will speak on the first-degree amendment.

Mr. President, there can be little doubt that the various agencies of the executive branch are increasingly in the driver's seat on the important matter of trade. Meanwhile, the Congress and the American people are merely being brought along for the ride.

There are many reasons for this growing inequity, not the least of which is the willingness—at times, in fact, the eagerness—of this body to give us its rights and responsibilities under the Constitution. The Constitution mandates to the legislative branch—the people's branch—authority over foreign trade matters. It cannot, however, force the institution to exercise this authority and assert itself in trade matters. That requires the will of the Members. The lessons we have learned from our most recent experiences with trade agreements should be incentive enough for us to insist on our rights with regard to trade matters. We, after all, represent communities that have lost businesses to other countries and families who have lost their jobs to foreign firms.

Yet here we are, once again, considering a measure that further ties the hands of the members of this institution in the area of trade. Perhaps even worse, we are continuing a trend of blinding ourselves to the details of the trade agreements on which we must ultimately vote. It is almost as if we don't want to know.

At the very least, we should do more to lift the veil on trade negotiations so that we have some idea as to what it is this Nation is signing up to when the agreements go into effect. But to do so we need to establish the means for Members to participate more broadly, and in more detail, in important trade negotiations, as well as to carry out the important oversight functions that our complex trade laws require.

The fast track bill now before the Senate opens that door. The bill establishes the Congressional Oversight Group to serve as an official adviser to the U.S. Trade Representative on matters that include the formulation of specific trade objectives and negotiating strategies, the development of new trade agreements, and the enforcement of existing trade agreements.

The establishment of the Congressional Oversight Group is intended to help the legislative branch play a more substantial role in trade negotiations, but as laid out in this legislation it does not go quite far enough.

As established by the bill, the Congressional Oversight Group will be comprised of five Senators, each of whom must serve on the Finance Committee, five Members of the House of Representatives, each of whom must serve on the Ways and Means Committee, and, on an ad hoc basis, the chairman and ranking members of the various committees of the House and Senate that would have jurisdiction over provisions in the trade agreement that is under negotiation. This select group, of perhaps as few as 10 Members of Congress, would then be given the authority, under law, to advise the U.S. Trade Representative on important matters of international commerce. Choosing members of the Finance and Ways and Means Committees was a logical move on the part of the authors of this provision. These are committees with, perhaps, the greatest degree of expertise in trade matters. But our trade negotiators, and the American people, should have the greater benefit of the breadth of expertise that can be offered by a more diverse representation of the Congress.

Mr. President, in some respects, the Senate has already gone over this territory. We have the National Security Working Group to assist the Foreign Relations Committee and the Armed Services Committee with reviewing important arms control agreements. The National Security Working Group is not a replacement for those committees, but it is a useful back channel between the legislative and executive branches during the early stages of arms control negotiations, just as the Congressional Oversight Group is intended to do for trade negotiations. But the National Security Working Group has functioned well because its membership is not limited to those Senators who serve on the committees of jurisdiction. The National Security Working Group has 20 members, eight of whom serve on neither the Armed Services Committee nor the Foreign Relations Committee. Indeed, one of the group's greatest strengths is that it draws its membership from the whole Senate, rather than just one committee.

The amendment I offer expands the Congressional Oversight Group to 22 members, selected from the membership of the Senate and the House of Representatives who do not serve on the Finance Committee in the Senate or the Ways and Means Committee in the House. Just as with the National Security Working Group, the leadership of each House of Congress will serve on this panel. In addition, the leadership of each House will select eight additional members to complete the Congressional Oversight Group. It also authorizes expenses for Senate staff, so that the group can follow the negotiations of trade agreements on a full-time basis, not just as the schedules of the members of the group allow.

The changes that I propose to the composition of the Congressional Oversight Group as established in the fast-track bill do not in any way detract from the consultations between the administration and the congressional committees of jurisdiction. The Trade Act of 1974 established a process for consultation between the congressional committees of jurisdiction and the executive branch. At the beginning of each Congress, the President pro tempore of the Senate is directed to appoint, after consultation with the chairman of the Finance Committee, five members of that committee to work with the U.S. Trade Representative during the negotiation of trade agreements. The Speaker of the House is also directed to make appointments for members of the House committees of jurisdiction to serve in the same advisory role.

The U.S. Trade Representative is directed to keep these congressional advisors "currently informed on the trade policy of the United States," and make these advisors aware of any proposed changes to our trade policy. This is the mechanism by which the members of the committees of jurisdiction can remain informed of the progress in negotiating fast-track agreements.

My amendment prevents the Congressional Oversight Group from being a redundant entity, as it currently is configured in the fast-track bill, and expands it to include a broader group of members of Congress in both Houses who are interested in trade, but do not serve on the Finance Committee or the Ways and Means Committee. The amendment does not elevate the Congressional Oversight Group above the status of the committees of jurisdiction on trade matters. In fact, my amendment specifically directs that any meetings that are open to the Congressional Oversight Group shall also be open to congressional advisers for trade policy.

Because trade agreements encompass so many issues, including labor protections and environmental standards, as well as adjustments to our own trade rules, all committees with jurisdiction should be fully consulted at all stages of negotiations on a new trade agreement. But many Senators who do not serve on the committees of jurisdiction also have great interest in our trade laws and they can offer significant contributions. These Senators should have the opportunity to receive similar consultations. The Congressional Oversight Group, as laid out by my amendment, would allow these Senators with an interest in trade matters to be fully informed of the progress of negotiations.

The fast-track procedure for considering trade bills turns the legislative process on its head. It forbids Senators from offering amendments, even for the purpose of clarifying the intent of the agreement in question. The fast-track procedures limit the time that a trade agreement could be debated, as if Senators should not be given the time to learn what is really in the agreement.

In that case, the only Senators who would really know what a trade agreement does, and why it needs to be done, are those Senators who participate during the negotiation of those agreements. Right now, only five Senators have been appointed to be congressional trade advisors to the U.S. Trade Representative, and every one of those Senators serves on the Committee on Finance. It is all well and good to draw upon the expertise of the members of the Finance Committee, but what about the rest of us?

At what point will we, who do not serve on the Finance Committee, be made aware of the progress of trade negotiations? When will those Members of the Senate who are not on the committees of jurisdiction have an opportunity to see that the interests of our States are protected by a trade agreement? Is it when the agreement is signed, sealed, and delivered to Congress for an up-or-down vote? Or are we, as the elected representatives of the people, entitled to have our input on these trade agreements while there is still an opportunity to do so?

In an increasingly global marketplace, the ramifications of trade negotiations are undoubtedly reaching into the smallest crevices of our economy. The types of industries, the numbers of businesses, and every American's everyday concerns that are being impacted by foreign trade are real and constantly growing. The consultation of a broader number of Senators on potential trade agreements will more adequately and appropriately address the pervasive influence of foreign trade on America today. My amendment to change the composition of the Congressional Oversight Group will help end the exclusive nature of trade consultations. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. DORGAN. I wonder if the Senator from West Virginia will yield for a question.

Mr. BYRD. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. DORGAN. First, I ask unanimous consent that I be added as a cosponsor to this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. CANTWELL). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DORGAN. Madam President, the Senator from West Virginia has offered a very sound proposal to this so-called fast-track legislation. I was wondering if the Senator from West Virginia, who has been in this Chamber a long while, knows of circumstances where other things have been given "fast track" treatment in ways that help ordinary folks.

Has the Senator from West Virginia been aware of circumstances where, for example, legislation that affects ordinary Americans is given fast-track authority to be considered here?

Mr. BYRD. No, no.

Mr. DORGAN. How about the disputes against unfair foreign trade practices that the steel industry raises or that family farmers or textile manufacturers raise—do the disputes they deem they need to bring because they are victims of unfair trade get fast-tracked or do they get slow-tracked?

Mr. BYRD. No, they get slow-tracked.

Mr. DORGAN. I wonder if the Senator will agree that, while fast track is making new agreements and shoving them through the Congress with no amendments, efforts to correct the problems in trade that are faced by so many American workers and so many businesses cannot get any action, let alone slow-track; they get no movement at all. Is that not the case?

Mr. BYRD. That is the case, precisely.

Mr. DORGAN. Madam President, it is ever more important that the Senator's amendment be approved. To the extent Congress is going to provide so-called fast-track authority, we need people looking over the shoulders of those who are going to negotiate these trade agreements.

I was in a room in Montreal when the United States-Canada Free Trade Agreement was negotiated. It did not do much good, frankly. I went there and heard what the negotiator had to tell us, but it was not part of the negotiations. When I got back here, I discovered that which was negotiated behind the scenes in a secret agreement did not come out until 2 years later, much to the detriment of American farmers.

Senator BYRD is on the right track saying if fast track is going to happen—and I do not support fast track—but if it is going to happen, in future negotiations, let's have more people looking over the shoulders of those who are negotiating on behalf of our country.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. DAYTON. Madam President, I rise as a cosponsor of Senator BYRD's amendment, and I wish to express my support for this amendment, if my voice will let me do so.

I am very proud to be a cosponsor of this amendment. It is a very important improvement to this legislation. I particularly believe those who found the Dayton-Craig amendment to be anathema should look at this very closely, welcome it, and support it, as should all of my colleagues.

It does provide, as the Senator from North Dakota just said correctly, an ongoing involvement of the Members of both the House and the Senate in these negotiations. If we are going to be asked to approve these agreements on an expedited basis when they come to us, then I think it is essential we have this opportunity to participate.

The Byrd amendment provides us with a group, the staff, and resources necessary to make qualified judgments. That is an essential role if we are going to have a true partnership with the executive branch.

I note the Constitution of the United States, which the distinguished Senator from West Virginia knows so well, ascribes to the legislative branch the sole authority for governing trade negotiations and all aspects of trade. It does not mention the executive branch. Certainly that responsibility has been devolving to a shared relationship, but it is certainly not one this branch could responsibly cede nor would it want to cede.

I also point out that given the arrangements with the World Trade Organization, which is still expanding its breadth and its reach, once rules have been established by that body, it is my understanding they can only be changed by unanimous concurrence of all participating countries, which means that once this country has given up to the World Trade Organization any of the laws or the protections that have been established for the benefit of the American people, we cannot unilaterally take them back, which makes it even more important that the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia be passed to give the Congress that oversight and chance to anticipate ahead of time what the consequences are going to be of some of these decisions.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the distinguished Senator from Minnesota. I appreciate his willingness to cosponsor the amendment, and I value his association in the matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent the order for the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENTS NOS. 3448 AND 3449

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia controls 48 minutes.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair.

Madam President, I speak on amendments Nos. 3448 and 3449, which I offered earlier.

Madam President, for nearly 50 years I have worked to preserve the institutional integrity of the Senate and the House. Throughout this long period, I have repeatedly and consistently opposed exactly the type of fast-track provisions that are contained in this bill. During my decades in the Senate, I have staunchly opposed fast-track because I believe it improperly delegates to the Executive Branch unwarranted and excessive power over the regulation of foreign commerce. I have to say, however, that upon reviewing this bill, I find its provisions are some of the most offensive to date. This bill continues the sorry trend of giving the President carte blanche to determine what will be contained in a series of trade agreements, and—except for the provisions on trade remedies exempted by the Dayton-Craig amendment—deprives the Senate of any opportunity to amend these agreements in order to either improve their provisions or correct any deficiencies they may contain.

This bill impedes the ability of the Senate to enact a resolution of disapproval against a trade agreement that it finds objectionable. Although, at first glance, the bill appears to permit a Senator to introduce a resolution of disapproval rejecting a trade agreement that is brought back to the Senate by the President, the reality is that such a resolution most probably would never come to the floor of the Senate for a vote.

This is because the bill states that, once a resolution of disapproval is introduced and referred to the Senate Finance Committee, it will not be in order for the full Senate to consider the resolution if it has not been reported by that committee. In other words, a disapproval resolution cannot be forced to the floor through a discharge of the Senate Finance Committee. The way this bill is currently written, if a resolution of disapproval is not reported out of the Senate Finance Committee, it might as well never have been introduced. The resolution simply languishes, and languishes, and languishes, and languishes.

This means that, so long as the Senate Finance Committee endorses the President's agreement, the views of the rest of the Senate are irrelevant. Enacting fast-track in this bill not only provides the President with unfettered authority to negotiate trade agreements, it also prevents the Senate from exercising its constitutional responsibility to reject or modify trade agreements that are not in the best interests of the American people.

The Constitution in Article 1, Section 8, not only provides Congress with the power to "lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts and excises" and to "regulate commerce with foreign nations," but it also gives the Congress the authority to enact all legislation that "shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers." This authority of the Congress to enact or to refuse to enact legislation applies specifically to the trade agreements that the President seeks to negotiate under fast-track.

It is imperative that every Senator retain his or her right to introduce a resolution of disapproval that can be considered in the light of day by the full Senate. The rules of the Senate exist not only to protect the rights of its Members. In fact, it should be said that the rules and procedures exist to protect the rights of the people. This body is uniquely structured to provide a voice and power to the minority. I repeat, the minority. And I remind my colleagues in this Chamber that a minority can be right. The rules of this body, in fact, provide each individual member with leverage, and each of us has a stake in ensuring that these rules are respected, and that procedural changes of this type are only undertaken with great care and thoughtfulness.

To this end, I am introducing two amendments to require that, upon introduction, any resolution of disapproval—including an extension resolution of disapproval—will be referred not only to the Senate Committee on Finance, but also to the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration. After all, it is the Rules Committee that is charged with making the rules and procedures that govern this institution, and its expertise is essential to guarantee that the commitments undertaken by our trading partners in the trade agreements we negotiate are enforceable under U.S. law.

Under these amendments, each of these committees will be required to report the resolution of disapproval that has been referred to it within 10 days of the date of its introduction and, if either of these committees fails to report the resolution of disapproval within that time, either of these committees shall automatically be discharged from further consideration of the resolution. The resolution shall then be placed directly on the Senate Calendar. Once the disapproval resolution is placed on the Senate Calendar, any Senator may make a motion to proceed to consider that resolution, and the motion to consider the resolution shall not be debatable.

The language in this bill and its accompanying report prohibiting a resolution of disapproval from being discharged from the Finance Committee constitutes a sharp distortion of the Senate's rules that would dramatically impede the rights of the 79 Members of the Senate who happen not to serve on the Senate Finance Committee. In other words, almost four-fifths of the Senate will have no say regarding whether what the President has negotiated is right or wrong.

If enacted as currently written, this bill would effectively cut a majority of Senators out of the trade regulation process, preventing them from correcting sweeping changes in trade law that could unfairly affect the lives of their constituents who rely on the Senate to protect their interests. It is not as if Senators, in recent years, have had much of a say in trade matters. They have not. And what little voice they have had has been suppressed, if not silenced, on too many occasions by this gimmick called fast-track, a gimmick now renamed "trade promotion authority." This legislation goes beyond fast-track in its impairment of the Senate's prerogatives.

I cannot support surrendering the rights and prerogatives, the duties and responsibilities of the Senate to any president of any political party. We in the Congress have an obligation to strike down trade agreements that adversely affect the American people. But it is impossible for us to do so if we do not provide ourselves the opportunity to adequately review, debate, amend, or reject their provisions as we are rightly empowered to do under the Constitution of the United States. These amendments ensure that we retain the power to modify or reject trade agreements that are not in the best interests of the majority of the people of the United States and, in so doing, protect the economic well-being of the Nation and of the people we represent.

Madam President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. COCHRAN. Madam President, I support giving the President trade promotion authority, as the bill now before the Senate would do. It is essential that we work with President Bush to ensure that we break down barriers and promote the sale of U.S. goods and services and agricultural commodities in other countries.

Export markets are absolutely necessary to assure the profitability of American agriculture. America's farmers are producing more but exporting less.

Last year, exports of U.S. farm products amounted to just over $50 billion. That is a decrease from 5 years ago when we reached a high of $60 billion in foreign exports.

For our country to prosper, we must have access to foreign markets. These markets not only help farmers; they help create jobs in processing industries, as well as transportation.

Tariffs in other countries against our farm products are too high. They can be reduced through aggressive negotiation by our President. The tariff on U.S. agricultural products averages over 60 percent compared to under 5 percent on other domestic goods. If the President had the authority to negotiate international trade agreements, farm receipts would go up and not down as has been our recent experience.

One out of every three acres planted by farmers across America is intended for export. But because we aren't selling all we produce, commodity prices are going down, and the agricultural sector is having a very hard time making ends meet.

One of my State's biggest exports is poultry. The Mississippi broiler industry, which is one of the largest in the Nation, accounts for 40 percent of all farm receipts in my State. That industry especially benefits from trade agreements that prohibit quotas and reduce tariffs.

As a result of breaking down trade barriers on poultry, my State's exports to the Philippines, for example, have risen over 600 percent. This is a clear reminder of the positive result we can obtain through free trade agreements.

Throughout the world, there are about 150 different trade agreements among other countries. The United States is only partner to three of them. For every market that is opened through country-to-country negotiations, an opportunity is lost for America.

I urge the Senate to approve this trade promotion authority legislation.

I yield the floor. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DAYTON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 3543 TO AMENDMENT NO. 3401

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that it be in order at this point that I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of myself and Senator VOINOVICH, an amendment to the Baucus substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN], for himself and Mr. VOINOVICH, proposes an amendment numbered 3543 to amendment No. 3401.

On page 228, line 21, insert after "exports" the following: "(including motor vehicles and vehicle parts)".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I offer an amendment with Senator VOINOVICH, my fellow co-chair of the Senate Auto Caucus and Senator STABENOW. Our amendment would include in one of the listed principal negotiating objectives of the United States to reduce trade barriers in other countries to U.S. motor vehicles and vehicle parts. Increasing access for our products to markets which are closed or partially closed to us surely should be the objective of all of us.

Other countries have full access to our market for their autos and auto parts. The fast track provision we are considering makes it a principal negotiating objective to expand trade and reduce barriers for trade in services, foreign investment, intellectual property, electronic commerce, and agriculture, and other sectors. Yet the biggest portion of our trade deficit is in autos. In 2001, our automotive deficit made up over 31 percent of our total trade deficit with the world. In 2001, our automotive deficit was 59 percent of our total trade deficit with Japan and 53 percent of our total deficit with Korea.

No omnibus trade bill should leave the Senate without addressing barriers to our products which are the largest contributors to our trade deficit. We can start by making opening foreign markets for U.S. automotive products one of our principal negotiating objectives.

America's domestic auto industry is the largest manufacturing industry in the United States. The domestic auto industry alone contributes almost 4 percent to the total U.S. Gross Domestic Products. Our domestic auto manufacturers operate 52 manufacturing and assembly facilities in 19 states around the country, and when auto parts manufacturers are included, there is an automotive manufacturing presence in almost every state. The Big 3 automakers directly employ over 500,000 people in automotive-related jobs in the U.S. That number grows by an additional 2 million jobs when you count automotive suppliers and other related industries.

The auto industry is also a hi-tech manufacturing industry. It is one of the largest users of computers and the advanced technologies. It also spends nearly $20 billion annually on research and development, more than any other industrial sector in America. The U.S. auto industry contributes mightily to our economic well being. Yet we continue to neglect it when it comes to insisting on fair market access for exports of autos and auto parts.

The U.S. passenger vehicle market is the most open and competitive in the world. But when we go to sell our autos and auto parts in foreign markets, we face significant trade restrictions. Some of the most egregious practitioners of unfair trade in autos and auto parts are Japan and Korea. The sale of American vehicles and auto parts in Japan has been blocked by protectionist measures such as government regulations dealing with vehicle certification, inspection, and repair. In Korea, restrictions include a tax system that discriminates against imported vehicles by making them prohibitively expensive, discriminatory practices such as labeling foreign vehicles as "luxury goods," and the perception that the purchase of a foreign vehicle will trigger a tax audit.

Since 1990, the U.S. automotive trade deficit with Japan has averaged 55 percent of our total trade deficit with Japan. A 5 year market opening agreement in autos and auto parts that was largely a failure. The U.S. automotive trade deficit with Korea has grown significantly since 1995 despite two automotive market opening agreements with Korea.

Japan and Korea want it both ways. They want to keep a sanctuary automotive home market that is protected from competition while they export a significant portion of production to the United States.

We have been trying to open Japan's automotive markets for decades to no avail. In the mid-1980's we engaged in 8 years of Market Oriented Sector Specific, MOSS, talks with Japan to try to open Japan's auto parts market. During that time, our auto parts deficit with Japan rose from $3.3 billion in 1985 to nearly $11 billion in 1992 despite modest increases in sales by U.S. parts makers to the Japanese. The MOSS talks were followed by Framework talks in autos and auto parts which led to a 1995 U.S.-Japan Automotive Trade Agreement with the goal of increasing market access in Japan for U.S. autos and auto parts. That goal has not been achieved. Despite that fact, the Administration has allowed the Agreement to expire. Meanwhile, the U.S. trade deficit with Japan in autos and auto parts has gotten worse. The auto and auto parts trade deficit was $32.9 billion in 1995. By the end of 2000 when the Agreement was allowed to expire, it was $44.2 billion, more than 60 percent of the overall U.S. trade deficit with Japan and 10 percent of the worldwide U.S. trade deficit.

The U.S. government, in its annual Trade Barriers Report, acknowledges that it is disappointed with the access of North American-made vehicles and parts to Japan.

When it comes to automotive trade between the United States and Korea, the numbers speak for themselves. South Korea has the most closed market for imported cars and trucks in the developed world. While foreign vehicles account for only ½ of one percent of its total vehicle market, Korea depends on open markets in other countries to absorb its auto exports. Korea exports half of all the passenger vehicles it produces, with many of those vehicles coming to the U.S. Last year, Korea imported only 7,747 vehicles from the United States and exported over 600,000 to our country.

This imbalance exists despite two separate automotive trade agreements between the United States and Korea which were supposed to open Korea's market: the first in 1995 and the second in 1998. This imbalance is unfair to America and its workers and only threatens to get worse if we do not act immediately.

The amendment Senator VOINOVICH and I have introduced attempts to address the gross inequities in market access for U.S. autos and auto parts among some of our major trading partners. Our amendment would make market access for motor vehicles and vehicle parts a principal negotiating objective of the Untied States. The underlying bill includes 14 principal negotiating objectives and the Senate voted overwhelmingly to add textiles to that list. Since autos and auto parts are the largest part of our deficit, it is unacceptable that foreign trade barriers that exclude U.S.-made passenger vehicles and auto parts from certain markets are allowed to exist. We must act to get rid of those barriers.

Our amendment would make it a principal negotiating objective to expand competitive market opportunities for U.S. motor vehicles and vehicle parts and to obtain fairer and more open conditions of trade by reducing or eliminating tariff and nontariff barriers.

The current trade situation in autos and auto parts is unfair to America. We simply want access—to compete—no guarantees, just access. Every nation in the world strives to have a successful automotive industry and fights for that industry. We should do the same. The nearly 2.5 million men and women working in our nation's largest manufacturing industry deserve nothing less.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate on the amendment? If not, without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The amendment (No. 3543) was agreed to.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LEVIN. If there is no one else who seeks recognition at this point—

Mr. GRASSLEY. I would like to have recognition on another matter, on the Byrd amendment.

Mr. LEVIN. If I may take 2 minutes.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Yes, go ahead.

I thank my friend, Senator GRASSLEY, for helping us to work out this matter. As always, he is a gentleman and is accommodating. Again, we are very grateful for the effort he made to make this possible.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 3447

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, is the regular order the Byrd amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is the Hollings second-degree amendment to the Byrd amendment.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Would I be in order to speak on the Byrd underlying amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I am strongly opposed to this amendment, for two reasons.

First, the amendment would disrupt the bipartisan balance we achieved in the Finance Committee on Trade Promotion Authority. Republicans and Democrats looked carefully at all the issues, especially the issues relating to Congressional notification and consultation, and approved a bill that, overall, goes farther in terms of congressional oversight and consultation than we have ever gone in fast-rack legislation.

The second reason I oppose this amendment is that it would essentially strip the Finance Committee of much of its traditional authority and jurisdiction over the trade policy oversight function.

According to this proposed provision, none of the proposed eight members of the Congressional Oversight Group may be members of the Senate Finance Committee.

Under this amendment, more than twenty percent of the Senate would be shut out from direct oversight of how trade negotiations subject to fast-track procedures are being conducted.

In that regard, this is a very radical amendment.

It strikes me as extremely unusual, to say the very least, that the Finance Committee, which wrote and passed the bipartisan trade promotion authority bill in the first place, would be given almost no role whatever in the oversight process once trade promotion authority becomes law.

I say almost no role, because some Finance Committee members—those few who are congressional advisers for trade policy—would apparently have some limited role, in that the cochairmen of the Congressional Oversight Group are required to meet with them "regularly".

Mr. President, this is not the way that oversight of trade policy should be conducted.

I don't believe that any member of a Senate Committee—especially the Finance Committee—should be automatically excluded from the entity that the Senate establishes to review and monitor trade negotiations.

But that is exactly what this amendment does.

Do the proponents of this amendment mean that we can't trust Members of the Finance Committee to do the job the jurisdiction of their committee confers on them?

It appears that is exactly what this means.

This is not just bad policy.

Specifically excluding Senators from serving in any oversight capacity would also set a terrible precedent.

The congressional oversight process that Senator BAUCUS and I designed in the bipartisan trade promotion authority bill is a good one, and it should be preserved.

Mr. President, I strongly urge my colleagues to reject this amendment.

I yield the floor and suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, hopefully, tomorrow, after a few rollcall votes on a few remaining amendments, we are going to have an opportunity to pass this bipartisan trade promotion authority act of 2002. I would like to address the issue of the bill for a few minutes while we are waiting for final action by the Senate on how we proceed tomorrow.

This bill provides the President with the flexibility he needs to negotiate strong international trade agreements on behalf of U.S. workers and farmers while maintaining Congress's constitutional role over U.S. trade policy. It represents a thoughtful approach to addressing the complex relationships between international trade, workers' rights, and the environment, without undermining the fundamental purpose and proven effectiveness of trade promotion authority procedures.

Specifically, this bipartisan act gives the administration the authority to negotiate and bring back trade agreements to Congress that will eliminate and reduce trade barriers relating to manufacturing, services, agriculture, intellectual property, investment, and e-commerce.

The legislation supports eliminating subsidies that decrease market opportunities for U.S. agriculture or unfairly distort markets to the detriment of the United States, with special emphasis on biotechnology, ending unjustified barriers not based on sound science, and fair treatment for import-sensitive agriculture.

The legislation preserves U.S. sovereignty while engaging new trade agreements that will create solid economic growth, improve efficiency and innovation, create better, high-paying jobs for hard-working Americans that on average pay 15 percent above the average wage, and increases the availability of attractively priced products into the U.S. market for the benefit of our consumers.

The legislation adds a trade negotiating objective on labor and the environment—very important provisions for many Members of this body. This is done to ensure that a party to a trade agreement does not fail to effectively enforce its labor and environmental laws through a sustained or recurring course of action or inaction, recognizing a government retains certain discretion.

It strengthens, under the labor and environmental provisions, the capacity to promote respect for core labor standards and to protect the environment, to reduce or eliminate government practices or policies that unduly threaten sustainable development, and it seeks market access for U.S. environmental technologies, goods, and services.

The legislation adds a new negotiating objective on enforcement, giving labor and environment disputes covered by the agreement parity with other issues in the trade agreement.

It sets forth other Presidential priorities not covered by trade promotion authority, including greater cooperation between the World Trade Organization on the one hand, and the International Labor Organization on the other hand, and consultative mechanisms among parties to trade agreements to strengthen the capacity of U.S. trading partners to promote respect for core labor standards and the environment, technical assistance on labor issues, and reporting on the child labor laws of U.S. trading partners.

The legislation directs the President to take into account legitimate health, safety, essential security, and consumer interests. It directs the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative to preserve our ability to enforce vigorously U.S. trade remedy laws and avoid agreements which lessen the effectiveness of U.S. antidumping or countervailing duty laws.

The legislation contains negotiating objectives on investment to increase transparency for the dispute settlement process, calls for standards of expropriation and compensation that are consistent with U.S. legal principles and practice, and eliminates frivolous claims.

The bill expands and improves consultations between the administration and Congress before, during, and after trade negotiations and particularly in the development of implementing legislation.

The Bipartisan Trade Promotion Assistance Act provides trade promotion authority until June 1, 2005, with a possibility of a 2-year extension. I point this out because there is a misunderstanding that Congress is going to give all of its power to the President. We have the consultation I talked about. Most importantly, whatever is agreed to by the President has to be passed by Congress as a law before any agreement can become effective. But we also do not give this power away to the President forever. This is the year 2002, almost June 1. So we are talking about the next 3 years with the possibility of a 2-year extension.

I happen to believe we ought to have standing trade negotiation authority for the President, and we should not have these lapses that we have had since 1994, but obviously the extent to which we give it for shorter periods of time ought to satisfy more Members of this body that we are not giving up our congressional power, which is a specific grant in our Constitution that Congress shall regulate interstate and foreign commerce.

The Bipartisan Trade Promotion Authority Act also contains unprecedented procedures that ensure prompt, meaningful, and extensive consultations with the Congress throughout the negotiating process. In other words, Members of this body and the other body are going to have ample opportunity while the President is doing all this negotiating to have reports given to us, feedback and, obviously, if Congress has to pass a final product, the President, in negotiating a position for the United States, is going to have to take into consideration the views of Members of Congress if the President wants to reach an agreement that will eventually pass by a majority vote in both the House and Senate.

In regard to this negotiation process and consultation therein, the bill establishes a congressional oversight group which is a broad-based, bipartisan, and permanent institution to be accredited as though official advisers to the U.S. delegation to consult with the U.S. Trade Representative and provide advice regarding formulation of specific objectives, negotiation strategies and positions, and development of the final trade agreement.

This congressional oversight group would maximize bipartisanship and input from Members from a broad range of committees comprising the chairman and ranking member of the Ways and Means Committee, three additional committee members, and also the chairman and ranking member, and their designees, of each committee with a jurisdiction over any law affected by trade agreements being negotiated.

The Bipartisan Trade Promotion Assistance Act also requires development of a written plan by the U.S. Trade Representative for consulting with Congress throughout the negotiations. That plan must include provisions for regular and detailed briefings of the congressional oversight group throughout the negotiations, access to documents relating to negotiations by members of the congressional oversight group, and their designated staffs. There would be very close cooperation between the congressional oversight group and the U.S. Trade Representative at all critical periods of the negotiations, including at negotiation sites, after the agreement is concluded, consultations regarding ongoing compliance and enforcement of commitments under the agreement, and finally, transmittal of a report by the Secretary of Commerce to Congress on U.S. strategy for correcting World Trade Organization dispute settlement reports that add to obligations or diminish rights of the United States.

It also provides that the President provide Congress with a written notice of intent to enter negotiations 90 days before initiating negotiations, or as soon as feasible after enactment of trade promotion authority; for negotiations already underway, including the intended date for entering negotiations, specific U.S. objectives and statement of whether seeking new agreements or changes in the existing agreement; and that the President and the U.S. Trade Representative consult with Congress before initiating or continuing negotiations on agricultural products, fish and shellfish trade, textiles and apparel products.

Before and after negotiations begin, the President and U.S. Trade Representative must consult with Congress regarding the negotiations, and particularly the U.S. Trade Representative must consult with all committees with jurisdiction over laws that would affect an agreement.

Before and after negotiations begin, if a majority of the members of the Congressional Oversight Committee request a meeting, the President himself must meet with the group regarding the negotiations.

I have used the word "consult" many times. It is all reflected in the legislation that Congress is very carefully guarding its constitutional power to regulate foreign and interstate commerce, and we are having a contract with the President of the United States, but that contract is not a blank check to the President of the United States. He keeps in constant touch with us as the words "consulting" and "consultation" and "consult" imply, legally binding that he do that.

So I hope it is very clear we are not willy-nilly delegating some power to the President. Not at all. We are going to be a part of this process.

Now, people might ask why, if Congress is going to be a part of the process, are we having this contract with the President to negotiate for us? It is because of the impossibility, and it ought to be very obvious, 535 Members of Congress not having the ability to be in Geneva or someplace else negotiating with 142 other countries on the issue of some trade agreement. So we ask the President to do it.

I hope the emphasis upon consulting and Congress demanding that the President sit down at certain points during this process indicates that, in fact, we are very selfishly guarding congressional responsibility.

There is another part of notice and consultation that is required before actually entering into final trade agreements by the President, before it is actually signed in other words, because immediately after initiating an agreement the U.S. Trade Representative must consult closely with appropriate congressional committees, including the congressional trade advisers, the congressional oversight group, and the House and Senate Committees on Agriculture.

The President is required, at least 90 days before entering an agreement, to formally notify Congress of his intent to enter into an agreement and publish notice of such intent in the Federal Register. At this time, the President must also notify the appropriate congressional committees of certain amendments proposed to be included in the implementing bill and then provide the International Trade Commission with details of the agreement so the ITC can prepare and submit an assessment of the likely impact of the agreement on the U.S. economy and specific industry sectors.

Before entering into an agreement, the President must consult with the appropriate congressional committees and the congressional oversight group regarding three matters: The nature of the agreement; the extent to which the agreement meets congressional objectives as outlined in the bill before Congress right now; and the implementation of that agreement.

Both Houses of Congress have the ability, in the final analysis, as we all know and as has been the practice for the last 25 years, to disapprove an agreement by passing separate disapproval resolutions if the administration fails or refuses to notify or consult with Congress in accordance with the bill that is before Congress right now that hopefully we will vote on tomorrow.

Another example of notice and consultation after a trade agreement is entered into: After the President signs it, as soon as practical after entering into an agreement, the President must submit a copy of the agreement to Congress along with statements or reasons that he had for entering into that agreement. The President is required, at least 60 days after entering an agreement, to submit to Congress a description of the changes to existing laws that would be needed to comply with the agreement.

The President is also required to submit to Congress the final text of the agreement and provide an explanation of how the bill implementing the agreement would change existing law, how the agreement makes progress at achieving the Trade Promotion Authority Act's objective, and also he must submit an implementation plan.

When that is all done, we then have to have notice and consultation on an ongoing basis. The President must report to the appropriate congressional committees on the mechanisms created among parties in the agreement to promote respect for core labor standards and to develop and implement sound environmental and health standards.

The President must also report on the required reviews of the impact of future trade agreements on the environment and U.S. employment. Congress may withdraw a trade promotion authority for failure to consult. Disapproval resolutions can be introduced by any Senator and may cover multiple agreements. Grounds for disapproval include failure to make progress in achieving the objectives that the bill has laid out.

Obviously, as I have stated before, none of this happens unless Congress gives approval by majority vote in both the House and the Senate to approve or disapprove these agreements negotiated under this bill that hopefully will pass tomorrow.

I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. REID. I ask unanimous consent that the time until 10:30 a.m., May 23d, tomorrow, count against the time provided under the cloture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to a period of morning business, with Senators allowed to speak therein for not to exceed 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BRIGADIER GENERAL STEPHEN G. WOOD, DEPUTY DIRECTOR, AIR FORCE LEGISLATIVE LIAISON

Mr. LOTT. Mr. President, I rise to pay tribute to an exceptional officer in the United States Air Force, an individual that a great many of us have come to know personally over the past few years—Brigadier General Stephen G. Wood. General Wood, who currently serves as Deputy Director of the Air Force Office of Legislative Liaison, was recently nominated for promotion to Major General and selected for assignment as Commander of the Air Warfare Center, Air Combat Command, at Nellis Air Force Base in Nevada. During his time in Washington, and especially with regard to his work here on Capitol Hill, General Wood personified the Air Force core values of integrity, selfless service and excellence in the many missions the Air Force performs in support of our national security. Many Members and staff have enjoyed the opportunity to meet with him on a variety of Air Force issues and came to deeply appreciate his character and many talents. Today it is my privilege to recognize some of General Wood's many accomplishments, and to commend the superb service he provided the Air Force, the Congress and our Nation.

General Wood entered the Air Force through the Reserve Officer Training Corps program at the University of Washington, Seattle. He served in various operational and staff assignments including duty as an F–4D pilot, AT–38 instructor pilot, F–16 weapons instructor and squadron operations officer. A command pilot, the general has more than 3,300 flying hours in the F–4, T–33, AT–38 and F–16, including 49 combat missions during Operation Desert Storm.

Throughout his distinguished career, General Wood's exceptional leadership skills were always evident to both superiors and subordinates as he repeatedly proved himself in numerous select command positions. He served as F–16 Operations Officer and Commander of the 10th Tactical Fighter Squadron at Hahn Air Base, Germany; and as Squadron Commander of the 389th Fighter Squadron at Mountain Home Air Force Base in Idaho. He was subsequently selected as Chief of Joint Training Teams at Headquarters, U.S. Atlantic Command, in Norfolk, Virginia. Following this assignment, General Wood was chosen as Commander of the 8th Operations Group in Kunsan Air Base, South Korea; and later as Commander of the 35th Fighter Wing at Misawa Air Base, Japan.

General Wood is best known to us, however, because of his two Air Force assignments involving liaison to the Congress. Many here will remember that from June 1997 until November 1998, General Wood was assigned as Chief, House Liaison Office, of the Office of the Secretary of the Air Force. He excelled in this position, bringing qualities of integrity and professionalism that greatly enhanced relations between the Air Force and the Congress. He was selected in May 2000 to return as Deputy Director of Air Force Legislative Liaison for the Secretary of the Air Force.

In his many years of working with the Congress, General Wood has provided a clear and credible voice for the Air Force while representing its many programs on the Hill, consistently providing accurate, concise and timely information. His integrity, professionalism and expertise enabled him to develop and maintain an exceptional rapport between the Air Force and the Congress. The key to his success, I believe, was his deep understanding of Congressional processes and priorities and his unflinching advocacy of programs essential to the Air Force and to our nation.

I am very pleased that General Wood has been nominated for his second star and I am sure that the Senate will soon concur in that promotion. I offer my sincere congratulations to General Wood for his nomination and for his new assignment as Commander of the Air Warfare Center. On behalf of the Congress and our great Nation, I thank General Wood and his entire family for the commitment and sacrifices that they have made throughout his military career. I know I speak for all of my colleagues in expressing my heartfelt appreciation to General Wood for a job well done. He is a credit to both the Air Force and the United States. We wish our friend the best of luck in his new command.

THE FARM BILL

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise to discuss the recent enactment of H.R. 2646, the Farm Security and Rural Investment Act of 2002, and to explain why I made the very difficult decision to vote against it. First, I wish to express my sincere thanks to the members of the House and Senate Agriculture Committees and the conferees for their very hard work in producing this farm bill. I have no doubt that their aim was the good of America's farmers and of rural America.

There are a number of important provisions in the farm bill that will have a positive impact on our family farms. I am pleased that significantly more funds will go to conservation programs and to help livestock producers and feedlot operators to better protect the environment. I am especially proud of language included in the farm bill that will restore a modest and carefully constructed wool program for our sheep industry. The new wool payment is crafted to provide some assistance during difficult times but not so much that the wool market will become distorted. I think the wool payment program is a good model for providing farmers with a good safety net.

I wish I could say that the other crop support programs in H.R. 2646 were also well-crafted, but I cannot.

I was a strong supporter of the previous farm bill, or the Fair Act. The Fair Act attempted to free our farmers from the heavy hand of government and restore to our farmers the benefits of the free market.

While I supported the Fair Act, I also recognized that the safety net for our farmers still needed some strengthening. A farm safety net should help farmers succeed in the free market. The alternative is to protect our farmers from the free market, and we have learned from failed farm programs of the past that there is not a good way to do that.

It is unfortunate that our new farm bill appears to be heading back down those same paths. Its greatest weakness is that in an attempt to provide some protection for farmers it goes well beyond the mark. We needed a fresh approach to supporting our farmers, but this latest farm bill is an unpleasant trip down memory lane. It risks turning our farmers into welfare recipients, and it puts the bureaucrat back in the business of running our nation's farms.

In H.R. 2646, the programs for row crops are intended to kick in when there is an oversupply and prices are low. Basic economic principles would indicate, and history has proven, that these countercyclical programs themselves can create an incentive for overproduction which, in turn, keeps prices low. Unless they are crafted very carefully, counter cyclical programs lead to a spiral of dependency. As long as the government money keeps flowing to the farmers, the overproduction does not bankrupt them. But it does put our farmers on the federal dole, and I don't believe that's where the farmers of Utah want to be.

One of the greatest benefits our government can provide to our farmers is a world system of free and fair trade. Our Nation's farm products are the best, and consumers around the world are clamoring for them. Through tremendous effort and lengthy negotiations, this and past administrations have been prying open foreign markets to U.S. agricultural products. I believe that too many of the programs in H.R. 2646 go beyond support for farmers and instead attempt to protect them from competition. The governments of our largest foreign markets for agriculture products are keenly aware of this, and with some justification they are alarmed by our recent shift toward protectionism. I fear the effects of this shift will hurt farmers. Doors to foreign markets that have been opened to our farmers may now close, the possibility for new markets may be quashed, and a greater number of future agricultural trade issues will be decided by the World Trade Organization, not by our trade negotiators.

Another important consideration for me in deciding to oppose H.R. 2646, was the alarming escalation of the cost of the bill. My understanding was that it would take about $100 billion to keep the current programs running for our farmers. On top of that, we budgeted an additional $73.5 billion to help meet the needs of our farmers. That is a big increase, but I think our farmers deserve the additional help. I would feel better about spending this extra money, though, if I believed that it would benefit our agricultural industry rather than work against it. I would also feel better about the extra spending if the original $173.5 billion had not mysteriously risen to a budget busting $190 billion.

I know the farmers of Utah. They are prudent businessmen who simply want a fair shake. They do not want to go on the government dole, they do not want to close foreign markets, and they do not want to add to our budget deficit. Unfortunately for the farmers of Utah, the farm bill that has recently been signed into law does all of the above. And yet, all this money and all these programs do strangely little for the small farmer of Utah. A full two-thirds of all these programs will go to only 10 percent of our nation's largest farms. This is a particularly grotesque and embarrassing aspect of H.R. 2646. If these largest farms are so efficient, why do they need this level of welfare? Where are the economies of scale that should make the largest farms the strongest?

I voted on the floor of the Senate, along with 65 of my colleagues, to address this issue by providing certain limitations on the size of payments the largest farms could receive under this farm bill. Although two-thirds of the Senate agreed on these payment limitations, the final conference report came back to us stripped of this important provision.

I wish we had a farm bill to which I could have given my blessing, but frankly, H.R. 2646 did not deserve my blessing. I am pleased that Utah's woolgrowers will receive some much needed relief, that our livestock producers in general will receive important funding for conservation measures, and that our crop growers will gain some certainty from the enactment of a farm bill, but I fear there may be a heavy price to pay in the long run for our agricultural industry—a price that could have been avoided with a little more prudence and restraint on the part of the legislators and the farm organizations who helped to develop this farm bill.

I hope that Utah's farmers can understand why I needed to vote against this farm bill. I cherish the farmers of Utah. I consider them the finest citizens our nation has. There is no group that works harder, that is more patriotic, or that is more morally strong than the farmers of Utah. I have often stated that they are the backbone of our society, and I have always believed it to be true. I will continue to do all I can to support our farmers in the way that I believe they want to be supported, and I think my record reflects that this is what I have attempted to do over the years. I believe that the farmers I represent understand this.

TUNA IMPORTS FROM THE PHILIPPINES

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise today to express my concerns about a provision in the Andean Trade Preferences Act, ATPA, that will have serious adverse, unintended consequences on United States initiatives in the Philippines and our relationship with the Philippine government.

Both the House and Senate versions of the ATPA would allow canned tuna from the Andean region to enter the United States duty-free, while maintaining the current tariff rates for all other countries. There are slight differences between the two versions: The House version allows all canned tuna imports from the Andean region to enter duty-free; the Senate version extends duty-free treatment to Andean tuna imports up to a cap equal to 20 percent of the preceding calendar year's domestic production excluding production in American Samoa. For the Philippines, however, the House and Senate versions have the same effect. Philippine tuna is sold generically; purchasers of this tuna are the most price-sensitive, and they would gravitate to the cheaper, duty-free product.

Loss of these sales would mean, effectively, the collapse of the tuna market. The major suppliers to the U.S. canned tuna market are just six countries: Thailand, 60 percent; the Philippines, 18 percent; Indonesia, 12 percent; Papua NG, 4 percent; Ecuador and Malaysia, 2 percent each. Of the six, Ecuador is the only one of the six that would benefit from the proposed trade preference, to the sharp detriment of the Philippines. The Philippine government estimates that the implementation of the ATPA preference would affect 24,000 workers directly, and another 150,000 indirectly.

Moreover, it is the economy of Mindanao, where the entire tuna-canning industry is located, that would be especially hard hit. It is on this southernmost island that the poverty level is acute and terrorist activity is concentrated; a number of civilians have been kidnapped or murdered there by Abu Sayyaf, an extremist Islamic group, and two Americans are currently being held there.

The ramifications of this legislation will almost certainly undercut the Philippine government's efforts in Mindanao. It will undercut U.S. efforts as well, since the U.S. government through USAID has provided over $20 million in fiscal year 2001 and fiscal year 2002 in ESF for economic development in Mindanao, and the fiscal year 2003 budget request includes a further $20 million; ATPA would seriously compromise those investments.

It will of course be argued that the ATPA provision will strengthen the Andean economies and enable them better to resist terrorist encroachments. But our efforts to strengthen these economies should not come at the cost of making anti-terrorist efforts in the Philippines more difficult. Surely that is not the intent, but it could well be an unintentional but highly regrettable consequence of the legislation.

Given the likelihood of grave, harmful consequences for the Philippines, I urge my colleagues to work toward a constructive solution to the problem posed by the ATPA provision that would give duty-free entry to canned tuna from the Andean countries. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the discussion of this issue which appears in today's New York Times.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

QUANDARY ON TRADE

(By Keith Bradsher)

GENERAL SANTOS CITY, THE PHILIPPINES, May 16, 2002—How should the United States set its tariffs and trade rules, globally or country-by-country?

It is no arid academic debate to the tuna fishermen of this knockabout port city on the south coast of Mindanao, nor to sugar cutters in the Caribbean or garment workers in Pakistan. Faraway changes in American fine print can have very real, sometimes unintended consequences.

A move in Congress to extend trade preferences to Andean nations, in part to help wean their economies off coca production, could lead to the layoff of thousands of Muslim workers in the tuna industry here, even as American troops help the Philippine army fight Abu Sayyaf Muslim insurgents in this region.

In Pakistan, officials have struggled to win a larger quota for textile shipments to the United States as a reward for Islamabad's help during the conflict in Afghanistan. And in the Caribbean, the emergence of any especially pro-American government brings a request for a larger quota to ship sugar to the high-priced, highly protected American market.

By returning to the pre-1922 practice of awarding preferential trade treatment to certain countries and regions, often for political rather than economic reasons, Washington now finds itself constantly badgered for trade concessions by whatever friendly nation is in the news at any given moment.

This is the problem that most 'favored nation' status was supposed to solve. When countries won that status—as nearly all of America's trading partners did in recent decades—they were assured that their exports would get the same tariff treatment as any other, and that generally, concessions awarded to one would be awarded to all.

After the ruinous bilateral trade competition in Europe in the 1930's, the United States backed a global adoption of the same approach, leading in the decades after World War II to the international trade rules enshrined in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and later to the creation of the World Trade Organization.

'The history of trade negotiations basically was that, because of the bilateral special deals that inevitably made other nations unhappy, we came around to most-favored-nation treatment and GATT negotiations,' said William Cline, a senior economist at the Institute for International Economics in Washington.

Up through the 1980's, most economists criticized regional trade agreements as just as bad as bilateral deals. Beyond making winners of some countries and losers of others, regional blocs can be bad for global efficiency, by prompting importers to favor a higher-cost producer within the bloc over a lower-cost producer outside whose goods are still subject to high tariffs and quotas.

Global trade agreements minimize such drawbacks, because these days very few countries remain outside them. But global treaties are becoming increasingly difficult to conclude. The last was wrapped up in Geneva in 1993; talks meant to produce the next one did not get under way until last November in Doha, Qatar, and are expected to take years.

But the regional free trade concept has become fashionable again, in great part because of the success of the European Union, which hugely increased trade among its 15 members by eliminating tariffs and trade barriers. It helped inspire the 1992 North American Free Trade Agreement—joining the United States, Canada and Mexico—as well as several other regional groupings.

One provision of the Nafta treaty helped set off the dispute now roiling American efforts to retain the support of the Philippines in the war on terrorism.

Among the tariffs to be eliminated within North America by the treaty is the American duty on canned tuna imported from Mexico. It will not disappear until 2008, and for the moment it means little because Mexico, well north of the equatorial waters where the best fishing grounds are found, has a tiny tuna industry. But tuna from other countries is subject to duty of up to 35 percent, creating a big incentive for Mexico to build up its tuna fleet, despite the high labor and fuel costs for the long journeys to where the tuna swim.

Several smaller Central American and Caribbean nations also have small tuna fleets; three years ago, Congress agreed to phase out tuna duties for them on the same timetable.

To the Andean nations of South America, these concessions posed a serious threat—that preferential access to the United States would soon make big new competitors out of Mexico and Central America. The United States had lowered tariffs on many products from Andean nations like Ecuador and Colombia in 1991, but canned tuna was not among them. When the 1991 concessions came up for renewal last year, the Andean nations, supported by Starkist, demanded that they be expanded to include canned tuna.

Ecuador has a huge tuna fishing fleet, and Colombia a smaller one; both countries are eager to create jobs that do not depend on narcotics trafficking. That persuaded the House of Representatives to approve a bill earlier this year that would immediately eliminate duty on Andean tuna.

A more limited bill that would phase out duty on about a third of current shipments is before the Senate as part of a broader trade bill. If it passes, differences between the provisions would be worked out in a conference of senators and representatives.

Now it is the Philippines' turn to feel threatened. Letting Ecuador and Colombia, but not the Philippines, ship tuna to the United States duty free would be both unfair and unwise, officials in Manila are warning, because of the hardship it would create in this poor, Muslim and sometimes rebellious part of the country, where terrorists are believed to be active. "We understand you want to do this because of narcotics," said Manuel A. Roxas II, the country's secretary of trade and industry, "but terrorism is just as important."

Washington has been on notice for some time that this kind of chain reaction of anger and demands for relief was likely to develop. An influential report by the United States Tariff Commission foresaw that special deals for some countries would "lead to claims from states outside the agreement which, if granted, defeat the purpose of the treaties, and which, if not granted, occasion the preferring of a charge of disloyalty to treaty obligations."

VOTE EXPLANATION

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. President, I inform the Senate that because of an unavoidable delay, I was unable to arrive in the Senate for a morning vote held on May 22, 2002. Had I been present, I would have voted as set forth below. My vote would not have affected the outcome.

On the motion to invoke cloture on the Baucus Substitute Amendment 3401 to H.R. 3009, the Andean Trade Act, I would have voted against cloture. The amendment on which the cloture vote occurred included Trade Promotion Authority, also known as Fast Track Authority, which I oppose because it fails to require strong, enforceable provisions regarding labor rights and environmental protection in future U.S. trade agreements.

LOCAL LAW ENFORCEMENT ACT OF 2001

Mr. SMITH of Oregon. Mr. President, I rise today to speak about hate crimes legislation I introduced with Senator KENNEDY in March of last year. The Local Law Enforcement Act of 2001 would add new categories to current hate crimes legislation sending a signal that violence of any kind is unacceptable in our society.

I would like to describe a terrible crime that occurred February 13, 1992 in Davenport, IA. Two gay men and two of their friends were beaten with baseball bats and metal pipes. The assailants, a group of six men and two women, yelled anti-gay slurs during the attack.

I believe that government's first duty is to defend its citizens, to defend them against the harms that come out of hate. The Local Law Enforcement Enhancement Act of 2001 is now a symbol that can become substance. I believe that by passing this legislation and changing current law, we can change hearts and minds as well.

EAST TIMOR'S INDEPENDENCE

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr President, I would like to extend my warmest welcome to the newest democracy to join the family of nations. This week, after a long and arduous struggle, the nation of East Timor officially celebrated it independence from Indonesia.

This has been a long and hard fought process for the people of East Timor. For 300 years, they were a colony of Portugal. Then upon the end of colonial rule in 1975, and a brief period of independence, East Timor was annexed to Indonesia.

In August of 1999, the people of East Timor voted in favor of independence from Indonesia. This historic moment regrettably set off a tragic wave of violence that left much of the country in devastation. While the people of East Timor have come a great distance since that moment, there is still much rebuilding and healing to do.

In January of 2000, the United Nations International Commission of Inquiry into East Timor concluded that the terror, destruction and displacement of people that occurred would not have been possible without the involvement of the Indonesian military during August of 2002. During that same period, some 250,000 East Timorese fled to West Timor, while there are still 55,000 refuges who have not been repatriated.

For the people of East Timor to move forward and have positive relations with their Indonesian neighbors, it is vital that these findings be investigated and those who are found guilty of committing crimes against humanity be brought to justice. The Indonesian government has taken an important step in this matter by establishing an ad hoc Human Rights Court for East Timor, however, this court has its own short-comings. By limiting the scope of inquires to atrocities alleged after the August referendum, it has effectively blocked the prosecution of high-level military officials who are believed to have masterminded the violence. Without the ability to investigate and bring to justice those involved in human rights abuses throughout East Timor's time as part of Indonesia, those who have suffered will be unable to move forward in their lives.

While we cannot forget the injustices of the past, this week is also a time to look forward. East Timor has the opportunity to build a vibrant and prosperous nation. The task of developing a thriving democracy is an ongoing process. It requires a respect for the rule of law and the ability to share differing opinions. I am confidant that the people of East Timor will met these challenges as they have the others before them; and they have taken a positive step by voting to sign the United Nations Declaration of Human Rights as their legislature's first act.

While many of these steps the people of East Timor must take for themselves, the United States and our fellow democracies will still play a vital role in the hopes of East Timorese. Given the level of destruction, it is important that the United States and other nations continue foreign aid in an effort to enable the East Timorese to provide vital services such as education, shelter, and healthcare to their people. Also, the established democracies of the world can provide valuable insight into the running of democratic institutions as the government of East Timor undertakes the responsibilities of full sovereignty. These and other forms of aid will play a vital role in the ability of East Timor to mature as an established nation.

Lastly, this momentous occasion would not have been possible without the perserverance of the people of East Timor and supportive non-governmental organizations such as the East Timor Action Network, and I commend them on their efforts. The people of East Timor have endured much to gain their freedom, and I wish them the best in their newfound independence.

PARKINSON'S DISEASE

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, today I chaired a hearing on Parkinson's Disease in the Labor, Health and Human Services and Education Appropriations Subcommittee. I was profoundly touched by the victims of this disease who came to testify and by the many, many victims, families and advocates who came to Washington to put a human face on this horrible disease. As a Congress, we can't take the time to listen to every story but I ask unanimous consent that one little girl's story be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LETTER FROM MAYA FIELDER

My name is Maya Fielder and I am 9 years old. I live in Palo Alto, California and I am in the 4th grade at Escondido School.

When I was a little baby my Mom found out she had Parkinson's Disease. I was with my Mom, but I don't really remember when the doctor told her she had a bad disease that gets worse and worse and doesn't have a cure. I know that now there are lots of things I can't do with my Mom and sometimes I feel like I have to take care her instead of her taking care of me.

I learned that Parkinson's Disease is when your brain doesn't produce enough dopamine. Dopamine is important because it tells your body how to move. My Mom's body tremors and she can't write things down or if she does no one can read it, not even her. She gets disabled to walk so she rides my scooter around the house (I'm not allowed to ride in the house though). And sometimes she can't even walk until her medicine starts working so my Dad and I get things for her. She takes tons of pills every day but the medicine or the disease causes more problems for her so my Mom tries new medicines and different things a lot to try to get better.

Our whole family works hard to help find a cure for Parkinson's. My mom talks about Parkinson's to the newspapers or on the news whenever she can and sometimes my name or picture is shown too! We had a charity art show at our house and Uncle Dan's art raised a lot of money. I even sold a painting and all the money went to Parkinson's research. My mom said that if researchers got enough money from Congress and from regular people that scientists could find a cure in 5 or 10 years. That would be good because I won't be a grown-up yet and my Mom will get better and we could go iceskating together.

But now we have a big problem. I heard President Bush say that all cloning research has to stop. My Mom was really upset because she said the President and some people in Congress want to stop researchers from finding a cure for Parkinson's and lots of other diseases that make millions of people sick. I don't get it.

One part of the Pledge of Allegiance says "Liberty and Justice for all". I don't think the government is giving us much liberty or justice—at all!

People are scared of the kind of cloning that would make new people (reproductive cloning). But what's so scary about finding a cure for my Mom? That kind of cloning is called therapeutic cloning and doesn't make people or kittens or anything like that—it would just help my Mom's brain work again like it is supposed to.

I think that the people who make the laws should make rules so scientists won't do bad things with research. But can't they still be allowed to do the good research? My mom said the Brownback bill that is being voted on Congress soon wouldn't allow scientists to do the good kind of research that would help her. She also said that this law wants to put people like her in jail if they try to get cured. That's just dumb! My Mom isn't doing anything wrong by just trying to get well.

I thought I might want to be a scientist when I grow up but I don't think so any more. I just want to find a cure for my Mom. I guess I'll become the President of the United States so that I can make good laws that help people and cure diseases. I'll let scientists do their work and make all kinds of new discoveries.

I know that this isn't the most important thing for everyone. But I think that if someone in your family was sick and you were worried, that you would do everything you could to help them get better. You wouldn't make laws so that a cure would not be found and you wouldn't put them in jail.

Please help find a cure for my Mom and everyone else that needs one instead of making it harder. I'm doing as much as I can do to help my Mom and other people too (when I'm not in school or doing sports or playing violin, but Mommy says that helps her too). This is really important to a lot of people. Thank you.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

TRIBUTE TO DIANE CALLAWAY

• Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I am pleased to note for the record this morning the election of a proven leader in my State to serve in national office.

Diane J. Callaway has worked in the Seaford School District in Delaware for 28 years. In the course of her career, Mrs. Callaway has been active in professional associations at the local, state and national level, serving in virtually every leadership position, both elected and appointed. It came as no surprise to anyone, when Diane Callaway received Delaware's first Educational Office Professional of the Year award.

In 1990, Mrs. Callaway earned a Professional Standards Program certificate and distinction as a Certified Educational Office Employee, CEOE, from the National Association of Educational Office Professionals. She served for four years as the NAEOP's Mid-Atlantic Area Director, and currently serves on the Association's Board of Directors Executive Committee. Mrs. Callaway has been elected to serve as President of the NAEOP for 2002–2003.

Needless to say, we in Delaware are very proud of Diane Callaway proud of her success, proud of the prominent role she is playing at the national level, and most of all, proud of her tremendous contribution to the quality of our schools. We congratulate her on her election, and we thank her for her service to us all.●

THE LEGACY OF FLOYD BOLDRIDGE

● Mr. BROWNBACK. Mr. President, today, I rise to recognize the legacy of a true Kansan, Floyd Boldridge. Mr. Boldridge was a life-long farmer and family man. During his life, he was loved by not only his family but by the community of Atchison, Kansas as well. During his funeral, La Rochelle Young, of my staff read a tribute to her uncle, Floyd Boldridge. As we prepare to honor our loved ones during the upcoming Memorial Day holiday, I think it is a fitting tribute to Mr. Boldridge to enter his tribute into the record of the United States Senate. I join with La Rochelle and Mr. Boldridge's ten children, Gloria Wallingford, Virginia Carol Harvey, Shirley Gooch, Betty King, Thelma Hibler, Leonard Boldridge, Dennis Boldridge, Brenda Nettles, Annette Boldridge and Eric Harvey.

I ask that Mr. Boldridge's tribute be printed in the RECORD.

The tribute follows:

THE LEGACY OF FLOYD BOLDRIDGE

(By La Rochelle Murray, Niece of Floyd Boldridge)

January 31, 2000

A legacy of love, of family, of commitment and of integrity can be said of the man who many called father, grandfather, uncle, cousin, brother, friend, bull and baby boy. Floyd Boldridge was the youngest of six rambunctious boys. And as the "baby" of the family, he was loved, protected and cherished in many ways. In fact, one of the brothers' favorite past times was bouncing "baby boy" on the bed and then lovingly watch him bounce off onto the floor. Perhaps, this is where Uncle Floyd developed his sparkling personality, his infectious laughter that could penetrate any person or situation, and the indescribable bond between his brothers and his fierce commitment to his family and friends.

As a young man, Uncle Floyd grew up in a spiritual family that not only took pride in the teachings of Christ, honesty and hard work but also took extreme pride in the Boldridge name as well. This was shown throughout Uncle Floyd's life. Like most large families, each son possessed a special gift—one that was different from the other brothers. However, instead of dwelling on the others' gift, each brother nurtured and cultivated his gift in order to combine their gifts with one another and sustain themselves.

During an interview, Uncle Floyd was once asked about his thoughts concerning The Great Depression. His response was simplistic yet profound. He said that he did not recall feeling the effects of the depression because he and his brothers never wanted for anything. They pooled their resources together, which allowed them to be self-sufficient and continued living comfortably during one of the darkest times in our nation's history. This lesson and the many other lessons that he learned from his brothers was what sculpted him into the energetic, fiercely loyal, loving man that his children—and all of us because to Uncle Floyd, we were all his family—remember today.

During the early years of Uncle Floyd's life, his passion and zeal for life was transferred to his ever-growing family. Everyone who knew Uncle Floyd knew that he was very proud of his children. His love for his family surpassed everything in his life and will continue to live on in the lives of his children and grandchildren. There were many facets to Uncle Floyd's life but none compared to the love of his children.

For example, when his daughter, Tammy, brought her husband, Don, to meet her father for the first time, Uncle Floyd positioned himself so that his five foot seven inch frame was on a hill and Don, who is six feet three inches tall, was on a flat portion of land. Once this was achieved, Don was eye level with Uncle Floyd. It wasn't until later that Don realized what had happened because he was so intimidated by Tammy's father.

Uncle Floyd also had a passion for peace and happiness between everyone. He was never one to cause conflict or allow conflict to be in his presence. He had a vivacious personality that allowed him to realize that life was a series of challenges and having a negative or defeatist attitude would only make one's life miserable. Instead, he choose to look to God first for understanding and then actively engage in positive actions.

Although Uncle Floyd was a peaceful and loving man, he was also known for his enormous strength, which earned him the nickname "Bull." And like Sampson, everyone who tried to overpower him received an often surprising and sometimes painful result. For example, one of my Uncle Floyd's nephews, Marvin, decided to test his uncle's strength at work. Marvin made the bad decision to grab Uncle Floyd's arms. Not only did Marvin say that grabbing Uncle Floyd was like grabbing a hunk of steel, but remembers being turned upside down in the process. All Marvin recalls of that moment was his father yelling, "Don't kill him Bull!!"

My father, Walter D. Murray, also remembers his first introduction to Uncle Floyd. He had heard many stories regarding Uncle Floyd's strength and though that he would show him what strength really was. So, when he shook Uncle Floyd's hand, he squeezed with all of his strength and found that not only did Uncle Floyd match his strength but surpassed his strength so much so that after almost falling to his knees, he had to ask Uncle Floyd to release his hand.

Indeed Uncle Floyd loved life and lived his life to the fullest and in doing so blessed our lives immeasurably. So what can be said of his legacy? Uncle Floyd left us with a profound legacy of love for God, his Son, Jesus Christ and the Holy Spirit, peace among ourselves and love for our fellow human. Like Christ, Uncle Floyd believed in treating others as we would treat ourselves. That is why he cherished his trips to the Holy Land. Uncle Floyd loved to share every aspect of his trips to the Holy Land including Jerusalem and Bethlehem. It was on one of these trips that he turned to his daughter, Betty, and said, "I am seeing with these eyes what my father read to me from the Bible many years ago."

Uncle Floyd was a steadfast, deeply religious man who loved Christ and the Church. In fact many nights, Uncle Floyd could be found in the kitchen of Campbell Chapel African Methodist Episcopal Church, where he was a life-long faithful member, cooking his famous cabbage or my personal favorite, fried corn. And many of Uncle Floyd's friends will remember the dinners he would fix after a hunting trip or even if they just chose to drop in and visit him at his home.

Uncle Floyd also left us with the legacy of the Port William Bridge. Uncle Floyd, along with his many friends, worked tirelessly on achieving the dedication of this historic bridge. Uncle Floyd knew the importance of remembering the past in order to bridge a pathway to the future. That is the reason I brought my fiancé, Adrian K. Young, Jr., to meet Uncle Floyd in order to gain his approval. And Eric remembers when he was about to embark on his career as a professional soccer player that uncle Floyd said to him, "You've now got your foot in the door—don't let that door close." Eric now uses this premise when he is coaching his soccer team.

So we thank you Uncle Floyd for your gift of laughter, your loving manner in which you made everyone especially your children feel loved and appreciated, your dynamic and often times animated personality, and your legacy of love and peace. We will always love you and forever cherish the time we spent with you.●

DEATH OF STEVEN PATRICK LOVATO

● Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to pay tribute to the life of Steven Patrick Lovato, an Emergency Medical Technician who was killed in the line of duty while responding to a 911 call on March 16, 2002 in his hometown of Roswell, NM.

Steve received his initial EMT training in Las Cruces, NM and then joined the American Medical Response team in Roswell in 1998. During the course of his service in Roswell, he was a company safety officer and driving instructor. Last year he was awarded AMR's Vision and Guiding Principles Award for his responsiveness to patients. He was also recently selected as a company mentor to help teach and develop other EMT's.

Steve was known for his passion for emergency medicine and his unselfish desire to help others. He often commented about how much he loved going to work and serving his community. Steve is survived by his wife Josephine, his ten-year-old son Alex, and his parents, Lawrence and Rosie Lovato, all of Roswell. I would like to extend my condolences to Steve's family. Steve's sacrifice is the ultimate sacrifice, and his family's as well, and we join with them in mourning his death.●

COMMENDING OKLAHOMA STUDENTS

● Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I would like to briefly comment on an exceptional group of students from my State of Oklahoma. Recently, a group of students from Tahlequah High School in Tahlequah, OK, participated in the national finals of "We The People . . . The Citizens and the Constitution." These students traveled here to Washington, DC for the final competition after excelling in the preliminary stages.

This contest is held for students who have a remarkable knowledge of American history. The group includes Chris Augerhole, J.R. Baker, Chad Blish, Ryan Cannonie, Taylor Gibson, Carlton Heard, Cobin Heard, Zach Israel, Doug Kirk, Helena Loose, Lacie Newman, Tim Pace, Rebecca Walker, Derek Whaler, Brandon Zellner and their teacher Norma Boren.

These young Oklahomans demonstrated their ability to articulate the ideals of American government while taking part in a simulated congressional hearing.

IN RECOGNITION OF HADASSAH'S 90TH ANNIVERSARY

● Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. President, I rise today in recognition of Hadassah, the Women's Zionist Organization of America as they celebrate their 90th anniversary. Hadassah is a non-profit volunteer women's organization dedicated to health care, education, and advocacy. Originally created to bring modern health care to the sick and suffering inhabitants of Palestine, Hadassah has grown into a thriving international organization actively engaged in issues that affect the health and livelihood of Jewish people throughout the United States and Israel.

Founded in 1912, Hadassah retains the passion and timeless values of its founder, Henrietta Szold, Jewish scholar and activist, who was dedicated to Judaism, Zionism, and the American ideal.

In Israel, the Hadassah Medical Organization, HMO, runs two hospitals, five schools, outpatient clinics, research facilities, and a community health center. With support from over 300,000 Hadassah members worldwide, HMO offers expert treatment and tender care to more than half a million people in Israel each year.

In the United States, Hadassah enhances the quality of American and Jewish life through its education and Zionist youth programs. It promotes health awareness and provides personal enrichment and growth for its members.

In a year long celebration, Hadassah will commemorate its 90 years of service. To mark this occasion, I would like to applaud Hadassah and its members for their efforts to improve the lives of all the people they serve.●

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Ms. Evans, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 12:35 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Niland, one of its reading clerks announced that the House has passed the following bills, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 486. An act for the relief of Barbara Makuch.

H.R. 487. An act for the relief of Eugene Makuch.

H.R. 1877. An act to amend title 18, United States Code, to provide that certain sexual crimes against children are predicate crimes for the interception of communications, and for other purposes.

H.R. 3375. An act to provide compensation for the United States citizens who were victims of the bombings of United States embassies in East Africa on August 7, 1998, on the same basis as compensation is provided to victims of the terrorist-related aircraft crashes on September 11, 2001.

H.R. 3833. An act to facilitate the creation of a new, second-level Internet domain within the United States country code domain that will be a haven for material that promotes positive experiences for children and families using the Internet, provides a safe online environment for children, and helps to prevent children from being exposed to harmful material on the Internet, and for other purposes.

H.R. 3994. An act to authorize economic and democratic development assistance for Afghanistan and to authorize military assistance for Afghanistan and certain other foreign countries.

H.R. 4015. An act to amend title 38, United States Code, to revise and improve employment, training, and placement services furnished to veterans, and for other purposes.

H.R. 4085. An act to amend title 38, United States Code, to provide a cost-of-living increase in the rates of compensation for veterans with service-connected disability and dependency and indemnity compensation for surviving spouses of such veterans, to expand certain benefits for veterans and their survivors, and for other purposes.

H.R. 4231. An act to improve small business advocacy, and for other purposes.

H.R. 4514. An act to authorize the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to carry out construction projects for the purpose of improving, renovating, and updating patient care facilities at Department of Veterans Affairs medical centers, and for other purposes.

H.R. 4592. An act to name the chapel located in the national cemetery in Los Angeles, California, as the "Bob Hope Veterans Chapel."

H.R. 4626. An act to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to accelerate the marriage penalty relief in the standard deduction and to modify the work opportunity credit and the welfare-to-work credit.

H.R. 4782. An act to extend the authority of the Export-Import Bank until June 14, 2002.

The message also announced that the House has agreed to the following concurrent resolution, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H. Con. Res. 405. Concurrent resolution commemorating the independence of East Timor and commending the President for promptly establishing diplomatic relations with East Timor.

At 2:03 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Niland, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3448) to improve the ability of the United States to prevent, prepare for, and respond to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies.

MEASURES REFERRED

The following bills were read the first and the second times by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

At the request of Mr. LIEBERMAN, the name of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. DURBIN) was added as a cosponsor of S. Con. Res. 105, a concurrent resolution expressing the sense of Congress that the Nation should take additional steps to ensure the prevention of teen pregnancy by engaging in measures to educate teenagers as to why they should stop and think about the negative consequences before engaging in premature sexual activity.

S. CON. RES. 110

At the request of Mrs. FEINSTEIN, the name of the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BIDEN) was added as a cosponsor of S. Con. Res. 110, a concurrent resolution honoring the heroism and courage displayed by airline flight attendants on a daily basis.

S. CON. RES. 115

At the request of Mr. KENNEDY, the names of the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. BINGAMAN), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. WELLSTONE), the Senator from New York (Mrs. CLINTON), the Senator from California (Mrs. BOXER), and the Senator from California (Mrs. FEINSTEIN) were added as cosponsors of S. Con. Res. 115, a concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that all workers deserve fair treatment and safe working conditions, and honoring Dolores Huerta for her commitment to the improvement of working conditions for children, women, and farm worker families.

AMENDMENT NO. 3420

At the request of Mr. LEVIN, the name of the Senator from Michigan

(Ms. STABENOW) was added as a cosponsor of amendment No. 3420 intended to be proposed to H.R. 3009, a bill to extend the Andean Trade Preference Act, to grant additional trade benefits under that Act, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT NO. 3447

At the request of Mr. BYRD, the name of the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. DAYTON) was added as a cosponsor of amendment No. 3447 proposed to H.R. 3009, a bill to extend the Andean Trade Preference Act, to grant additional trade benefits under that Act, and for other purposes.

At the request of Mr. DORGAN, his name was added as a cosponsor of amendment No. 3447 proposed to H.R. 3009, supra.

AMENDMENT NO. 3448

At the request of Mr. BYRD, the names of the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. DAYTON) and the Senator from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN) were added as cosponsors of amendment No. 3448 proposed to H.R. 3009, a bill to extend the Andean Trade Preference Act, to grant additional trade benefits under that Act, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT NO. 3449

At the request of Mr. BYRD, the names of the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. DAYTON) and the Senator from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN) were added as cosponsors of amendment No. 3449 proposed to H.R. 3009, a bill to extend the Andean Trade Preference Act, to grant additional trade benefits under that Act, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT NO. 3452

At the request of Mr. BYRD, the names of the Senator from Kansas (Mr. BROWNBACK), the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. ROCKEFELLER), and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. DORGAN) were added as cosponsors of amendment No. 3452 proposed to H.R. 3009, a bill to extend the Andean Trade Preference Act, to grant additional trade benefits under that Act, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT NO. 3500

At the request of Mr. LEVIN, the name of the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. BYRD) was added as a cosponsor of amendment No. 3500 intended to be proposed to H.R. 3009, a bill to extend the Andean Trade Preference Act, to grant additional trade benefits under that Act, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT NO. 3503

At the request of Mr. LEVIN, the name of the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. BYRD) was added as a cosponsor of amendment No. 3503 intended to be proposed to H.R. 3009, a bill to extend the Andean Trade Preference Act, to grant additional trade benefits under that Act, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT NO. 3504

At the request of Mr. LEVIN, the name of the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. BYRD) was added as a cosponsor of amendment No. 3504 intended to be proposed to H.R. 3009, a bill to extend the Andean Trade Preference Act, to grant additional trade benefits under that Act, and for other purposes.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. CORZINE (for himself and Mr. TORRICELLI):

S. 2539. A bill to prohibit the use of taxpayer funds to advocate a position that is inconsistent with existing Supreme Court precedent with respect to the Second amendment; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CORZINE. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation to prohibit the use of taxpayer funds to advocate a position on the meaning of the Second Amendment that is inconsistent with existing Supreme Court precedent, as expressed in the Supreme Court case of United States v. Miller.

This legislation responds to the Bush Administration's recent filing of two unprecedented briefs to the United States Supreme Court, which argued that the Second Amendment establishes an individual right to possess firearms. In taking this position, the Justice Department directly contradicted the well-established precedents of the Supreme Court, as expressed in the seminal case of United States v. Miller. In that 1939 case, the Supreme Court found that the Second Amendment did not establish a private right of individuals to possess firearms, but rather was intended to ensure the effectiveness of groups of citizen-soldiers known at the time as the Militia.

The Court in United States v. Miller explained the historical background to the Second Amendment and issued its ruling clearly and unambiguously. That ruling has never been reversed, and the Court has followed it in every subsequent related case. Similarly, the precedent in United States v. Miller has been followed by every Justice Department over the past several decades, including the Justice Departments of Presidents Ronald Reagan, Richard Nixon and George H.W. Bush.

The meaning of the Second Amendment should not be a partisan issue. In fact, it should not be a political issue. It is a legal and constitutional issue. And the law on this question has been clearly established by the highest court in the land in case after case for a period of many decades.

Unfortunately, instead of following the law, as Attorney General promised to do during his confirmation hearing, the Bush Administration and the Justice Department have used their authority to file briefs as a means of pursuing a partisan political agenda that flies in the face of established Supreme Court precedents. This is wrong. And, in my view, it is a misuse of taxpayer dollars.

Congress should not have to pass a law to ensure that the Executive Branch follows the Constitution, as clearly interpreted by the Supreme Court. Unfortunately, in light of the Bush's Administration's latest actions, Congress must step in. After all, Congress's ultimate power is the power of the purse. And we have a responsibility to use that power, when necessary, to ensure that the Executive Branch complies with constitutional law.

This responsibility flows from Congress's obligation to preserve, protect and defend the Constitution. It also flows from our obligation to ensure that taxpayer dollars are not misused. The American people should not be forced to pay taxes to support an unreasonable interpretation of the Second Amendment that is not only inconsistent with constitutional law, but that threatens to undermine legislation needed to reduce gun violence and to save lives.

In 1998, more than 30,000 Americans died from firearm-related deaths. That is almost as many as the number of Americans who died in the entire Korean War. In my view, there is much that Congress needs to do to reduce these deaths, including enacting reasonable gun safety legislation. Yet if the Bush Administration prevails in its effort to radically revise the Second Amendment, such laws could well be undermined. The end result would be more death and more families losing loved ones to the scourge of gun violence.

In fact, I would note that one week after the Bush Administration filed their briefs, lawyers for accused American Taliban terrorist John Walker Lindh used the Administration's arguments to urge dismissal of the gun charge filed against him. Now, I hope and trust that the courts will quickly reject this line of argument. But why would the Bush Administration want to strengthen the position of criminals and alleged terrorists like John Walker Lindh in the first place?

I have asked the Congressional Research Service whether there are any constitutional precedents that would bar the Congress from adopting this legislation, and the answer was "no." I also would note that there is precedent for Congress prohibiting the use of taxpayer dollars to advocate positions with which Congress disagrees. For example, Congress for many years prohibited the Justice Department from using appropriated money to overturn certain rules under our antitrust laws. This responded to the filing of a brief in the Supreme Court by the Justice Department urging a revision of its precedents on resale price maintenance, and the legislation effectively blocked the Department from filing similar briefs.

In conclusion, we should not allow taxpayer dollars to be used to misrepresent the meaning of the Second Amendment on behalf of a partisan, political agenda. We should defend the Constitution against such ideological attacks. We should protect taxpayers from being forced to subsidize ideological gambits. And we should ensure that the Constitution is not misused to undermine gun safety legislation that could save the lives of many innocent Americans.

I hope my colleagues will support the bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the text of the legislation be printed in the Record, along with some related materials about this matter.

There being no objection, the additional material was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

S. 2539

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. PROHIBITION ON THE USE OF FUNDS.

No funds appropriated to the Department of Justice or any other agency may be used to file any brief or to otherwise advocate before any judicial or administrative body any position with respect to the meaning of the Second Amendment to the Constitution that is inconsistent with existing Supreme Court precedent, as expressed in United States v. Miller (307 U.S. 174 (1939)).

A Faulty Rethinking of the 2nd Amendment

(By Jack Rakove)

Stanford, CA.—The Bush administration has found a constitutional right it wants to expand. Attorney General John D. Ashcroft attracted only mild interest a year ago when he told the National Rifle Association, "The text and original intent of the Second Amendment clearly protect the right of individuals to keep and bear firearms."

Now, briefs just filed by Solicitor General Theodore Olson in two cases currently being appealed to the Supreme Court indicate that Mr. Ashcroft's personnel opinion has become that of the United States government. This posture represents an astonishing challenge to the long-settled doctrine that the right to bear arms protected by the Second Amendment is closely tied to membership in the militia. It is no secret that controversy about the meaning of the amendment has escalated in recent years. As evidence grew that a significant portion of the American electorate favored the regulation of firearms, the N.R.A. and its allies insisted ever more vehemently that the private right to possess arms is a constitutional absolute. This opinion, once seen as marginal, has become an article of faith on the right, and Republican politicians have in turn had to acknowledge its force.

The two cases under appeal do not offer an ideal test of the administration's new views. One concerns a man charged with violating a federal statute prohibiting individuals under domestic violence restraining orders from carrying guns; the other involves a man convicted of owning machine guns, which is illegal under federal law. In both cases, the defendants cite the Second Amendment as protecting their right to have the firearms. The unsavory facts may explain why Mr. Olson is using these cases as vehicles to announce the administration's constitutional position while urging the Supreme Court not to accept the appeals.

The court last examined this issue in 1939 in United States v. Miller. There it held that the Second Amendment was designed to ensure the effectiveness of the militia, not to guarantee a private right to possess firearms. The Miller case, though it did not fully explore the entire constitutional history, has guided the government's position on firearm issues for the past six decades.

If the court were to take up the two cases on appeal, it is far from clear that the Justice Department's new position would prevail. The plain text of the Second Amendment—"A well regulated militia, being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed"—does not support the unequivocal view that Mr. Ashcroft and Mr. Olson have put forth. The amendment refers to the right of the people, rather than the individual person of the Fifth Amendment. And the phrase "keep and bear arms" is, as most commentators note, a military reference.

Nor do the debates surrounding the adoption of the amendment support the idea that the framers were thinking of an individual right to own arms. The relevant proposals offered by the state ratification conventions of 1787–88 all dealt with the need to preserve the militia as an alternative to a standing army. The only recorded discussion of the amendment in the House of Representatives concerned whether religious dissenters should be compelled to serve in the militia. And in 1789, the Senate deleted one clause explicitly defining the militia as "composed of the body of the people." In excising this phrase, the Senate gave "militia" a narrower meaning than it otherwise had, thereby making the Ashcroft interpretation harder to sustain.

Advocates of the individual right respond to these objections in three ways.

They argue, first that when Americans used the word militia, they ordinarily meant the entire adult male population capable of bearing arms. But Article I of the Constitution defines the militia as an institution under the joint regulation of the national and state governments, and the debates of 1787–89 do not demonstrate that the framers believed that the militia should forever by synonymous with the entire population.

A second argument revolves around the definition of "the people." Those on the N.R.A. side believe "the people" means "all persons." But in Article I we also read that the people will elect the House of Representatives—and the determination of who can vote will be left to state law, in just the way that militia service would remain subject to Congressional and state regulation.

The third argument addresses the critical phrase deleted in the Senate. Rather than concede that the Senate knew what it was doing, these commentators contend that the deletion was more a matter of careless editing.

This argument is faulty because legal interpretation generally assumes that lawmakers act with clear purpose. More important, the Senate that made this critical deletion was dominated by Federalists who were skeptical of the milita's performance during the Revolutionary War and opposed to the idea that the future of American defense lay with the militia rather than a regular army. They had sound reasons not to commit the national government to supporting a mass militia, and thus to prefer a phrasing implying that the militia need not embrace the entire adult male population if Congress had good reason to require otherwise. The evidence of text and history makes it very hard to argue for an expansive individual right to keep arms.

There is one striking curiosity to the Bush administration's advancing its position at this time. Advocates of the individual-right interpretation typically argue that an armed populace is the best defense against the tyranny of our own government. And yet the Bush administration seems quite willing to compromise essential civil liberties in the name of security. It is sobering to think that the constitutional right the administration values so highly is the right to bear arms, that peculiar product of an obsolete debate over the danger of standing armies—and this at a time when our standing army is the most powerful the world has known.

Guns and Justice

The U.S. Solicitor General has a duty to defend acts of Congress before the Supreme Court. This week, Solicitor General Ted Olson—and by extension his bosses, Attorney General John Ashcroft and President Bush—took a position regarding guns that will undermine that mission.

Historically, the Justice Department has adopted a narrow reading of the Constitution's Second Amendment, which states that "a well regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed." Along with nearly all courts in the past century, it has read that as protecting only the public's collective right to bear arms in the context of militia service. Now the administration has reversed this view. In a pair of appeals, Mr. Olson contends that "the Second Amendment more broadly protects the rights of individuals, including persons who are not members of any militia . . . to possess and bear their own firearms." Mr. Ashcroft insists the department remains prepared to defend all federal gun laws. Having given away its strongest argument, however, it will be doing so with its hands tied behind its back.

Laws will now be defended not as presumptively valid but as narrow exceptions to a broad constitutional right—one subject, as Mr. Olson put it, only to "reasonable restrictions designed to prevent possession by unfit persons or to restrict the possession of types of firearms that are particularly suited to criminal misuse." This may sound like a common-sense balancing act. But where exactly does the Second Amendment, if it guarantees individual rights, permit "reasonable restrictions"? And where does its protection exempt firearms that might be well suited for crime?

Mr. Ashcroft has compared the gun ownership right with the First Amendment's protection of speech—which can be limited only in a fashion narrowly tailored to accomplish compelling state interests. If that's the model, most federal gun laws would sooner or later fall. After all, it would not be constitutional to subject someone to a background check before permitting him to worship or to make a political speech. If gun ownership is truly a parallel right, why would the Brady background check be constitutional?

The Justice Department traditionally errs on the other side—arguing for constitutional interpretations that increase congressional flexibility and law enforcement policy options. The great weight of judicial precedent holds that there is no fundamental individual right to own a gun. Staking out a contrary position may help ingratiate the Bush administration to the gun lobby. But it greatly disserves the interests of the United States.

[From the New York Times, May 14, 2002]

AN OMINOUS REVERSAL ON GUN RIGHTS

Using a footnote in a set of Supreme Court briefs, Attorney General John Ashcroft announced a radical shift last week in six decades of government policy toward the rights of Americans to own guns. Burying the change in fine print cannot disguise the ominous implications for law enforcement or Mr. Ashcroft's betrayal of his public duty.

The footnote declares that, contrary to longstanding and bipartisan interpretation of the Second Amendment, the Constitution "broadly protects the rights of individuals" to own firearms. This view and the accompanying legal standard Mr. Ashcroft has suggested—equating gun ownership with core free speech rights—could make it extremely difficult for the government to regulate firearms, as it has done for decades. That position comports with Mr. Ashcroft's long-held personal opinion, which he expressed a year ago in a letter to his close allies at the National Rifle Association. But it is a position at odds with both history and the Constitution's text. As the Supreme Court correctly concluded in a 1939 decision that remains the key legal precedent on the subject, the Second Amendment protects only those rights that have "some reasonable relationship to the preservation of efficiency of a well-regulated militia." By not viewing the amendment as a basic, individual right, this decision left room for broad gun ownership regulation. The footnote is also at odds with Mr. Ashcroft's pledge at his confirmation hearing that his personal ideology would not drive Justice Department legal policies.

It is hard to take seriously Mr. Ashcroft's assertion that the Bush administration remains committed to the vigorous defense and enforcement of all federal gun laws. Mr. Ashcroft, after all, is an official whose devotion to the gun lobby extends to granting its request to immediately destroy records of gun purchases amassed in the process of conducting Brady law background checks even though they might be useful for tracking weapons purchases by suspected terrorists.

The immediate effect of the Bush Justice Department's expansive reading of the Second Amendment is to undermine law enforcement by calling into question valuable state and federal gun restrictions on the books, and by handing dangerous criminals a potent new weapon for challenging their convictions. What it all adds up to is a gift to pro-gun extremists, and a shabby deal for everyone else.

By Mr. DOMENICI:

S. 2540. A bill to amend the definition of low-income families for purposes of the United States Housing Act of 1937; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, today I rise to bring the Senate's attention to a matter that is slowing Los Alamos County, NM, in its efforts to fully recover from the Cerro Grande Fire of May 10, 2000.

It is an amazing irony to me that Los Alamos National Laboratory, in recent years facing declines in personnel, is again in the national news for its ability to help with counter-terrorism on many fronts. Along with this national attention and the needs of our Homeland Security Agency for advanced scientific means to detect and deter nuclear and biological attacks, LANL is now in the process of filling about 1,000 new positions.

The irony is that the Cerro Grande fire severely reduced available housing in Los Alamos two years before our Nation turns once again to Los Alamos for its scientific talents. A major deterrent to new hires is the lack of housing choices in Los Alamos. The housing market is even tighter because of the loss of about 400 housing units through the devastating Cerro Grande Fire. Los Alamos has a population of about 18,000 people.

While we have Federal programs to help low and moderate income Americans find good housing, in Los Alamos these programs are ineffective due to the current practice of averaging Los Alamos County and Santa Fe County incomes into one Metropolitan Statistical Area, MSA. This is harmful to Los Alamos residents, where the median income is about $82,000 because the Federal programs use the MSA median income of about $65,000 to determine participation. Eighty percent of median income is a standard measure.

Santa Fe's median income of about $40,000 thus becomes a significant factor for a Los Alamos teacher, fireman, or policeman seeking subsidized Federal assistance. Their incomes in Los Alamos are deemed to be too high to qualify for housing because 80 percent of $65,000 is used as the maximum allowed for assistance. Thus, $52,000 becomes the effective ceiling for assistance, when the actual 80 percent ceiling figure for Los Alamos incomes is about $65,000. This makes a huge difference in a high-priced and competitive market. The result is that developers are discouraged from applying for tax credits and other assistance programs because their applicants do not qualify to live in their new or remodeled housing projects.

The Los Alamos County Manager reports that not a single County employee is eligible for housing created by the Low Income Housing Tax Credits. He, like many residents and the LANL recruiting effort, remain concerned that the limited housing supply has raised rents and sales prices. Los Alamos County is also landlocked by Federal government land ownership.

There is a desperate need for affordable housing at a time when, once again, our nation is calling upon LANL for helping to meet its internal and international security needs.

This situation also exists around the New York City area, where Westchester County incomes unfairly raise the metropolitan average to the detriment of the metropolitan housing market. In that case, Congress agreed to separate Westchester County to ease the housing market situation. All I am asking in my bill is to accomplish the same goal by allowing Los Alamos County to stand on its own in terms of HUD median income requirements. My bill does not simultaneously lower the Santa Fe County income to its actual median, but, rather, allows Santa Fe County to continue to use the higher median, because the Santa Fe housing market is also very unusual, and the two-county average helps make more Santa Fe residents eligible for Federal assistance on many fronts.

I appreciate my colleagues attention to this matter, and I know the residents of Los Alamos County will be grateful for this assistance to allow more of them to make use of available HUD and other affordable housing assistance programs.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2540

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. LOW-INCOME FAMILIES DEFINITION.

Section 3(b)(2) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 (42 U.S.C. 1437a(b)(2)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "and for Los Alamos County in the State of New Mexico," after "State of New York,";

(2) by inserting ", Los Alamos," after "does not include Westchester";

(3) by inserting "; Los Alamos," after "portion included Westchester"; and

(4) by inserting before the period at the end the following: "; and Los Alamos County, New Mexico, in the Santa Fe metropolitan area".

By Mrs. FEINSTEIN (for herself, Mr. KYL, Mr. SESSIONS, and Mr. GRASSLEY):

S. 2541. A bill to amend title 18, United States Code, to establish penalties for aggravated identity theft, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise to introduce the Identity Theft Penalty Enhancement Act of 2002 along with my colleagues Senators KYL, SESSIONS, and GRASSLEY.

This bill is the culmination of efforts by the Department of Justice to craft legislation that will crack down on the most serious identity thefts in the Nation, and I am pleased to be working with the Justice Department on this legislation. In fact, Attorney General Ashcroft and I announced this bill together earlier this month.

This legislation will make it easier for prosecutors to target those identity thieves who, as is so often the case, steal an identity for the purpose of committing one or more other crimes.

Many serious crimes, even including terrorism, are aided by stolen identifies.

For instance, According to a January article in the Baltimore Sun, "six of the 19 hijackers from September 11 were using Social Security numbers illegally. Another man linked to al-Qaida, Lofti Raissi, a 27-year old Algerian pilot from London who is believed to have trained four of the suicide hijackers, was identified in British court papers as having used the Social Security number of Dorothy Hansen, a retired factory worker from Jersey City, NJ, who died in 1991."

Attorney General Ashcroft last week cited the example of an Algerian national now facing charges of identity theft who allegedly stole the identifies of 21 members of a health club in Cambridge, MA. The Algerian national then transferred those stolen identities to one of the individuals convicted in the failed plot to bomb Los Angeles International Airport in 1999.

In another case, Michelle Brown of Los Angeles had her Social Security number stolen in 1999, and it was used to charge $50,000 in her name, including a $32,000 truck, a $5,000 liposuction operation and a year-long residential lease. Even worse, while assuming Michelle's name, the perpetrator also became the object of an arrest warrant for drug smuggling in Texas.

In another case recently announced by the Justice Department, Joseph Kalady of Chicago was charged just last week with trying to fake his own death using the identity of another. Kalady, who was awaiting trial on charges of counterfeiting birth certificates, Social Security cards and driver's licenses last December, allegedly suffocated a homeless man and sought to have him cremated under Mr. Kalady's identity in order to fake his own death and avoid prosecution.

The stories go on and on, and it is those stories that make the legislation we introduce today so vital.

Let me just outline what this bill would do.

First, the bill would create a separate crime of "aggravated identity theft" for any person who uses the identity of another person to commit certain serious, federal crimes.

Specifically, the legislation would provide for an additional two-year penalty for any individual convicted of committing one of the following serious Federal crimes while using the identity of another person: stealing another's identity in order to illegally obtain citizenship in the United States; stealing another's identity to obtain a passport or visa; using another's identity to remain in the United States illegally after a visa has expired or an individual has been ordered to depart this country; stealing an individual's identity to commit bank, wire or mail fraud, or to steal from employee pension funds; and other serious federal crimes, all of them felonies.

Furthermore, the legislation would provide for an additional five year penalty for any individual that uses the stolen identity of another person to commit any one of the enumerated Federal terrorism crimes found in 18 U.S.C. 2332b(g)(5)(B). These crime include: the destruction of aircraft; the assassination or kidnapping of high level Federal officials; bombings; hostage taking; providing material support to terrorism organizations; and other terrorist crimes.

Aggravated Identity Theft is a separate crime, not just a sentencing enhancement. And the two-year and five-year penalties for aggravated identity theft must be served consecutively to the sentence for the underlying crime.

This bill also strengthens the ability of law enforcement to go after identity thieves and to provide their case.

First, the bill adds the word "possesses" to current law, in order to allow law enforcement to target individuals who possess the identity documents of another person with the intent to commit a crime. Current Federal law prohibits the transfer or use of false identity documents, but does not specifically ban the possession of hose documents with the intent to commit a crime. So if law enforcement discovers a stash of identity documents with the clear intent to use those documents to commit other crimes, the person who possesses those documents will now be subject to prosecution.

Second, the legislation amends current law to make it clear that if a person uses a false identity "in connection with" another Federal crime, and the intent of the underlying Federal crime is proven, then the intent to use the false identity to commitment that crime need not be separately proved. This simply makes the job of the prosecutor easier when an individual is convicted of a Federal crime and use a false identity in collection with that Crime.

This legislation also increases the maximum penalty for identity theft under current law from three years to five years.

And finally, the legislation we introduce today will clarify that the current 25-year maximum sentence for identity theft in facilitation of international terrorism also applies to identity theft in facilitation of domestic terrorism as well.

Identity theft is a crime on the rise in America, and it is a crime with severe consequences not only for the individual victims of the identity theft, but for every consumer and every financial institution as well.

Fraud losses at financial institutions are running well over one billion dollars annually. VISA alone reported identity theft related fraud losses of more than $114 million in 2000, a 43 percent increase in just four years.

And for victims, the losses can be staggering. The average loss from one identity theft now ranges about $18,000. Just imagine, somebody takes a credit card receipt out of a trash-can, makes a few calls, and before you know it you've lost $18,000.

And even though an individual victim may not be forced to pay in the end, the credit card companies, financial institutions and other businesses absorb the loss and pass it on to all consumers, the time and effort required to regain your identity can be quite debilitating. In fact, on average it takes a full year and a half to regain one's identity once stolen. In many instances, it can take many more years than that.

Additionally, some victims are even subject to criminal investigation or even arrest because a criminal has taken their identity and used it to commit a crime. In fact, the FTC tells us that they have received 1,300 complaints from victims alleging that they have been subject to investigation, arrest or even conviction as a result of their identity being stolen.

Identity theft comes in many forms and can be perpetrated in many ways, and that is why I have worked for many years now with Senator KYL and others to put some safeguards into the law that might better prevent the fraud from occurring in the first place, and to crack down on identity thieves.

And other legislation I have introduced would put into place certain procedural safeguards to protect credit card numbers, personal information, and other key data from potential identity thieves.

The legislation we introduce today is meant to beef up the law in terms of what happens after an identity theft takes place. In seriously enhancing the penalties for identity thieves who commit other Federal crimes, we mean to send a strong signal to all those who would commit this increasingly popular crime that the relatively free ride they have experienced in recent years is over. No longer will prosecutors decline to take identity theft seriously. No longer will identity thieves get off with just a slap on the wrist, if they are prosecuted at all. Under this legislation, penalties will be severe, prosecution will be more likely, and cases against identity thieves will be easier to prove.

Every day in this country serious criminals and criminal organizations are stealing and falsifying identities with the purpose of doing serious harm to common citizens, government officials, or even our Nation itself. It is time we did something about it, and this bill is an important step in that process.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill, and I ask unanimous consent that the text of this legislation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2541

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Identity Theft Penalty Enhancement Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. AGGRAVATED IDENTITY THEFT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Chapter 47 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding after section 1028, the following:

"§1028A. Aggravated identity theft

"(a) OFFENSES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Whoever, during and in relation to any felony violation enumerated in subsection (c), knowingly transfers, possesses, or uses, without lawful authority, a means of identification of another person shall, in addition to the punishment provided for such felony, be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of 2 years.

"(2) TERRORISM OFFENSE.—Whoever, during and in relation to any felony violation enumerated in section 2332b(g)(5)(B), knowingly transfers, possesses, or uses, without lawful authority, a means of identification of another person shall, in addition to the punishment provided for such felony, be sentenced to a term of imprisonment of 5 years.

"(b) CONSECUTIVE SENTENCE.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law—

"(1) a court shall not place on probation any person convicted of a violation of this section;

"(2) except as provided in paragraph (4), no term of imprisonment imposed on a person under this section shall run concurrently with any other term of imprisonment imposed on the person under any other provision of law, including any term of imprisonment imposed for the felony during which the means of identification was transferred, possessed, or used;

"(3) in determining any term of imprisonment to be imposed for the felony during which the means of identification was transferred, possessed, or used, a court shall not in any way reduce the term to be imposed for such crime so as to compensate for, or otherwise take into account, any separate term of imprisonment imposed or to be imposed for a violation of this section; and

"(4) a term of imprisonment imposed on a person for a violation of this section may, in the discretion of the court, run concurrently, in whole or in part, only with another term of imprisonment that is imposed by the court at the same time on that person for an additional violation of this section, provided that such discretion shall be exercised in accordance with any applicable guidelines and policy statements issued by the Sentencing Commission pursuant to section 994 of title 28.

"(c) DEFINITION.—For purposes of this section, the term 'felony violation enumerated in subsection (c)' means any offense that is a felony violation of—

"(1) section 664 (relating to theft from employee benefit plans);

"(2) section 911 (relating to false personation of citizenship);

"(3) section 922(a)(6) (relating to false statements in connection with the acquisition of a firearm);

"(4) any provision contained in this chapter (relating to fraud and false statements), other than this section or section 1028(a)(7);

"(5) any provision contained in chapter 63 (relating to mail, bank, and wire fraud);

"(6) any provision contained in chapter 69 (relating to nationality and citizenship);

"(7) any provision contained in chapter 75 (relating to passports and visas);

"(8) section 523 of the Gramm-Leach-Bliley Act (15 U.S.C. 6823) (relating to obtaining customer information by false pretenses);

"(9) section 243 or 266 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1253 and 1306) (relating to willfully failing to leave the United States after deportation and creating a counterfeit alien registration card);

"(10) any provision contained in chapter 8 of title II of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1321 et seq.) (relating to various immigration offenses); or

"(11) section 208, 1107(b), or 1128B(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 408, 1307(b), and 1320a-7b(a)) (relating to false statements relating to programs under the Act).".

(b) AMENDMENT TO CHAPTER ANALYSIS.—The table of sections for chapter 47 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 1028 the following new item:

"1028A. Aggravated identity theft.".

SEC. 3. AMENDMENTS TO EXISTING IDENTITY THEFT PROHIBITION.

Section 1028 of title 18, United States Code, is amended—

(B) by striking "abet," and inserting "abet, or in connection with,";

(2) in subsection (b)(1)(D), by striking "transfer" and inserting "transfer, possession,";

(3) in subsection (b)(2), by striking "three years" and inserting "5 years"; and

(4) in subsection (b)(4), by inserting after "facilitate" the following: "an act of domestic terrorism (as defined under section 2331(5) of this title) or".

By Ms. CANTWELL:

S. 2542. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to establish a medicare demonstration project under which incentive payments are provided in certain areas in order to stabilize, maintain, or increase access to primary care services for individuals enrolled under part B of such title; to the Committee on Finance.

Ms. CANTWELL. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Medicare Incentive Access Act of 2002. I am pleased that Congressman RICK LARSEN will introduce companion legislation in the U.S. House of Representatives.

As my colleagues may be hearing, Medicare beneficiaries across the country are reporting increasing difficulty finding a physician willing to accept their Medicare coverage. In fact, according to the American Medical Association, nearly 30 percent of family physicians nationwide are not accepting new Medicare patients, and 57 percent of Washington State physicians are limiting the number or dropping all Medicare patients from their practices.

There is no doubt that we need to reform Medicare, and I am particularly concerned with the Medicare physician fee schedule issued by the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, CMS. Although CMS insists that physician payment rates will increase more than the general rate of inflation, I am extremely concerned that any additional physician payment reductions may dramatically affect the quality of care offered to beneficiaries and further exacerbate the access problems so many of our constituents are now facing.

Unfortunately, there seems to be a prevailing idea that government programs should automatically pay less than private insurers for the same quality care. I am especially concerned that providers serving a disproportionate number of Medicare and Medicaid patients are facing unsustainable fee reductions.

In its March 2002 report, the Medicare Payment Advisory Committee, MedPAC, the independent Federal body that advises Congress on Medicare payment issues, weighed in on the current Medicare reimbursement rate debate. MedPAC observes that "provider entry and exit data provide information regarding adequacy of the current level of payments."

Keeping in mind that MedPAC's goal is to ensure that Medicare's payment rates cover the costs that efficient providers would incur in beneficiaries' care, it is especially important that MedPAC asserts that "evidence of widespread access or quality problems for beneficiaries may indicate that Medicare's payment rates are too low." In fact, MedPAC surveyed physicians nationwide, and found that 45 percent said that reimbursement levels for their Medicare fee-for-service patients are a very serious problem.

Every day I hear from my constituents that they are facing increasing difficulty in getting primary care services, and from physicians who can no longer afford to take on new Medicare patients.

One woman in Steilacoom, WA, contacted me about her son, a quadriplegic, who was recently informed that the doctor who has been treating him for a number of years will no longer be able to take Medicare patients.

Another woman from Lynden, WA, told me that her doctor is leaving his practice due to low Medicare reimbursements, her 89-year-old father has also been going to this same doctor and now the family cannot find a local doctor to take him.

When another constituent from Tacoma had to move into the city she had to call numerous physicians before she found one who would take a new Medicare patient.

One physician in Bellingham wrote me to say that one of his favorite patients will no longer see her family practitioner because she has Medicare. This doctor writes "when our seniors feel bad and ashamed about going in to see their physicians because their insurance" coverage is Medicare, I think that reflects very poorly on Medicare, our government, our government, that runs the program, and, to some extent, the caregivers who feel it is a financial burden to take care of our seniors. I couldn't agree more.

In fact, according to the Washington State Department of Health, in Clallam and Kittitas counties in my home State, only 20 percent of primary care physicians reported that they would take new Medicare patients. Yet, at the same time, most practices are accepting new patients with private employer-sponsored insurance. This suggests that general physician shortages are not the major cause underlying the fact that so many physician practices are closing or closed to Medicare patients.

I understand that there are basic fairness issues involved in the national debate over Medicare reimbursements. I am not pretending that the Senate will comprehensively address geographic differences or payment inequities this session. But I do believe we can look at more targeted, limited solutions to address the Medicare reimbursement and access issues on a demonstration level.

We already have a public health program in place, the primary care health professional shortage area designation, HPSA, to determine whether an area has a critical shortage of physicians available to serve the people living there. In fact, this is the measurement used in placing National Health Service Corps doctors in underserved areas.

A HPSA can be a distinct geographic area, such as a county, or a specific population group within the area, such as the low-income. However, in many shortage locations, access to care is a problem for only part of the population. For example, while most residents in a city may have adequate access to care, the elderly or poor may not. And while population HPSA designations measure access problems for Medicaid and low-income patients, migrant workers, and the homeless, there is no designation that specifically identifies or addresses Medicare-related demographics. My bill changes that.

The bill I am introducing today, the Medicare Incentive Access Act, will create a new Medicare Health Professional Shortage Area, HPSA, through a three-year, five-state HHS/Medicare demonstration project. Primary care doctors in an area designated as a Medicare HPSA will receive an automatic 40 percent bonus on all of their Medicare billings.

I believe it is vitally important that the federal government systematically examine different provider incentive programs in order to stabilize, maintain, and increase quality, efficient primary care services for Medicare beneficiaries. I want this demonstration program to examine how we can specifically preserve beneficiary access to primary care providers. The demonstration project will also examine what level of incentive is necessary to prevent future access problems.

I want to point out that while current law prohibits multiple HPSA designations, the demonstration project will not affect current HPSA designations needed for other programs, such as Community Health Centers. In addition, physicians in states participating in the Medicare HPSA demonstration project will not be able also to receive payments under the Medicare Incentive Payment program, which bases its ten percent bonus on geographic shortage areas. As I mentioned earlier, geographic shortage areas actually have nothing to do with measuring Medicare-related access issues.

There is an abundance of excellent research currently underway at the six Federal rural health research centers on all Medicare provider reimbursement issues. These research centers are already set up for demonstration analyses like the one required under my bill. I sincerely appreciate the help Gary Hart, Ph.D has provided me in developing this proposal and discussing other, more comprehensive, means by which to look at different Medicare payment and access issues. Dr. Hart is the director of the WWAMI Rural Health Research Center at the University of Washington, which is largely focusing on rural physician payments.

I also want to thank Vince Schueler and Laura Olexa of the Office of Community and Rural Health and the Washington Department of Health, for providing invaluable assistance in understanding rural health problems, the Federal HPSA designation, and access barriers for Medicare beneficiaries, especially in rural areas of the State. After we began discussing this problem, they went out of their way to do additional surveys in rural counties to measure the most current access to primary care physicians for both Medicaid and Medicare patients.

Finally, I want to thank the Washington State Medical Association and Len Eddinger for their advice and assistance on this issue. I am delighted that the WSMA has endorsed this legislation, and I ask unanimous consent that its letter of support be added in the record at the end of my statement.

The fact of the matter is that there is a crisis at hand regarding Medicare benefits, and Medicare payments, and as a country, we simply have not invested as we should in health care.

I sincerely believe that all individuals should have access to quality and affordable medical care including the ability to visit doctors whom they trust. It will do the country little good to provide guaranteed health care for the elderly and disabled if physicians are unwilling to work with Medicare patients because of inadequate payment policies.

I believe the bill I am introducing today, the Medicare Incentive Act, is a good approach to examining these very important issues. I encourage my colleagues to take a look at this bill, and to join me in cosponsoring it.

I ask unanimous consent that a letter of support be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON STATE MEDICAL ASSOCIATION,
May 13, 2002.

Hon. MARIA CANTWELL,
U.S. Senate, Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR CANTWELL: On behalf of the 8,800 members of the Washington State Medical Association (WSMA), please accept my sincere thanks for all the work you are doing to improve the Medicare program.

The financial condition of the health care delivery system in Washington state is as poor as I have seen in my nearly 25 years of practice. As I travel the state and speak with my colleagues, it has become clear that something dramatic and sustainable must be done to ensure the long viability of Medicare and Medicaid.

At our May Executive Committee meeting, we had an opportunity to discuss the draft of your proposed legislation to develop demonstration projects to enhance physician reimbursement within established Medicare Health Professional Shortage Areas. We view the approach as extremely creative and well worth the time and effort of investigation. Our hope is that successful implementation of this scenario will lead to incentives across the entire physician community.

Senator, there is no doubt that declining reimbursements in the Medicare and Medicaid programs are putting enormous stress on medical practices and causing physicians to limit patients who are eligible for these programs. We look forward to working with you and your staff to alleviate this pressing social problem.

Please let us know what we can do to help by contacting Len Eddinger, WSMA's Director of Public Policy, in the Olympia office of the WSMA at (360) 352-4848 or be email: len@wsma.org.

Sincerely,
SAMUEL W. CULLISON, MD,
President.

By Mr. LEVIN (for himself and Mr. DEWINE):

S. 2544. A bill to amend the Federal Water Pollution Control Act to authorize the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to make grants for remediation of sediment contamination in areas of concern, to authorize assistance for research an development of innovative technologies for such remediation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, the General Accounting Office has recently completed a study on the cleanup of Contaminated Areas in the Great Lakes. While it is no surprise to those of us who live in the Great Lakes region, GAO found that there has been "slow progress of cleanup efforts".

For those of you who live outside the Great Lakes region, Areas of Concern are sites in the Great Lakes that do not meet the water quality goals established by the United States and Canada in the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement. The primary reason that these areas fail to meet water quality goals is the result of contaminated sediments, a result of the industrialization of the mid-west. In order to meet the water quality goals, the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement binds us to an identified cleanup process focused around Remdial Action Plans, RAPs.

RAPs define the environmental problem, evaluate remedial measures, and identify a process for moving forward with cleanup. The RAP process relies on State and public involvement, and RAPs need the financial support of the Federal Government.

The GAO reports that the RAP process is often disregarded by the states and EPA. The progress that is being made to cleanup the Areas of Concern is being made not under the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement but under other laws such as Superfund. EPA has failed to provide oversight responsibility for RAPs and does not provide nearly enough financial resources for RAPs. In addition to these problems associated with EPA, there is no way to implement RAPs because there is no pot of money to do so and no established procedure to follow.

There are 13 areas of concern in the State of Michigan which result in fish advisories, degradation of fish and wildlife populations, taste and odor problems with drinking water, beach closures, and bird and animal deformities or reproductive problems. These environmental problems are too grave considering the fact that the Great Lakes holds one-fifth of the world's freshwater, supplies drinking water to 33 million people, and provides a $2 billion fishery.

So today, with my colleague from Ohio, Senator DEWINE, I am introducing the Great Lakes Legacy Act to authorize $50 million per year in grants to States to cleanup Areas of Concern and implement RAPs. This legislation will also require EPA to report to Congress within 1 year on how it plans to provide the oversight needed to make sure that the Areas of Concern will meet water quality goals.

The problem of contaminated sediments in the Great Lakes has been known for decades, and I hope that my colleagues will support this legislation to hopefully cleanup Areas of Concern.

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, I rise today to discuss a very important environmental issue, not just to my home State of Ohio, but to our entire Nation, and that issue is the protection of our Great Lakes. These lakes are a natural treasure that hold one-fifth of the world's freshwater, produce $2 billion per year in fish, and provide drinking water to 33 million people.

Yesterday, the GAO released a report on the progress of cleanup in polluted Areas of Concern. These Areas of Concern, or AOCs, are sites in the Great Lakes that do not meet water quality goals. Many years ago, the United States and Canada identified 44 AOCs in the Great Lakes and agreed to a cleanup process.

In my home State of Ohio, there are four AOCs, the Maumee River, the Ashtabula River, the Black River, and the Cuyahoga River. These areas suffer fish and wildlife consumption restrictions, fish and wildlife reproductive problems and deformities, algal blooms, restrictions on drinking water consumption, and beach closings. These environmental problems need to be addressed as quickly as possible.

Unfortunately, cleanup has been very slow. The GAO report found that the Environmental Protection Agency, EPA, has failed to take oversight responsibility, Federal funding has declined steadily over the years, and States have abandoned the cleanup process.

These results are disturbing to say the least. This is why Senator LEVIN and I, as Co-Chairs of the Senate Great Lakes Task Force, are introducing a bill today that would authorize $50 million per year in grants to States for the cleanup of Areas of Concern. Cleanup work includes monitoring and evaluating sites, remediating sediment, and preventing further contamination. This legislation would authorize the EPA to conduct research and development of innovative approaches, technologies, and techniques for the remediation of sediment in the Great Lakes and would authorize the Great Lakes National Program Office to carry out a public information grant program to provide information about the contaminated sediments, as well as activities to clean-up the site. Finally, as the GAO report recommends, our bill would require the EPA to submit a report to Congress on the actions, time periods, and resources that are necessary for the EPA to oversee the Remedial Action Plans at Areas of Concern.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation and honor an international commitment to protect a truly great natural resource. We must honor our commitment to future generations and do all we can to protect the Lakes for our children and grandchildren. We owe it to them.

By Mr. DOMENICI (for himself, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. LUGAR, Ms. LANDRIEU, Mr. HAGEL, Mr. BINGAMAN, Mr. MURKOWSKI, and Ms. MIKULSKI):

S. 2545. A bill to extend and improve United States programs on the proliferation of nuclear materials, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise to introduce a new bill, the Nuclear Nonproliferation Act of 2002. Senators BIDEN, LUGAR, LANDRIEU, HAGEL, MURKOWSKI and BINGAMAN—the junior Senator from my State—join me in cosponsoring this important piece of legislation.

The end of the Soviet Union in 1991 started a chain of events, which in the long term can lead to vastly improved global stability. Concerns about global confrontations were greatly reduced after that event.

But with that event, the Soviet system of guards, guns, and a highly regimented society that had effectively controlled their weapons of mass destruction, along with the materials and expertise to create them, was significantly weakened. Even today, with Russia's economy well on the road to recovery, there's still plenty of room for concerns about the security of these Russian assets.

The tragic events of September 11 brought the United States into the world of international terrorism, a world from which we had been very sheltered. Even with the successes of the subsequent war on terrorism, there's still ample reason for concern that the forces of Al Qaeda and other international terrorists are seeking other avenues to disrupt peaceful societies around the world.

In some sense, the events of September 11 set a new gruesome standard against which terrorists may measure their future successes. There should be no question that these groups would use weapons of mass destruction if they could acquire them and deliver them here or to countless other international locations.

One of our strongest allies in the current war on terrorism has been the Russian Federation. Assistance from the Russians and other states of the former Soviet Union has been vital in many aspects of the conflict in Afghanistan.

President Putin and President Bush have forged a strong working relationship, and the current summit meeting is another measure of interest in increased cooperation. As this new bill seeks to strengthen our nonproliferation programs, it provides many options for actions to be conducted through joint partnerships between the Russian Federation and the United States that build on this increased cooperative spirit.

The Nunn-Lugar program of 1991 and the Nunn-Lugar Domenici legislation of 1996 provided vital support for cooperative programs to reduce the risks that weapons of mass destruction might become available to terrorists. They established a framework for cooperative progress that has served our nation and the world very well. But despite their successes, there remain many actions that should be taken to further reduce these threats.

The report by Howard Baker and Lloyd Cutler is one of the most comprehensive calls for increased attention to these risks. That report, which was written well before September 11, and many others have suggested additional actions that could and should be taken beyond the two original bills.

One of the most important realizations from September 11 concerns the global reach of the forces of terrorism. It's now clear that our nuclear nonproliferation programs should extend far beyond the states of the former Soviet Union.

This new bill expands and strengthens many of the programs established earlier, to further reduce threats to global peace. It expands the scope of several programs to world-wide coverage. It focuses on threats of a nuclear or radiological type, which fall within the expertise of the National Nuclear Security Administration of the Department of Energy.

It expands programs to include the safety and security of nuclear facilities and radioactive materials around the world, wherever countries are willing to enter into cooperative arrangements for threat reduction. It recognizes that devices that disperse radioactive materials, so-called "dirty bombs," can represent a real threat to modern societies.

Dirty bombs could be used as weapons of mass terror, property contamination, and economic disaster. We need better detection systems for the presence of dirty bombs that are appropriate to the wide range of delivery systems for such a weapon, from trucks to boats to containers. And we need to be far better prepared to deal with the consequences of such an attack.

The new legislation includes provisions to accelerate and expand existing programs for disposition of fissile materials. These materials, of course, represent not only a concern with dirty bombs, but also the even larger threat of use in crude nuclear weapons.

It includes a program that should help accelerate the conversion of highly enriched uranium into forms unusable for weapons. It addresses one of the major concerns associated with this material, that both the United States in the Atoms for Peace program as well as the Soviet Union, provided highly enriched uranium to many countries as fuel for research reactors. That fuel represents a proliferation risk today.

It authorizes new programs for global management of nuclear materials, in cooperation with other nations and with the International Atomic Energy Agency. It recognizes that modern societies use radioactive materials as essential tools in many ways, and offers assistance in providing new controls on the most dangerous of these materials.

It suggests that many of the program elements involve international cooperation with the Russian Federation and with other nations. In fact, it recognizes that the global nature of the current threats requires such cooperation, and provides authorizations for the Secretary of Energy and Secretary of State to offer significant help to other nations. In many cases, we cannot accomplish these programs without such cooperation.

This new bill includes provisions extending the first responder training programs, originally created under Nunn-Lugar-Domenici. These programs have already made real contributions. In fact, the training provided under this program in New York City helped mitigate the catastrophe there on September 11. That program was authorized for only 5 years in the original legislation. This bill extends that authorization for another 10 years for first responder preparation in various communities and cities of America.

The new bill requires annual reports demonstrating that all our nonproliferation programs are well coordinated and integrated. Countless reports have called for improved coordination of all federal nonproliferation programs. The original call for this coordination in the Nunn-Lugar-Domenici legislation was completely ignored by the Clinton administration.

The report requires an annual statement of the extent of coordination between federally funded and private activities. That is very important, because of the important work being done by private organizations, like the Nuclear Threat Initiative, that are providing critical assistance toward similar nonproliferation goals.

With this new bill, our programs to counter threats of nuclear and radiological terrorism will be significantly strengthened and risks to the United States and our international partners can be greatly reduced.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2545

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Nuclear Nonproliferation Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. FINDINGS.

Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Whereas the focus on the security of radioactive materials before the events of September 11, 2001, was on fissile materials, it is now widely recognized that the United States must expand its concerns to the safety and security of nuclear facilities, and the radioactive materials in use or stored at such facilities, that may be attractive to terrorists for use in radiological dispersal devices as well as in crude nuclear weapons. Such materials include all radioactive materials in the nuclear fuel cycle (such as nuclear waste and spent fuel) as well as industrial and medical radiation sources. Steps must be taken not only to prevent the acquisition of such materials by terrorists, but also to rapidly mitigate the consequences of the use of such devices and weapons on public health and safety, facilities, and the economy.

(2) The technical activities of United States efforts to combat radiological terrorism should be centered in the National Nuclear Security Administration because it has the nuclear expertise and specialized facilities and activities needed to develop new and improved protection and consequence mitigation systems and technologies. New technologies and systems should be developed by the Administration in partnership with other agencies and first responders that also have the operational responsibility to deal with the threat of radiological terrorism.

(3) Fissile materials are a special class of materials that present a range of threats, from utilization in improvised nuclear devices to incorporation in radiological dispersal devices. The Defense Against Weapons of Mass Destruction Act of 1996 (title XIV of Public Law 104–201; 50 U.S.C. 2301 et seq.) focused on cooperative programs with the former Soviet Union to control such materials. It is critical that these efforts continue and that efforts commence to develop a sustainable system by which improvements in such efforts are retained far into the future. Development of such a sustainable system must occur in partnership with the Russian Federation and the other states of the former Soviet Union.

(4) The Russian Federation and the other states of the former Soviet Union are not the only locations of fissile materials around the world. Cooperative programs to control potential threats from any of such materials should be expanded to other international partners. Programs, coordinated with the International Atomic Energy Agency and other international partners, should be initiated to optimize control of such materials.

(5) The Agreement Between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Russian Federation Concerning the Disposition of Highly Enriched Uranium Extracted from Nuclear Weapons, signed at Washington on February 18, 1993 (the so-called "HEU deal"), represents an effective approach to reducing the stocks of the Russian Federation of highly enriched uranium (HEU). However, such stocks are much larger than contemplated in the Agreement, and many other nations also possess quantities of highly enriched uranium. Global stability would be enhanced by modification of all available highly enriched uranium into forms not suitable for weapons. Efforts toward such modification of highly enriched uranium should include expansion of programs to deal with research reactors fueled by highly enriched uranium, which were provided by the United States under the Atoms for Peace program and the Atomic Energy Act of 1954 and similarly encouraged by the former Soviet Union.

(6) Expansion of commercial nuclear power around the world will lead to increasing global stocks of reactor grade plutonium and fission products in spent fuel. If improperly controlled, such materials can contribute to proliferation and represent health and environmental risks. The international safeguards on such materials established through the International Atomic Energy Agency must be strengthened to deal with such concerns. The National Nuclear Security Administration is the appropriate Federal agent for dealing with technical matters relating to the safeguard and management of nuclear materials. The United States, in cooperation with the Russian Federation and the International Atomic Energy Agency, should lead the international community in developing proliferation-resistant nuclear energy technologies and strengthened international safeguards that facilitate global management of all nuclear materials.

(7) Safety and security at nuclear facilities are inextricably linked. Damage to such facilities by sabotage or accident, or the theft or diversion of nuclear materials at such facilities, will have substantial adverse consequences worldwide. It is in the United States national interest to assist countries that cannot afford proper safety and security for their nuclear plants, facilities, and materials in providing proper safety and security for such plants, facilities, and materials, and in developing the sustainable safety and security cultures that are required for the safe and secure use of nuclear energy for peaceful purposes. The National Nuclear Security Administration is the appropriate Federal agent for dealing with the technical aspects of providing for international nuclear safety that must be coordinated with safeguards of nuclear materials.

(8) The United States has provided sealed sources of nuclear materials to many countries through the Atoms for Peace program and the Atomic Energy Act of 1954. These sources remain property of the United States. A recent report of the Inspector General of the Department of Energy, entitled "Accounting for Sealed Sources of Nuclear Material Provided to Foreign Countries", noted that a total of 2–3 kilograms of plutonium were in sources provided to 33 nations and that the Department can not account fully for these sources. Many of these sources are small enough to present little risk, but a careful review of sources and recipients could identify concerns requiring special attention. In addition, the former Soviet Union supplied sealed sources of nuclear materials for research and industrial purposes, including some to other countries. These sources contain a variety of radioactive materials and are often uncontrolled, missing, or stolen. The problem of dangerous radiation sources is international, and a solution to the problem will require substantial cooperation between the United States, the Russian Federation, and other countries of the former Soviet Union, as well as international organizations such as the International Atomic Energy Agency. The International Nuclear Safety and Cooperation program and the Materials Protection, Control, and Accounting program of the National Nuclear Security Administration address such matters. However those programs need to be strengthened.

(9) Authorization for domestic testing of preparedness for emergencies involving nuclear, radiological, chemical, and biological weapons provided by section 1415 of the Defense Against Weapons of Mass Destruction Act of 1996 (50 U.S.C. 2315) has expired. These tests have been invaluable in preparing first responders for a range of potential threats and should be continued.

(10) Coordination of all Federal nonproliferation programs should be improved to maximize efficiency and effectiveness of programs in multiple agencies. Congress needs a comprehensive annual report detailing the nonproliferation policies, strategies, and budgets of the Federal Government. Cooperation among Federal and private nonproliferation programs is critical to maximize the benefits of such programs.

(11) The United States response to terrorism must be as rapid as possible. In carrying out their antiterrorism activities, the departments and agencies of the Federal Government, and State and local governments, need rapid access to the specialized expertise and facilities at the national laboratories and sites of the Department of Energy. Multiple agency sponsorship of these important national assets would help achieve this objective.

SEC. 3. TESTING OF PREPAREDNESS FOR EMERGENCIES INVOLVING NUCLEAR, RADIOLOGICAL, CHEMICAL, OR BIOLOGICAL WEAPONS.

(a) EXTENSION OF TESTING.—Section 1415 of the Defense Against Weapons of Mass Destruction Act of 1996 (title XIV of Public Law 104–201; 110 Stat. 2720; 50 U.S.C. 2315) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(2), by striking "of five successive fiscal years beginning with fiscal year 1997" and inserting "of fiscal years 1997 through 2013"; and

(2) in subsection (b)(2), by striking "of five successive fiscal years beginning with fiscal year 1997" and inserting "of fiscal years 1997 through 2013".

(b) CONSTRUCTION OF EXTENSION WITH DESIGNATION OF ATTORNEY GENERAL AS LEAD OFFICIAL.—The amendment made by subsection (a) may not be construed as modifying the designation of the President entitled "Designation of the Attorney General as the Lead Official for the Emergency Response Assistance Program Under Sections 1412 and 1415 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1997", dated April 6, 2000, designating the Attorney General to assume programmatic and funding responsibilities for the Emergency Response Assistance Program under sections 1412 and 1415 of the Defense Against Weapons of Mass Destruction Act of 1996.

SEC. 4. PROGRAM ON TECHNOLOGY FOR PROTECTION FROM NUCLEAR OR RADIOLOGICAL TERRORISM.

(a) PROGRAM REQUIRED.—(1) The Administrator for Nuclear Security shall carry out a program on technology for protection from nuclear or radiological terrorism, including technology for the detection, identification, assessment, control, disposition, consequence management, and consequence mitigation of the dispersal of radiological materials or of nuclear terrorism.

(2) The Administrator shall carry out the program as part of the nonproliferation and verification research and development programs of the National Nuclear Security Administration.

(b) PROGRAM ELEMENTS.—In carrying out the program required by subsection (a), the Administrator shall—

(1) provide for the development of technologies to respond to threats or incidents involving nuclear or radiological terrorism in the United States;

(2) demonstrate applications of the technologies developed under paragraph (1), including joint demonstrations with the Office of Homeland Security and other appropriate Federal agencies;

(3) provide, where feasible, for the development in cooperation with the Russian Federation of technologies to respond to nuclear or radiological terrorism in the former states of the Soviet Union, including the demonstration of technologies so developed; and

(4) provide, where feasible, assistance to other countries on matters relating to nuclear or radiological terrorism, including—

(A) the provision of technology and assistance on means of addressing nuclear or radiological incidents;

(B) the provision of assistance in developing means for the safe disposal of radioactive materials;

(C) in coordination with the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, the provision of assistance in developing the regulatory framework for licensing and developing programs for the protection and control of radioactive sources; and

(D) the provision of assistance in evaluating the radiological sources identified as not under current accounting programs in the report of the Inspector General of the Department of Energy entitled "Accounting for Sealed Sources of Nuclear Material Provided to Foreign Countries", and in identifying and controlling radiological sources that represent significant risks.

(c) REQUIREMENTS FOR INTERNATIONAL ELEMENTS OF PROGRAM.—(1) In carrying out activities in accordance with paragraphs (3) and (4) of subsection (b), the Administrator shall consult with—

(A) the Secretary of Defense, Secretary of State, and Secretary of Commerce; and

(B) the International Atomic Energy Agency.

(2) The Administrator shall encourage joint leadership between the United States and the Russian Federation of activities on the development of technologies under subsection (b)(4).

(d) INCORPORATION OF RESULTS IN EMERGENCY RESPONSE ASSISTANCE PROGRAM.—To the maximum extent practicable, the technologies and information developed under the program required by subsection (a) shall be incorporated into the program on responses to emergencies involving nuclear and radiological weapons carried out under section 1415 of the Defense Against Weapons of Mass Destruction Act of 1996 (title XIV of Public Law 104–201; 50 U.S.C. 2315).

(e) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated for the Department of Energy for the National Nuclear Security Administration to carry out activities under this section amounts as follows:

(1) For fiscal year 2003, $40,000,000.

(2) For each fiscal year after fiscal year 2003, such sums as may be necessary in such fiscal year.

SEC. 5. EXPANSION OF INTERNATIONAL MATERIALS PROTECTION, CONTROL, AND ACCOUNTING PROGRAM.

(a) EXPANSION OF PROGRAM TO ADDITIONAL COUNTRIES AUTHORIZED.—The Secretary of Energy may expand the International Materials Protection, Control, and Accounting (MPC&A) program of the Department of Energy to encompass countries outside the Russian Federation and the independent states of the former Soviet Union.

(b) NOTICE TO CONGRESS OF USE OF FUNDS FOR ADDITIONAL COUNTRIES.—Not later than 30 days after the Secretary obligates funds for the International Materials Protection, Control, and Accounting program, as expanded under subsection (a), for activities in or with respect to a country outside the Russian Federation and the independent states of the former Soviet Union, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a notice of the obligation of such funds for such activities.

(c) ASSISTANCE TO DEPARTMENT OF STATE FOR NUCLEAR MATERIALS SAFEGUARDS PROGRAMS.—(1) As part of the International Materials Protection, Control, and Accounting program, the Secretary of Energy may provide technical assistance to the Secretary of State in the efforts of the Secretary of State to assist other nuclear weapons states to review and improve their nuclear materials safeguards programs.

(2) The technical assistance provided under paragraph (1) may include the sharing of technology or methodologies to the states referred to in that paragraph. Any such sharing shall—

(A) be consistent with the treaty obligations of the United States; and

(B) take into account the sovereignty of the state concerned and its weapons programs, as well the sensitivity of any information involved regarding United States weapons or weapons systems.

(3) The Secretary of Energy may include the Russian Federation in activities under paragraph (1) if the Secretary determines that the experience of the Russian Federation under the International Materials Protection, Control, and Accounting program with the Russian Federation would make the participation of the Russian Federation in such activities useful in providing technical assistance under that paragraph.

(d) Plan for Accelerated Conversion or Return of Weapons-Usable Nuclear Materials.—(1) The Secretary shall build on efforts to accelerate the conversion or return to the country of origin of all weapons-usable nuclear materials located in research reactors and other facilities outside the country of origin.

(2) The plan under paragraph (1) for nuclear materials of origin in the Soviet Union shall be developed in consultation with the Russian Federation.

(3) As part of the plan under paragraph (1), the Secretary shall assist the research reactors and facilities referred to in that paragraph in upgrading their materials protection, control, and accounting procedures until the weapons-usable nuclear materials in such reactors and facilities are converted or returned in accordance with that paragraph.

(4) The provision of assistance under paragraph (3) shall be closely coordinated with ongoing efforts of the International Atomic Energy Agency for the same purpose.

(e) Radiological Dispersal Device Protection, Control, and Accounting.—(1) The Secretary shall establish within the International Materials Protection, Control, and Accounting program a program on the protection, control, and accounting of materials usable in radiological dispersal devices.

(2) The program under paragraph (1) shall include—

(A) an identification of vulnerabilities regarding radiological materials worldwide;

(B) the mitigation of vulnerabilities so identified through appropriate security enhancements; and

(C) an acceleration of efforts to recover and control so-called "orphaned" radiological sources.

(3) The program under paragraph (1) shall be known as the Radiological Dispersal Device Protection, Control, and Accounting program.

(f) Authorization of Appropriations.—There is authorized to be appropriated for the Department of Energy to carry out activities under this section amounts as follows:

(1) For fiscal year 2003, $10,000,000.

(2) For each fiscal year after fiscal year 2003, such sums as may be necessary in such fiscal year.

SEC. 6. ACCELERATED DISPOSITION OF HIGHLY ENRICHED URANIUM AND PLUTONIUM.

(a) Program Authorized.—(1) The Secretary of Energy may carry out a program to pursue with the Russian Federation, and any other nation that possesses highly enriched uranium, options for blending such uranium so that the concentration of U-235 in such uranium is below 20 percent.

(2) The options pursued under paragraph (1) shall include expansion of the Material Consolidation and Conversion program of the Department of Energy to include—

(A) additional facilities for the blending of highly enriched uranium; and

(B) additional centralized secure storage facilities for highly enriched uranium, as so blended.

(b) Incentives Regarding Highly Enriched Uranium in Russia.—As part of the options pursued under subsection (a) with the Russian Federation, the Secretary may provide financial and other incentives for the removal of all highly enriched uranium from any particular facility in the Russian Federation, if the Secretary determines that such incentives will facilitate the consolidation of highly enriched uranium in the Russian Federation to the best-secured facilities.

(c) Construction with HEU Disposition Agreement.—Nothing in this section may be construed as terminating, modifying, or otherwise effecting requirements for the disposition of highly enriched uranium under the Agreement Between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Russian Federation Concerning the Disposition of Highly Enriched Uranium Extracted from Nuclear Weapons, signed at Washington on February 18, 1993.

(d) Priority in Blending Activities.—In pursuing options under this section, the Secretary shall give priority to the blending of highly enriched uranium from weapons, though highly enriched uranium from sources other than weapons may also be blended.

(e) Transfer of Highly Enriched Uranium and Plutonium to United States.—(1) As part of the program under subsection (a), the Secretary may, upon the request of any nation—

(A) purchase highly enriched uranium or weapons grade plutonium from the nation at a price determined by the Secretary;

(B) transport any uranium or plutonium so purchased to the United States; and

(C) store any uranium or plutonium so transported in the United States.

(2) The Secretary is not required to blend any highly enriched uranium purchased under paragraph (1)(A) in order to reduce the concentration of U-235 in such uranium to below 20 percent. Amounts authorized to be appropriated by subsection (m) may not be used for purposes of blending such uranium.

(f) Transfer of Highly Enriched Uranium to Russia.—(1) As part of the program under subsection (a), the Secretary may encourage nations with highly enriched uranium to transfer such uranium to the Russian Federation for disposition under this section.

(2) The Secretary shall pay any nation that transfers highly enriched uranium to the Russian Federation under this subsection an amount determined appropriate by the Secretary.

(3) The Secretary shall bear the cost of any blending and storage of uranium transferred to the Russian Federation under this subsection, including any costs of blending and storage under a contract under subsection (g).

(g) Contracts for Blending and Storage of Highly Enriched Uranium in Russia.—As part of the program under subsection (a), the Secretary may enter into one or more contracts with the Russian Federation—

(1) to blend in the Russian Federation highly enriched uranium of the Russian Federation and highly enriched uranium transferred to the Russian Federation under subsection (f); or

(2) to store the blended material in the Russian Federation.

(h) Limitation on Release for Sale of Blended Uranium.—Uranium blended under this section may not be released for sale until the earlier of—

(1) January 1, 2014; or

(2) the date on which the Secretary certifies that such uranium can be absorbed into the global market without undue disruption to the uranium mining industry in the United States.

(i) Proceeds of Sale of Uranium Blended by Russia.—Upon the sale by the Russian Federation of uranium blended under this section by the Russian Federation, the Secretary may elect to receive from the proceeds of such sale an amount not to exceed 75 percent of the costs incurred by the Department of Energy under subsections (b), (f), and (g).

(j) Report on Status of Program.—Not later than July 1, 2003, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the status of the program carried out under the authority in subsection (a). The report shall include—

(1) a description of international interest in the program;

(2) schedules and operational details of the program; and

(3) recommendations for future funding for the program.

(k) Disposition of Plutonium in Russia.—(1) The Secretary may assist the Russian Federation in any fiscal year with the plutonium disposition program of the Russian Federation (as established under the agreement referred to in paragraph (2)) if the President certifies to Congress at the beginning of such fiscal year that the United States and the Russian Federation have entered into a binding agreement on the disposition of the weapons grade plutonium of the Russian Federation.

(2) The agreement referred to in this paragraph is the Agreement Between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the Russian Federation Concerning the Management and Disposition of Plutonium Designated As No Longer Required For Defense Purposes and Related Cooperation, signed August 29, 2000, and September 1, 2000.

(3) The program under paragraph (1)—

(A) shall include transparent verifiable steps;

(B) shall proceed at roughly the rate of the United States program for the disposition of plutonium;

(C) shall provide for cost-sharing among a variety of countries;

(D) shall provide for contributions by the Russian Federation;

(E) shall include steps over the near term to provide high confidence that the schedules for the disposition of plutonium of the Russian Federation will be achieved; and

(F) may include research on more speculative long-term options for the future disposition of the plutonium of the Russian Federation in addition to the near-term steps under subparagraph (E).

(l) Highly Enriched Uranium Defined.—In this section, the term "highly enriched uranium" means uranium with a concentration of U-235 of 20 percent or more.

(m) Authorization of Appropriations.—There is authorized to be appropriated for the Department of Energy to carry out activities under this section amounts as follows:

(1) For fiscal year 2003—

(A) for activities under subsections (a) through (i), $100,000,000; and

(B) for activities under subsection (k), $200,000,000.

(2) For each fiscal year after fiscal year 2003, such sums as may be necessary in such fiscal year for activities under subsection (a) through (i).

SEC. 7. STRENGTHENED INTERNATIONAL SAFEGUARDS FOR NUCLEAR MATERIALS AND SAFETY FOR NUCLEAR OPERATIONS.

(a) Report on Options for International Program To Strengthen Safeguards and Safety.—(1) Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Administrator for Nuclear Security shall submit to Congress a report on options for an international program to develop strengthened safeguards for all nuclear materials and safety for nuclear operations.

(2) Each option for an international program under paragraph (1) may provide that the program is jointly led by the United States, the Russian Federation, and the International Atomic Energy Agency.

(3) The Administrator shall include with the report on options for an international program under paragraph (1) a description and assessment of various management alternatives for the international program. If any option requires Federal funding or legislation to implement, the report shall also include recommendations for such funding or legislation, as the case may be.

(b) Joint Programs With Russia on Proliferation Resistant Nuclear Technologies.—The Administrator shall pursue with the Russian Federation joint programs between the United States and the Russian Federation on proliferation resistant nuclear technologies.

(c) Participation of Office of Nuclear Energy Science.—The Administrator shall consult with the Office of Nuclear Energy Science and Technology of the Department of Energy in the development of options under subsection (a) and joint programs under (b).

(d) Participation of International Technical Experts.—In developing options under subsection (a), the Administrator shall, in consultation with the Russian Federation and the International Atomic Energy Agency, convene and consult with an appropriate group of international technical experts on the development of various options for technologies to provide strengthened safeguards for nuclear materials and safety for nuclear operations, including the implementation of such options.

(e) Assistance Regarding Hostile Insiders and Aircraft Impacts.—(1) The Secretary of Energy may, utilizing appropriate expertise of the Department of Energy, provide assistance to nuclear facilities abroad on the interdiction of hostile insiders at such facilities in order to prevent incidents arising from the disablement of the vital systems of such facilities.

(2) The Secretary may carry out a joint program with the Russian Federation and other countries to address and mitigate concerns on the impact of aircraft with nuclear facilities in such countries.

(f) Assistance to IAEA in Strengthening International Nuclear Safeguards.—The Secretary may expand and accelerate the programs of the Department of Energy to support the International Atomic Energy Agency in strengthening international nuclear safeguards.

(g) Authorization of Appropriations.—There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the Department of Energy to carry out activities under this section amounts as follows:

(1) For fiscal year 2003—

(A) for activities under subsections (a) through (e), $20,000,000, of which $5,000,000 shall be available for sabotage protection for nuclear power plants and other nuclear facilities abroad; and

(B) for activities under subsection (f), $30,000,000.

(2) For each fiscal year after fiscal year 2003, such sums as may be necessary in such fiscal year.

SEC. 8. EXPORT CONTROL PROGRAMS.

(a) Authority To Pursue Options for Strengthening Export Control Programs.—The Secretary of Energy may pursue in the former Soviet Union and other regions of concern, principally in South Asia, the Middle East, and the Far East, options for accelerating programs that assist countries in such regions in improving their domestic export control programs for materials, technologies, and expertise relevant to the construction or use of a nuclear or radiological dispersal device.

(b) Authorization of Appropriations.—There is authorized to be appropriated for the Department of Energy to carry out activities under this section amounts as follows:

(1) For fiscal year 2003, $5,000,000.

(2) For each fiscal year after fiscal year 2003, such sums as may be necessary in such fiscal year.

SEC. 9. IMPROVEMENTS TO NUCLEAR MATERIALS PROTECTION, CONTROL, AND ACCOUNTING PROGRAM OF THE RUSSIAN FEDERATION.

(a) Revised Focus for Program.—(1) The Secretary of Energy shall work cooperatively with the Russian Federation to update and improve the Joint Action Plan for the Materials Protection, Control, and Accounting programs of the Department and the Russian Federation Ministry of Atomic Energy.

(2) The updated plan shall shift the focus of the upgrades of the nuclear materials protection, control, and accounting program of the Russian Federation in order to assist the Russian Federation in achieving, as soon as practicable but not later than January 1, 2012, a sustainable safeguards system for the nuclear materials of the Russian Federation that is supported solely by the Russian Federation.

(b) Pace of Program.—The Secretary shall work with the Russian Federation, including applicable institutes in Russia, to pursue acceleration of the nuclear materials protection, control, and accounting programs at nuclear defense facilities in the Russian Federation.

(c) Transparency of Program.—(1) The Secretary shall work with the Russian Federation to identify various alternatives to provide the United States adequate transparency in the nuclear materials protection, control, and accounting program of the Russian Federation to assure that such program is meeting applicable goals for nuclear materials protection, control, and accounting.

(2) The alternatives identified under paragraph (1) may not include full intrusive access to sensitive facilities in the Russian Federation.

(d) Sense of Congress.—In furtherance of the activities required under this section, it is the sense of Congress the Secretary should—

(1) improve the partnership with the Russian Ministry of Atomic Energy in order to enhance the pace and effectiveness of nuclear materials safeguards at facilities in the Russian Federation, including serial production enterprises; and

(2) clearly identify the assistance required by the Russian Federation, the contributions anticipated from the Russian Federation, and the transparency milestones that can be used to assess progress in meeting the requirements of this section.

SEC. 10. COMPREHENSIVE ANNUAL REPORT TO CONGRESS OF ALL UNITED STATES NONPROLIFERATION ACTIVITIES.

Section 1205 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2002 (Public Law 107–107; 115 Stat. 1247) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(d) Annual Report on Implementation of Plan.—(1) Not later than January 31, 2003, and each year thereafter, the President shall submit to Congress a report on the implementation of the plan required by subsection (a) during the preceding year.

"(2) Each report under paragraph (1) shall include—

"(A) a discussion of any progress made during the year covered by such report in the matters of the plan required by subsection (a);

"(B) a discussion of any consultations with foreign nations, and in particular the Russian Federation, during such year on joint programs to implement the plan;

"(C) a discussion of any cooperation and coordination during such year in the implementation of the plan between the United States and private entities that share objectives similar to the objectives of the plan; and

"(D) any recommendations that the President considers appropriate regarding modifications to law or regulations, or to the administration or organization of any Federal department or agency, in order to improve the effectiveness of any programs carried out during such year in the implementation of the plan.".

SEC. 11. UTILIZATION OF DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY NATIONAL LABORATORIES AND SITES IN SUPPORT OF ANTITERRORISM ACTIVITIES.

(a) Agencies as Joint Sponsors of Laboratories for Work on Antiterrorism.—Each department or agency of the Federal Government, or of a State or local government, that carries out work on antiterrorism activities at a Department of Energy national laboratory shall be a joint sponsor, under a multiple agency sponsorship arrangement with the Department, of such laboratory in the performance of such work.

(b) Agencies as Joint Sponsors of Sites for Work on Antiterrorism.—Each department or agency of the Federal Government, or of a State or local government, that carries out work on antiterrorism activities at a Department site shall be a joint sponsor of such site in the performance of such work as if such site were a federally funded research and development center and such work were performed under a multiple agency sponsorship arrangement with the Department.

(c) Primary Sponsorship.—The Department of Energy shall be the primary sponsor under a multiple agency sponsorship arrangement required under subsection (a) or (b).

(d) Work.—(1) The Administrator for Nuclear Security shall act as the lead agent in coordinating the submittal to a Department national laboratory or site of requests for work on antiterrorism matters by departments and agencies that are joint sponsors of such national laboratory or center, as the case may be, under this section.

(2) A request for work may not be submitted to a national laboratory or site under this section unless approved in advance by the Administrator.

(3) Any work performed by a national laboratory or site under this section shall comply with the policy on the use of federally funded research and development centers under section 35.017(a)(4) of the Federal Acquisition Regulation.

(4) The Administrator shall ensure that the work of a national laboratory or site requested under this section is performed expeditiously and to the satisfaction of the head of the department or agency submitting the request.

(e) FUNDING.—(1) Subject to paragraph (2), a joint sponsor of a national laboratory or site under this section shall provide funds for work of such center or site, as the case may be, under this section under the same terms and conditions as apply to the primary sponsor of such center under section 303(b)(1)(C) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (41 U.S.C. 253(b)(1)(C)) or of such site to the extent such section applies to such site as a federally funded research and development center by reason of subsection (b).

(2) The total amount of funds provided a national laboratory or site in a fiscal year under this subsection by joint sponsors other than the Department of Energy shall not exceed an amount equal to 25 percent of the total funds provided such center or site, as the case may be, in such fiscal year from all sources.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, the world is a dangerous place, and the United States is not immune to those dangers. In just the last few days, we have heard warnings that suicide bombers will mount attacks in the United States and that terrorist groups will inevitably obtain weapons of mass destruction from rogue states.

My own greatest concern is that rogue states or terrorist groups may obtain nuclear weapons, or the means to produce them, from the former Soviet Union, where less-than-adequate security and under-employed weapons scientists coexist with the world's largest stockpile of excess fissile material. We know that both rogues and terrorists are attempting to exploit the instability in that region in order to gain weapons of mass destruction.

Some Russians have been caught stealing radioactive, or even fissile, material. And witnesses at two Foreign Relations Committee hearings warned that even modestly capable terrorists could convert stolen highly enriched uranium into enormously destructive improvised nuclear devices.

But I do not share the view that proliferation of nuclear weapons is inevitable. The United States has had real successes in nuclear nonproliferation and there is every reason to think that we can build on that record.

Thanks to the Nunn-Lugar Cooperative Threat Reduction program, the countries of Belarus, Kazakhstan and Ukraine gave up their nuclear weapons.

Thanks to the Materials Protection, Control and Accounting program, many Russian facilities have improved their security for fissile material.

Thanks to our fissile material disposition programs, the United States and Russia will each demilitarize 34 metric tons of excess plutonium, and Russia will downblended 500 metric tons of high-enriched uranium into low-enriched fuel for nuclear power reactors.

Thanks to several U.S. programs, thousands of under-employed weapons scientists in the former Soviet Union have obtained at least part-time employment in new, socially useful endeavors.

These programs point the way to how we can speed up the day when rogue states and terrorists will find the doors closed to them when they seek dangerous materials or technology from the former Soviet Union. The administration told many months to review these programs last year, but that review led it to the absolutely correct conclusions that the programs are vital to our national security and that nearly all of them should be expanded. The problem now is that we are still not doing nearly enough. The President's budget request for fiscal year 2003 would maintain our nonproliferation assistance programs, but not significantly increase them.

The Nuclear Nonproliferation Act of 2002 takes important steps to expand these programs, and I am proud to cosponsor this legislation. Senator DOMENICI to be both commended and supported for drafting this bill. I am also delighted to be joined by Senators LUGAR and HAGEL from the Foreign Relations Committee, Senators LANDRIEU and BINGAMAN from the Armed Services Committee, and Senator MURKOWSKI, who has paid particular attention to Russian nuclear problems.

The Nuclear Nonproliferation Act of 2002 will lead to greater levels of effort—and, I believe, greater levels of achievement—in several areas. For example, it authorizes $40 million for a new research, development, and demonstration program to help respond to nuclear or radiological terrorism. Some of these funds would also help other nations to better regulate the protection and control of radiological sources, to prevent any diversion to terrorists. Some of the funds will go to new technologies to detect radioactive and fissile materials being smuggled into the United States. And some will support work with the International Atomic Energy Agency to improve international safeguards for nuclear materials and operations.

It authorizes up to $300 million to accelerate and expand current programs to blend down highly enriched uranium (HEU) into reactorgrade material which cannot explode and to dispose of plutonium in Russia. This provision also allows for HEU purchases from other countries.

It authorizes $20 million for work with the international community to develop options for a global program for international safeguards, nuclear safety and proliferation-resistant nuclear technologies. This includes efforts to improve sabotage protection for nuclear power plants and other nuclear facilities overseas.

These are sensible proposals, and very sensibly priced when one considers the magnitude of the threat that they address. Former Senator Howard Baker and former White House Counsel Lloyd Cutler called on us last year to devote at least $3,000,000,000 dollars a year to this effort. Even with last year's congressionally-mandated budget increases and even with this fine bill, we will achieve less than two-thirds of that objective.

But these are important steps, ones that have been vetted with experts inside and outside our government. They deserve the support of all of us, and they will help build a safer world for our children and grandchildren.

By Mr. THURMOND:

S. 2546. A bill to amend title 49, United States Code, to establish a program for Federal flight deck officers, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today to express my disappointment in the decision announced yesterday by the Department of Transportation against allowing airline pilots to carry firearms during the performance of their duties. Today I am introducing legislation which would overturn that decision and require the Transportation Security Administration to establish a program to permit pilots to defend their aircraft against acts of criminal violence or air piracy. This legislation will provide a critical last line of defense to secure commercial aircraft.

This bill I am introducing today is identical to a bill in the House of Representatives, H.R. 4635, introduced by Mr. YOUNG of Alaska and Mr. MICA of Florida. The legislation requires the Under Secretary of Transportation for Security to establish a program not later than 90 days after the date of enactment to deputize qualified volunteer pilots as Federal law enforcement officers to defend the cockpits of commercial aircraft in flight against acts of criminal violence or air piracy. Pilots who are deputized will be known as "Federal Flight Deck Officers" and will be authorized to carry a firearm and use force, including deadly force, against an individual in defense of an aircraft.

Under the bill, a qualified pilot is a pilot that is employed by an air carrier, has demonstrated to the satisfaction of the Under Secretary fitness to be a Federal Flight Deck Officer, and has been the subject of an employment investigation, including a criminal history record check.

Not later than 120 days after the date of enactment, the Under Secretary shall deputize 500 qualified pilots who are former military or law enforcement personnel. Not later than 24 months after the date of enactment, the Under Secretary shall deputize any qualified pilot. The Federal Government will provide training, supervision and equipment at no expense to the pilot or air carrier. Pilots participating in this program will not be eligible to receive compensation for services. The legislation protects volunteer pilots and their employers against liability from damages resulting from participation in the program.

The Department of Transportation has taken important steps to improve the security of our airports and protect the flying public. However, September 11 demonstrated our enemies will stop at nothing to inflict harm on Americans and destroy our way of life. Our response must be equally as determined and resolute. We must not take half measures or engage in wishful thinking. We must not refrain from utilizing every tool we possess. We must enable those who pilot commercial passenger aircraft to defend against any threat and protect the safety of their aircraft and passengers. And finally, we must do so without further delay. I hope the Senate responds quickly to this important matter.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2546

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Arming Pilots Against Terrorism Act".

SEC. 2. FEDERAL FLIGHT DECK OFFICER PROGRAM.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subchapter I of chapter 449 of title 49, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"§44921. Federal flight deck officer program

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Under Secretary of Transportation for Security shall establish a program to deputize qualified volunteer pilots of passenger aircraft as Federal law enforcement officers to defend the flight decks of aircraft of air carriers engaged in air transportation or intrastate air transportation against acts of criminal violence or air piracy. Such officers shall be known as 'Federal flight deck officers'. The program shall be administered in connection with the Federal air marshal program.

"(b) QUALIFIED PILOT.—Under the program, a qualified pilot is a pilot of an aircraft engaged in air transportation or intrastate air transportation who—

"(1) is employed by an air carrier;

"(2) has demonstrated to the satisfaction of the Under Secretary fitness to be a Federal flight deck officer under the program; and

"(3) has been the subject of an employment investigation (including a criminal history record check) under section 44936(a)(1).

"(c) TRAINING, SUPERVISION, AND EQUIPMENT.—The Under Secretary of Transportation for Security shall provide training, supervision, and equipment necessary for a qualified pilot to be a Federal flight deck officer under this section at no expense to the pilot or the air carrier employing the pilot.

"(d) DEPUTIZATION.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Under Secretary shall deputize, as a Federal flight deck officer under this section, any qualified pilot who submits to the Under Secretary a request to be such an officer.

"(2) INITIAL DEPUTIZATION.—Not later than 120 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Under Secretary shall deputize not fewer than 500 qualified pilots who are former military or law enforcement personnel as Federal flight deck officers under this section.

"(3) FULL IMPLEMENTATION.—Not later than 24 months after the date of enactment of this section, the Under Secretary shall deputize any qualified pilot as a Federal flight deck officer under this section.

"(e) COMPENSATION.—Pilots participating in the program under this section shall not be eligible for compensation from the Federal Government for services provided as a Federal flight deck officer.

"(f) AUTHORITY TO CARRY FIREARMS.—The Under Secretary shall authorize a Federal flight deck officer under this section to carry a firearm while engaged in providing air transportation or intrastate air transportation.

"(g) AUTHORITY TO USE FORCE.—Notwithstanding section 44903(d), a Federal flight deck officer may use force (including lethal force) against an individual in the defense of an aircraft in air transportation or intrastate air transportation if the officer reasonably believes that the security of the aircraft is at risk.

"(h) LIMITATION ON LIABILITY.—

"(1) LIABILITY OF AIR CARRIERS.—An air carrier shall not be liable for damages in any action brought in a Federal or State court arising out of the air carrier employing a pilot of an aircraft who is a Federal flight deck officer under this section or out of the acts or omissions of the pilot in defending an aircraft of the air carrier against acts of criminal violence or air piracy.

"(2) LIABILITY OF FEDERAL FLIGHT DECK OFFICERS.—A Federal flight deck officer shall not be liable for damages in any action brought in a Federal or State court arising out of the acts or omissions of the officer in defending an aircraft against acts of criminal violence or air piracy unless the officer is guilty of gross negligence or willful misconduct.

"(i) REGULATIONS.—Not later than 90 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Under Secretary, in consultation with the Firearms Training Unit of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, shall issue regulations to carry out this section.

"(j) PILOT DEFINED.—The term 'pilot' means an individual responsible for the operation of aircraft.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) CHAPTER ANALYSIS.—The analysis for such chapter is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 44920 the following:

"44921. Federal flight deck officer program.".

(2) EMPLOYMENT INVESTIGATIONS.—Section 44936(a)(1)(B) is amended—

(A) by aligning clause (iii) with clause (ii);

(B) by striking "and" at the end of clause (iii);

(C) by striking the period at the end of clause (iv) and inserting "; and"; and

(D) by adding at the end the following:

"(v) qualified pilots who are deputized as Federal flight deck officers under section 44921.".

(3) FLIGHT DECK SECURITY.—Section 128 of the Aviation and Transportation Security Act (Public Law 107-71) is repealed.

By Mr. BINGAMAN (for himself and Ms. SNOWE):

S. 2547. A bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to provide for fair payments under the Medicare hospital outpatient department prospective payment system; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today with Senator SNOWE to introduce legislation entitled the "Medicare Hospital Outpatient Department Fair Payment Act of 2002" to improve Medicare payments for hospital outpatient department services.

According to the Medicare Payment Advisory Commission, or MedPAC, in its report to Congress this past March, "We estimate that the aggregate Medicare margin for outpatient services will be −16.3 percent in 2002. Unfortunately, while the Medicare outpatient prospective payment system, or OPPS, was created to give providers incentives to deliver quality outpatient care and services in an efficient manner, OPPS reimbursement rates have been set at a level substantially below what is costs hospitals to care for Medicare patients. That is an unsustainable burden for our Nation's hospitals.

This problem is especially acute in rural areas. According to the Medicare Payment Advisory Commission's June 2001 report entitled "Report to Congress: Medicare in Rural America," outpatient costs represent 21.8 percent of total Medicare costs in rural hospitals compared to 16.1 percent in urban hospitals. As MedPAC concludes, "Given their greater reliance on Medicare and on outpatient services within Medicare, rural hospitals have more at stake than their urban counterparts in the move to the outpatient PPS."

In addition, Medicare's payment policy of paying less than cost creates inappropriate incentives for providers to provide services in the setting that receives the most favorable payment rather than the one best suited for the patient. Medicare policy should seek, as best as possible, to pay appropriate amounts to ensure access to care for Medicare beneficiaries in appropriate settings, whether in inpatient hospitals, outpatient care, ambulatory surgical centers, or physician offices.

To provide just one example, the following are the current payment rates for mammography in either a outpatient hospital setting of a physician's office: for unilateral diagnostic mammography, the OPPS payment is $30.54 compared to $38.01 in a physician's office; for bilateral diagnostic mammography, the OPPS payment is again $30.54 compared to an even higher $46.06 in a physician's office; for unilateral digital mammography, OPPS payment just increased to $75.00 compared to $71.31 in a physician's office; and finally, for bilateral digital mammography, the OPPS payment is $75.00 compared to $88.33 in a physician's office.

Why does Medicare pay between 24 percent to 54 percent more for a diagnostic mammography in a physician's office than in an outpatient hospital setting? Such disparities are unjustified and they are even worse for other Medicare services.

To address these problems, the "Medicare Hospital Outpatient Fair Payment Act of 2002" would: increase extremely underfunded emergency room and clinic ambulatory payment classifications, or APC, payment rates in the OPPS system by 10 percent and require an increase in overall outpatient department payments to be adjusted to 90 percent of overall costs, from the current 84 percent; and improve and extend transitional corridor or "hold harmless" payments to rural hospitals, cancer hospitals, and children's hospitals, and extend the transitional payments to designated eye and ear speciality hospitals.

The first provision would increase funding overall through the outpatient hospital system from 84 percent of cost to 90 percent of cost, still 10 percent less than the hospitals spend in delivering necessary outpatient care, with special focus and priority on payments for emergency room and clinic payments, prevention services, cancer services, and to reduce the disparity between payments in outpatient and alternative settings.

The extension of the transitional corridors or hold harmless payments to rural, cancer, and children's hospitals addresses the particular problems those hospitals are facing with the OPPS system and adds designated eye and ear speciality hospitals. With regard to rural hospitals, MedPAC recommended that due to the higher unit costs and a greater percentage of care delivered in rural outpatient settings in its June 2001 report entitled "Report to the Congress: Medicare in Rural America," that the data "supports the need for the existing hold-harmless policy" for rural hospitals.

Without the transitional corridor payments to rural hospitals, rural hospitals would be expected to be significant losers, according to MedPAC data. As MedPAC states, "Small rural hospitals were protected to more negatively affected, with those under 50 beds, about 50 percent of rural hospitals, losing 8.5 percent and those with 50-99 beds losing 2.7 percent." Even with the transitional corridor and hold-harmless payments, rural hospitals are still projected to have negative margins of 13.7 percent with respect to outpatient care.

The legislation also addresses problems created by the Balanced Budget Refinement Act of 1999, or BBRA, which established temporary additional Medicare payments, or transitional pass-through payments, for certain innovative medical devices, drugs, and biologics. By establishing the pass-through payments, Congress ensured Medicare beneficiaries would have access to the latest medical technologies. These pass-through payments were capped at 2.5 percent of total outpatient payments prior to 2004, and the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services, or CMS, is required by law to make a proportional reduction for all pass-through payments if that cap is exceeded.

In March 2002, CMS announced a reduction in pass-through payments of 63.6 percent. This reduction means that a pass-through payment of $1,000 is reduced to just $364. Again, hospitals cannot continue to provide needed services to beneficiaries with reductions of such a magnitude.

To prevent an event greater reduction in pass-through payments, CMS "folded-in" a significant portion of costs of these new technologies into the base APCs. However, because the law requires that these changes are made in a budget-neutral manner, this resulted in a substantial reduction in payments for standard outpatient services that do not rely upon high-tech medical devices. In 2002, incorporating 75 percent of device costs into the APCs led to a budget-neutrality adjustment of −7.2 percent, causing the substantial reduction in the OPPS fee schedule amounts.

As MedPAC notes, "If pass-through items are overused and overpaid, APCs that include these technologies will be relatively overpaid while APCs that do not will be underpaid. This process also will have inappropriate distributional effects among hospitals if some hospitals provide more services that use pass-through technologies than others." For example, rural hospitals tend to provide a greater proportion of more basic Services, emergency care services, and fewer services that require advanced technology, according to MedPAC. These are the services particularly hard hit by the budget neutrality provision, and yet, they are certainly not any less expensive than they were last year.

To address these problems with Medicare's pass-through payment system, the bill would: limit the pro-rata reduction in pass-through to 20 percent; and limit the budget neutrality adjustment to no more than 2.0 percent annually.

For New Mexico, the importance of this legislation cannot be overstated. In 2000, New Mexico had over 3.1 million outpatient visits by Medicare beneficiaries for important health concerns. This includes essential services such as diagnostic tests, clinic visits, emergency care treatment, chemotherapy, and surgery. In addition, according to estimates from the American Hospital Association, the impact of this legislation to New Mexico hospitals would be an increase in Medicare payments between $48 and $59 million over the next five years.

For an industry attemtping to survive cuts to payments from the private sector, Medicare and Medicaid, while also dealing with the Nation's highest percentage of uninsured patients in the country. This legislation is both timely and necessary. It is unjustifiable for Medicare to continue to pay just 84 percent of the cost of care of Medicare beneficiaries.

The bottom line is that this bipartisan legislation will ensure our nation's hospitals a more rationale, fair, and equitable payment system for services delivered to Medicare beneficiaries in an outpatient setting.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and a copy of a letter of support from AHA be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2547

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; TABLE OF CONTENTS.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Medicare Hospital Outpatient Department Fair Payment Act of 2002".

(b) TABLE OF CONTENTS.—The table of contents of this Act is as follows:

Sec. 1. Short title; table of contents.
Sec. 2. Ensuring adequate OPD fee schedule amounts for clinic and emergency visits.
Sec. 3. Limitation of pro rata reductions to pass-through payments.
Sec. 4. Clarifying application of OPD fee schedule increase factor.
Sec. 5. Limitation on budget neutrality adjustment for annual revisions to system components.
Sec. 6. Outlier payments.
Sec. 7. Adjustment to limit decline in payment.
Sec. 8. Special increase in certain relative payment weights.
Sec. 9. Permanent extension of provider-based status.

SEC. 2. ENSURING ADEQUATE OPD FEE SCHEDULE AMOUNTS FOR CLINIC AND EMERGENCY VISITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1833(t) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395*l*(t)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (3)(C)(ii)—

(A) by striking "paragraph (8)(B)" and inserting "paragraphs (11)(B) and (13)(A)(i)"; and

(B) by striking "clause (iii)" and inserting "clause (iv)";

(2) in paragraph (3)(C)(iii), by inserting ", paragraph (11)(B), or paragraph (13)(B)" after "this subparagraph";

(3) in paragraph (3)(D)—

(A) in clause (i), by striking "conversion factor computed under subparagraph (C) for the year" and inserting "applicable conversion factor computed under subparagraph (C), paragraph (11)(B), or paragraph (13)(B) for the year (or portion thereof)"; and

(B) in clause (ii), by inserting ", paragraph (9)(A), or paragraph (13)(C)" after "paragraph (2)(C)";

(4) in paragraph (9), by striking subparagraph (B) and inserting the following new subparagraph:

"(B) BUDGET NEUTRALITY ADJUSTMENT.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—If the Secretary makes revisions under subparagraph (A), then the revisions for a year may not cause the estimated amount of expenditures under this part for the year to increase or decrease from the estimated amount of expenditures under this part (including expenditures attributable to the special rules specified in paragraph (13)) that would have been made if the revisions had not been made.

"(ii) EXEMPTION FROM REDUCTION.—The relative payment weights determined under paragraph (13)(C) and the conversion factor computed under paragraph (13)(B) shall not be reduced by any budget neutrality adjustment made pursuant to this subparagraph."; and

(5) by redesignating paragraph (13) as paragraph (14) and by inserting after paragraph (12) the following new paragraph:

"(13) SPECIAL RULES FOR CALCULATING MEDICARE OPD FEE SCHEDULE AMOUNT FOR CLINIC AND EMERGENCY VISITS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In computing the medicare OPD fee schedule amount under paragraph (3)(D) for covered OPD services that are furnished on or after April 1, 2002, and classified within a group established or revised under paragraph (2)(B) or (9)(A), respectively, for clinic or emergency visits (as described in subparagraph (D)), the Secretary shall—

"(i) substitute for the conversion factor calculated under paragraph (3)(C) the conversion factor calculated under subparagraph (B); and

"(ii) substitute for the relative payment weight established or revised under paragraph (2)(C) or (9)(A), respectively, the relative payment weight determined under subparagraph (C) for such group.

"(B) CALCULATION OF CONVERSION FACTOR.—For purposes of subparagraph (A)(i), the conversion factor calculated under this subparagraph is—

"(i) for services furnished on or after April 1, 2002, and before January 1, 2003, an amount equal to 112.82 percent of the conversion factor specified for such period in the final rule published on March 1, 2002 (67 Fed. Reg. 9556 et seq.; entitled 'Medicare Program; Correction of Certain Calendar Year 2002 Payment Rates Under the Hospital Outpatient Prospective Payment System and the Pro Rata Reduction on Transitional Pass-Through Payments; Correction of Technical and Typographical Errors') and not taking into account any subsequent amendments to such final rule; and

"(ii) for services furnished in a year beginning after December 31, 2002, the conversion factor computed under this subparagraph for the previous year (or in the case of 2003, for the previous 9 months) increased by the OPD fee schedule increase factor specified under paragraph (3)(C)(iv) for the year involved.

"(C) DETERMINATION OF RELATIVE PAYMENT WEIGHTS.—For purposes of subparagraph (A)(ii), the relative payment weight determined under this subparagraph for a covered OPD service that is classified within such a group is—

"(i) for services furnished on or after April 1, 2002, and before January 1, 2003, the relative payment weight specified for such group for such period in Addendum A of the final rule published on March 1, 2002 (67 Fed. Reg. 9556 et seq.; entitled 'Medicare Program; Correction of Certain Calendar Year 2002 Payment Rates Under the Hospital Outpatient Prospective Payment System and the Pro Rata Reduction on Transitional Pass-Through Payments; Correction of Technical and Typographical Errors') and not taking into account any subsequent amendments to such final rule; and

"(ii) for services furnished in a year beginning on or after January 1, 2003—

"(I) for ambulatory patient classification group 0601 (relating to mid-level clinic visits), or a successor to such group, the relative payment weight specified for such group in the final rule referred to in clause (i); and

"(II) other ambulatory patient classification groups described in subparagraph (D), the relative payment weight established or revised under paragraph (2)(C) or (9)(A), respectively, for such group for such year (but without regard to any budget neutrality adjustment under paragraph (9)(B)).

"(D) GROUPS FOR CLINIC AND EMERGENCY VISITS.—For purposes of this paragraph, the groups established or revised under paragraph (2)(B) or (9)(A), respectively, for clinic and emergency visits are ambulatory patient classification groups 0600, 0601, 0602, 0610, 0611, and 0612 as defined for purposes of the final rule referred to in subparagraph (C)(i) (and any successors to such groups).".

(b) LIMITATION ON SECRETARIAL AUTHORITY.—Notwithstanding section 1833(t) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395*l*(t)), the Secretary of Health and Human Services may not make any adjustment under—

(1) paragraph (2)(F), (3)(C)(iii), (9)(B), or (9)(C) of section 1833(t) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395*l*(t)); or

(2) any other provision of such section;

to ensure that the amendments made by subsection (a) do not cause the estimated amount of expenditures under part B of title XVIII of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395j et seq.) to exceed the estimated amount of expenditures that would have been made under such part but for such amendments.

(c) PERIODIC LUMP-SUM RETROACTIVE PAYMENTS.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall, not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act (and at least every 90 days thereafter until the amendments made by subsection (a) are implemented)—

(1) estimate, for each hospital furnishing services for which payment may be made under section 1833(t) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395*l*(t)) on or after April 1, 2002—

(A) the total amount of additional payments under such section that would have been made to such hospital as of the date of such estimate if such amendments had been implemented as of such date; and

(B) the total amount of additional payments under such section that have actually been made to such hospital as of the date of such estimate (including any amounts paid pursuant to this subsection); and

(2) make a lump-sum payment to such hospital equal to the amount by which the amount estimated under paragraph (1)(A) exceeds the amount estimated under paragraph (1)(B).

SEC. 3. LIMITATION OF PRO RATA REDUCTIONS TO PASS-THROUGH PAYMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1833(t)(6)(E) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395*l*(t)(6)(E)) is amended—

(1) in clause (i), by striking "The total" and inserting "Subject to clause (iv), the total";

(2) in clause (iii), by striking "If the Secretary" and inserting "Subject to clause (iv), if the Secretary"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(iv) LIMITATION ON PRO RATA REDUCTIONS.—Notwithstanding clauses (i), (ii), and (iii), the Secretary may not reduce the additional payments that would otherwise be made under this paragraph (but for this subparagraph) for items and services furnished on or after April 1, 2002, by a percentage that exceeds 20.0 percent.".

(b) PERIODIC LUMP-SUM RETROACTIVE PAYMENTS.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall, not later than 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act (and at least every 90 days thereafter until clause (iv) of section 1833(t)(6)(E) of the Social Security Act (as added by subsection (a)(3)) is implemented)—

(1) estimate, for each hospital furnishing services for which payment may be made under section 1833(t) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395*l*(t)) on or after April 1, 2002—

(A) the total amount of additional payments under paragraph (6) of such section that would have been made to such hospital as of the date of such estimate if such clause had been implemented as of such date; and

(B) the total amount of additional payments under such paragraph that have actually been made to such hospital as of the date of such estimate (including any amounts paid pursuant to this subsection); and

(2) make a lump-sum payment to such hospital equal to the amount by which the amount estimated under paragraph (1)(A) exceeds the amount estimated under paragraph (1)(B).

SEC. 4. CLARIFYING APPLICATION OF OPD FEE SCHEDULE INCREASE FACTOR.

Section 1833(t)(3)(C)(iv) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395*l*(t)(3)(C)(iv)) is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "Effective for years beginning with 2002, the OPD fee schedule increase factor for a year shall take effect on January 1 of such year, and nothing in this subsection shall be construed as authorizing the Secretary to delay the date on which such increase factor takes effect by reason of any delay in implementing the revisions authorized by paragraph (9)(A) for such year or for any other reason.".

SEC. 5. LIMITATION ON BUDGET NEUTRALITY ADJUSTMENT FOR ANNUAL REVISIONS TO SYSTEM COMPONENTS.

Section 1833(t)(9)(B) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395*l*(t)(9)(B)), as amended by section 2(a)(4), is amended—

(1) in clause (i), by striking "If the Secretary" and inserting "Subject to clause (iii), if the Secretary"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(iii) LIMITATION ON ADJUSTMENT.—For years after 2001, the budget neutrality adjustment under this subparagraph may not reduce the payments that would otherwise be made under this part but for this subparagraph by more than 2.0 percent.".

SEC. 6. OUTLIER PAYMENTS.

Section 1833(t)(5) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395*l*(t)(5)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (C)—

(A) in clause (i), by striking "exceed the applicable" and inserting "exceed a percentage specified by the Secretary that is not less than the applicable minimum percentage or greater than the applicable maximum"; and

(B) by striking clause (ii) and inserting the following new clause:

"(ii) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGES.—For purposes of clause (i)—

"(I) the term 'applicable minimum percentage' for a year means zero percent for years before 2003 and 2.0 percent for years after 2002; and

"(II) the term 'applicable maximum percentage' for a year means 2.5 percent for years before 2003 and 3.0 percent for years after 2002."; and

(2) in subparagraph (D)—

(A) in the heading, by striking "TRANSITIONAL AUTHORITY" and inserting "FLEXIBILITY"; and

(B) in the matter preceding clause (i), by striking "for covered OPD services furnished before January 1, 2002,".

SEC. 7. ADJUSTMENT TO LIMIT DECLINE IN PAYMENT.

Section 1833(t)(7) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395l(t)(7)) is amended—

(1) in the heading, by striking "TRANSITIONAL ADJUSTMENT" and inserting "ADJUSTMENT";

(2) in subparagraph (A)—

(A) in the heading, by striking "BEFORE 2002" and inserting "IN GENERAL";

(B) in the matter preceding clause (i)—

(i) by striking "subparagraph (D)" and inserting "subparagraph (B)";

(ii) by striking "furnished before January 1, 2002,"; and

(iii) by striking "subparagraph (E)" and inserting "subparagraph (C)"; and

(C) in clause (i), by striking "subparagraph (F)" and inserting "subparagraph (D)";

(3) by striking subparagraph (D) and inserting the following new subparagraph:

"(D) HOLD HARMLESS PROVISIONS.—

"(i) CANCER, CHILDREN'S, AND SMALL RURAL HOSPITALS.—In the case of a hospital that is described in clause (iii) or (v) of section 1886(d)(1)(B) or is located in a rural area and has not more than 100 beds, for covered OPD services—

"(I) that are furnished on or after the date on which payment is first made under this subsection; and

"(II) for which the PPS amount is less than the pre-BBA amount (or for services furnished on or after January 1, 2002, is less than the greater of the pre-BBA amount or the reasonable costs incurred in furnishing such services), the amount of payment under this subsection shall be increased by the amount of such difference.

"(ii) EYE AND EAR HOSPITALS.—In the case of a hospital or unit described in subsection (i)(4), for covered OPD services—

"(I) that are furnished on or after January 1, 2002; and

"(II) for which the PPS amount is less than the greater of the base year amount (which for purposes of this subparagraph shall be determined in the same manner as the pre-BBA amount under subparagraph (D), except that clause (ii)(I) of such subparagraph shall be applied by substituting '2001' for '1996') or the reasonable costs incurred in furnishing such services, the amount of payment under this subsection shall be increased by the amount of such difference.";

(4) in subparagraph (F)(ii)(I), by striking "subparagraph (E)" and inserting "subparagraph (C)"; and

(5) by striking subparagraphs (B) and (C) and redesignating subparagraphs (D), (E), (F), (G), (H), and (I) as subparagraphs (B), (C), (D), (E), (F), and (G), respectively.

SEC. 8. SPECIAL INCREASE IN CERTAIN RELATIVE PAYMENT WEIGHTS.

Section 1833(t) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395l(t)) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (3)(D)(ii), as amended by section 2(a)(3)(B), by striking "or paragraph (13)(C)" and inserting "paragraph (13)(C), or paragraph (14)";

(2) in paragraph (9)(B)(i), as amended by section 2(a)(4), by inserting "determined without regard to expenditures made by reason of the adjustments required by paragraph (14)" after "paragraph (13)";

(3) in paragraph (12)(C), by striking "paragraph (6)" and inserting "paragraph (9) (including adjustments authorized by paragraph (14))"; and

(4) by redesignating paragraph (14) (as redesignated by section 2(a)(5)) as paragraph (15) and by inserting after paragraph (13) the following new paragraph:

"(14) REQUIREMENT TO INCREASE RELATIVE PAYMENT WEIGHTS IN CERTAIN CIRCUMSTANCES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding the methodologies specified for determining relative payment weights described in paragraphs (2)(C) and (9)(A), for years beginning with 2002, the Secretary shall, as part of the revisions required by paragraph (9)(A), increase the relative payment weight for any group established or revised under paragraph (2)(C) or (9)(A), respectively, above the weight that would otherwise apply to such group under this subsection if the Secretary determines that such an increase is necessary to ensure that the medicare OPD fee schedule amount for the group for the year is not less than 90 percent of the median costs for services classified within the group.

"(B) PRIORITIES.—For purposes of providing for increases under subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall give priority first to preventive services, second to cancer services, third to services for which the medicare OPD fee schedule amount that would otherwise apply is less the payment level under this title for such services in other settings, and fourth to other services.

"(C) DATA.—The Secretary may base increases under subparagraph (A) on data from any source and is not limited to data appropriate for estimating the costs incurred by hospitals in furnishing such services.

"(D) AGGREGATE EXPENDITURES.—Notwithstanding the application of the percentage specified under subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall provide for increases under such subparagraph for each year so that the estimated amount of additional expenditures attributable to adjustments under such subparagraph is not less than $1,000,000,000 in such year.".

SEC. 9. PERMANENT EXTENSION OF PROVIDER-BASED STATUS.

Paragraphs (1) and (2) of section 404(a) of the Medicare, Medicaid, and SCHIP Benefits Improvement and Protection Act of 2000 (113 Stat. 2763A-506), as enacted into law by section 1(a)(6) of Public Law 106-554, are each amended by striking "until October 1, 2002".

AMERICAN HOSPITAL ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, May 22, 2002.

Hon. JEFF BINGAMAN,
U.S. Senate, Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BINGAMAN: On behalf of our nearly 5,000 hospital, health care system, network and other health care provider members, the American Hospital Association is writing to express our strong support for the Medicare Hospital Outpatient Fair Payment Act of 2002 that you have introduced with Sen. Olympia Snowe (R-ME). We believe this bill is an essential component to ensuring that America's Medicare patients receive emergency care and outpatient services, and have equal access to the newest medical technologies.

As hospital care continues to shift to the outpatient setting, it is imperative that Congress begins to address the complex operational issues and payment inequities created by the outpatient prospective payment system (OPPS). While the OPPS was created to give providers incentives to deliver quality care in an efficient manner, outpatient payment rates were set at a level substantially below the costs hospitals incur caring for Medicare patients. Medicare currently pays hospitals only 84 cents for every dollar of outpatient care provided.

Your comprehensive legislation would address problems in the OPPS by extending and enhancing provisions that ensure patient care is not disrupted as hospitals transition into OPPS. We applaud your leadership on this important issue and support swift enactment of this legislation. We look forward to working with you further on this issue.

Sincerely,

RICK POLLACK,
Executive Vice President.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my colleague and good friend Senator BINGAMAN to introduce the Medicare Hospital Outpatient Fair Payment Act of 2002. We are introducing this bill because of the critical importance of outpatient health care services and the devastating impact that the substantial reduction in Medicare payments for outpatient services will have on the delivery of care. Our legislation will increase payment rates for outpatient care to adequate levels to ensure appropriate access to outpatient care for our Nation's seniors. In addition, since the implementation of the new outpatient prospective payment system in August 2000, it has become evident that changes are needed, and this legislation proposes important reforms that will make the system work better for Medicare and for our Nation's seniors.

Our Nation's seniors rely upon outpatient care delivered through the Medicare program. This is the result of trends in medical care that will continue to place a greater emphasis on the outpatient setting. According to Medpac, the number of outpatient visits increased 73 percent during the 1990s and nearly 5 percent in 2001 alone. New technologies and advances in medicine have made it possible for more and more care to be provided on an outpatient basis, which eliminates the need for an overnight hospital stay. This reduces the cost of care and gets the patient home sooner where recovery can begin. This trend will continue and underscores the importance of having an appropriate Medicare payment system for outpatient care.

Without these vitally needed changes in the Medicare outpatient payment system, our medical care infrastructure will suffer and patient care will be harmed. This March, the Medicare Payment Advisory Commission, Medpac, estimated that the aggregate margin for outpatient services would be minus 16.3 percent in 2002.

Congress created temporary additional payments, or transitional "pass-through" payments, for certain innovative medical devices, drugs and biologicals in the Balanced Budget Refinement Act, BBRA, of 1999. By establishing the pass-through pool, Congress ensured Medicare beneficiaries would have access to the latest medical technologies. These pass-through payments were capped at 2.5 percent of total outpatient payments prior to 2004, and the Centers for Medicare & Medicaid Services, CMS, is required by law to make a proportional reduction for all pass-through payments if that cap is exceeded. In March 2002, CMS announced a dramatic reduction in pass-through payments of 63.6 percent.

CMS took steps to avoid even greater reductions in the pass through payments by incorporating 75 percent of the device costs into the base ambulatory payment classifications, APC, amounts. Due to a Congressionally-mandated requirement, CMS was required to make this adjustment on a budget neutral basis, with no recognition for the impact of this shift in payment. As a result, Medicare payments were shifted from low-tech services to high-tech services. In addition, incorporating 75 percent of device costs into the APCs led to a budget-neutrality adjustment of minus 7.2 percent, causing a substantial reduction in the OPPS fee schedule amounts for 2002.

These shifts in payments that resulted from actions Congress took in the BBRA are greater than intended when it was first enacted. It is clear that corrections to the system are needed. Ironically, if these problems with outpatient payments are not corrected, hospitals will be forced to admit patients into the hospital for treatment that could have been provided more efficiently on an outpatient basis.

To address these problems, we are introducing the Medicare Hospital Outpatient Fair Payment Act of 2002. This comprehensive legislation would address problems within the current Medicare hospital outpatient payment system. Specifically, it would address the problems outlined here by; increasing extremely underfunded emergency room and clinic ambulatory payment classifications, APC, rates by 10 percent and requiring an increase in overall outpatient payments to 90 percent of overall costs, still 10 percent less than hospitals spend in delivering necessary outpatient care, but an improvement on the current payment of just 84 percent of costs; limiting the pro rata reduction in pass-through payments to 20 percent; and limiting the budget neutrality adjustment to no more than 2.0 percent.

Furthermore, the bill improves and extends transitional corridor payments to rural hospitals, cancer hospitals, and children's hospitals, and extends the provision to designated eye and ear specialty hospitals.

We believe these changes are necessary if we are to preserve the quality of care in the outpatient setting that seniors deserve. Our Nation's seniors rely upon the health care services provided in the outpatient setting and we invite our colleagues on both sides of the aisle to join us in this effort.

By Mr. BINGAMAN (for himself and Mr. WELLSTONE):

S. 2548. A bill to amend the temporary assistance to needy families program under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act to improve the provision of education and job training under that program, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Education Works Act.

In 1996, legislation was passed which made major changes to our welfare laws. Since then, we know that the welfare rolls in most States have dramatically decreased. But reforming welfare is not just about reducing welfare rolls; welfare reform must ultimately be about helping poor individuals achieve self-sufficiency. While many have left welfare for work during the past several years, too many have been left behind because they don't have a high school degree, have little or no work history, have health problems, are in abusive relationships, or are dealing with other circumstances that make it difficult to work. In addition, those who have secured work are working at low wages with limited benefits. These parents experience little earning growth over time, because there are limited opportunities for mobility for those with low skill levels. As we move forward with the reauthorization process, we must do more to support state efforts to help these people find work and to ensure that all individuals leaving welfare are moving to employment that will provide long-term financial independence. The Education Works Act will do just that.

We know that the welfare programs that have been most successful in helping parents work and earn more over the long run are those that have focused on employment but made substantial use of education and training, together with job search and other employment services. In addition, studies find that helping low-income parents increase their skills pays off in the labor market, particularly through participation in vocational training and postsecondary education and training.

Yet, less than one percent of Federal TANF funds were spent on education and training in 2000 and only five percent of TANF recipients participated in these activities in the same year. This is due in large part to the fact that the '96 law discouraged States from allowing welfare recipients to participate in education and training programs. Specifically, the law limits the extent to which education activities count toward Federal work participation requirements, effectively restricting how long individuals can participate in training and capping how many individuals can receive these services.

The Education Works Act would change this by: clarifying that States have the flexibility to allow participation in postsecondary, vocational English as a Second Language, and basic adult education programs by TANF recipients as part of the TANF work requirements; giving States the flexibility to determine how long each participant may participate in education and training activities while receiving benefits; giving States the flexibility to provide childcare and transportation supports, but not cash benefits, to parents and not toll the 5 year time limit for these individuals if they are participating in a full-time education program that will lead to work and long-term independence; and eliminating the 30 percent cap on the number of TANF recipients that can participate in education and training programs in fulfillment of their work requirements

These are not radical changes. They do not discourage work, but rather enable it.

It is important to note that of the 21 States that have operated under TANF waivers since 1996, 18 of them had waivers of the requirements we are talking about here. Delaware, Indiana, Montana, Tennesee, Texas, Utah, Vermont and Oregon to name a few. The other 32 States should be given the same flexibility.

In my home State, we have recognized the important role that education and training, including postsecondary education, can play in helping some welfare recipients to improve their skills so that they can get off welfare and stay off welfare. In our State, we already have an "Education Works" program in place. But this program is limited to only 400 participants statewide, because the limitations in the TANF program make it impossible to use Federal TANF funds to implement it. This just doesn't make sense to me. We should give states the flexibility they need to implement the types of programs that they believe work best. We should hold them accountable for decreasing caseloads over time and, more importantly, demonstrating that those leaving welfare are economically self-sufficient, but we should let them decide how to reach those goals. The Education Works Act would allow them to do just that. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2548

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Education Works Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. COUNTING EDUCATION AND TRAINING AS WORK.

Section 407(d)(8) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 607(d)(8)) is amended to read as follows:

"(8) participation in vocational educational training, postsecondary education, an English-as-a-second-language program, or an adult basic education program;".

SEC. 3. ELIMINATION OF LIMIT ON NUMBER OF TANF RECIPIENTS ENROLLED IN VOCATIONAL EDUCATION OR HIGH SCHOOL WHO MAY BE COUNTED TOWARDS THE WORK PARTICIPATION REQUIREMENT.

Section 407(c)(2) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 607(c)(2)) is amended by striking subparagraph (D).

SEC. 4. NONAPPLICATION OF TIME LIMIT TO INDIVIDUALS WHO DO NOT RECEIVE CASH ASSISTANCE AND ARE ENGAGED IN EDUCATION OR EMPLOYMENT.

Section 408(a)(7) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 608(a)(7)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(H) LIMITATION ON MEANING OF 'ASSISTANCE' FOR CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS.—For purposes of this paragraph, child care or transportation benefits provided during a month under the State program funded under this part to an individual who is participating in a full-time educational program or who is employed shall not be considered assistance under the State program.".

SEC. 6. EFFECTIVE DATE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as otherwise provided in this Act, the amendments made by this Act shall take effect on October 1, 2002, and shall apply to payments made under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act for calendar quarters beginning on or after such date, without regard to whether regulations to implement the amendments are promulgated by such date.

(b) DELAY PERMITTED IF STATE LEGISLATION REQUIRED.—In the case of a State plan under section 402(a) of the Social Security Act which the Secretary of Health and Human Services determines requires State legislation (other than legislation appropriating funds) in order for the plan to meet the additional requirements imposed by the amendments made by this Act, the State plan shall not be regarded as failing to comply with the requirements of such section 402(a) solely on the basis of the failure of the plan to meet such additional requirements before the 1st day of the 1st calendar quarter beginning after the close of the 1st regular session of the State legislature that begins after the date of enactment of this Act. For purposes of the previous sentence, in the case of a State that has a 2-year legislative session, each year of such session shall be deemed to be a separate regular session of the State legislature.

TITLE I—PROFESSIONAL BOXING SAFETY ACT AMENDMENTS

SEC. 101. AMENDMENT OF PROFESSIONAL BOXING SAFETY ACT OF 1996.

Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this title an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Professional Boxing Safety Act of 1996 (15 U.S.C. 6301 et seq.).

SEC. 102. DEFINITIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 2 (15 U.S.C. 6301) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

"In this Act:

"(1) BOUT AGREEMENT.—The term 'bout agreement' means a contract between a promoter and a boxer which requires the boxer to participate in a professional boxing match with a designated opponent on a particular date.

"(2) BOXER.—The term 'boxer' means an individual who fights in a professional boxing match.

"(3) BOXING COMMISSION.—The term 'boxing commission' means an entity authorized under State or tribal law to regulate professional boxing matches.

"(4) BOXER REGISTRY.—The term 'boxer registry' means any entity certified by the Association of Boxing Commissions for the purposes of maintaining records and identification of boxers.

"(5) BOXING SERVICE PROVIDER.—The term 'boxing service provider' means a promoter, manager, sanctioning body, licensee, or matchmaker.

"(6) CONTRACT PROVISION.—The term 'contract provision' means any legal obligation between a boxer and a boxing service provider.

"(7) INDIAN LANDS; INDIAN TRIBE.—The terms 'Indian lands' and 'Indian tribe' have the meanings given those terms by paragraphs (4) and (5), respectively, of section 4 of the Indian Gaming Regulatory Act (25 U.S.C. 2703).

"(8) LICENSEE.—The term 'licensee' means an individual who serves as a trainer, second, or cut man for a boxer.

"(9) LOCAL BOXING AUTHORITY.—The term 'local boxing authority' means—

"(A) any agency of a State, or of a political subdivision of a State, that has authority under the laws of the State to regulate professional boxing; and

"(B) any agency of an Indian tribe that is authorized by the Indian tribe or the governing body of the Indian tribe to regulate professional boxing on Indian lands.

"(10) MANAGER.—The term 'manager' means a person who, under contract, agreement, or other arrangement with a boxer, undertakes to control or administer, directly or indirectly, a boxing-related matter on behalf of that boxer, including a person who is a booking agent for a boxer.

"(11) MATCHMAKER.—The term 'matchmaker' means a person that proposes, selects, and arranges the boxers to participate in a professional boxing match.

"(12) PHYSICIAN.—The term 'physician' means a doctor of medicine legally authorized to practice medicine by the State in which the physician performs such function or action.

"(13) PROFESSIONAL BOXING MATCH.—The term 'professional boxing match' means a boxing contest held in the United States between individuals for financial compensation. The term 'professional boxing match' term does not include a boxing contest that is regulated by a duly recognized amateur sports organization, as approved by the Administration.

"(14) PROMOTER.—The term 'promoter' means the person primarily responsible for organizing, promoting, and producing a professional boxing match. The term 'promoter' does not include a hotel, casino, resort, or other commercial establishment hosting or sponsoring a professional boxing match unless—

"(A) the hotel, casino, resort, or other commercial establishment is primarily responsible for organizing, promoting, and producing the match; and

"(B) there is no other person primarily responsible for organizing, promoting, and producing the match.

"(15) PROMOTIONAL AGREEMENT.—The term 'promotional agreement' means a contract between a promoter and a boxer under which the boxer grants to a promoter the exclusive right to secure and arrange all professional boxing matches requiring the boxer's services for—

"(A) a prescribed period of time; or

"(B) a prescribed number of professional boxing matches.

"(16) STATE.—The term 'State' means each of the 50 States, Puerto Rico, the District of Columbia, and any territory or possession of the United States, including the Virgin Islands.

"(17) EFFECTIVE DATE OF THE CONTRACT.—The term 'effective date of the contract' means the day upon which a boxer becomes legally bound by the contract.

"(18) SANCTIONING ORGANIZATION.—The term 'sanctioning organization' means an organization, other than a boxing commission, that sanctions professional boxing matches, ranks professional boxers, or charges a sanctioning fee for professional boxing matches in the United States—

"(A) between boxers who are residents of different States; or

"(B) that are advertised, otherwise promoted, or broadcast (including closed circuit television) in interstate commerce.

"(19) SUSPENSION.—The term 'suspension' includes within its meaning the revocation of a boxing license.

"(20) TRIBAL ORGANIZATION.—The term 'tribal organization' has the same meaning as in section 4(l) of the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450b(l)).

"(21) UNITED STATES BOXING ADMINISTRATION.—The terms 'United States Boxing Administration' and 'Administration' means the United States Boxing Administration established by section 202.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 21 (15 U.S.C. 6312) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 21. PROFESSIONAL BOXING MATCHES CONDUCTED ON INDIAN LANDS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, an Indian tribe shall establish a boxing commission—

"(1) to regulate professional boxing matches held within the reservation under the jurisdiction of that tribal organization; and

"(2) to carry out that regulation or enter into a contract with a boxing commission to carry out that regulation.

"(b) STANDARDS AND LICENSING.—If a tribal organization regulates professional boxing matches pursuant to subsection (a), the tribal organization shall, by tribal ordinance or resolution, establish and provide for the implementation of health and safety standards, licensing requirements, and other requirements relating to the conduct of professional boxing matches that are at least as restrictive as—

"(1) the otherwise applicable standards and requirements of a State in which the Indian lands are located; or

"(2) the most recently published version of the recommended regulatory guidelines published by the United States Boxing Administration.".

The Act is amended by adding at the end the following:

"TITLE II—UNITED STATES BOXING ADMINISTRATION

"Sec. 201. Purpose.
"Sec. 202. Establishment of United States Boxing Administration.
"Sec. 203. Functions.
"Sec. 204. Licensing and registration of boxing personnel.
"Sec. 205. National registry of boxing personnel.
"Sec. 206. Consultation requirements.
"Sec. 207. Misconduct.
"Sec. 208. Noninterference with local boxing authorities.
"Sec. 209. Assistance from other agencies.
"Sec. 210. Reports.
"Sec. 211. Initial implementation.
"Sec. 212. Authorization of appropriations.

"SEC. 201. PURPOSE.

"The purpose of this title is to protect the health and safety of boxers and to ensure fairness in the sport.

"SEC. 202. ESTABLISHMENT OF UNITED STATES BOXING ADMINISTRATION.

"The United States Boxing Administration is established as an administration of the Department of Labor.

"(b) Administrator.—

"(1) Appointment.—The Administration shall be headed by an Administrator, appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"(2) Qualifications.—The Administrator shall be—

"(A) an individual with experience in a field directly related to professional sports; and

"(B) selected on the basis of the individual's training, experience, and qualifications and without regard to party affiliation.

"(3) Compensation.—Section 5315 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"The Administrator of the United States Boxing Administration.".

"(c) Assistant Administrator; General Counsel.—The Administration shall have an Assistant Administrator and a General Counsel, who shall be appointed by the Administrator. The Assistant Administrator shall—

"(1) serve as Administrator in the absence of the Administrator or in the event of a vacancy in that office; and

"(2) carry out such duties as the Administrator may assign.

"(d) Staff.—The Administration shall have such additional staff as may be necessary to carry out the functions of the Administration.

"SEC. 203. FUNCTIONS.

"(a) Primary Function.—The primary function of the Administration is to protect the health, safety, and general interests of boxers consistent with the provisions of this Act.

"(b) Specific Functions.—The Administrator shall—

"(1) administer title I of this Act;

"(2) except as otherwise determined by the Administration, oversee all professional boxing matches in the United States;

"(3) work with sanctioning organizations, the Association of Boxing Commissions, and the boxing commissions of the several States and tribal organizations—

"(A) to improve the safety, integrity, and professionalism of professional boxing in the United States;

"(B) to enhance physical, medical, financial, and other safeguards established for the protection of professional boxers; and

"(C) to improve the status and standards of professional boxing in the United States;

"(4) ensure, through the Attorney General, the Federal Trade Commission, and other appropriate officers and agencies of the Federal government, that Federal and State laws applicable to professional boxing matches in the United States are vigorously, effectively, and fairly enforced;

"(5) review local boxing authority regulations for professional boxing and provide assistance to such authorities in meeting minimum standards prescribed by the Administration under this title;

"(6) serve as the coordinating body for all efforts in the United States to establish and maintain uniform minimum health and safety standards for professional boxing;

"(7) if the Administrator determines it to be appropriate, publish a newspaper, magazine, or other publication consistent with the purposes of the Administration;

"(8) procure the temporary and intermittent services of experts and consultants to the extent authorized by section 3109(b) of title 5, United States Code, at rates the Administration determines to be reasonable; and

"(9) take any other action that is necessary and proper to accomplish the purpose of this title consistent with the provisions of this title.

"(c) PROHIBITIONS.—The Administration may not—

"(1) promote boxing events or rank professional boxers; or

"(2) provide technical assistance to, or authorize the use of the name of the Administration by, States and Indian tribes that do not comply with requirements of the Administration.

"(d) USE OF NAME.—The Administration shall have the exclusive right to use the name 'United States Boxing Administration'. Any person who, without the permission of the Administration, uses that name or any other exclusive name, trademark, emblem, symbol, or insignia of the Administration for the purpose of inducing the sale of any goods or services, or to promote any exhibition, performance, or sporting event, shall be subject to suit in a civil action by the Administration for the remedies provided in the Act of July 5, 1946 (commonly known as the 'Trademark Act of 1946'; 15 U.S.C. 1051 et seq.).

"SEC. 204. LICENSING AND REGISTRATION OF BOXING PERSONNEL.

"(a) LICENSING.—

"(1) REQUIREMENT FOR LICENSE.—No person may compete in a professional boxing match, serve as a boxing manager, boxing promoter, sanctioning organization, or broadcast a professional boxing match except as provided in a license granted to that person under this subsection.

"(2) APPLICATION AND TERM.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The Administration shall—

"(i) establish an application procedure, form, and fee;

"(ii) establish appropriate standards for licenses granted under this section; and

"(iii) issue a license to any person who, as determined by the Administration, meets the standards established by the Administration under this title.

"(B) DURATION.—A license issued under this section shall be for a renewable—

"(i) 4-year term for a boxer; and

"(ii) 2-year term for any other person.

"(C) PROCEDURE.—The Administration may issue a license under this paragraph through local boxing authorities or in a manner determined by the Administration.

"(b) LICENSING FEES.—

"(1) AUTHORITY.—The Administration may prescribe and charge fees for the licensing of persons under this title. The Administration may set, charge, and adjust varying fees on the basis of classifications of persons, functions, and events determined appropriate by the Administration.

"(2) AMOUNTS.—The amounts of fees prescribed for a fiscal year under this subsection shall be set at levels estimated, when set, to yield collections in any total amount that is not more than 10 percent of the total budget of the Administration for that fiscal year.

"(3) LIMITATIONS.—In setting and charging fees under paragraph (1), the Administration shall ensure that, to the maximum extent practicable—

"(A) club boxing is not adversely effected;

"(B) sanctioning organizations and promoters pay the largest portion of the fees; and

"(C) boxers pay as small a portion of the fees as is possible.

"(4) COLLECTION.—Fees established under this subsection may be collected through local boxing authorities or by any other means determined appropriate by the Administration. Fees paid by boxing promoters may be derived from gross receipts from professional boxing matches.

"(5) DEPOSIT OF COLLECTIONS.—Moneys received from fees established under this section shall be deposited as an offsetting collection in, and credited to, the account providing appropriations to carry out the functions of the Administration.

"SEC. 205. NATIONAL REGISTRY OF BOXING PERSONNEL.

"(a) REQUIREMENT FOR REGISTRY.—The Administration shall maintain a unified national computerized registry for the collection, storage, and retrieval of information related to the performance of its duties.

"(b) CONTENTS.—The information in the registry shall include the following:

"(1) BOXERS.—A list of professional boxers and data in the medical registry established under section 14 of this Act, which the Administration shall secure from disclosure in accordance with the confidentiality requirements of section 14(c).

"(2) OTHER PERSONNEL.—Information (pertinent to the sport of professional boxing) on boxing promoters, boxing matchmakers, boxing managers, trainers, cut men, referees, boxing judges, physicians, and any other personnel determined by the Administration as performing a professional activity for professional boxing matches.

"SEC. 206. CONSULTATION REQUIREMENTS.

"The Administration shall consult with local boxing authorities—

"(1) before prescribing any regulation or establishing any standard under the provisions of this title; and

"(2) not less than once each year regarding matters relating to professional boxing.

"SEC. 207. MISCONDUCT.

"(a) SUSPENSION AND REVOCATION OF LICENSE OR REGISTRATION.—

"(1) AUTHORITY.—The Administration may, after notice and opportunity for a hearing, suspend or revoke any license issued under this title if the Administration finds that—

"(A) the suspension or revocation is necessary for the protection of health and safety or is otherwise in the public interest; or

"(B) there are reasonable grounds for belief that a standard prescribed by the Administration under this title is not being met, or that bribery, collusion, intentional losing, racketeering, extortion, or the use of unlawful threats, coercion, or intimidation have occurred in connection with a license.

"(2) PERIOD OF SUSPENSION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—A suspension of a license under this section shall be effective for a period determined appropriate by the Administration except as provided in subparagraph (B).

"(B) SUSPENSION FOR MEDICAL REASONS.—In the case of a suspension of the license of a boxer for medical reasons, the Administration may terminate the suspension at any time that a physician certifies that the boxer is fit to participate in a professional boxing match. The Administration shall prescribe the standards and procedures for accepting certifications under this subparagraph.

"(b) INVESTIGATIONS AND INJUNCTIONS.—

"(1) AUTHORITY.—The Administration may—

"(A) conduct any investigation that it considers necessary to determine whether any person has violated, or is about to violate, any provision of this title or any regulation prescribed under this title;

"(B) require or permit any person to file with it a statement in writing, under oath or otherwise as the Administration shall determine, as to all the facts and circumstances concerning the matter to be investigated;

"(C) in its discretion, publish information concerning any violations; and

"(D) investigate any facts, conditions, practices, or matters to aid in the enforcement of the provisions of this title, in the prescribing of regulations under this title, or in securing information to serve as a basis for recommending legislation concerning the matters to which this title relates.

"(2) POWERS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—For the purpose of any investigation under paragraph (1), or any other proceeding under this title, any officer designated by the Administration may administer oaths and affirmations, subpoena or otherwise compel the attendance of witnesses, take evidence, and require the production of any books, papers, correspondence, memorandums, or other records which the Administration considers relevant or material to the inquiry.

"(B) WITNESSES AND EVIDENCE.—The attendance of witnesses and the production of any documents under subparagraph (A) may be required from any place in the United States or any State at any designated place of hearing.

"(3) ENFORCEMENT OF SUBPOENAS.—

"(A) CIVIL ACTION.—In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpoena issued to, any person, the Administration may file an action in any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which an investigation or proceeding is carried out, or where that person resides or carries on business, to enforce the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, correspondence, memorandums, and other records. The court may issue an order requiring the person to appear before the Administration to produce records, if so ordered, or to give testimony concerning the matter under investigation or in question.

"(B) FAILURE TO OBEY.—Any failure to obey an order issued by a court under subparagraph (A) may be punished as contempt of that Court.

"(C) PROCESS.—All process in any contempt case under subparagraph (A) may be served in the judicial district in which the person is an inhabitant or in which the person may be found.

"(4) EVIDENCE OF CRIMINAL MISCONDUCT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—No person may be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, contracts, agreements, and other records and documents before the Administration, in obedience to the subpoena of the Administration, or in any cause or proceeding instituted by the Administration, on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of that person may tend to incriminate the person or subject the person to a penalty or forfeiture.

"(B) LIMITED IMMUNITY.—No individual may be prosecuted or subject to any penalty or forfeiture for, or on account of, any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which that individual is compelled, after having claimed a privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, except that the individual so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

"(5) INJUNCTIVE RELIEF.—If the Administration determines that any person is engaged or about to engage in any act or practice that constitutes a violation of any provision of this title, or of any regulation prescribed under this title, the Administration may bring an action in the appropriate district court of the United States, the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, or the United States courts of any territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, to enjoin the act or practice, and upon a proper showing, the court shall grant without bond a permanent or temporary injunction or restraining order.

"(6) MANDAMUS.—Upon application of the Administration, the district courts of the United States, the United States District Court for the District of Columbia, and the United States courts of any territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, shall have jurisdiction to issue writs of mandamus commanding any person to comply with the provisions of this title or any order of the Administration.

"(d) INTERVENTION IN CIVIL ACTIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The Administration, on behalf of the public interest, may intervene of right as provided under rule 24(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure in any civil action relating to professional boxing filed in a United States district court.

"(2) AMICUS FILING.—The Administration may file a brief in any action filed in a court of the United States on behalf of the public interest in any case relating to professional boxing.

"(e) HEARINGS BY ADMINISTRATION.—Hearings conducted by the Administration under this title may be public and may be held before any officer of the Administration or before a State boxing commission. The Administration shall keep appropriate records of the hearings.

"SEC. 208. NONINTERFERENCE WITH LOCAL BOXING AUTHORITIES.

"(a) NONINTERFERENCE.—Nothing in this title prohibits any local boxing authority from exercising any of its powers, duties, or functions with respect to the regulation or supervision of professional boxing or professional boxing matches to the extent not inconsistent with the provisions of this title.

"(b) MINIMUM STANDARDS.—Nothing in this title prohibits any local boxing authority from enforcing local standards or requirements that exceed the minimum standards or requirements promulgated by the Administration under this title.

"SEC. 209. ASSISTANCE FROM OTHER AGENCIES.

"Any employee of any executive department, agency, bureau, board, commission, office, independent establishment, or instrumentality may be detailed to the Administration, upon the request of the Administration, on a reimbursable or nonreimbursable basis, with the consent of the appropriate authority having jurisdiction over the employee. While so detailed, an employee shall continue to receive the compensation provided pursuant to law for the employee's regular position of employment and shall retain, without interruption, the rights and privileges of that employment.

"SEC. 210. REPORTS.

"(a) ANNUAL REPORT.—The Administration shall submit a report on its activities to the Senate Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the House of Representatives Committee on Commerce each year. The annual report shall include the following:

"(1) A detailed discussion of the activities of the Administration for the year covered by the report.

"(2) A description of the local boxing authority of each State and Indian tribe.

"(b) PUBLIC REPORT.—The Administration shall annually issue and publicize a report of the Administration on the progress made at Federal and State levels and on Indian lands in the reform of professional boxing and commenting on issues of continuing concern to the Administration.

"(c) FIRST ANNUAL REPORT ON THE ADMINISTRATION.—The first annual report under this title shall be submitted not later than 2 years after the effective date of this title.

"SEC. 211. INITIAL IMPLEMENTATION.

"(a) TEMPORARY EXEMPTION.—The requirements for licensing under this title do not apply to a person for the performance of an activity as a boxer, boxing judge, or referee, or the performance of any other professional activity in relation to a professional boxing match, if the person is licensed by a State or Indian tribe to perform that activity as of the effective date of this title.

"(b) EXPIRATION.—The exemption under subsection (a) with respect to a license issued by a State or Indian tribe expires on the earlier of—

"(A) the date on which the license expires; or

"(B) the date that is 2 years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

"SEC. 212. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropriated for the Administration for each fiscal year such sums as may be necessary for the Administration to perform its functions for that fiscal year.

"(b) RECEIPTS CREDITED AS OFFSETTING COLLECTIONS.—Notwithstanding section 3302 of title 31, United States Code, any fee collected under this title—

"(1) shall be credited as offsetting collections to the account that finances the activities and services for which the fee is imposed;

"(2) shall be available for expenditure only to pay the costs of activities and services for which the fee is imposed; and

"(3) shall remain available until expended.".

SEC. 119. EFFECTIVE DATE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The amendments made by this Act shall take effect one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, except that the provisions of sections 202, 203, and 204 of title II of the Professional Boxing Safety Act of 1996, as added by section 118 of this Act, shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

By Ms. SNOWE (for herself, Mr. BAUCUS, and Mr. BINGAMAN):

S. 2552. A bill to amend part A of title IV of the Social Security Act to give States the option to create a program that allows individuals receiving temporary assistance to needy families to obtain post-secondary or longer duration vocational education; to the Committee on Finance.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce the Pathways to Self-Sufficiency Act of 2002. I am pleased to be joined in introducing this important legislation by my colleagues Senators BAUCUS and BINGAMAN.

This legislation is based upon the highly esteemed Maine program called Parents as Scholars. This program, which uses State Maintenance of Effort, (MOE), dollars to pay TANF-like benefits to those participating in post-secondary education, is a proven success in my State and is a wonderful foundation for a national effort.

We all agree that the 1996 welfare reform effort changed the face of this Nation's welfare system to focus it on work. To that end, I believe that this legislation bolsters the emphasis on "work first." Like many of my colleagues, I agree that the shift in the focus from welfare to work was the right decision, and that work should be the top priority. However, for those TANF recipients who cannot find a good job that will put them on the road toward financial independence, education might well be the key to a successful future of self-sufficiency.

As we have seen in Maine that education has played a significant role in breaking the cycle of welfare and giving parents the skills necessary to find better paying jobs. And we all know that higher wages are the light at the end of the tunnel of public assistance.

The Pathways to Self-Sufficiency Act of 2002 provides State with the option to allow individuals receiving Federal TANF assistance to obtain post-secondary or vocational education. This legislation would give States the ability to use Federal TANF dollars to give those who are participating in vocational or post-secondary education the same assistance as they would receive if they were working.

We all know that supports like income supplements, child care subsidies, and transportation assistance among others, are essential to a TANF recipient's ability to make a successful transition to work. The same is true for those engaged in longer term educational endeavors. This assistance is especially necessary for those who are undertaking the challenge and the financial responsibility of post-secondary education, in the hopes of increasing their earning potential and employability. The goal of this program is to give participants the tools necessary to succeed into the future so that they can become, and remain, self-sufficient.

Choosing to go to college requires motivation, and graduating from college requires a great deal of commitment and work, even for someone who isn't raising children and sustaining a family. These are significant challenges, and that's even before taking into consideration the cost associated with obtaining a bachelor's degree, with a four year program at the University of Maine currently costing almost $25,000. This legislation would provide those TANF recipients who have the ability and the will to go to college the assistance they need to sustain their families while they get a degree.

The value of promoting access to education in this manner to get people off public assistance is proven by the success of Maine's Parents as Scholars, PaS, program. Maine's PaS graduates earn a median wage of $11.71 per hour after graduation up from a median of $8.00 per hour prior to entering college. When compared to the $7.50 median hourly wage of welfare leavers in Maine who have not received a post-secondary degree, PaS graduates are earning, on average, $160 more per week. That translates into more than $8,000 per year—a significant difference.

Furthermore, the median grade point average for PaS participants while in college was 3.4 percent, and a full 90 percent of PaS participants' GPA was over 3.0. These parents are giving their all to pull their families out of the cycle of welfare.

Recognizing that work is a priority under TANF, and building upon the successful Maine model, the Pathways to Self-Sufficiency Act requires that participants in post-secondary and vocational education also participate in work. During the first two years of their participation in these education programs, students must participate in a combination of class time, study time, employment or work experience for at least 24 hours per week, the same hourly requirement that the President proposes in his welfare reauthorization proposal.

During the second two years, for those enrolled in a four year program, the participant must work at least 15 hours in addition to class and study time, or engage in a combination of activities, including class and study time, work or work experience, and training, for an average of 30 hours per week. And all the while, participants must maintain satisfactory academic progress as defined by their academic institution.

The bottom line is that if we expect parents to move from welfare to work and stay in the work force, we must give them the tools to find good jobs. For some people that means job training, for others that could mean dealing with a barrier like substance abuse or domestic violence, and for others, that might mean access to education that will secure them a good job and that will get them off and keep them off of welfare.

The experience of several Parents as Scholars graduates were recently captured in a publication published by the Maine Equal Justice Partners, and their experiences are testament to the fact that this program is a critically important step in moving towards self-sufficiency. In this report one PaS graduate said of her experience, "If it weren't for 'Parents as Scholars' I would never have been able to attend college, afford child care, or put food on the table. Today, I would most likely be stuck in a low-wage job I hated, barely getting by . . . I can now give my children the future they deserve."

Another said, "By earning my Bachelor's degree, I have become self sufficient. I was a waitress previously and would never have been able to support my daughter and I on the tips that I earned. I would encourage anyone to better their education if possible."

These are but a few comments from those who have benefited from access to post-secondary education. And, while these women have been able to attend college and pursue good jobs thanks to the good will and the support of the people of Maine, PaS has strained the State's budget. Giving States the option to use Federal dollars to support these participants will make a tremendous difference in their ability to sustain these programs which have proven results. In Maine, nearly 90 percent of working graduates have left TANF permanently, and isn't that our ultimate goal?

I look forward to working with my colleagues to include this legislation in the upcoming welfare reauthorization. It is a critical piece of the effort to move people from welfare to work permanently and it has been missing from the Federal program for too long.

By Mr. MURKOWSKI (for himself and Mr. STEVENS):

S. 2553. A bill to amend the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act to provide equitable treatment of Alaska Native Vietnam Veterans, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation that will finally bring closure to the concerns of many Alaska Native veterans who served their country during the Vietnam war.

When the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, ANCSA, was signed into law by President Nixon in 1971, many Alaska Natives were serving in our military. Because of their service, many were unable to apply for Native land allotments under the Native Allotment Act, a program that was ended with the enactment of ANCSA. Alaska Natives who did not serve during the Vietnam conflict were able to apply for lands under the Native Allotment Act but those who did serve had little chance to apply under the circumstances.

I think everyone here will agree that allowing these veterans the same advantages as those who did not serve in the military during the Vietnam conflict is only fair. The main problem is that when we first addressed this inequity in 1998, the terms we set were so restrictive that presently only 60 out of a possible 1,110 veterans who could qualify even have the chance of receiving an allotment. That is a paltry 5 percent of all that could have otherwise qualified. This is simply not acceptable. My legislation addresses the restrictive terms we unknowingly set in the 1998 amendment in three ways: First, my legislation will expand the military service dates of the program so that they coincide with the official dates of the Vietnam conflict. We ought not to complicate matters by using any dates other than those that the Veteran's Administration has officially determined are within the Vietnam conflict era. Those dates are August 5, 1964 through May 7, 1975.

Secondly, my legislation will replace the current use and occupancy requirements with a simplified approval process, just like the one established under the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act. By adopting the same legislative approval process that other allotment programs used, this legislation will avoid the lengthy delays, costly adjudications and burdensome requirements that Alaska Native veterans are currently facing. If we do not correct this particular problem now, many Alaska Native veterans will die before they ever have their applications approved. We cannot allow this to happen to them.

Finally, my legislation will extend the application deadline and expand the available land choices so that the Alaska Native veterans who could qualify for allotments will have the time and allotment options they need in order to participate.

I hope my colleagues will join me in making these simple, common sense changes so that this group of veterans can secure the land allotments they deserve.

SUBMITTED RESOLUTIONS

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 116—TO EXPRESS THE SENSE OF THE CONGRESS REGARDING DYSPRAXIA

Ms. LANDRIEU (for herself and Mr. BREAUX) submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Health, Education, Labor, and Pensions:

S. CON. RES. 116

Whereas an estimated 1 in 20 children suffers from the developmental disorder dyspraxia;

Whereas 70 percent of those affected by dyspraxia are male;

Whereas dyspraxics may be of average or above average intelligence but are often behaviorally immature;

Whereas symptoms of dyspraxia consist of clumsiness, poor body awareness, reading and writing difficulties, speech problems, and learning disabilities, even though not all of these will apply to every dyspraxic;

Whereas there is no cure for dyspraxia, but the earlier a child is treated the greater the chance of developmental maturation;

Whereas dyspraxics may be shunned within their own peer group because they do not fit in;

Whereas most dyspraxic children are dismissed as "slow" or "clumsy" and, therefore, not properly diagnosed;

Whereas more than 50 percent of educators have never heard of dyspraxia;

Whereas education and information about dyspraxia are important to it's detection and treatment; and

Whereas Congress as an institution, and members of Congress as individuals, are in unique positions to help raise the public awareness about dyspraxia: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of Congress that—

(1) all Americans should be more informed about dyspraxia, its easily recognized symptoms, and proper treatment; and

(2) teachers, principals, and other educators should be encouraged to learn to recognize the symptoms of dyspraxia and similar disorders in the classroom so that these children will have a better chance of receiving early and effective treatment.

SENATE RESOLUTION 274—EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE SENATE CONCERNING THE 2002 WORLD CUP AND CO-HOSTS REPUBLIC OF KOREA AND JAPAN

Mr. DASCHLE (for himself and Mr. LOTT) submitted the following resolutionl which was referred to the Committe on Foreign Relations:

S. RES. 274

Whereas the United States maintains vitally important alliances with Japan and the Republic of Korea;

Whereas the Republic of Korea and Japan will co-host the 2002 Federation International Football Association (FIFA) World Cup Korea/Japan;

Whereas the 2002 FIFA World Cup will be the first World Cup to be co-hosted by two nations;

Whereas the 2002 FIFA World Cup Korea/Japan will be the first FIFA World Cup to be held in Asia;

Whereas for 72 years, the World Cup has symbolized the assemblage of nations to celebrate fair-play, sportsmanship, and diversity of cultures;

Whereas 32 nations, including the United States, have qualified to compete from May 31 through June 30 of 2002, and will send an estimated 1,500 coaches and athletes to the Republic of Korea and Japan, making this year's World Cup the largest heretofore;

Whereas Japan and the Republic of Korea have invested significant resources to host a successful World Cup; and

Whereas the co-hosting of this international sporting event fosters cooperation and contributes to peace and stability in Northeast Asia: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate—

(1) appreciates and values the relationship between the United States and the Republic of Korea and the United States and Japan;

(2) commends 2002 FIFA World Cup organizers from Japan and the Republic of Korea for the significant preparations they have made for a successful World Cup; and

(3) recognizes and applauds the cooperation between the President of the Republic of Korea, Kim Dae-jung, and the Prime Minister of Japan, Junichiro Koizumi, in the hosting of the largest World Cup competition in the history of the sport.

TEXT OF AMENDMENTS

SA 3531. Mr. LOTT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 3009, to extend the Andean Trade Preference Act, to grant additional trade benefits under that Act, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

Strike all after the word "SEC." and insert the following:

FAIR WHEAT TRADE.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This section may be cited as the "Wheat Trade Fairness Act of 2002".

(b) FINDINGS.—Congress finds the following:

(1) The Government of Canada grants the Canadian Wheat Board special monopoly rights and privileges which disadvantage United States wheat farmers and undermine the integrity of the trading system.

(2) The Canadian Wheat Board is able to take sales from United States farmers, because it—

(A) is insulated from commercial risks;

(B) benefits from subsidies;

(C) has a protected domestic market and special privileges; and

(D) has competitive advantages due to its monopoly control over a guaranteed supply of wheat.

(3) The Canadian Wheat Board is insulated from commercial risk because the Canadian Government guarantees its financial operations, including its borrowing and initial payments to farmers.

(4) The Canadian Wheat Board benefits from subsidies and special privileges, such as government-owned railcars, government-guaranteed debt, and below market borrowing costs.

(5) The Canadian Wheat Board has a competitive advantage due to its monopoly control over a guaranteed supply of wheat that Canadian farmers are required to sell to the Board, and monopoly control to export western Canadian wheat which allows the Canadian Wheat Board to enter into forward contracts without incurring commercial risks.

(6) Canada's burdensome regulatory scheme controls the varieties of wheat that can be marketed and restricts imports of United States wheat.

(7) The wheat trade problem with Canada is longstanding and affects the entire United States wheat industry by displacing sales of United States wheat domestically and in foreign markets.

(8) The acts, policies, and practices of the Government of Canada and the Canadian Wheat Board are unreasonable and burden or restrict United States wheat commerce.

(9) Since entering into the United States-Canada Free Trade Agreement, United States wheat producers have been continuously threatened by the unfair practices of the Canadian Wheat Board.

(10) The United States Department of Agriculture figures confirm that United States wheat farmers have lost domestic market share to Canadian Wheat Board imports consistently since the implementation of the United States-Canada Free Trade Agreement; and

(11) United States wheat producers are faced with low prices as a result of the Canadian Wheat Board's unfair pricing in domestic markets. United States wheat producers have experienced a steep decline in farm income, have increasing carryover stock, and face increasing indebtedness.

(c) Response to Unfair Trade Practices by Canadian Wheat Board.—Since the United States Trade Representative made a positive finding that the practices of the Canadian Wheat Board involved subsidies, protected domestic market, and special benefits and privileges that disadvantage United States wheat farmers and infringe on the integrity of a competitive trading system, it is the sense of the Congress that United States Trade Representative should pursue multiple avenues to seek relief for U.S. wheat farmers from the wheat trading practices of the Government of Canada and the Canadian Wheat Board, including through:

(1) a thorough examination of a possible dispute settlement case against the Canadian Wheat Board in the World Trade Organization; (2) working with the North Dakota Wheat Commission and the U.S. wheat industry to examine the possibility of action under title VII of the Tariff Act of 1930 with respect to countervailing and antidumping duties against Canadian wheat; (3) in the newly launched round of the World Trade Organization, pursuing permanent reform of the Canadian Wheat Board through the development of new disciplines and rules on state trading enterprises that export agricultural goods which include—

(A) ending exclusive export rights to ensure private sector competition in markets controlled by single desk exporters;

(B) eliminating the use of government funds or guarantees to support or ensure the financial viability of single desk exporters; and

(C) establishing WTO requirements for notifying acquisition costs, export pricing, and other sales information for single desk exporters; and

(4) working with the U.S. wheat industry to identify specific impediments to U.S. wheat entering Canada and presenting these to the Canadians so as to ensure the possibility of fair, two-way trade.

SA 3532. Mr. REED (for himself, Mr. Bingaman, Mr. Corzine, and Mr. Kennedy) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 3009, to extend the Andean Trade Preference Act, to grant additional trade benefits under that Act, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

Strike all after "SEC." and insert the following:

(a) Certain Provisions Not To Apply.—Paragraphs (11) and (24) of section 221 of the Trade Act of 1974, as amended by section 111, shall not take effect.

(b) Definitions.—At the end of section 221, of the Trade Act of 1974, as amended by section 111, add the following new paragraphs:

(29) Downstream producer.—The term "downstream producer" means a firm that performs additional, value-added production processes, including a firm that performs final assembly, finishing, or packaging of articles produced by another firm.

(30) Supplier.—The term "supplier" means a firm that produces component parts for, or articles considered to be a part of, the production process for articles produced by a firm or subdivision covered by a certification of eligibility under section 231. The term 'supplier' also includes a firm that provides services under contract to a firm or subdivision covered by such certification.

SA 3533. Mr. REED submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill H.R. 3009, to extend the Andean Trade Preference Act, to grant additional trade benefits under that Act, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

At the end of the matter proposed to be inserted, add the following new section:

At the end of the amendment, insert the following:

"Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, section 1143 of this Act shall not take effect."

SA 3536. Mr. HARKIN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to amendment SA 3459 proposed by Mr. Reid (for Mr. Harkin) to the amendment SA 3401 proposed by Mr. Baucus (for himself and Mr. Grassley) to the bill (H.R. 3009) to extend the Andean Trade Preference Act, to grant additional trade benefits under that Act, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows:

Strike all and insert the following:

At the end of section 2102(b), insert the following:

(15) Worst forms of child labor.—The principal negotiating objectives of the United States regarding the worst forms of child labor are—

(A) to prevent distortions in the conduct of international trade caused by the use of the worst forms of child labor, in whole or in part, in the production of goods for export in international commerce; and

(B) to redress unfair and illegitimate competition based upon the use of the worst forms of child labor, in whole or in part, in the production of goods for export in international commerce, including through—

(i) promoting universal ratification and full compliance by all trading nations with ILO Convention No. 182 Concerning the Prohibition and Immediate Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labor.

(ii) clarifying the right under Article XX(a) and (b) of GATT 1994 to enact and enforce national measures that are necessary to protect public morals and to protect animal or plant life and health, including measures that limit or ban the importation of goods or services rendered in international trade that are produced through the use of the worst forms of child labor;

(iii) ensuring that any multilateral or bilateral trade agreement that is entered into by the United States obligates all parties to such agreements to enact and enforce national laws that satisfy their international legal obligations to prevent the use of the worst forms of child labor, especially in the conduct of international trade; and

(iv) providing for strong enforcement of international and national laws that obligate all trading nations to prevent the use of the worst forms of child labor, especially in the conduct of international trade, through accessible, expeditious, and effective civil, administrative, and criminal enforcement mechanisms.

SA 3542. Mr. STEVENS (for himself and Mrs. MURRAY) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to amendment SA 3401 proposed by Mr. BAUCUS (for himself and Mr. GRASSLEY) to the bill (H.R. 3009) to extend the Andean Trade Preference Act, to grant additional trade benefits under that Act, and for other purposes; which was ordered to lie on the table; as follows;

At the appropriate place insert the following new section:

SEC. . REVIEW OF IMPORTS.

(a) APPLICATION OF REVIEWED PRODUCTS.—In this section "reviewed imported products" shall mean those imported products with Harmonized System (HS) numbers 0302.1200.03, 0303.2200.00, 0304.1040.93. 0304.2060.06, and 0305.4100.00, and any similar product that is or may in the future be canned and is intended for human consumption.

(b) IN GENERAL.—Beginning on May 1, 2002, the amount of reviewed imported products that may be imported into the United States from any country during May, June, July and August of each year may not exceed the qualified amount, notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary.

(b) QUALIFIED AMOUNT.—

(1) GENERAL RULE.—For purposes of this section, the term "qualified amount" means an amount that does not exceed 33 percent of the average annual amount of reviewed imported products from a country during the preceding 10-year period.

(2) ANNUAL CALCULATION.—Beginning on January 1, 2003, and each year thereafter, the Commissioner of Customs shall publish in the Federal Register—

(A) the quantity of reviewed imported products from each country for the preceding 10-year period; and

(B) the qualified amount of review imported products that can be imported from each country for the months of May, June, July, and August of that year.

(3) SPECIAL RULE FOR 2002.—Not later than 10 days after the date of enactment of this section, the Commissioner of Customs shall estimate and publish in the Federal Register the qualified amount of reviewed imported products that may be imported during May, June, July, and August of 2002.

(4) PRODUCT-FORM STANDARDIZATION.—In calculating the qualified amount for this section the Secretary shall use industry accepted recovery rates of resources used to produce reviewed imported products to ensure the qualified amount of such products being imported during May, June, July, and August is accurate relative to annual imports of the whole resource used to produce reviewed imported products.

SA 3543. Mr. LEVIN (for himself, Mr. VOINOVICH, and Ms. STABENOW) proposed an amendment to amendment SA 3401 proposed by Mr. BAUCUS (for himself and Mr. GRASSLEY) to the bill (H.R. 3009) to extend the Andean Trade Preference Act, to grant additional trade benefits under that Act, and for other purposes; as follows:

On page 228, line 21, insert after "exports" the following: "(including motor vehicles and vehicle parts)".

SA 3544. Mr. CAMPBELL proposed an amendment to the bill S. 1644, to further the protection and recognition of veterans' memorials, and for other purposes, as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

(a) In General.—Chapter 65 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"§ 1369. Destruction of veterans' memorials

"(a) Whoever, in a circumstance described in subsection (b), willfully injures or destroys, or attempts to injure or destroy, any structure, plaque, statue, or other monument on public property commemorating the service of any person or persons in the armed forces of the United States shall be fined under this title, imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both.

"(b) A circumstance described in this subsection is that—

"(1) in committing the offense described in subsection (a), the defendant travels or causes another to travel in interstate or foreign commerce, or uses the mail or an instrumentality of interstate or foreign commerce; or

"(2) the structure, plaque, statue, or other monument described in subsection (a) is located on property owned by, or under the jurisdiction of, the Federal Government.".

(b) Clerical Amendment.—The table of sections at the beginning of chapter 65 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"1369. Destruction of veterans' memorials.".

SEC. 3. HIGHWAY SIGNS RELATING TO VETERANS CEMETERIES.

(a) In General.—Notwithstanding the terms of any agreement entered into by the Secretary of Transportation and a State under section 109(d) or 402(a) of title 23, United States Code, a veterans cemetery shall be treated as a site for which a supplemental guide sign may be placed on any Federal-aid highway.

(b) Applicability.—Subsection (a) shall apply to an agreement entered into before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SA 3545. Mr. REID (for Mr. Voinovich (for himself, Mr. Lieberman, Mr. Bunning, Mrs. Carnahan, Mr. Carper, Mr. Cleland, Mr. Conrad, Mr. Dayton, Mr. Jeffords, Mr. Kerry, Mr. Leahy, Mrs. Lincoln, Mr. Miller, Mr. Thompson, Mr. Bond, and Ms. Collins)) proposed an amendment to the bill H.R. 327, to amend chapter 35 of title 44, United States Code, for the purpose of facilitating compliance by small business concerns with certain Federal paperwork requirements, to establish a task force to examine information collection and dissemination, and for other purposes; as follows:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Small Business Paperwork Relief Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. FACILITATION OF COMPLIANCE WITH FEDERAL PAPERWORK REQUIREMENTS.

(a) Requirements Applicable to the Director of OMB.—Section 3504(c) of title 44, United States Code (commonly referred to as the "Paperwork Reduction Act"), is amended—

(1) in paragraph (4), by striking "; and" and inserting a semicolon;

(2) in paragraph (5), by striking the period and inserting a semicolon; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

"(6) publish in the Federal Register and make available on the Internet (in consultation with the Small Business Administration) on an annual basis a list of the compliance assistance resources available to small businesses, with the first such publication occurring not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of the Small Business Paperwork Relief Act of 2002.".

(b) Establishment of Agency Point of Contact.—Section 3506 of title 44, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(i)(1) In addition to the requirements described in subsection (c), each agency shall, with respect to the collection of information and the control of paperwork, establish 1 point of contact in the agency to act as a liaison between the agency and small business concerns (as defined in section 3 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632)).

"(2) Each point of contact described under paragraph (1) shall be established not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of the Small Business Paperwork Relief Act of 2002.".

(c) Additional Reduction of Paperwork for Certain Small Businesses.—Section 3506(c) of title 44, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in paragraph (2)(B), by striking "; and" and inserting a semicolon;

(2) in paragraph (3)(J), by striking the period and inserting "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

"(4) in addition to the requirements of this chapter regarding the reduction of information collection burdens for small business concerns (as defined in section 3 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632)), make efforts to further reduce the information collection burden for small business concerns with fewer than 25 employees.".

SEC. 3. ESTABLISHMENT OF TASK FORCE ON INFORMATION COLLECTION AND DISSEMINATION.

(a) In General.—Chapter 35 of title 44, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by redesignating section 3520 as section 3521; and

(2) by inserting after section 3519 the following:

"§ 3520. Establishment of task force on information collection and dissemination

"(a) There is established a task force to study the feasibility of streamlining requirements with respect to small business concerns regarding collection of information and strengthening dissemination of information (in this section referred to as the 'task force').

"(b)(1) The Director shall determine—

"(A) subject to the minimum requirements under paragraph (2), the number of representatives to be designated under each subparagraph of that paragraph; and

"(B) the agencies to be represented under paragraph (2)(K).

"(2) After all determinations are made under paragraph (1), the members of the task force shall be designated by the head of each applicable department or agency, and include—

"(A) 1 representative of the Director, who shall convene and chair the task force;

"(B) not less than 2 representatives of the Department of Labor, including 1 representative of the Bureau of Labor Statistics and 1 representative of the Occupational Safety and Health Administration;

"(C) not less than 1 representative of the Environmental Protection Agency;

"(D) not less than 1 representative of the Department of Transportation;

"(E) not less than 1 representative of the Office of Advocacy of the Small Business Administration;

"(F) not less than 1 representative of the Internal Revenue Service;

"(G) not less than 2 representatives of the Department of Health and Human Services, including 1 representative of the Centers for Medicare and Medicaid Services;

"(H) not less than 1 representative of the Department of Agriculture;

"(I) not less than 1 representative of the Department of the Interior;

"(J) not less than 1 representative of the General Services Administration; and

"(K) not less than 1 representative of each of 2 agencies not represented by representatives described under subparagraphs (A) through (J).

"(c) The task force shall—

"(1) identify ways to integrate the collection of information across Federal agencies and programs and examine the feasibility and desirability of requiring each agency to consolidate requirements regarding collections of information with respect to small business concerns within and across agencies, without negatively impacting the effectiveness of underlying laws and regulations regarding such collections of information, in order that each small business concern may submit all information required by the agency—

"(A) to 1 point of contact in the agency;

"(B) in a single format, such as a single electronic reporting system, with respect to the agency; and

"(C) with synchronized reporting for information submissions having the same frequency, such as synchronized quarterly, semiannual, and annual reporting dates;

"(2) examine the feasibility and benefits to small businesses of publishing a list by the Director of the collections of information applicable to small business concerns (as defined in section 3 of the Small Business Act (15 U.S.C. 632)), organized—

"(A) by North American Industry Classification System code;

"(B) by industrial sector description; or

"(C) in another manner by which small business concerns can more easily identify requirements with which those small business concerns are expected to comply;

"(3) examine the savings, including cost savings, and develop recommendations for implementing—

"(A) systems for electronic submissions of information to the Federal Government; and

"(B) interactive reporting systems, including components that provide immediate feedback to assure that data being submitted—

"(i) meet requirements of format; and

"(ii) are within the range of acceptable options for each data field;

"(4) make recommendations to improve the electronic dissemination of information collected under Federal requirements;

"(5) recommend a plan for the development of an interactive Governmentwide system, available through the Internet, to allow each small business to—

"(A) better understand which Federal requirements regarding collection of information (and, when possible, which other Federal regulatory requirements) apply to that particular business; and

"(B) more easily comply with those Federal requirements; and

"(6) in carrying out this section, consider opportunities for the coordination—

"(A) of Federal and State reporting requirements; and

"(B) among the points of contact described under section 3506(i), such as to enable agencies to provide small business concerns with contacts for information collection requirements for other agencies.

"(d) The task force shall—

"(1) by publication in the Federal Register, provide notice and an opportunity for public comment on each report in draft form; and

"(2) make provision in each report for the inclusion of—

"(A) any additional or dissenting views of task force members; and

"(B) a summary of significant public comments.

"(e) Not later than 1 year after the date of enactment of the Small Business Paperwork Relief Act of 2002, the task force shall submit a report of its findings under subsection (c) (1), (2), and (3) to—

"(1) the Director;

"(2) the chairpersons and ranking minority members of—

"(A) the Committee on Governmental Affairs and the Committee on Small Business and Entrepreneurship of the Senate; and

The bill (S. 1644), as amended, was read the third time and passed.

SMALL BUSINESS PAPERWORK RELIEF ACT

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Governmental Affairs Committee be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 327, the Small Business Paperwork Relief Act, and that the Senate proceed to its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will report the bill by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 327) to amend chapter 35 of title 44, United States Code, for the purpose of facilitating compliance by small businesses with certain Federal paperwork requirements, and to establish a task force to examine the feasibility of streamlining paperwork requirements applicable to small businesses.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I understand that Senator VOINOVICH, Senator LIEBERMAN, and others have an amendment at the desk.

I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be agreed to, the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table, the bill, as amended, be read three times and passed; that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; that the title amendment, which is at the desk, be agreed to; and that any statements relating thereto be printed in the RECORD, without any intervening action or debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment (No. 3545) was agreed to.

(The amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Text of Amendments.")

The amendment (No. 3546) was agreed to, as follows:

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to amend chapter 35 of title 44, United States Code, for the purpose of facilitating compliance by small business concerns with certain Federal paperwork requirements, to establish a task force to examine information collection and dissemination, and for other purposes."

The bill (H.R. 327), as amended, was passed.

Mr. LIEBERMAN. Mr. President. I am very pleased to support final passage of H.R. 327, the Small Business Paperwork Relief Act of 2002, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by Senator VOINOVICH and me and Senators BOND, BUNNING, CARNAHAN, CARPER, CLELAND, COLLINS, CONRAD, DAYTON, JEFFORDS, KERRY, LEAHY, LINCOLN, MILLER, AND THOMPSON.

America's small businesses are a critical part of the nation's economy and a key driver of new job growth. Small businesses face particular challenges in complying with government information-collection requirements. H.R. 327 contains several provisions to help small businesses in this area. This bill aids small businesses in understanding and complying with Federal information-collection requirements, mandates a study of how to streamline information-collection requirements for small businesses and how to strengthen the dissemination of information by the Federal Government, and directs that certain data be compiled about enforcement activities involving small entities.

Last year, Senator VOINOVICH introduced S. 1271, which is a companion bill to H.R. 327, on behalf of himself and Senators LINCOLN and LEAHY. The bill now has 13 additional cosponsors: Senators BOND, BUNNING, CARNAHAN, CARPER, CLELAND, COLLINS, CONRAD, DAYTON, JEFFORDS, KERRY, LIEBERMAN, MILLER, and THOMPSON. The Governmental Affairs Committee reported out S. 1271 on November 14, 2001, and the Senate passed the bill by unanimous consent on December 17, 2001. The House had earlier passed H.R. 327, and, following Senate action on S. 1271, I worked with Members of the Senate and the House—primarily, Senator VOINOVICH and Representatives BURTON, WAXMAN, OSE, and TIERNEY—to try and resolve differences between the House and Senate bills. These discussions were successful, resulting in a bipartisan, bicameral agreement on consensus legislation, and Senator VOINOVICH and I and other Senators are offering this consensus legislation as an amendment in the nature of a substitute to H.R. 327 for final passage by the Senate.

I thank Senator VOINOVICH and his staff for their leadership and hard work on this legislation in the Senate, and also Representatives BURTON, WAXMAN, OSE, and TIERNEY and their staffs for their leadership and hard work in the House and for working with us to reach consensus on this valuable legislation to help small businesses.

Senator VOINOVICH and I have prepared a section-by-section description of this consensus amendment, including a summary of the purposes and legislative history of this legislation, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

H.R. 327—CONSENSUS AMENDMENT, PURPOSES AND SUMMARY, SECTION-BY-SECTION DESCRIPTION, AND LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

I. PURPOSES AND SUMMARY

H.R. 327, as amended, helps small businesses. The bill aids small businesses in understanding and complying with Federal information-collection requirements, mandates a study of how to streamline information-collection requirements for small businesses and how to strengthen the dissemination of information by the Federal Government, and directs that certain data be compiled about enforcement activities involving small entities. The legislation includes the following provisions to help small businesses:

The Office of Management and Budget (OMB) will annually publish in the Federal Register and make available on the Internet a list of the compliance assistance resources available to small businesses.

Each agency will establish a single point of contact within the agency to serve as liaison with small business concerns with respect to the collection of information and the control of paperwork.

Each agency will make efforts to further reduce the information collection burden for very small business concerns with fewer than 25 employees.

An interagency task force will be convened to study measures to streamline information collection requirements for small businesses and to strengthen dissemination of information by the Federal Government. Among other things, the task force will identify ways to integrate the collection of information from small businesses across agencies and programs, will make recommendations for electronic reporting and dissemination of information, and will recommend a plan for an interactive government website to help small businesses understand which federal information-collection requirements apply to its business.

Each agency will submit an initial report and final report on the number of enforcement actions in which civil penalties were assessed, the number of such actions against small entities, the number of such actions in which civil penalties were reduced or waived, and the amount of such reductions and waivers. Requiring this information will facilitate congressional oversight.

II. SECTION-BY-SECTION DESCRIPTION OF THE CONSENSUS AMENDMENT

Section 1. Short title

Section 1 of the bill provides that the Act may be cited as the "Small Business Paperwork Relief Act of 2002."

Section 2. Facilitation of compliance with federal paperwork requirements

Publication of list of compliance-assistance resources. Subsection (a) of section 2 of the bill adds a new paragraph to the Paperwork Reduction Act (PRA), at 44 U.S.C. §3504(c)(6). The new paragraph (6), read together with existing subsection (c), requires that, with respect to the collection of information and the control of paperwork, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) will publish in the Federal Register and make available on the Internet a list of compliance assistance resources available to small businesses. The Director is instructed to do this in consultation with the Small Business Administration. The applicable definition of "collection of information" in the PRA, at 44 U.S.C. §3502(3), includes an agency's questions and recordkeeping requirements posted to, or imposed upon, 10 or more persons to obtain information or require its disclosure. The purpose of this subsection of the bill is to provide small businesses a resource to help them quickly and efficiently find the compliance assistance they need.

Agency point of contact. Subsection (b) of section 2 of the bill adds a new subsection to the PRA, at 44 U.S.C. §3506(i), requiring that, with respect to the collection of information and the control of paperwork, each agency must establish one point of contact to act as liaison between the agency and small business concerns. The applicable definition of "agency," as set forth in the PRA at 44 U.S.C. §3502(1), includes generally any department, Government corporation, or other establishment in the executive branch, including independent regulatory agencies. The bill also makes applicable the definition of "small business concern" in the Small Business Act, at 15 U.S.C. §632. The purpose of this subsection of the bill is to establish the place in each agency that small businesses can contact when they need help with respect to information collection or the control of paperwork.

Further efforts to reduce paperwork for very small enterprises. Subsection (c) of section 2 of the amendment adds a new paragraph to the PRA, at 44 U.S.C. §3506(c)(4), requiring that, in addition to the requirements of the PRA regarding the reduction of information collection burdens for small business concerns generally, each agency must make efforts to further reduce the information collection burden for small business concerns with fewer than 25 employees.

Section 3. Establishment of task force on information collection and dissemination

Section 3(a) of the bill adds a new section to the PRA, at 44 U.S.C. §3520, entitled "Establishment of task force on information collection and dissemination."

Establishment of task force and statement of purposes. Subsection (a) of new 44 U.S.C. §3520 establishes a task force to study the feasibility of streamlining requirements with respect to small business concerns regarding collection of information and strengthening dissemination of information.

Selection of task force members. Subsection (b) of new 44 U.S.C. §3520 provides for the selection of individuals to serve on the task force. The Director of OMB will determine the number of representatives to be designated by each of the several departments and agencies listed in the bill (subject to the minimum requirements stated in the bill), and will also name two additional agencies that will designate representatives on the task force. The heads of those departments and agencies will select individuals to serve as members of the task force. The Director also will select a representative of the Director, who will convene and chair the task force.

Task force assignments. Paragraphs (1) through (6) of subsection (c) of new 44 U.S.C. §3520 direct the task force to do the following:

Paragraph (1)—Identify ways to integrate information collection and examine whether, and to what extent, it would be feasible and desirable to require agencies to consolidate requirements regarding collections of information within and across agencies (without negatively impacting the effectiveness of underlying laws and regulations) in order to enable each small business concern to submit required information—(A) to one point of contact in the agency, (B) in a single format, such as an electronic reporting system, or (C) with synchronized reporting for submissions having the same frequency, such as by allowing all quarterly reports to be submitted on the same date each quarter, allowing all annual reports to be submitted on the same date each year, etc.

Paragraph (2)—Examine whether, and to what extent, it would be feasible and beneficial to small businesses to the Director to publish a list of all collections of information applicable to small business concerns organized by North American Industry Classification System (NAICS) code, by industrial sector description, or in another manner by which small business concerns can more easily identify applicable requirements.

Paragraph (3)—Examine the savings and develop recommendations for implementing—(A) electronic submissions to the Federal Government, and (B) interactive reporting systems providing immediate feedback to the submitter to assure that data being submitted are appropriate.

Paragraph (4)—Make recommendations to improve the electronic dissemination of information collected under Federal requirements.

Paragraph (5)—Recommend a plan for the development of an interactive Internet-based system to allow each small business to better understand which Federal information-collection requirements (and where possible, other Federal regulatory requirements) are applicable, and to more easily comply with those requirements.

Paragraph (6)—In carrying out its responsibilities, consider opportunities for the coordination of Federal and State reporting requirements, and for the coordination among the points of contact established pursuant to the bill to enable agencies, e.g., to provide contact information at other agencies.

Notice-and-comment procedure for task force. Subsection (d) of new 44 U.S.C. §3520 requires the task force, by publication in the Federal Register, to provide notice and an opportunity for comment on each report in draft form, and to make provision in each report for the inclusion of any separate views of task force members and a summary of significant public comments.

Task force reports. Subsections (e) and (f) of new 44 U.S.C. §3520 require the task force to submit its first report not later than one year after enactment of the bill and its second report not later than two years after enactment of the bill. The first report will be of the task force's findings under paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) of subsection (c) of new 44 U.S.C. §3520, and the second report will be of the task force's findings under paragraphs (4) and (5) of subsection (c) of new 44 U.S.C. §3520. (Those paragraphs (1) through (5) are summarized above.) The task force shall submit both its first and second reports to the Director of OMB, to certain committees of Congress identified in the bill, and to the Small Business and Agriculture Regulatory Enforcement Ombudsman designated under 15 U.S.C. §657(b).

Termination of task force. Subsection (g) of new 44 U.S.C. §3520 provides that the task force shall terminate upon completion of its work.

Definition of "small business concern." Subsection (h) of new 44 U.S.C. §3520 makes applicable the definition of "small business concern" in the Small Business Act, 15 U.S.C. §632.

Section 4. Regulatory enforcement reports

Section 4 of the bill requires that each agency shall submit an initial report and a final report on each of the following:

(A) The number of enforcement actions in which a civil penalty is assessed.

(B) The number of enforcement actions in which a civil penalty is assessed against a small entity.

(C) The number of enforcement actions described under items (A) and (B), above, in which the civil penalty is reduced or waived.

(D) The total monetary amount of the reductions or waivers referred to under item (C), above.

Each report shall include the definitions, selected at the discretion of the agency submitting the report, of the terms "enforcement actions," "reduction or waiver," and "small entity" as used in the report. This provision, recognizing that agencies have different policies governing their enforcement activities and different ways of tracking these activities, seeks to avoid placing undue reporting burdens on agencies.

The initial report shall include information with respect to the 1-year period beginning on October 1, 2002, and shall be submitted not later than December 31, 2003. The final report shall include information with respect to the 1-year period beginning on October 1, 2003, and shall be submitted not later than December 31, 2004. Each agency shall submit the initial report and the final report to certain committees of Congress identified in the bill and to the Small Business and Agriculture Regulatory Enforcement Ombudsman designated under 15 U.S.C. §657(b).

For purposes of this section, the term "agency" has the meaning under 5 U.S.C. §551, which is the definition under the Administrative Procedures Act, and agencies as so defined are required to submit the reports under this section.

III. LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

H.R. 327 was introduced by Rep. Dan Burton on January 31, 2001, and was referred to the Committee on Government Reform and to the Committee on Small Business. The bill now has 11 cosponsors. At the Government Reform Committee, the bill was further referred to the Subcommittee on Energy Policy, Natural Resources and Regulatory Affairs.

On March 15, 2001, H.R. 327 was brought before the Committee of the Whole House and then before the House. A managers' amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to by voice vote, and then H.R. 327, as so amended, was passed by a unanimous vote of 416 to 0. On that same day, H.R. 327 was received in the Senate and referred to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

A companion bill in the Senate, S. 1271, was introduced on July 30, 2001, by Senator Voinovich, for himself and Senators Lincoln and Leahy, and was referred to the Governmental Affairs Committee. The bill now has 13 additional cosponsors: Senators Bond, Bunning, Carnahan, Carper, Cleland, Collins, Conrad, Dayton, Jeffords, Kerry, Lieberman, Miller, and Thompson.

S. 1271 was considered by the Governmental Affairs Committee at its business meeting on November 14, 2001, where Senator Voinovich offered an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which included suggestions made by Senator Lieberman and others. The Committee adopted the amendment by voice vote and ordered the bill, as amended, favorably reported by voice vote.

On December 17, 2001, the Senate by unanimous consent agreed to a technical amendment to S. 1271 offered on behalf of Senator Lieberman and an additional amendment offered on behalf of Senator Kerry, and passed S. 1271 as so amended.

This Consensus Amendment is based primarily on the provisions of H.R. 327, as it passed the House, and the provisions of S. 1271, as it passed the Senate. Bipartisan, bicameral discussions among interested Members of the House and Senate—principally, Representatives Burton, Waxman, Ose, and Tierney and Senators Lieberman and Voinovich—yielded this consensus proposal.

Principal differences between the Consensus Amendment and the two earlier bills, S. 1271 and H.R. 327, include:

The Consensus Amendment requires that the Director of OMB publish annually a list of compliance assistance resources available to small businesses. This requirement was in S. 1271 but not in H.R. 327.

The Consensus Amendment, like H.R. 327, spells out a more detailed and extensive agenda for the task force than S. 1271 in the areas of electronic submission and dissemination of information. Also like H.R. 327, the Consensus Amendment requires the task force to issue two reports, one year after enactment and two years after enactment, whereas S. 1271 required only a single report one year after enactment.

The Consensus Amendment, like S. 1271, instructs the task force to examine the feasibility and helpfulness of publishing an annual list by the Director of OMB of information-collection requirements applicable to small business concerns, organized by North American Industrial Classification or another useful system. H.R. 327 instead included a requirement that the Director annually publish such a list.

The Consensus Amendment provides that the task force will examine whether agencies should be required to allow small businesses to synchronize reporting for submissions having the same frequency, e.g., by filing quarterly reports on the same date each quarter. S. 1271 included no corresponding provision. H.R. 327, on the other hand, provided that the task force would examine whether agencies should be required to allow submissions "on the same date." The Consensus Amendment provision is derived from H.R. 327, but is limited to submissions having the same frequency, to clarify that the provision does not include changing the frequency of periodic reports, e.g., by converting a quarterly report into an annual report so that information for the entire year could be filed "on the same date" as another annual report.

The Consensus Amendment requires the task force to publish notice and to provide an opportunity for comment on each report in draft form, and to make provision in each report for the inclusion of any separate views of task force members and a summary of significant public comments. This provision is found in neither S. 1271 nor H.R. 327.

Like S. 1271, the Consensus Amendment includes a section requiring agencies to submit reports providing data about enforcement and penalty actions against both small entities and all entities. H.R. 327 contains no such provision. The section in the Consensus Amendment is based on S. 1271, but with modifications to clarify the agencies' reporting obligations and to avoid unnecessary burden on agencies. Whereas the reports under S. 1271 would have been due one year after enactment and every two years thereafter, the Consensus Amendment provides lead time by establishing the first due date on December 31, 2003, and requires one further report due one year later. Also, the Consensus Amendment specifies the one-year reporting period to be covered by each report, and states explicitly that each agency has discretion in defining certain terms as used in the agency's reports.

Mr. VOINOVICH. Mr. President, I am pleased that today the Senate has passed H.R. 327, the Small Business Paperwork Relief Act of 2002.

As my colleagues know, small businesses are the backbone of our economy and significantly important to the fiscal health of the United States. Small businesses constitute more than 90 percent of this nation's employers, employ 53 percent of the private workforce, and create approximately 74 percent of this country's new jobs.

While on the whole, America's small business owners are successful, the numerous federal paperwork requirements that they must face, I believe, have had a negative impact on further entrepreneurial growth in the United States. There is little doubt that America's small business owners could be even more successful if they were able to devote more time and resources to their businesses instead of mountains of federal paperwork. That is why I introduced S. 1271, the Senate companion to H.R. 327, on July 30, 2001. I was pleased when the Senate passed S. 1271 on December 17, 2001.

This "good government" legislation continues the efforts on the part of Congress to streamline and reduce paperwork burdens on small businesses and help increase the productivity of American business. The Office of Management and Budget (OMB) has estimated that the federal paperwork burden is 7.2 billion hours annually, at a cost of some $190 billion per year. Small business owners are particularly hurt by regulatory and paperwork burdens. The Small Business Administration (SBA) estimates that the costs to small businesses are a staggering $5,100 per employee. While many of these requirements are important and necessary, the high costs of understanding them and complying with them can sometimes prevent small businesses from being able to expand or even stay afloat. In some cases, this burden can deter entrepreneurs from opening in the first place.

The Small Business Paperwork Relief Act of 2002 will help improve the ability of small business owners to understand and comply with federal regulations and paperwork mandates through the following helpful provisions:

A requirement for the Office of Management and Budget to annually publish in the Federal Register and on the Internet a list of the compliance assistance resources available to small businesses;

A requirement for each federal agency to establish a single point of contact to help small business owners fill out forms and comply with federal regulations;

A requirement for each federal agency to make further efforts to reduce paperwork for small businesses with fewer than 25 employees;

The establishment of an interagency task force to develop an interactive government web-site to help each small business owner understand which federal paperwork requirements and regulations apply to his or her business;

An amendment to the Small Business Regulatory Enforcement Fairness Act (SBREFA) to require that each agency provide information on the number of enforcement actions in which civil penalties are assessed, the number of such actions against small entities, the number of such actions in which civil penalties are reduced or waived, and the monetary amount of each reduction or waiver.

I am pleased that the Senate has taken action in considering this important legislation, and I am also pleased that the bill enjoys bipartisan support. I would particularly like to thank Senator BLACHE LINCOLN for joining me in introducing this bill. I would also thank Senators LIEBERMAN and THOMPSON for cosponsoring this legislation and for their strong leadership in advancing it through the Governmental Affairs Committee and the Senate. I would like to thank all of the other cosponsors of S. 1271, Senators BOND, BUNNING, CARNAHAN, CARPER, CLELAND, CONRAD, DAYTON, JEFFORDS, KERRY, LEAHY, and MILLER for their strong support.

I would also recognize Representatives DAN BURTON and DOUG OSE and their staffs for their strong leadership in crafting, introducing and passing this measure in the House. I would like to thank Representative HENRY WAXMAN and JOHN TIERNEY and all the members of the House of Representatives who supported this bipartisan effort.

The Bush Administration is to be commended for their support of this bill and I appreciate the valuable recommendations of the Office of Management and Budget that will make this bill more effective in helping our Nation's small business owners. It is my hope that the House of Representatives will pass this final version of this measure shortly and that we will have a final bill for the President's signature very soon.

The many business groups who have lent their support and helped us craft a solid bill are also deserving of mention, particularly: the National Federation of Independent Businesses; the U.S. Chamber of Commerce; the American Farm Bureau Federation; the Cleveland Growth Association; the Associated Builders and Contractors; the National Association of Convenience Stores; the American Feed Industry Association; the National Association of Manufacturers; the National Tooling and Machining Association; National Small Business United; the National Restaurant Association; the National Pest Management Association; the Academy of General Dentistry; the American Road and Transportation Builders Association; the Small Business Coalition for Regulatory Relief; the Small Business Legislative Council; the Small Business Survival Committee; the Agricultural Retailer Association; the Associated General Contractors; the Automotive Parts and Service Alliance; the Food Marketing Institute; the National Automobile Dealers Association; the National Business Association; the National Roofing Contractors Association; the Society of American Florists and the North American Equipment Dealers Association.

Finally, I would like to thank David Gray, a former employee of my Subcommittee staff, for all of his hard work on this legislation.

Once again, I am pleased that the Senate has acted to provide relief to small business owners. This bill will help save time and money and will allow small business owners the ability to better understand and comply with federal regulations and paperwork requirements. It is good for the country and good for our economy, and I thank my colleagues for their support in passing this bill today.

Mrs. LINCOLN. Mr. President, every once in a while this body passes legislation that just makes good common sense. Today is such an occasion. I am pleased that the Senate will vote today on the conference report on the Small Business Paperwork Relief Act, a bill that Senator VOINOVICH and I first introduced in July of 1999.

I want to thank my good friend Senator VOINOVICH for his leadership on this issue. His staff members and former staff members, David Gray, Kathleen Braun, and Kristine Simmons, put in countless hours meeting with members of the business community, firefighters and the environmental community to achieve the balance that is represented here today. I also want to thank Senator LIEBERMAN, without whose help we could not be here today. Senator LIEBERMAN, as Chairman of the Governmental Affairs Committee, steered this legislation to its final form, and Larry Novey of his staff was invaluable. Kelly Rucker Bingel of my staff worked on this bill from its inception in 1999, and I thank her for her efforts.

Since I began public service as a member of the House of Representatives in January of 1993, I have looked for opportunities to ease the regulatory burden on small businesses. They are the backbone of our economy in Arkansas.

As I said when we first introduced this bill in 1999, the federal government should be a help to small businesses, not a hindrance. We should always seek to ensure that federal policies don't place undue burdens on small business owners and tie their hands in red tape.

Small businesses are hit hardest by federal regulations. According to a recent study conducted for the Small Business Administration, "firms employing fewer than 20 employees face an annual regulatory burden of $6,975 per employee, a burden nearly 60 percent above that facing a firm employing over 500 employees." This does not even take into account state and local government paperwork.

I have been told that federal paperwork burdens rank just behind taxes and the cost of health care as the top problems facing members of the National Federation of Independent Businesses.

This bill establishes a single point-of-contact for small businesses in each federal agency that governs small businesses. Second, it requires the OMB Director to annually publish in the Federal Register and on the Internet a list of compliance assistance resources available to small businesses. Third, it establishes a task force to determine how to streamline paperwork requirements for small businesses. It directs the task force to look at creating a single reporting format for all agencies that could be filed simultaneously and electronically. It is our hope that these steps will make it easier for businesses to access information and will allow policymakers to more easily identify and eliminate duplicative regulations.

The original version of this bill, S. 1378, from the 106th Congress, suspended civil fines on small businesses for first-time paperwork violations if they corrected their error. Our thought behind suspending fines for first-time violators was that a majority of small business owners who neglect to file a certain form are simply overwhelmed with paperwork and don't realize their error. We thought that small business owners should be given a chance to correct the problem before they were slapped with a fine. I am disappointed that this final version does not include the fine suspension, but as I often tell my constituents, we can't let the perfect be the enemy of the good. So I am delighted to see final passage of this bill.

APPRECIATION TO SENATOR DAYTON

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I express my appreciation to you for being so patient. It has taken many hours that we didn't anticipate to get to this point tonight. But for your patience, we would have been in real trouble. I appreciate very much your being courteous, as always. I appreciate that very much.

ORDERS FOR THURSDAY, MAY 23, 2002

Mr. REID. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today, it adjourn until tomorrow morning, Thursday, May 23, at 9:30 a.m.; that following the prayer and pledge the Journal of proceeding be approved to date, the morning hour be deemed expired, and the time for the two leaders be reserved for their use later in the day; that there be a period for morning business until 10:30 a.m. with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 10 minutes each, with the first half of the time under the control of the Republican leader, or his designee, and the second half under the control of the Democrat leader, or his designee; and, that at 10:30 a.m. the Senate resume consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL 9:30 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. REID. Mr. President, there being no further business that I know of to come before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in adjournment under the previous order.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 9:19 p.m., adjourned until Thursday, May 23, 2002, at 9:30 a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, May 22, 2002

The House met at 10 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. DAN MILLER of Florida).

DESIGNATION OF THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
May 22, 2002.

I hereby appoint the Honorable DAN MILLER to act as Speaker pro tempore on this day.

J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

Father Val J. Peter, Executive Director, Girls and Boys Town, Boys Town, Nebraska offered the following prayer:

Dear Lord, we come before You on this beautiful morning to ask Your blessing on the House this day. Give light, wisdom, and humility to all Representatives in their work today. May they seek what is best for our people. May they search for what will bring goodness to our world.

Let each this day do one blessed thing for another person. Let each this day ask pardon from another person.

Bless also all of those who are in the service of our beloved country. Keep them safe. Keep them faithful to You and their loved ones.

Finally, Lord, bless all of our children, especially those who are hurt and suffering. Send people to put joy and happiness into their hearts. We ask this in Your name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

Mr. MCNULTY. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1, rule I, I demand a vote on agreeing to the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MCNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8, rule XX, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

The point of no quorum is considered withdrawn.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. TERRY) come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. TERRY led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Monahan, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate has passed a concurrent resolution of the following title in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. Con. Res. 115. Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that all workers deserve air treatment and safe working conditions, and honoring Dolores Huerta for her commitment to the improvement of working conditions for children, women, and farm worker families.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Nebraska (Mr. TERRY) for 1 minute and then will recognize up to 10 Members from each side of the aisle for 1 minute.

EXTENDING A WARM WELCOME TO FATHER VAL J. PETER

(Mr. TERRY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, I have the honor of extending a warm welcome to Father Val J. Peter, our guest chaplain in the House of Representatives today. I also want to thank him for his thoughtful and inspiring prayer.

Father Peter is a native Nebraskan, a Diocesan priest within the Archdiocese of Omaha, and the executive director for Girls and Boys Town USA. He is also one of the foremost advocates for youth in the world and a true friend, effective educator, and caring, surrogate father to thousands of troubled youth and teenagers.

Father Peter oversees Boys Town programs stretching from coast to coast. Last year alone, Father Peter and the Boys Town staff helped brighten the future for more than 37,000 troubled, neglected, and abused children. Father Peter has earned the gratitude of thousands of children and families with his unconditional love, boundless optimism, and unwavering devotion to God.

Mr. Speaker, I know I speak for my colleagues when I say that we are pleased and honored to have Father Val Peter here with us today.

RESTORING MEMORIAL DAY

(Mr. GIBBONS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, over the years the true meaning of Memorial Day has faded from the public consciousness. Memorial Day began after the Civil War as a solemn day of mourning, remembrance, and honor to our departed loved ones. But today, Memorial Day seems to be more about planning a 3-day weekend than remembering our fallen heroes. As a veteran of two wars, I know all too well that Memorial Day is much more than a 3-day weekend or the beginning of a summer sale.

Veteran's Day, a day set aside to honor all veterans, living and dead, is celebrated on November 11, regardless of which day of the week it falls on. The same should be true for Memorial Day.

Mr. Speaker, this week I am introducing legislation restoring Memorial Day to its actual day, May 30. We owe our loved ones and friends who died in service to their country a restored Memorial Day.

JOIN THE PICTURE THEM HOME CAMPAIGN

(Mr. LAMPSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LAMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I will again digress this morning from my stories of Ludwig Koons, but not our effort to return him to the United States from Italy.

As chairman of the Congressional Caucus on Missing and Exploited Children, I would ask that as we approach this Memorial Day that we not only pay honor to those who have given their lives to our country, but to the tens of thousands of innocent children who are still missing from their loved ones in this country. We maintain hope that the children will come home and that they will come home not only with the help of law enforcement, but with the help of the American people.

A few years back, the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children instituted the Picture Them Home campaign to be observed during the month of May. I have asked my colleagues on a number of occasions to place pictures of missing children on their franked envelopes, which is allowed under the franking guidelines, and many of them have chosen to do so. This morning I ask that everyone here join me in supporting this effort and help us Picture Them Home.

Participating in this campaign only takes a few minutes of your time. First, pledge to take the time to really look at the pictures of the missing children that you see. These may be pictures on bulletin boards in your local Wal-Mart, or they may be the "Have You Seen Me?" cards that are sent out by ADVO. Second, if you are a parent, make sure that you maintain current, high-quality pictures of your children for use in case of an emergency.

Mr. Speaker, we know that pictures work. All you have to do is look.

NURSING SHORTAGE PLAGUING U.S.

(Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. ROS-LEHTINEN. Mr. Speaker, health care experts are worried that a national nursing shortage could become widespread later in the decade, just as the aging U.S. population requires more care. Educational institutes, hospitals and Congress are working feverishly to fill this global shortage, because it is nurses who impact the lives of people in times of health, illness, pain, stress, and even death.

Nurses' talents, long hours and many sacrifices should be recognized. One of the ways in which Baptist Health South Florida appreciated nurses is by having recently hosted "Shadow a Nurse Day."

Baptist Hospital, South Miami Hospital, Homestead Hospital, Mariners Hospital, and Baptist Outpatient Services were the health care sites which participated in this event.

By helping the population to gain a greater understanding of the issues facing nurses today, these health care sites perhaps contributed to helping relieve the existing nursing shortage plaguing our Nation.

Mr. Speaker, I congratulate Baptist Health South Florida for its commitment to the future of nursing.

END THE TRADE EMBARGO ON CUBA

(Ms. McCOLLUM asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. McCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, 90 miles from America's shore is the island of Cuba, but what really separates the people of Cuba and the American people is the U.S. Government's hypocritical trade embargo restated this week by President Bush.

This failed policy towards Cuba empowers Fidel Castro, denies American businesses the freedom to trade, and prohibits the American people the freedom to travel.

Around the world, the United States has used economic engagement to promote political reform, democratic values and human rights. With Cuba, our government does the opposite. We punish the Cuban people with a trade embargo.

For a free and open Cuba, let us free American businesses to trade with Cuba, free America's farmers to sell to Cuba, and free the American people to travel to Cuba. The trade embargo has failed. The spirit of the American people and the power of our economy can achieve the freedoms we all desire for the Cuban people.

STATE DEPARTMENT RELEASES TRAFFICKING IN PERSONS REPORT

(Mr. PITTS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, in the coming weeks, the State Department will be releasing its annual "Trafficking in Persons report." This report will highlight the very serious problem of international sex trafficking and forced prostitution around the world in the countries that tolerate it.

Still, some of the worst offenders such as India and Thailand have made no progress in combating this sex trafficking. Worse, it is on the rise.

In India, over 2.3 million girls and women are believed to be working in the sex industry against their will. Yet there are no known convictions for sex trafficking.

In Thailand, we are up to 1 million trafficking victims. Approximately 100,000 are children, boys and girls; yet there are no known convictions for sex trafficking.

Mr. Speaker, this is unacceptable.

Mr. Speaker, the complicity and tolerance of sex trafficking must stop. The State Department must not grant passing grades to these countries in its report until they show real improvement and begin to protect women and children in their country.

AMENDMENT ALLOWS DEFENSE DEPARTMENT FREE HAND FOR ENVIRONMENTAL DAMAGE

(Mr. BLUMENAUER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, during my tenure in Congress, I have worked hard for the Federal Government to be a better partner to promote the liveability of our communities by walking the walk, by acting the way that we are asking the rest of America to behave. Yet, here today, we are going to be asking in the supplemental to exempt the Defense Department, the largest manager of infrastructure in the world, from being a good environmental citizen.

This bill contains an amendment that would relieve the Department of Defense from its responsibility for dealing with water consumption that occurs outside the control of the Secretary of Defense that is a direct result of the military installation. In particular, this is focused on the San Pedro River in Arizona, one of the richest biological reserves in all of North America. It has over 82 species of mammals, 385 species of birds, and was designated by this Congress as a National Riparian Conservation Area in 1988.

But as a result of this amendment, snuck in without debate by the substantive committee, that will not be substantively argued on this floor, we are going to basically give them a free hand to damage the environment. It is wrong.

CONGRATULATIONS TO DANNY BROWN, THE 2002 KANSAS PRINCIPAL OF THE YEAR

(Mr. RYUN of Kansas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RYUN of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the 2002 Kansas Principal of the Year, Danny Brown. Mr. BROWN currently serves at the Fort Scott High School in Fort Scott, Kansas. For almost 3 decades Danny Brown has demonstrated outstanding educational leadership and has humbly served his community and students.

In a letter recommending Brown for the honor, an associate wrote: "Danny's contributions to this community, to the school district and, most of all, to the students are immeasurable."

I, for one, am heartened to hear stories of educators like Danny Brown who live a life dedicated to serving their communities and helping students reach their dreams.

As Oswald Spengler once said, "The influence of a genuine educator lies in what he is rather than what he says."

I am pleased that Mr. BROWN is being properly recognized for his exceptional performance and character, and I want to add my congratulations to this outstanding educator.

NATIONAL COMMUNITY ROLE MODELS WEEK

(Mr. KNOLLENBERG asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KNOLLENBERG. Mr. Speaker, children need role models in their communities to help guide them through the many challenges that they face. Although we often hear inspiring stories about famous individuals, we seldom publicly recognize exceptional local people with whom children can more readily relate.

The Michigan-based R.A.R.E. foundation has established a program to recognize outstanding community residents and teach children about their work ethic, their values, and their accomplishments. The foundation helps children develop a sense of purpose and hope for the future by providing inspirational examples of ordinary people with traditional jobs who make extraordinary contributions.

□ 1015

I will introduce legislation today that encourages communities to adopt similar programs and support the goals and ideals of a national community role models week. Establishing an annual week for identifying role models in our local communities would remind us how each individual, no matter his or her profession, plays a vital role in the progress of this Nation.

JUST SAY NO TO SOCIAL SECURITY PRIVATIZATION

(Mr. GREEN of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, all we need to do is just say no to privatization of Social Security. When it comes to reforming Social Security, our Republican majority thinks they can fool the American people. They think that if they avoid the words like "privatization" that they will be able to mask the true nature of their Social Security reform proposal.

In Texas we have a saying, "You can put lipstick and earrings on a hog and call it Monique, but it's still a pig." No matter how much our Republican friends want to dress up their proposal to disguise its details, it is still privatization.

Privatization schemes, let us just be honest and call them what they are, would cut benefits, increase administrative costs and place the financial health of the Social Security program in jeopardy, but suddenly, in an election year, my colleagues changed their tune. They will do anything, say anything, to hide their true agenda. This is a cynical ploy, and the American people will see through it.

Let us call privatization what it is, and a pig, a pig.

DEMOCRATIC PRESCRIPTION FOR SENIORS

(Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of seniors who want prescription drug coverage, today, tomorrow and always, and against those who do not.

Earlier this month, Congress Daily noted that a Senate Democrat prescription drug bill would sunset in 2010. That is right, the bill would just stop in 2010. Sorry, seniors, no more drugs for them after 2010. That is plain wrong. First, Democrats block permanent tax relief. Now they want to block prescription drug coverage.

Well, seniors better start saving, so when their benefits end, they will have money to buy their drugs. Hold on, just think about this. That is impossible, because the same Democrats refused to permanently extend tax relief so people can save some of their own money or even empower seniors to save their own money in a medical savings account.

Well, two-thirds of seniors have prescription drug coverage. The one-third going without are my top concern. Our Republican plan will help, and help them for life.

RAISING THE DEBT LIMIT

(Ms. DELAURO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. DELAURO. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to remind my colleague on the other side of the aisle who just spoke that the Republican prescription drug plan would do nothing about bringing down the cost of prescription drugs, which is what is killing Americans, all Americans, and their plan would cover 6 percent of seniors instead of 90 percent of seniors who would like to have that kind of coverage.

However, today, the House is going to vote on a very dangerous and cynical provision that allows the Federal Government to break its own spending limit, takes hundreds of billions of dollars from the Social Security trust fund. What they would like to do is hide this plan from the American people and what they want to do is to hide this debate today without leveling with the public, and what will happen is their plan is to take the Nation back into the deficit, raid Social Security.

We oppose this plan. We support a responsible budget. What we need to be trying to do is to make investments in national security, protect Social Security and Medicare, do something about prescription drugs and the cost of those drugs in the United States today.

It is time for the House Republicans to be straightforward with the American people. We need a responsible, honest, bipartisan budget. We need to protect and strengthen Social Security and shore up the prescription drug benefit, meet our obligations today so that our kids are not saddled with debt.

PRAISING THE EFFORTS OF NUCOR CORPORATION

(Mr. WILSON of South Carolina asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to thank Nucor Corporation, our Nation's largest steel producer, for their investment in South Carolina and their commitment to our economy, our families and our environment.

Nucor's commitment to South Carolina's economy is demonstrated by its 4 statewide facilities professionally managed by Mike Gurley of Darlington, Ladd Hall of Berkeley, Lynn Strock of Florence and Jeff Carmean of Swansea. These facilities have produced more than $1 billion in total sales and have contributed more than $1 billion in total investment back into the State's economy.

Nucor has touched the lives of families across the Palmetto State by employing 1,800 skilled and dedicated South Carolinians and by contributing over $300,000 in education scholarships last year.

A leader in environmental stewardship, Nucor is the largest recycler in America, and through efficient fuel consumption, Nucor saves enough energy annually to power the city of Los Angeles for 8 years.

Mr. Speaker, I commend Nucor for their wise investment in South Carolina's economy, families and environment.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS LEGISLATION

(Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, as I recollect the pronouncements being made by this House just a year ago, Republicans said that we will not, this House will not raid Social Security and Medicare, from the very highest levels of their leadership. Interestingly, today, we come with a back room supplemental appropriations bill that raises the debt limit so that we can, in fact, raid Medicare and Social Security.

This is legislation that we should not support. Social Security is the very underpinnings of security for hardworking Americans. Medicare provides health care for hard-working Americans who have reached retirement. Here we are today passing a bill or attempting to pass a bill that will raise the debt limit, a very dangerous and cynical provision that allows the Federal Government to break its own spending limit, therefore undermining again the trust of the American people, believing that Social Security should be there for all who work hard.

We need a more responsible and honest and bipartisan budget. We need to protect and strengthen Social Security. We need to protect and save Medicare. We need to vote no on this rule and we need to vote no on this supplemental if, of course, it proposes an increase in the debt limit.

VETERANS NATIONAL CEMETERY IN NORTH FLORIDA

(Mr. STEARNS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear the Veterans Administration cemetery expansion is a top priority for the President next year. Florida has our Nation's second largest veterans' population in the United States and one of its oldest. In fact, it is number one.

Nearly 325,000 veterans call home somewhere in the Jacksonville City vicinity, and this is the location of 3 congressional districts, mine, the gentlewoman from Florida (Ms. BROWN) and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. CRENSHAW), as well as in nearby southern Georgia. Yet the closest VA cemetery is at least a 3-hour drive from Jacksonville. The next closest in proximity lies in Marietta, Georgia, which is just north of Atlanta.

A new national VA cemetery in the metropolitan Jacksonville area or nearby Clay County would answer the unmet need for north Floridians and southern Georgians.

My colleagues may ask why should I support a cemetery in Florida. Well, from Michigan and New York, the Midwest and elsewhere, there is a high likelihood that their constituents are contemplating retiring in north Florida. We welcome them and I hope my colleagues will sign on to my bill H.R. 1205.

We welcome your veteran constituents to call north Florida home. I hope you will consider cosponsoring my bill, H.R. 1205, and help us to provide the dignified, hallowed grounds our veterans deserve.

MILITARY APPRECIATION MONTH

(Mr. KENNEDY of Minnesota asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. KENNEDY of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to honor Military Appreciation Month. I rise to thank our men and women in uniform for their sacrifice, service and dedication.

We show our appreciation by voting them the pay raise they earned and making sure they live in quality housing and have the tools they need to defend us. In addition to our active duty personnel, nearly 82,000 members of the National Guard and the Reserves have been called into active duty since September 11.

I appreciate those who serve our Nation, put their lives on the line to defend our freedom. These men and women are heroes. They work side by side with us during the week. Their children go to school with our children, but on weekends and when called upon, they go into active duty to defend our country. I want them to know that America thanks them.

I specifically would like to thank General Andreotti and Colonel Dennis Lord of the Minnesota National Guard for their long and diligent service fighting for the interests of the Guard and Reserve. I want to thank the Minnesota National Guard and Reserve. Two weeks ago was their last week guarding the Minneapolis/St. Paul International Airport.

THE LONG WAR ON TERROR

(Mr. PENCE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, we find ourselves in a long war on terror. There has been much discussion on Capitol Hill this week and around America about blame and about how it is that we ought to inquire and investigate institutional failures.

So I rise today, Mr. Speaker, to remind us that our experience with terror in America did not begin on September 11 in Washington and in New York. Rather, it began on February 26, 1993, with the first World Trade Center bombing. Terrorists blew a hole 6 stories deep in an attempt to topple the north tower; Mogadishu, Somalia, 18 American soldiers killed; the Khobar Towers in 1996, a barracks housing U.S. soldiers, 19 servicemen killed; U.S. embassies in Kenya and Tanzania in 1998, 245 killed; the USS Cole in October of 2000, 17 servicemen killed.

We are in a prolonged engagement with terror centered in a single terrorist organization. Let us stand with our intelligence committees as they rightly inquire into the institutional failures that have occurred.

WAIVING POINTS OF ORDER AGAINST CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 3448, PUBLIC HEALTH SECURITY AND BIOTERRORISM PREPAREDNESS AND RESPONSE ACT OF 2002

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 427 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 427

Resolved, That upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider the conference report to accompany the bill (H.R. 3448) to improve the ability of the United States to prevent, prepare for, and respond to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies. All points of order against the conference report and against its consideration are waived. The conference report shall be considered as read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DAN MILLER of Florida). The gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. SLAUGHTER) pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, H. Res. 427 is a rule providing for the consideration of the conference report for H.R. 3448, the bioterrorism bill. The rule waives all points of order against the conference report and against its consideration. It also provides that the conference report shall be considered as read.

The Committee on Rules approved this rule last night, and I urge my colleagues to support it so that we can proceed with an hour of debate and consideration of this bipartisan conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to applaud the commendable work of my friends and colleagues on the Committee on Energy and Commerce for the work they have done to bring this final bill to the floor today. The gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), the committee chairman, and the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. BURR), along with the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. CHAMBLISS), who is the chairman of the Intelligence Subcommittee on Terrorism and Homeland Security, all of whom played an instrumental role in securing the much-needed $600 million in authorization for the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention to upgrade and enhance its facilities over the next 2 years, which is one of the conference report's most noteworthy proposals.

Among the many good things that this bill does, it included a bill that I introduced in the first part of November that will allow the reauthorization of the building-out of the CDC. Mr.

Speaker, the CDC is a group of world class intellects in a Third World facility. It has no security. They have scientists working on computers that are covered by polyethylene so that leaking roofs do not destroy them.

As the American people recover from the discovery of anthrax in our mail system last year, we will continue to turn to the CDC for new ways to confine and eradicate these dangerous threats to the public health. This enhanced funding for the CDC to upgrade its facilities will be an important part of that process, and I look forward to President Bush, who visited the CDC with the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. CHAMBLISS), myself and other members of the Georgia congressional delegation last year, I look forward to him signing this measure into law.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) for yielding me the customary half hour.

I rise in support of the underlying conference report. The Bioterrorism and Response Act enjoys strong bipartisan support, having passed the House by a vote of 418 to 2. Moreover, this measure moved forward the consultations from both sides of the aisle, a practice all too rare in the current Congress.

□ 1030

Mr. Speaker, this bioterrorism measure represents the first comprehensive effort to shore up our Nation's defenses against a terror attack. This includes critical provisions calling for the stockpiling of drugs and vaccines. It outlines initiatives to help prevent, detect, and treat terrorism-related health threats, including the possibility of a smallpox epidemic. Moreover, the legislation authorizes substantial new spending to help State and local health officials prepare for bioterrorism attacks. Grants would be made available to help hospitals prepare for the treatment of victims. Funding for research and prevention and treatment would also be increased.

Of utmost importance, the bill ensures that additional steps would be taken to protect the food supply, including new authority for the FDA to bar unsafe food from entering the country. Many of us have long felt that the increased imports of food from countries outside the scope of U.S. safety regulation posed a unique threat to our citizens, especially with the advent of bioterrorism. The measure begins to address this concern by providing needed grants to States to strengthen food inspections and deal with outbreaks of food-borne illnesses. New registration and recordkeeping requirements would be imposed and safety improvements would be ordered at animal research labs.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to highlight the provisions of the legislation designed to protect our most vulnerable citizens in the event of terrorist attack: our children. I was proud to join my colleague from New York, Senator HILLARY CLINTON, in introducing the Protecting America's Children Against Terrorism Act. The bill provided Federal resources and coordination to ensure that our children's needs are met in the event of a terrorist attack. I wish to thank the chairman of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), and the ranking member, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), for including the majority of these provisions in this comprehensive measure.

The events of September 11 have illustrated only too clearly for us the risks posed to our children by terrorism. Children perished aboard the planes that crashed. Both the World Trade Center and the Pentagon housed day care centers. Nearby schools had to be evacuated, and an estimated 10,000 American children lost a parent as a result of these atrocities, many of them losing their sole or primary caregiver.

In recent months, new concerns have emerged. With the threat of bioterrorism and chemical warfare more prominent, we have realized that the proper dosages of vaccines and antidotes for children is incomplete. Few health care providers are trained to recognize the early signs of smallpox or anthrax, which can mimic cold or flu symptoms. The National Pharmaceutical Stockpile Program is not necessarily equipped with the supplies necessary to administer drugs or other treatment to large numbers of children.

Other needs have become evident as well. Many schools lack effective evacuation plans or methods of moving children to an alternative safe location. Networks do not exist for informing parents of evacuations and the sites where their children may be found. Mental health services are not always available for children traumatized by catastrophic events.

The conference report includes our proposal to protect children against bioterrorism by examining the preparedness of our Nation's health system for mass casualties of children and youth resulting from bioterrorism. It would establish an information network to collect and disseminate information for health providers on how to prepare for a biological terrorist attack and what steps to take to ensure children get the health care they need in the case of an attack. Moreover, the measure would ensure that the National Pharmaceutical Stockpile Program includes inventories to meet the medical needs of children.

The events of September 11 have revealed to us the gaps in our preparedness for a major disaster. We owe it to all our citizens to ensure that we close these gaps before a future emergency, be it terrorism, natural disaster, or other cause, requires that we take action.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), the chairman of the committee.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the Committee on Rules for bringing this rule to the floor today.

After 9–11, the Committee on Energy and Commerce began a series of roundtables with the agencies under our jurisdiction and members of both sides of our committee. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), leading the minority, and myself representing the majority, had meetings with the agency officials under our jurisdiction to ask several questions, the most of important of which was: tell us a little bit about where your vulnerabilities are; tell us a little bit about where you are not prepared; and tell us a little bit about how Congress might enact new laws and new authorities to make you better prepared for the things we might now expect, that indeed might now threaten our country in ways we were never before threatened.

9–11 taught us a lesson, in effect. It taught us that we have to be willing to think like evil people. And that is not our custom. We think like good people in America. We do not think like evil people, designing ways and means to kill and destroy and to disrupt the lives of citizens who are innocent and have nothing to do with our cause. We think literally so totally different from the kind of enemy we now face in this terrorist situation that it was difficult for agency heads and even Members of Congress to think about all the things that someone with an evil mind might want to do to our citizens and our constituents; what they might want to do to this country and to the people that live here.

So as we began to have those discussions with agencies under our jurisdictions, we suddenly realized how necessary it was to put together a bioterrorism package. And here, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) for the excellent work he did in bringing to our committee ideas about how to make the CDC a much more functional and a much more effective agency for our country, in not only just studying the prevention and treatment of diseases that are normal in our society, but now making sure we have the vaccines and the research going forward to protect us against the artificial insertion of biochemical and biological threats to our people, as we have now learned is possible. I want to thank him for bringing to our committee and to this bill the great ideas he had about beefing up the capacity of the CDC to do that for our country.

But as we began to hear from these agency heads, we began to learn that, indeed, we had a lot of vulnerabilities in our country; that we did not have enough vaccine, for example, to make sure if anthrax were introduced into our society to harm us we could vaccinate enough people in our country. So we set to work immediately to make sure our health department not only got the right amount of vaccine available for us, but that our health agencies were all preparing to make sure that other vaccines and other treatments were available to first responders in case we had such an evil attack on our people.

We learned, for example, that we had to organize better the laws that protected against people owning and transferring biological agents to one another so that we might find the owner or the possessor of an agent that enters our mail, for example, and begins to kill our people, whether it is a domestic threat or a foreign threat; that we had to make it illegal for someone to transfer the possession of some of these agents, if in fact they were legally in their possession, to make it criminally wrong for them to transfer it without authority, without a permit.

We learned, for example, that our first responders were woefully unprepared in the case of a biological or chemical threat to our country to deal with the kind of casualties we might expect if something like that happened. We learned that we needed, for example, to beef up the capacity of our ambulance services and our nurses and our hospitals to deal with those kinds of problems, if, God forbid, they should happen in our country. This bill, for example, will provide another $520 million to the hospitals of America, a special help in grants, to make sure they are prepared for those kinds of emergencies.

We learned also that our drinking water supplies needed to be better protected and safeguarded. We learned that, indeed, the incredible ability of someone to damage our country, who thinks as evilly as some of these people do, might find its way into threats against our water supplies. Just recently, I think last month, people were caught filming a water reservoir, I think in Connecticut. And we began to think, well, maybe people might indeed want to threaten the safe drinking water of our citizens, if they have such evil minds.

I was reminded in all these meetings of that aircraft that took off from New York City, I think it was Egyptian Air; and instead of landing somewhere at its final destination, some pilot dove that plane into the ocean. I was reminded of when that happened and reminded that most of us in America thought how awful it was that if this pilot did indeed want to commit suicide, if that was really his purpose, why did he have to take all these innocent people along with him.

It dawned on us, that is the way good people see an incident like that. The way evil people saw that incident was, perhaps in a desert somewhere or a cave somewhere in Afghanistan, he could have taken out more people had he taken that plane into a building. That is the way evil people think, how much more destruction he could have rendered had he done something different instead of just crashing the plane into the ocean.

So through these meetings, through all this work we have done on the bioterrorism legislation, we have tried the awful exercise of thinking as evilly as we could. What would the most evil person try to do to us with biological threats, with chemical threats, with agents of destruction? What would the most evil person do to disrupt our health supply system or to disrupt our clean water system, to make sure we did not have enough clean drinking water perhaps, to poison that system or cause people death and injury? What would the most evil mind try to do if they learned how to fly a crop duster or a mosquito spraying plane and take that equipment somewhere and spread biological or chemical agents upon our people?

We went through that awful exercise of trying to think like the most evil person on Earth and then tried to write a bill to make sure the agents of our government, those who are in charge of our health care system, those in charge of building our vaccine supplies, those in charge of testing biological agents, the first responders and those in charge of our incredibly sensitive clean drinking water supplies, what would we do in a bill to bolster our ability to meet those kinds of threats?

So, last December, our committee presented to this body our bioterrorism package, and this body approved it overwhelmingly, I think 430-some odd votes to 2, and sent that package on to the Senate. The Senate, similarly, passed a bill that mirrored in many aspects the House-passed version. It was passed unanimously in the Senate, and Senator TED KENNEDY and I have worked since that date in December to bring the best of those two packages together into a single package that we might present to the House and get signed by the President so that this country might be just a little safer from those evil minds who threaten, or would try to threaten, our country.

This week we have learned about new threats. This week we have learned that the level of communications among al Qaeda operatives around the world is beginning to rise again, and that there are conversations about hitting this country again. We have heard testimony in the last few days that maybe it is not if, it is when. Maybe, indeed, we have to think about the inevitability of some strike against our people again. So we better have our first responders ready. We had better have enough vaccines ready. We had better have enough treatment facilities available. We had better make sure we protect the drinking water of our people as much as we can. We had better make sure our hospitals and our nurses and our ambulances, and all our firefighters, all those heroes of 9–11, are as well equipped as we can make them to respond as quickly as possible to the next set of threats that are leveled against our country.

And so we have brought together in this conference the best of the Senate bill and the best of the House bill. And I want to compliment Senator TED KENNEDY and the Senate team for working so well with our team on the House side. In the end, I think we present an excellent package for the consideration of both bodies for the President to sign. And I cannot think of a better week than this week, when everybody's attention is riveted again on the new threats that are being talked about in conversations around the world against our people, that we pass this bioterrorism package and put it on the President's desk for his signature.

We have included one extra thing of significant importance that I also want to mention. Up this year for renewal is something called PDUFA. It is an acronym for a policy that has allowed this country to collect user fees from the drug companies, the big pharmaceutical companies of America, and those user fees pay the salaries of people who work at the FDA, the Food and Drug Administration.

That Food and Drug Administration set of personnel then do the testing, the analysis, all the research, all the professional analysis that goes into making sure that the pharmaceutical drugs that are patented in this country are tested first before a pharmaceutical company is allowed to sell them to your mom and your dad and your relatives, and even to those of us who need those drugs to survive or treat an illness.

The importance of that program, that prescription drug user fee program, is critical in America, and it is about to expire. It expires in September. If we do not reauthorize it this year, immediately, we begin laying off people at the Food and Drug Administration. So we have included in this package the reauthorization of the Prescription Drug User Fee Act which funds the work that goes forward to make sure that new prescription drugs are properly tested before the Food and Drug Administration authorizes any pharmaceutical company to allow a doctor to prescribe them to the citizens of this country.

And so we have brought you a good package that we think draws from the best of the House and the Senate versions of bioterrorism and we have added to it the reauthorization of the Prescription Drug User Fee Act. This package again represents this Nation's first line of defense against bioterrorism at a day and at a time when all of us know now that there are people who would love to disrupt this society by attacking us with one of those forms. When you think about 9/11 again and the awful consequences of 9/11 and you sit in a cave now in Afghanistan and think about how much more damage you might do to this country than you did on 9/11, bioterrorism is one of those areas we have to be concerned about. This bill gives this country many more tools to work with to defend and protect our people. It adds a whole new arsenal of first responder capabilities to in fact respond if we do get hit again, and it gives us the reauthorization of the Prescription Drug User Fee Act, a critically important act for the continuation of prescription drug protections for our country.

I again want to thank the Committee on Rules for doing such an expeditious job last night late in bringing this rule to the floor so we can pass it before the Memorial Day recess.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. KUCINICH).

Mr. KUCINICH. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, in the bioterrorism conference report, House leadership managed to put in a new provision that would allow Medicare HMOs more time to decide whether or not to continue offering health plans. This would allow HMOs to delay for 2½ months telling senior citizens if they will continue to offer health insurance to them. Is this not a bit out of place? We are going to have a Medicare provision in legislation that helps the country prepare for a bioterrorism attack. This is what causes the American people to wonder what in the world we do here.

We have a bill on the floor dealing with bioterrorism and suddenly it is also a bill that deals with Medicare HMOs. Here is a Medicare provision in legislation that helps prepare the country for a bioterrorist attack. Strange, because the Medicare+Choice program is wholly unrelated to bioterrorism. This provision was not considered by a committee. This provision was not considered in the underlying bill in the House or the Senate. It was added to the conference report at the very last minute. This is just another example of how the leadership is able to circumvent the established process and of the way business is done in this House. The only purpose, repeat, the only purpose of this provision is to help the insurance industry by giving HMOs more time to calculate revenue and estimate profits for next year. Every year, the Medicare+Choice program drops seniors to the tune of about a half a million seniors in the last year. Not only do senior citizens lose their coverage, but HMOs in the program have increased premiums, hiked up copayments, decreased benefits, and eliminated coverage year after year. Now, under this provision, seniors will have even less time to review their options for getting the health care that they will need. Allowing Medicare HMOs a 2½-month delay is not good for seniors. It certainly should not be added to the program. And most of all, Mr. Speaker, it should not be in a conference report for the Bioterrorism Preparedness Act.

I call upon all Members to take note of exactly what happened in slipping this provision into a conference report on bioterrorism, and I call upon all Members to remember the senior citizens in our districts who are being thrown out of health care coverage by Medicare HMOs and an insurance industry which does not give a darn about the senior citizens.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN).

Mr. TAUZIN. I thank my friend for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to read into the RECORD some of the names of the incredible staff who helped finalize this important work for the country. They include the head of our health team, Pat Morrisey, Brent DelMonte, Amit Sachdev, Nandan Kenkeremath, Allan Slobodin, Tom DiLenge, Steve Tilton; and of the legislative counsel, Pete Goodlow. These are staffers who worked tirelessly day and night and, believe me, all night, weekends, to make this possible. So many times we fail to say thank you to them. I just wanted to say on the record, thank you, team.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this rule so we can begin the debate on this important conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DAN MILLER of Florida). The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

A record vote on the Journal will be a 5-minute vote immediately following this 15-minute vote.

Mr. TOWNS and Mr. WATT of North Carolina changed their vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. MALONEY of Connecticut and Mr. HOUGHTON changed their vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated for:

Mr. EHRLICH. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 186 I was inadvertently detained. Had I been present, I would have voted "yea."

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DAN MILLER of Florida). Pursuant to clause 8, rule XX, the pending business is the question of the Speaker's approval of the Journal of the last day's proceedings.

The question is on the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 3129, CUSTOMS BORDER SECURITY ACT OF 2001

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 426 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 426

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 2(b) of rule XVIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 3129) to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 2002 and 2003 for the United States Customs Service for antiterrorism, drug interdiction, and other operations, for the Office of the United States Trade Representative, for the United States International Trade Commission, and for other purposes. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. All points of order against consideration of the bill are waived. General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means now printed in the bill. The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be considered as read. All points of order against the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute are waived. No amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute shall be in order except those printed in the report of the Committee on Rules accompanying this resolution. Each such amendment may be offered only in the order printed in the report, may be offered only by a Member designated in the report, shall be considered as read, shall be debatable for the time specified in the report equally divided and controlled by the proponent and an opponent, shall not be subject to amendment, and shall not be subject to a demand for division of the question in the House or in the Committee of the Whole. All points of order against such amendments are waived. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. Any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOSSELLA). The gentlewoman from North Carolina (Mrs. MYRICK) is recognized for 1 hour.

□ 1130

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for purposes of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Committee on Rules met and granted a structured rule providing for consideration of the bill, H.R. 3129, the Customs Border Security Act of 2001.

The rule waives all points of order against consideration of the bill, and provides for 1 hour of general debate, equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Finally, the rule provides for one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 426 is an appropriate and fair rule, and it is consistent with previous rules that our committee has reported and the House has adopted on bills from the Committee on Ways and Means.

This rule gives the chairman of the committee 10 minutes to debate his manager's amendment, while it provides 60 minutes for the minority substitute, plus the chance to offer a motion to recommit.

Mr. Speaker, the Customs Border Security Act of 2001 would authorize the budget for the U.S. Customs Service, the International Trade Commission, and the Office of the U.S. Trade Representative. It also includes a number of critical new tools for fighting terrorism, drugs, and child pornography.

H.R. 3129 will help the Customs Service close the gaps in our border that allow illegal money to be taken out of the country. This legislation will also significantly help the Customs Service's ability to stop the flow of illegal drugs from crossing our borders and getting into our children's hands.

This legislation also addresses an issue that is very important to North Carolina, and near and dear to my heart. In the last year, 60,000 textile workers have lost their jobs, 20,000 of them in North Carolina, and a large percentage of those in my district. The industry has done its best through technology modernization to compete, but they have not had a level and fair playing field in our international markets.

This bill will help fight that problem, and it will fight illegal textile transshipments. Transshipments are illegal because some countries ship their goods through another country illegally to avoid the quotas, and they also give a false declaration, which allows them to circumvent the law. Ninety percent of all illegal transshipments originate out of China, so without extra agents to enforce these laws, they get away with it.

H.R. 3129 provides the Customs Service with $9.5 million for transshipment enforcement operations. These funds must be used to hire 72 new employees who will be stationed both here, at home, and abroad to enforce our textile trade laws. Our textile workers are hurting, and they are hurting bad, so I am pleased that the government is beginning to take action.

H.R. 3129 also directs the Comptroller General to conduct an audit of the system established and carried out by the Customs Service to monitor textile transshipment. I look forward to their report, and will be interested in their recommendation for improvements to the transshipment monitoring system.

So to that end, I urge my colleagues to support this rule and to support the commonsense underlying legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, as my good friend, the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Mrs. MYRICK) noted, H.R. 3129, the Customs Border Security Act of 2001, authorizes the budget for the U.S. Customs Service, the United States Trade Representative, and the International Trade Commission. These three agencies are vital parts of our government, as they police our borders and promote the export of U.S. manufacturers.

The rule we are considering today allows for a Democratic substitute, as well as a motion to recommit. I commend the majority for the construction of today's fair rule, and I urge the majority to give consideration for similarly fair rules in the future.

The underlying bill was originally considered by this Chamber in December of 2001 under suspension of the rules, and it failed to gain the two-thirds majority needed for passage. H.R. 3129 failed because many of us on both sides of the aisle had grave concerns about the damage this legislation does to our civil liberties, our right to privacy, and bonus pay for Customs Service agents.

For example, under section 141 of this legislation, customs officers are granted immunity from lawsuits stemming from personal searches of people entering the country, so long as the officers conduct the search in good faith. Additionally, under section 583 of this legislation, customs officers are granted the right to stop and search at the border without a search warrant any outbound mail being transported by the United States Postal Service.

Last night in the Committee on Rules, the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, my good friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS), made the claim that the major sticking point in the bill last December was the section concerning bonus pay.

Frankly, I am a bit troubled by the chairman's remarks. True, many of us were concerned about the bonus pay provision in the initial bill. However, it was not the gravest concern that some of us had, nor was it the only concern that we expressed. Instead, as I said in this Chamber last December, H.R. 3129 as written imperils some of our civil liberties and some of our right to privacy.

The Rangel substitute offers a more balanced and fair compromise, and I urge our colleagues to carefully consider it. It addresses all of the concerns of our fellow legislators. The Rangel amendment, like the Thomas amendment, includes a provision providing bonus pay to customs agents. It includes a provision stating that the United States government consents to be sued and be held liable for civil damages for suits brought in connection with a wrongful personal search by a customs agent.

The Rangel substitute also contains a provision that raises the standard for searches of outbound mail to one of "reasonable cause," as opposed to the lesser standard of "probable cause."

Mr. Speaker, make no mistake, my concerns for civil liberties and our right to privacy do not blind me to the dangers of terrorism. My district in south Florida is surrounded by 3 major ports and 3 international airports. Just this past week, it was reported by the Coast Guard that 25 Islamic extremists had snuck into this country by way of ports in Miami, Fort Lauderdale, Savannah, and elsewhere. These individuals allegedly hid themselves in cargo containers, and then walked away from the ports dressed as stevedores.

This body must provide our customs agents with the tools they need to defend our borders and wage a protracted war on terrorism. We should not, however, give these same agents an incentive to violate our privacy and our civil liberties, particularly when doing so will provide us absolutely no extra security. If we allow our fears to goad us into abandoning the Constitution, then the enemies of freedom and democracy will have won.

Ostensibly, security measures such as the provisions of this bill I have just discussed should be crafted in a manner to protect our democracy. If those security measures actually end up imperiling the democratic rights and freedoms their sponsors claim they protect, then they should be abandoned.

I urge my colleagues to support the rule. I further urge them to please support the Rangel substitute, and oppose the underlying bill if the substitute is not adopted.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Florida for bringing up the fact that there were those 25 extremists who came in through the ports in shipping containers. It just drives home again the need for this bill and additional enforcement. I thank him for that.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOSSELLA). The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 386, nays 32, not voting 16, as follows:

Ms. LEE, and Messrs. FORD, WATT of North Carolina and MEEHAN, Mrs. JONES of Ohio and Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas changed their vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. GILLMOR and Mr. TOWNS changed their vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Stated against:

Ms. SOLIS. Mr. Speaker, during rollcall vote No. 188 on H. Res. 426, rule providing consideration of H.R. 3129, I was unavoidably detained. Had I been present, I would have voted "no."

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 3448, PUBLIC HEALTH SECURITY AND BIOTERRORISM PREPAREDNESS AND RESPONSE ACT OF 2002

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 427, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 3448) to improve the ability of the United States to prevent, prepare for, and respond to bioterrorism and other public health emergencies.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. FOSSELLA). Pursuant to House Resolution 427, the conference report is considered as having been read.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of May 21, 2002 at page H2691.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to bring before the House the conference report to accompany H.R. 3448, the Public Health Security and Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Act of 2002. This bill will in short order help ensure America's health security, and I urge my colleagues to join me in sending it to the President's desk.

I want to thank the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), first of all, the ranking minority member of our committee, who, together, with our other members of our committee, put this bill together and secured over 400 votes on this House floor last December for its passage. Now we bring my colleagues back the conference report, bringing together the best of the Senate bill, authored by Senator TED KENNEDY and Senator BILL FRIST, and I want to thank them on the Senate side for their work.

Over 25 Members worked on this conference between the House and Senate, and I want to also thank the Committee on Agriculture and the Committee on the Judiciary members, the administration, and the many interested parties who have helped us draft this conference report.

Mr. Speaker, it is crucial that America's public health emergency system be prepared to respond to the new and emerging threats, and we are here to take care of that job today. The conference report makes broad and dramatic investments in our public health infrastructure to help secure our country and provide safety for the American people.

Let me emphasize a few areas. First of all, communications. The conference report will improve communications between all levels of government, public health officials, first responders, health care providers and facilities during emergencies. It authorizes grants in fiscal year 2002 and beyond in grants to State, local governments, public and private health care facilities to improve planning, preparedness, enhance laboratory capacity, educate and train health care personnel.

It will make the Department of Health and Human Services, give it a new focus so they can improve coordination and accountability through a new Assistant Secretary for Emergency Preparedness. We will also ensure that sufficient drugs, vaccines and other supplies are available for our security.

It enhances those controls on deadly biological agents, agents to help prevent bioterrorism to establish a database of dangerous pathogens. It imposes new registration requirements on the most dangerous of those agents and toxins and mandates tough new safety and security requirements to ensure that only legitimate scientists working on appropriate laboratory facilities can gain access to these potential weapons of mass destruction.

The conference report also helps to protect the safety of America's food supply. We are substantially increasing the resources of the FDA so they can hire inspectors at borders and develop new methods to detect contaminated foods. In addition, we are providing the Secretary with the additional regulatory authority he has requested so that FDA can detain foods where there is credible evidence that it is contaminated or poses a threat to human beings.

H.R. 3448 will also ensure that drinking water systems across the country assess their vulnerability to terrorist attacks and develop emergency plans to prepare for and respond to such attacks. Americans deserve to know that we are taking concerted efforts and action today to protect the safe drinking water of our country.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to report that this bill contains a reauthorization of the Prescription Drug User Fee Act, a critical act that provides the money to test prescription drugs before they are authorized by the FDA for use in our society.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the conference report. This is a critical, must-do piece of legislation to help this country face the new threats we face, and I urge the adoption of this conference report.

On December 20, 2001, Environment and Hazardous Materials Subcommittee Chairman PAUL E. GILLMOR provided a detailed explanation of Title IV for the RECORD as passed by the House. I want to expand upon those remarks and note several aspects of this title as they have been supplemented in conference with the Senate. As evidenced by the conference report to accompany H.R. 3448, the Senate did not have any comparable provisions to Title IV in their bioterrorism legislation. Therefore, the House and Senate conferees utilized Title IV as passed by the House as base text for the final provision.

In this regard, the first and most significant change agreed to by the conferees was the requirement that community water systems submit a written copy of their completed vulnerability assessment to the Administrator of the EPA. The choice of "written copy" in this context is intentional. Since vulnerability assessments contain highly sensitive information, the conference report avoided any requirement or option for electronic submissions and there is no authority for EPA to put such information into its data systems or to create public access of any kind. In addition, the submission requirement applies only to copies of the assessment itself and does not include any supporting documentation, work papers or other preparatory or analytical material.

Second, I would note that the Federal FOIA exemption covering these submissions and information flowing from these submissions is complete; all information and all information derived from these submissions is exempt from disclosure. Moreover Title IV does not create "FOIA events" at the state and local level since it provides that the requirement to submit a vulnerability assessment to EPA does not create any obligation under State and local law to submit a copy of the assessment to any other governmental authority. And while it permits U.S. officials to "discuss the contents" of the vulnerability assessments with appropriate state and local officials, the substitute does not authorize U.S. officials to provide copies of these assessments to anyone, except as specifically provided in the bill.

Third, EPA is required to handle all submitted information under strict security arrangements and protocols. These protocols are to ensure that no one, other than specifically authorized personnel, have access to any part of the submission or to information derived from the submission. The only allowed exceptions to this restriction are for specified actions under identified sections of the Safe Drinking Water Act. Knowingly or recklessly violating these restrictions is subject to criminal prosecution and fines.

Fourth, it is important to note that the conference agreement on Title IV did not establish any new regulatory role or transfer any new regulatory power to EPA. No new authorities were transferred to the Agency beyond the passive receipt of vulnerability assessments under Section 1433. As noted in the previous statement by Subcommittee Chairman GILLMOR, EPA has no power to promulgate regulations or guidance to define what is an "acceptable" vulnerability assessment; there is only a one-time duty to provide information to community water systems by August 1, 2002. In addition, Section 1433 only defines a vulnerability assessment to the extent that it includes a review of certain specified items, most of which are based on the definition of a public water system under Section 1401 of the SDWA. Thus, no community water system is required to use any particular vulnerability assessment tool, to conduct any specific type of analysis, to determine the consequences of any intentional or terrorist acts, analyze the use of any specific chemicals or characterize the risk of any offsite impacts.

In addition, Section 303 of the conference Substitute authorizes the Secretary to detain a shipment of food where FDA has credible evidence or information indicating that such food "presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death to humans or animals." This section does not grant FDA authority to detain whole categories or types of foods, rather it applies to specific shipments or articles of food that the Secretary has credible evidence or information of, based on an investigation, or examination that they present a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death to humans or animals. The "serious adverse health consequences or death" standard that is used consistently in Title III, Subtitle A was drawn from title 21, Section 7.3 of the Code of Federal Regulations, relating to the situation in which there is a reasonable probability that the use of, or exposure to, a violative product will cause serious adverse health consequences or death.

Furthermore, Section 307 of the Conference Substitute authorizes the Secretary to develop a regulation for prior notice of food imports. In developing such a regulation, the Secretary of Health and Human Services should coordinate and consult with the Secretary of Treasury regarding the notifications already required by the U.S. Customs Service with the goal of eliminating, reducing or consolidating duplicative or unnecessary notice requirements and minimizing potential trade impacts of the prior notice requirements of this section. Finally, Section 305 of the Conference Substitute does not impose a registration fee.

In addition to my earlier remarks on Title II, I want to clarify two other provisions contained in this important title. First, in both the HHS and USDA regulatory program sections, the conference substitute creates a new notification requirement whenever "a release, meeting criteria establish by the Secretary, has occurred outside of the biocontainment area" of a registered person's facility. As is clear from the statutory text—"a release . . . has occurred"—this provision covers actual releases, not threatened or possible releases. Second, the phrase "meeting criteria established by the Secretary" is meant to make clear that we are leaving it up to the two Secretaries to determine, independently, the type or nature of releases to be covered by this provision as it applies to each regulatory regime. We expressly do not intend to incorporate the definitions and interpretations of the term "release" as it is used in a Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation, and Liability Act.

Finally, we create a "(b)(3)" statute exempting certain categories of information relating to select agents from the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA). Specifically, we bar disclosure under FOIA of registration and transfer documents, including information derived therefrom that could identify a registered person, or the agents being stored by a registered person; security-related information; and compilations of registration and transfer information. We also protect site-specific information on inspection reports, provided that the agency determines public disclosure would endanger public health and safety. By adding this additional requirement for inspection documents, we are striving to ensure a fair balance between public accountability and security. When a registered person is publicly known to be working with select agents, public disclosure of an inspection report is less likely to endanger public health or safety (provided that security-specific information is redacted), and may improve it by ensuring public accountability. But when the activities of a registered person are not publicly known, revealing the identity and location of a registered person would more likely endanger public health or safety. The agencies will need to consider such matters on a case-by-case basis.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I want to rise first to commend my good friend and colleague, the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), for the distinguished work he has done not only on producing a good bill but on producing a good bipartisan bill.

This is a good piece of legislation. Many have worked on it and I can recommend it to the House without reservation. We bring them an excellent legislation to the floor, a matter of great national importance. This is going to improve our preparedness against terrorism. All of us know why the legislation is needed, and now.

The bill, which was sponsored by the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) and I and a number of our colleagues, passed the House originally by 418 to 2. The Senate bill, an excellent piece of legislation, sponsored by Senators KENNEDY and FRIST, passed by unanimous consent. It is, as I mentioned, an excellent bill.

The conference report we have now before us is a superb product, thanks to the leadership of the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) and Senators KENNEDY and FRIST, as well as all of the conferees who worked very hard on this legislation, and the staff, which deserves great commendation for their labor.

The Act authorizes funds for planning, preparation, and response and activity across the board to deal with those questions, with special emphasis on the State and local level, an area where there is needed and necessary concern. It is hoped that this bill will then make it possible for those who will be provided in this bill and their funding to move directly to the front lines where they are needed, and that will include assistance in shoring up our frayed public health network and our first responders, who are largely officers of the local and State governments.

The bill has important new protections for the food supply of the Nation, an area of particular and long-standing concern. We provide new inspection resources for imported food, but these will only be a down payment on what is ultimately going to be necessary.

Other new authorities are included in the report, registration and detention provisions of the legislation which will help the Secretary to manage imports more efficiently and effectively in the public interest and in the interest of consumers.

There are many other excellent provisions, including improvement in drinking water supply safety, tighter controls on dangerous biological agents. These are important steps and they must be taken now.

Finally, we reauthorize the Prescription Drug User Fee Act which has led to faster FDA approvals of prescription drug applications, and we increase funding for drug safety efforts.

I repeat, this is a good bill. It is an excellent start as our Nation works to improve its abilities to defend against an assault by enemies using biologic agents and other kinds of agents to create danger, hazard and death for our American people.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time, and I ask unanimous consent to yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) for him to control on behalf of the minority.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. NORWOOD), a distinguished member of our committee.

Mr. NORWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I just want to point out that this bill represents a mammoth undertaking by the Committee on Energy and Commerce, and I would like to compliment the hard work done by the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), the chairman, and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), the ranking member, in bringing this important legislation to the floor. It is something that we must pass, we must get into law immediately, and I am delighted that we are doing so in a bipartisan way.

There are things I would like to see different in this bill, as I presume most Members would, but we simply do not have that luxury. We have to find a way to protect the American people from bioterrorism today with a bill that can become law immediately.

The gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) and too many others to mention have actually found that way in this bill. This bill will provide additional support for the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, and I want to thank the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. CHAMBLISS), my good, dear friend, for his work in that area, as well as the public and private health care systems throughout America's local communities.

It will improve communication among all levels of government, which is where we clearly have the greatest problem at present. It provides a stockpile of sufficient drugs, vaccines and other supplies that we found we were short of when forced to abandon our offices to anthrax last year. It encourages a development of new drugs and vaccines to combat bioterrorism, and it increases the security at our borders and for our food and drug supplies and waterworks.

I compliment the chairman for getting the Prescription Drug User Fee Act reauthorized through 2007 as an important precursor to solving the long-term challenges of the prescription drug cost.

Mr. Speaker, we can make improvements later. We need action yesterday. I urge the passage of this bill today.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 4 minutes.

American lives depend on the strength and the reach and the cohesiveness of our public health system. For far too long, we have neglected our public health infrastructure, the men and women on the front lines, and the resources they need to do their job.

This bill makes a new investment in the Nation's public health and vaccines and in food safety. I am particularly gratified by the strong language concerning antibiotic resistance and the very positive work we have done to improve the safety of imported food.

I want to recognize the hard work of staff who has been laboring over this bill for several months, pulling some all-night sessions, long weekend sessions. On the Committee on Energy and Commerce, Edith Hollaman and John Ford and Bruce Guinn and Jonathan Cordone on the minority; and with the majority, Nandan Kenkeremath, Amit Sachdev, Tom DeLinge and Pat Morrisey; also with the gentleman from California's (Mr. WAXMAN) office, Ann Witt; and especially three people in my office, Ellie Dghongy, Katie Porter and Earl Seeley, for their outstanding work on this very complicated and extraordinarily complex issue.

This legislation authorizes PDUFA, the Prescription Drug User Fee Act. By increasing the resources available to FDA, PDUFA has enabled the agency to reduce the time needed to assess safety and efficacy of new prescription drugs. Expediting access to beneficial new medicines is good for consumers and good for public health. However, more rapid approval times, coupled with increasingly aggressive marketing by drug manufacturers, all too often have safety consequences.

More new drugs in the marketplace, more Americans taking these drugs due to the barrage of direct-to-consumer advertising, if a lethal side effect surfaces once a new drug hits the market, millions of Americans are affected. That is why it is critical to bolster FDA's drug safety capabilities. One of the most important provisions in this bill enables FDA to devote a portion of the user fees it collects from the drug industry to enhance its pre- and post-market drug safety functions.

We took steps to ensure that the focus on rapid approval time does not put pressure on FDA to drain resources from other important functions, like drug safety, like the review of drug advertising, and, importantly, the review of generic drugs. We also laid the groundwork for improving the process by which drug user fees are established.

The public interest is never served when a regulatory body and the industry it regulates get too close. FDA depends on user fees from the industry it regulates, consumers depend on FDA to focus on public health and public safety, not on drug industry profits. FDA has established performance goals to demonstrate that it is applying the user fees in an effective manner. Historically, the drug industry and FDA have jointly established these goals behind closed doors.

We have taken steps to make sure consumers are part of that process. Regardless of where the revenues come from, FDA's responsibility is the consumer, not the drug industry, something they need to always remember. Any and every goal it sets should reflect that fact.

Mr. Speaker, I want to briefly mention one disappointment in this process. Last year, we passed legislation giving the drug industry a patent extension if they conduct tests to make sure their drugs are safe in children. Some of us question why the Federal Government had to bribe drug companies in order to get them to do tests that should be mandatory. We know many new drugs are prescribed for kids now. We know doctors are forced to fly blind, making decisions about the right medicine, the right dose, without the benefit of clinical testing.

We were told the patent extension incentive was important to get drug companies to conduct tests on drugs already on the market, but that the bill did not supplant FDA's authority to require the testing for new drugs. Well, it appears the drug industry and my Republican colleagues, who on this issue apparently are doing its bidding, have changed their mind. The administration has waffled on whether to maintain the regulations that affirm the testing requirement.

My colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN) has introduced legislation to codify that requirement, in other words, to ensure that children receive the proper drugs in the proper dosage. If we could depend on the drug industry to make sure their drugs are safe, the drug industry would not be fighting regulations that require them to do so.

Other than those small number of criticisms, Mr. Speaker, this is good legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Health of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I rise in support of the conference report.

This important legislation strengthens our ability as a country to detect and respond to bioterrorist threats or attacks. Just this week, the Vice President stated that another terrorist assault is almost certain. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is crucial that we quickly pass this legislation and send it to the President for his signature.

The legislation is a strong and comprehensive measure that enhances the security of our Nation. First, we strengthen our public health systems by increasing State and local preparedness to detect and respond to an attack. Secondly, this bill enhances security measures in relation to the handling, transport and storage of dangerous substances. Third, we strengthen our Nation's food security systems. And, fourth, we improve the safety and security of our drinking water systems.

Mr. Speaker, this is a comprehensive approach and a meaningful step to improve our Nation's security systems. The conference report includes provisions to reauthorize the Prescription Drug User Fee Act. This is critically important, because without this program the Food and Drug Administration would have lost millions of dollars and numerous personnel which are used to review and approve lifesaving medicines. I am very pleased we worked in a truly bipartisan, bicameral manner to reauthorize this program.

Unfortunately, we were not able to reach resolution on medical device changes. But I am committed, Mr. Speaker, I like to think we all are, to working to update device laws this year.

I want to take a moment to thank the staff who worked so hard to complete this legislation, particularly to single out Pete Goodloe, the House's Legislative Counsel. We would not have been able to complete this legislation in a timely fashion without his expert services.

Unfortunately, there are so many other staff that have worked so hard, I am unable to name each of them here today. But please know that our country will be better prepared in the future because of your hard work.

Mr. Speaker, this is a strong measure supported by all the conferees, and I urge my colleagues to support this conference report.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to my friend, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM).

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3448.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 3448, the Bioterrorism Preparedness Act conference report. I appreciate the work that Chairman TAUZIN and Ranking Member DINGELL have put into this bill, and I want to thank them both for the respectful and helpful way they have dealt with concerns raised by the agricultural community.

However, I do need to express my concerns about the thoroughness of the process in regard to many provisions under the jurisdiction of the House Agriculture Committee. I would have been much more comfortable with a more deliberative process, including a hearing record and outside input.

The conference report includes significant changes in the following areas: the regulation of biological research facilities; changes in the way our food is inspected; changes to human and animal disease monitoring efforts, and many more.

Many of the provisions of this conference report appear to be needed, and are very logical in light of our Nation's current security concerns. For example, language in this agreement to coordinate and enhance our control of dangerous biological agents and toxins is certainly timely and important. In addition, this conference agreement contains needed authorizations to upgrade and secure facilities working with biological agents, both for human and animal disease research.

Given the importance of these issues, along with the willingness of the other conference members to make a few important changes to the bill, I am going to support the conference agreement. Still, I feel I must reiterate that it would have been better if many of the provisions in this agreement, the majority of which are not emergency in nature, had gone through a more thorough and regular legislative process.

Given the reality of the choices before us today, and the importance of some of the provisions in this legislation, I urge Members to support passage of the conference report.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. HARMAN), a member of the committee.

Ms. HARMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time; and I hope that he will add my staffer, Carolyn Cobberly, to the list of brilliant staffers who have added to this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, serving on the Committee on Energy and Commerce is a high honor. The chance to work on impressive bipartisan legislation like this is why I came to Congress.

The possibility of another bioterrorist attack is real and our Nation must be prepared to respond. Our top priority must be to develop a national strategy to identify the most likely threats and prioritize our response. We already know that al Qaeda and rogue states like Iraq have attempted to acquire biological agents, and we have yet to discover and prosecute the individual or group responsible for the anthrax attacks that killed five people in October and November.

Our government's response to the bioterrorist attacks of October and November was deeply flawed. We have talented people, but we have been lacking the resources and coordination to make our response effective. We must act now to improve our terrorism response before another tragedy occurs.

This legislation moves us in the right direction. It creates lines of communication and organizations to coordinate the roles that our public health agencies, military, and FBI will play in bioterrorism response. It also directs substantial investments to the State and local governments that need it most. All terrorism is local, and our response must be local. This bill provides resources where they are needed most.

I am particularly glad that this bill includes funds to speed up the renovation of CDC's buildings and facilities. I have visited the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention in Atlanta and seen talented people working there in the shabbiest conditions. This legislation authorizes $300 million in each of the next 2 years to improve the security of CDC facilities and construct much-needed research facilities.

I am also glad this bill will increase our investment in improving the IT capabilities of public health agencies across the Nation. One-third of public health agencies are not connected to the Internet. If we are to communicate effectively, we need to develop comprehensive, syndromic surveillance systems to detect the outbreak of diseases, and we need to have all public health agencies on line.

This bill is excellent legislation, and I urge its passage.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. BURR), the distinguished vice chairman of the full committee.

Mr. BURR of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the Committee on Energy and Commerce for yielding me this time.

At this time, Mr. Speaker, let me recognize the tremendous work of the chairman, of the ranking member, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), Senator KENNEDY, Senator FRIST, who headed the Senate side, but more importantly the great work of committee and personal staffs of all the Members who served on that conference. This was not an easy thing to hammer out. It took many late nights on the part of staff. There was a lot of give and take; but it meant that something that was important to this country, something that was timely and urgent, actually got addressed in a sufficient way.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the conference report. This legislation has been long in the making and is long overdue when we look at what we have gone through. But H.R. 3448 puts in motion the resources, $4.6 billion in 2 years, and authorities needed to close the gaps in our Nation's public health infrastructure.

I would like to speak briefly about a few of the many important provisions included in this bill. I am grateful that the managers agreed to retain the provisions authorizing the National Medical Response System. These provisions are built around legislation introduced earlier and recognize the critical role played by personnel of the National Disaster Medical Response Teams in responding to all disasters, not just bioterrorism. The members of the National Disaster Medical Response Teams are nearly all volunteers who are called away from their real jobs on a moment's notice, and they deserve the liability and job protections we extend to them in this bill.

I am also pleased the managers recognized the need to revitalize and modernize the lab facilities and other buildings at the Centers for Disease Control. This section, which builds on the hard work of the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. CHAMBLISS), the gentlewoman from California (Ms. HARMAN), and the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) and their bill H.R. 3219, authorizes a dramatic ramp-up in our facility spending for the CDC.

The legislation also takes into account the central role played by the centers in operating and maintaining a robust public health communications and surveillance system that we were shocked to find out was not electronically connected to every public health entity in this country. But after this bill, it will be connected. The centers are a national asset, and they need our support in order to carry out their very important mission.

The grant program authorized in this legislation, Mr. Speaker, is the real heart of this bill. Building on the work being done on an emergency basis by the administration, these grants will enable our State and local governments as well as hospitals to train personnel, purchase needed equipment, and strengthen the communication and disease surveillance that they have done up to this point. It is our hope spending in these areas will not only help improve our ability to respond to bioterrorist attacks but also strengthen critical elements in our overall public health system.

The bill also tightens control on access to dangerous biological agents and toxins by establishing a reporting and tracking system that was not in place. We do not mean to introduce these provisions to be burdensome on researchers, but as we have learned post-September 11, our ability to know where these agents and toxins are is vitally important.

Title 3 strengthens the safety of the food and drug supply in the United States. I believe that with subsequent regulations from HHS, we found a balance between information requirements and information activities. None of us want to make it a burden to import food and bulk drugs. But after 9–11, we realized we have to have a better handle on the items that cross our borders and where they are.

In this legislation, Mr. Speaker, we also reauthorize the Prescription Drug User Fee Act. The last time we reauthorized this act was when we passed the food, drug modernization act in 1997. This time, PDUFA is reauthorized with increased emphasis on post-market surveillance and generic drug review. The FDA and patients across the United States will benefit greatly from this legislation and that reauthorization.

Finally, let me once again extend my thanks to the many personal and committee staffs on both sides of the Hill who put really invaluable time into working out the differences on this. Like many others, it is not perfect; but it is pretty darn good. It is this legislation will go a long way in restoring the viability of our Nation's public health infrastructure at a time when it is vitally needed.

Mr. Speaker, today I urge my colleagues to support this conference report, support the good work of the House and the Senate, and let us move forward with rebuilding things that we know now we need to rebuild.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY).

□ 1230

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, the litany of saints has been mentioned of staffers who have worked on this bill. I would like to add just two more: one is Jeff Duncan, who is my legislative staff director; the other is Kristen Kulinowski, who is in the gallery right now with her mother and father and husband, who worked on the provision that will provide for the Federal Government to give to the States or to local communities who request it the potassium iodide which would serve as the antidote to thyroid cancer which is the very real and greatest danger in the event of a successful attack of a bioterrorist group at a nuclear power plant or an unwanted accident at a power plant.

And so this is a huge step forward, which I believe is going to really increase public health and safety. I want to thank the majority for their great assistance on this and thank all the people in the minority as well for their great help.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to commend the conferees for their hard work on this important bill. H.R. 3448 includes a provision of mine that will take an important step toward protecting public health in the event of an act of terrorism at our Nation's nuclear power plants. I thank Mr. TAUZIN for working with me in the House Energy and Commerce Committee to include a provision on stockpiling potassium iodide to protect public health in the event of a successful terrorist attack against a nuclear power plant. Potassium iodide is a safe and effective drug that protects the thyroid gland by saturating it with a safe form of iodine so that it cannot absorb the radioactive iodine produced during the plant's normal operation.

My provision, which was adopted in committee and passed by the House with broad bipartisan support, will provide greater protection of public health than existing programs. The Nuclear Regulatory Commission has a voluntary program that provides States with free potassium iodide for people within 10 miles. However, a State must submit a formal request to the NRC to get the free pills, and some States have refused to do so. My provision allowed States or local governments to request potassium iodide for people within 20 miles of these plants, thus expanding the radius of protection beyond the 10-mile emergency planning zone, and would have allowed local governments to request this important protection even if the State had refused to accept the NRC's offer.

The bioterrorism bill that was passed by the Senate had no potassium iodide provision, so we worked together in conference committee to produce the amended provision under consideration today in title 1, section 127. This amended provision directs the President to provide potassium iodide to States and local governments, and provides a mechanism for local governments to request the pills where the State has not done so. The local government is eligible to request potassium iodide from the President only if the State government does not have a plan for stockpiling or has a plan that does not go beyond 10 miles. The local government must first petition the State to modify the State's plan to include the population requested by the local government. If the State does not modify its plan, the local government must submit a stockpiling and distribution plan to the State and the State must certify that the local government's plan is not inconsistent with the State's emergency plans.

In addition, the conferees agreed to commission a study by the National Academies on the most effective and safe way to distribute and administer potassium iodide on a mass scale. I wish to make clear that this study will not consider the overall safety and efficacy of potassium iodide as a medical preventative to thyroid diseases caused by exposure to radioactive iodine. The Food and Drug Administration, Nuclear Regulatory Agency, and Federal Emergency Management Agency have all concluded that potassium iodide is safe and effective. In fact, the FDA has stated that the risks of radiation-induced thyroid cancer in children so far outweigh the negligible risk of side effects, that it is better for a child to take a full adult dose than to take no potassium iodide at all. Thus, the study will only address how best to incorporate potassium iodide into a comprehensive emergency plan that may include evacuation and sheltering.

One thing I would like the National Academies study to consider is whether a 20-mile radius goes far enough to protect people in the event of a core melt-through plus breach of containment. The Nuclear Regulatory Commission's own documents show a significant risk to the thyroid as far away as 200 miles from the plant in such a scenario, yet the official evacuation zone only extends to 10 miles. The NRC disputes this documentation yet has failed to produce for me any new studies that justify the 10-mile zone. The Chernobyl accident resulted in increased thyroid cancers hundreds of miles from the plant. I would strongly recommend the National Academies study whether 20 miles is sufficient.

While this provision doesn't go as far as I would like, it is an important first step in expanding the radius of protection from nuclear terrorism. I thank all the members of the conference committee who worked on this bill and I urge my colleagues to vote for its passage.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). The Chair would remind Members not to refer to visitors in the gallery.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. SHIMKUS), a distinguished lieutenant colonel.

Mr. SHIMKUS. Mr. Speaker, the committee and our work, especially the Committee on Energy and Commerce, is two-for-two, 2 days in a row, two good bills, bipartisan agreement. I want to applaud both our majority side and our colleagues on the other side for two good pieces of legislation.

Since the attacks of September 11 and the recent anthrax exposures, our Nation has had to reevaluate its ability to respond to a bioterrorism attack. The anthrax attacks, though small in scale compared to the scenarios envisioned by bioterrorism experts, strained the public health system and raised concern that the Nation is insufficiently prepared to respond to bioterrorist attacks. Improving public health preparedness, food safety protection, and response capacity offers protection not only from bioterrorist attacks but also from naturally occurring public health emergencies.

This conference report substantially improves our country's ability to plan and prepare for such an emergency. It increases the ability of the Federal Government and communities to plan for any future biological emergencies. This includes improving communications and the public information flow, updating lab capabilities, authorizing a national stockpile, and assisting our health care providers to be prepared to provide care.

In particular, Mr. Speaker, title II of this legislation creates a list of all biological agents and toxins and regulates which individuals can work with them. As many of the Members are aware, the Justice Department will start giving lie detector tests to hundreds of current and former Federal employees who worked at two Federal facilities where anthrax was kept. One former researcher at one of the labs said that nothing was in place to prevent workers from removing the deadly germs from the labs. This legislation will make sure that the government is well aware where these dangerous toxins and agents are being researched and stored and exactly who will be doing the research. If this provision had been in place prior to last year, the anthrax attacks might have been prevented.

In addition, title I of this bill includes a provision that addresses health personnel shortages that would impact the ability of the Nation to respond during a bioterrorism attack. The bill establishes grants for training and education of these critical health care providers.

I ask for full support of this bill.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. CAPPS), a registered nurse who is on our committee.

Mrs. CAPPS. I thank my colleague for yielding time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on the bioterrorism preparedness bill. This bill is a good example of what we can accomplish when we work together. The bill we produced under the leadership of Chairman TAUZIN and Ranking Member DINGELL will strengthen our public health infrastructure and make a much-needed increase in resources for food and water safety and security.

I am very pleased that one of my bills, the Community AED Act, was included in this legislation. I introduced this bill earlier this year with my colleague, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. SHIMKUS). It will help local communities place automatic external defibrillators in public places. Quick access to AEDs can mean the difference between life and death for victims of sudden cardiac arrest. Making sure AEDs are readily available will improve our ability to cope with public health emergencies.

I am also pleased that this bill sets aside funds to train health care workers to identify and treat symptoms of bioterrorism. And it provides the Secretary of Health and Human Services with a small pool of funds to address workforce shortages. But as a part of our goal of preparing for bioterrorism, we still need to do more to address the shortage of nurses. Nurses, for example, will be called upon to deal with patients who may have been infected by a biological agent, and we do not have enough nurses. That is why I have been working with Chairman TAUZIN, Chairman BILIRAKIS, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN), and others in the House and Senate to complete the Nurse Reinvestment Act passed here last year. The passage of this nursing legislation as a complement to the bill before us today is essential to making us ready for bioterrorism.

I am pleased that Chairman TAUZIN and Chairman BILIRAKIS have given me their assurances that we will finish this bill by the end of June. These bills together can help our Nation be ready for tragedies we do not even want to imagine.

I urge my colleagues to support this bioterrorism bill and commit to final passage of the Nurse Reinvestment Act.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from South Dakota (Mr. THUNE) from the Committee on Agriculture which contributed a great deal to this bill.

Mr. THUNE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time. I want to commend the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) for his hard work in bringing together different bills in a bipartisan way that meet the public health threats that we face as a Nation. I particularly want to thank both Chairman TAUZIN and Chairman COMBEST for including language in this bill to authorize an agricultural bioterrorism early-warning surveillance system for animal diagnostic laboratories. This network will provide early detection of bioterrorist events, natural or intentional contamination of our food supply, animal disease outbreaks involving agents which impact human health and early recognition of newly emergent and economically important diseases such as foot and mouth disease. The network will also enhance coordination between State and Federal laboratories as well as public health agencies. In my State, South Dakota State University will benefit greatly from this particular provision.

Mr. Speaker, the infrastructure our Nation needs to protect and prepare itself for bioterror attacks cannot be overlooked. This legislation meets those needs so that people across our Nation can feel safe and secure with the understanding that should the worst happen, we will be ready.

I ask my colleagues to support the conference report.

Since the attacks of September 11th we have all become far more sensitive to the threat of a bioterrorist attack here at home. It is critical that our citizens feel secure at home, that our first responders are properly trained and prepared and that the food that crosses our borders is safe.

I want to thank my colleague Chairman BILLY TAUZIN for his hard work to bring two different bills together in a bipartisan compromise that meets the public health threats we face as a Nation. This bill uses new ideas and new resources to help government officials at every level prepare for bioterrorist threats and public health emergencies.

The bill authorizes more than $1.5 billion in grants to improve bioterror planning and preparedness and to develop new drugs, therapies and vaccines.

The bill authorizes $300 million for the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention to upgrade and improve their facilities and capabilities.

The bill authorizes more than $1.15 billion for the Secretary of Health and Human Services to expand medicine stockpiles and the purchase of additional small pox vaccines.

The bill also grants authority to USDA to impose new registration requirements to regulate those agents that are most devastating to crops and livestock. Additionally, the bill creates tough new criminal penalties to enforce these important new regulations.

Importantly, the bill authorizes $545 million for FDA and USDA to hire hundreds of new inspectors at our borders and to develop new methods to detect contaminated foods. The bill also provides new regulatory powers to FDA to safeguard our food supply. These new resources and authorities will substantially improve the federal government's ability to ensure the safety of America's food supply.

Finally, I would like to thank both Chairman TAUZIN and Chairman COMBEST for including language to authorize an agricultural bioterrorism early warning surveillance system for animal diagnostic laboratories. This network will provide early detection of bioterrorist events, natural or intentional contamination of our food supply, animal disease outbreaks involving agents which impact human health and early recognition of newly emergent and economically important diseases such as Foot and Mouth Disease. The network will also enhance coordination between State and Federal laboratories, as well as public health agencies. In my state, South Dakota State University will benefit greatly from this provision.

Mr. Speaker, the infrastructure our nation needs to protect and prepare itself for bioterror attack cannot be overlooked. This legislation meets those needs so that people across our Nation can feel safe with the understanding that should the worst happen we will be ready.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE), who is a leading force on the Subcommittee on Health.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the conference report. As a conferee on title IV, the drinking water security and safety provisions, I am very pleased with the compromise that was reached. Title IV of this bill includes strong provisions that will, first, require community water systems to conduct detailed assessments of their vulnerability to attack by terrorists and of available remedies; and, second, require EPA experts to review the findings of the vulnerability assessments.

An FBI warning issued in January of this year notified water officials that Osama bin Laden's al Qaeda network had considered and investigated the possibility of attacking water distribution systems. That is why my colleagues and I thought it was absolutely critical that the final bioterrorism legislation address this issue.

The final bill assures that all vulnerabilities to terrorist attacks, including attacks intended to contaminate the water supply and to release chemicals into neighboring communities, are identified and that available safety measures are evaluated. The bill accomplishes this by requiring community water systems serving over 3,300 persons to conduct vulnerability assessments. Each community water system must certify to the administrator of the EPA that they have conducted a vulnerability assessment. The administrator is also required to provide baseline information regarding which kinds of terrorist attacks or other intentional acts are probable threats. Then these vulnerability assessments, once completed, will be sent to the EPA for secure keeping and to help the government understand the threats to our water systems and develop plans to protect our safe drinking water supply. We authorize $160 million through fiscal year 2005 for this goal.

I want to thank the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN). The language in title IV is a tremendous improvement over the House-passed bill. I would also like to thank the conferees and the staff on the Democratic side, Dick Frandsen, also Greg Dotson with the gentleman from California's office, and Heather Zichal with my office.

This is a good bill. I urge its passage.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. BUYER), a distinguished and valued member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

Mr. BUYER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank Chairman TAUZIN and Ranking Member DINGELL for their diligence and hard work on the conference report. Also after September 11 as we were coming together to put together a bioterrorism bill, Chairman TAUZIN gave me an assignment. Given my expertise with regard to the Department of Defense military health delivery system and the VA, it was to actually draft a medical education piece, a component of this bill. The expertise with regard to how to identify and treat chemical and radiological agents and biological toxins and pathogens rests with the Department of Defense. We have taken this knowledge from the DOD and moved it into the VA because of the VA's nexus as teaching hospitals. We are not going to establish new community standards of medical practice, that is what is extremely important here, but we are going to make sure that our first responders, our doctors, are able to identify and treat these new threats in the future. That is what this bill does.

I want to thank the chairman and the gentleman from Michigan for their hard work at the conference, along with the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN). I appreciate their work.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN), whose two staff people, Karen Nelson and Tim Westmoreland, did particularly outstanding work. He was on the conference committee with the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE).

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time. I want to congratulate the leadership of our committee on both the Republican and the Democratic side and all the staffs who worked on this legislation and urge support for the conference report. It includes many valuable provisions that deserve our support. In particular, it provides significant funding to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and to State and local public health systems and hospitals to improve their ability to respond to bioterrorist attacks and other public health emergencies.

The report also includes important new food safety authority to the Food and Drug Administration, authority that will be essential in the event of a bioterrorist attack.

I am also pleased that we were able to make significant improvements to title IV of this legislation to help protect the Nation's drinking water from terrorist attack. Under these provisions, community water systems will prepare vulnerability assessments and provide these assessments to EPA. EPA will then be able to use the assessments to address the threat of terrorism and for any other lawful purpose. These provisions are a step forward. I am glad they have been included in this legislation.

This conference report includes many valuable provisions that deserve our support. In particular, it provides significant funding to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and to State and local public health systems and hospitals to improve their ability to respond to bioterrorist attacks and other public health emergencies.

The report also includes important new food safety authority to the Food and Drug Administration—authority which will be essential in the event of a bioterrorist attack. The report authorizes the FDA to: Require food companies to register with the FDA their names and locations; detain food if there is information that it may present a serious risk to health, either at the border or in domestic commerce; require importers to give the FDA prior notice that a food will be coming into the US; require food companies to keep records that will assist the FDA to trace contaminated food; and inspect food establishments when there is a reason to believe that they are holding food that presents a serious risk to health.

We were also able to make significant improvements to Title IV of this legislation to help protect the nation's drinking water from terrorist attack. Under these provisions, community water systems will prepare vulnerability assessments, and provide those assessments to EPA.

EPA will then be able to use the assessments for a number of critical purposes: To ensure that vulnerabilities are being adequately assessed; to ensure that federal grants are awarded appropriately; to conduct thorough inspections under the Safe Drinking Water Act; to address significant vulnerabilities under section 1431 of the Safe Drinking Water Act; to share with law enforcement and intelligence agencies; and for any other lawful purpose.

I would also note that the report contains reauthorization of the Prescription Drug User Fee Act. For the first time, we have included provisions that will allow the FDA to use user fee money to watch over the safety of drugs after they are marketed. This is of great importance, particularly at a time when questions have been raised about whether faster drug approvals have undercut drug safety.

These provisions are a step forward, and I am glad they have been included in this legislation.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. GILLMOR), the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Environment and Hazardous Materials of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

Mr. GILLMOR. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend Chairman TAUZIN, Ranking Member DINGELL, and the others who have worked so hard to produce a conference committee report that certainly I am in very strong support of.

In particular, I want to highlight the need to support the drinking water protection provisions contained in title IV. Just yesterday, newspapers were running front page stories about New York City worrying about the vulnerability of their water system. As chairman of the Subcommittee on Environment and Hazardous Materials, I am pleased that our committee is tackling that issue, which is a serious concern not only of some of our biggest systems but some of our medium and small-sized systems as well.

I believe the original House language on title IV was preferable to the provisions in the conference report, but I am glad we were able to retain the core features of the House bill. Specifically, we require drinking water systems to do vulnerability assessments and to compile emergency response plans. In addition, we provide money for mandates and establish emergency funds.

I strongly support the bill.

As chairman of the Environment and Hazardous Materials Subcommittee of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, which has jurisdiction over the Safe Drinking Water Act, I am taking this opportunity to elaborate on and clarify the provisions of the conference report on Title IV of H.R. 3448, the Public Health Security and Bioterrorism Preparedness Response Act of 2002. I want to provide a more detailed explanation of Title IV for the RECORD.

Title IV of the Public Health Security and Bioterrorism Preparedness Response Act of 2001 requires community water systems serving over 3,300 individuals to conduct vulnerability assessments and to prepare or revise emergency response plans which incorporate the results of the vulnerability assessment. The legislation, however, also recognizes that many community water systems have conducted or will be in the process of conducting vulnerability assessments at the time of enactment. Title IV is thus explicitly drafted not to create a regulatory program which could slow down ongoing efforts or to require systems that have completed vulnerability assessments to undertake another such assessment. The title only requires that systems certify that an assessment has been completed by a specific date, not that the assessment was initiated and/or completed before or after the date of enactment. Moreover, the title only requires that systems submit a written copy of the assessment to the Administrator of EPA. Thus, the title does not require that any preparatory or supplementary material or analysis be provided to the Agency.

By only requiring submission of a written copy, Title IV recognizes that vulnerability assessments can contain highly sensitive information which would pose a danger if disclosed. The conference agreement on Title IV did not include any requirement or option for the submission of these assessments in electronic form. This recognizes that the information protocols required under Title IV will tightly control access to the assessments and that these documents will not be available or placed on EPA electronic systems which have been demonstrated to be vulnerable to unauthorized access.

Title IV requires strict security arrangements, procedures, equipment and locations be established at EPA before the Agency shall receive the submitted written copies of vulnerability assessments. These protocols are to ensure that no one, other than specifically authorized individuals, have any access to any part of the submission or to information derived from the submission. Only very specific exceptions to these restrictions are allowed under Title IV and knowingly or recklessly violating these restrictions carries with it criminal sanctions of both imprisonment and fines.

Title IV does not create a regulatory role for the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) in defining what is or is not an acceptable vulnerability assessment. EPA is provided no regulatory authority in this regard; instead, the Agency is only to provide information once to community water systems (by August 1, 2002) regarding what kinds of terrorist attacks are probable threats. EPA is to coordinate its efforts with other agencies and departments of government who have expertise in this area, to compile information readily available or already developed, and to promptly distribute this information. The statute does not provide a continuing duty for EPA in this area past the date specified in the legislation.

In this regard, vulnerability assessments are defined in statute only to the extent that they include a review of certain specified items. These items are those which make up the physical structure of a public water system (as defined in section 1401 of the Safe Drinking Water Act (SDWA)), electronic, computer or other automated systems, physical barriers, the use, storage, or handling of various chemicals and the operation and maintenance of a drinking water system. Title IV recognizes that there are many different types and sizes of community water systems (CWS) and gives CWS wide discretion to devise and conduct a vulnerability assessment. EPA is not given any rulemaking or other authority to define further what is or is not a vulnerability assessment meeting the requirements of section 1433. Nor does Title IV require that a community water system utilize any particular vulnerability assessment tool, or conduct any specific type of analysis. Community water systems are not required to determine the consequences of intentional acts or terrorist acts, analyze their use of specific chemicals, including chlorine, as opposed to other chemicals, or to characterize the risk of any offsite impacts. Further, the term "physical barriers" does not necessarily include "buffer zones" or any other area around physical structures.

Title IV recognizes that vulnerability assessments could contain very sensitive information about a drinking water system which would be of assistance to a terrorist or an individual contemplating an attack. Therefore, Title IV provides a full, complete and airtight exemption from disclosure under the federal FOIA requirement (5 U.S.C. 552) for all information submitted to EPA and any information derived therefrom. Further, the Title addresses the situation where a state or local FOIA requirement could be "triggered" by submission of a written copy of a vulnerability assessment to EPA. The Title provides that no community water system will be compelled to submit a copy of the vulnerability assessment to any governmental entity that is occasioned by the requirement that the system submit such assessment to EPA.

Title IV does not contain any requirement that the EPA or any other governmental body receive for review emergency response plans prepared by water systems. Nor does Title IV contain any requirement that community water systems provide such information to EPA or to any other person or governmental entity. Community water systems are to coordinate with local emergency planning committees (LEPCs) in the preparation or revision of emergency response plans for the purpose of avoiding duplication of effort and taking advantage of previous information developed by the LEPCs for first responders and local government response. There is no requirement that community water systems disclose any of the information developed by the vulnerability assessments to the LEPCs.

The legislation authorizes EPA to provide financial assistance to CWS for several specified purposes. EPA may provide assistance for vulnerability assessments, for developing or revising emergency response plans and for expenses and contracts designed to address basic security enhancements of critical importance and significant threats to public health. The Title also authorizes assistance for small water systems and immediate and urgent security needs, subject to limits specified in the Title. Title IV does not define either "basic security enhancements of critical importance" or "significant threats to public health." However, existing SDWA programs which provide assistance to water systems have not provided assistance for continuing expenses such as operations and maintenance or personnel expenses. This legislation does not change this long-established public policy and specifically indicates that basic security enhancements do not include expenditures for personnel costs, or monitoring, operation or maintenance of facilities, equipment or systems.

Finally, Title IV clarifies that EPA has discretion to act under Part D, Emergency Powers, of the Safe Drinking Water Act (SDWA) when the Agency has received information about a specific threatened terrorist attack or when the Agency has received information concerning a potential terrorist attack (but not necessarily a specific, identified threat) at a drinking water facility. In exercising this discretion, the EPA should only rely upon substantial, credible information. EPA should not interpret "potential terrorist attack" to mean that there is merely some possibility or statistical probability of a terrorist attack. Neither should EPA interpret a general warning, general announcement or general condition to be sufficient information of a threatened or potential terrorist attack. Specific, credible information is required, and all other elements of section 1431 must be met, including the existence of an imminent and substantial endangerment to the health of persons, that appropriate State and local authorities have not acted to protect the health of persons served by the drinking water system, and that the EPA Administrator has consulted with State and local authorities regarding the correctness of the information regarding both the specific threat and the actions which the State or local authorities have taken. The authority granted to EPA in section 1431 is a limited, case-by-case, contingent emergency power.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN).

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. Speaker, let me start out by congratulating the committee for putting together this legislation and putting together the conference report. This is a very good bill. I think it says a lot about the Congress that it has been able to respond as quickly as it has to the events of September 11 and the subsequent events of anthrax that we felt right here on Capitol Hill.

Subsequent to September 11, I had the opportunity to meet with the heads of a number of the institutions in the Texas Medical Center which is in my congressional district and is the largest medical center in the United States. In discussions with those individuals, I learned that while we had the knowledge throughout the United States in our various medical complexes to deal with the threat of bioterrorism, we did not necessarily have the means to deploy that knowledge. We really were not prepared to deal with it. And so a number of the institutions followed the lead of the Committee on Energy and Commerce and others in the Congress to try and address this and say that the Federal Government and the taxpayers would make an investment in making sure that we could deploy those medical assets the next time there is an attack.

As some of the speakers said, this bill may not go far enough, and I would concur with that; but it certainly is a very good start to begin to address this situation, to make sure that not just in the Nation's capital but throughout the United States that our local communities, with their local health care facilities, will begin to put together the plans to be able to deploy these assets to protect the American populace.

That is what we ought to be doing in this body to address that. So I want to commend the Members, the chairman and ranking member of the full committee and subcommittees that worked on this, and I urge my colleagues to pass the legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the conference report for H.R. 3448, the Public Health Security and Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Act. In the wake of the September 11 terrorism attacks on the United States, it is clear that we need to invest in our public health infrastructure to ensure that we are prepared for future terrorism attacks. As the representative for the Texas Medical Center, the nation's largest medical center, I have learned that our nation's hospitals are not adequately prepared for bioterrorism attacks and need federal assistance in order to upgrade their facilities.

I am pleased that this conference report authorizes federal funding of $1.6 billion in Fiscal Year 2003 for grants to states, local governments, and public and private health care facilities to improve planning and preparedness activities. Of this total, $520 million in state grants will be made for the preparedness of hospitals, including children's hospitals to enhance their capacity to deal with emergencies such as bioterrorism attacks. I believe that all hospitals should be eligible to receive this funding in order to transform their emergency department. This legislation also authorizes $300 million to upgrade and expand the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) facilities. During the recent anthrax attacks, we learned that the CDC does not have adequate staff and laboratories to conduct testings for individual anthrax tests. This legislation will correct this insufficiency and invest in our public health response. This measure also authorizes funding of $1.1 billion to expand the supply of vaccines, medicines, and supplies available to treat biological weapons such as anthrax. This funding will also ensure that we have adequate supply of smallpox vaccines and other antidotes for biological agents.

In order to protect public health, this legislation would also give the Food and Drug Administration additional authority to detain and bar food products. While we know that certain imported foods can kill children, yet the FDA does not currently have the ability to bar those who have knowingly imported these foods which have been adulterated or misbranded. This conference report also authorizes the FDA to require food importers to notify the FDA in advance of their arrival. This will help the FDA to carefully monitor which foods are being imported into the United States in order to protect public health. Finally, this bill would require all facilities that manufacture, process, pack, or hold food for consumption to register with the FDA. With registration, the FDA will be able to quickly track food products and appropriately act when any food products result in sickness or illness for our Nation's population. This measure would also provide new resources to protect our water supply. This conference report authorizes $160 million in Fiscal Year 2002 and such sums as necessary for future years. Under this bill, the 353 largest water systems which serve a total of 116 million people will be required to conduct annual vulnerability assessments. The legislation also requires those water systems which serve more than 3,300 persons to prepare an emergency response plan. Both of these requirements will encourage our water systems to carefully analyze their vulnerability to biological attacks and to prepare when their water supply may have been contaminated.

Finally, this legislation includes provisions to reauthorize the Food and Drug Administration's prescription drug user fee program through Fiscal Year 2007. This measure would authorize the collection of $1.2 billion in fees over five years in order to ensure that the FDA has sufficient resources to review prescription drug applications. These additional fees help the FDA to hire additional personnel who can review prescription drugs and medical devices.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 3348, legislation that will ensure that our Nation is better prepared when the next terrorism attack comes. With recently warnings of potential terrorism attacks, I believe that our public health infrastructure is well prepared.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute to introduce the next speaker.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman I am about to introduce was not only one of the conferees on this important legislation, but he and the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) and I believe the gentlewoman from California (Ms. HARMAN) were extraordinarily diligent in offering this House a special bill to upgrade and enable the Centers for Disease Control, which was woefully inadequate prior to the passage of this bill today.

CDC is an incredibly valued institution in America. Not only does it track and help respond to the spread of infectious diseases, but it is going to be critical in the efforts to defend this country from biological or other forms of attack.

The gentleman from Georgia (Mr. CHAMBLISS), the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER) and the gentlewoman from California (Ms. HARMAN) are to be congratulated for not only leading this effort, but ensuring that this bill contains those important provisions to enable and improve and to strengthen the quality of the work done by the CDC.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. CHAMBLISS).

Mr. CHAMBLISS. Mr. Speaker, as someone who spent several years working on issues of terrorism and advocating better preparedness and readiness to meet the unique challenges we face from terrorists who want to harm Americans, I am very pleased with the final agreement on this bill. It is clear that we continue to face very real threats from sophisticated terrorists who would use dangerous biological agents in their savage and relentless efforts to carry out acts of violence against Americans.

We must do all we can to keep dangerous biological agents out of the wrong hands. However, whether in response to a terrorist attack, accident or natural outbreak of infectious disease, our public health and disease surveillance system is not as robust and capable as it needs to be to meet the demands which will be placed on it in a severe public health emergency. We recognize that local officials and our doctors, police, firefighters and local emergency responders will be on the front lines of an attack, and we must make sure that they are trained and ready to respond.

This bill will address many of these concerns. A critically important provision taken from the bill authored by the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LINDER), the gentlewoman from California (Ms. HARMAN) and myself will provide $300 million per year and multi-year contracting authority to the Centers for Disease Control to upgrade and modernize their old and decaying facilities which are in desperate need of repair.

I am particularly pleased that we are taking concrete and far-reaching steps to address the particular issue of agroterrorism. I have felt for a long time that our agriculture infrastructure is very vulnerable to the threat of intentional damage and disease. As part of this bill, we bolster the Department of Agriculture's ability to detect animal and plant diseases and respond as needed to protect our food supply and American agriculture. We expand inspection activities and provide much-needed increases in agriculture biosecurity at colleges, universities and laboratories, including funding for a biocontainment laboratory at the University of Georgia.

Thanks to the strong leadership of the gentleman from Louisiana (Chairman TAUZIN), the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), Senator FRIST and Senator KENNEDY and their staffs, we worked in a bipartisan way to craft a bill that will go a long way toward making our country much better prepared to respond to biological attacks.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the passage of this bill.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time, and I would like to thank the chairman of the Committee on Energy and Commerce and the ranking member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce along with the conferees for a report that has taken us a very long way since September 11.

I served on the Homeland Security Task Force chaired by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. MENENDEZ), and we worked some hours after September 11 and our focus was in many areas. But I want to raise 2 points that were extremely important to the work that I did on local law enforcement.

We know the first responders were always very important to our communities, but we saw them at work after September 11 in a light that we had never seen before. I want to applaud the State and local preparedness allocation of $1.6 billion in particular, but I do want to emphasize the $520 million for State grants to enhance the preparedness of hospitals, including children's hospitals, clinics, health centers and primary care facilities for bioterrorism.

It was my emphasis in that committee to give the resources to our local clinics, our public health systems, such as the Harris County Health District in my community, which really would face the threat of terrorism in our local communities.

Some days after September 11, I met with over 40 members of our HAZMAT teams and those dealing with these issues around our Metroplex area, and they are the ones that need the support. As we speak, the City of Houston has a prepared plan to submit for 1 of these grants, and I will be encouraging them and working with them for that submission and for receiving such.

Finally, let me say as the ranking member on the INS Subcommittee on Immigration and Claims of the Committee on Judiciary, issues dealing with food entry on our borders is very important, and the provisions dealing with detaining food, providing the FDA with the authority to order detaining of food that may be suspicious, I applaud them for that. The increased inspections, where the FDA can require food importers to notify the FDA 30 days in advance of their arrival at the port of entry, is very important.

Lastly, I would say the prohibition on port shopping is crucial. We know that the Canadian border is one that we need to be concerned about. I would only encourage in my conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that we look to more technology at the border so we can do food x-ray inspection or inspection of the food as it comes across, because that certainly poses a very severe threat.

I ask my colleagues to support the conference report.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, in addition to the great work done by the Committee on Agriculture, the Committee on the Judiciary was a big contributor to this bill.

I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Crime, Terrorism and Homeland Security of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to thank the chairman of the Committee on Energy and Commerce for yielding me time and for his great work on this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, in the wake of the terrorist attacks of September 11 and the subsequent anthrax-laced mail, bioterrorism has become a very real threat to the American people. The Bioterrorism Preparedness Act of 2002 addresses such threats by improving the ability of the United States to respond to and prevent biological attacks.

This conference report requires coordination among agencies that regulate biological agents and toxins that pose a threat to human health. The Department of Health and Human Services, which has primary responsibility for public health issues, and the Department of Agriculture, which has primary responsibility for animal and plant health, are required to develop a coordinated strategy.

An important provision of this conference bill focuses on enhancing controls of dangerous biological agents and toxins by requiring registration of all persons who possess, use or transfer them. The legislation directs the Secretary of Health and Human Services and the Secretary of Agriculture to develop specific security measures for personnel and facilities that handle these dangerous substances. In addition, the conference report provides criminal penalties for possession of these agents without registration and for their transfer to unregistered persons or facilities.

Mr. Speaker, these are very important additions to the laws already put in place by the USA PATRIOT Act.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1½ minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I want to comment briefly on the Medicare provisions in the bill. One or more of my colleagues has expressed concern about the inclusion of some provisions in this legislation that are important. I want to make sure my colleagues understand these measures do not in any way adversely affect Medicare beneficiaries.

Several of us, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN), the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE), none of us would have signed off on legislation that would have done anything but that.

One of these provisions is critically important for Medicare beneficiaries. Under current law, beneficiaries who choose to enroll in a managed care plan become locked into that plan. They must wait until the annual open enrollment program to switch plans or go into Medicare fee for service.

This bill removes that restriction, delays it for 3 years. We want to continue to delay it. The best we could do in the compromise was a 3-year delay rather than a permanent removal, so that Medicare beneficiaries can leave managed care, are not locked into that plan, can leave any time during the year and not just in the annual open enrollment period.

We also include in the language in the conference report provisions to protect in terms of time, when the Medicare period was moved from July to September. CMS has agreed we have language in the conference report to make sure that is enough time for people to be able to change.

So those provisions on Medicare are solid, they are bipartisanly agreed to. Beneficiaries will benefit, not at all be hurt, but in fact benefit by that language.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 30 seconds simply to commend the gentleman for his statement.

Mr. Speaker, those provisions were agreed upon in a bipartisan fashion in the regulatory relief bill, which earlier passed this House, and I believe are in the interests of the beneficiaries of the Medicare system. I thank the gentleman for his similar conclusion. They were signed off on by all the committees of jurisdiction as well.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PITTS) for a colloquy.

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, I rise also in support of the bioterrorism conference report, and since PDUFA is included in this bill, I would like to enter into a colloquy with the chairman.

Mr. Chairman, as you know, I am very interested in ensuring timely access to plasma therapies for the thousands of people who rely on these lifesaving medicines. The plasma industry pays the fees authorized under PDUFA, yet there are no performance goals associated with plasma lot release, which must occur prior to these products being released by the FDA. Longer lot release times mean that the therapies do not get to patients in a timely manner.

I strongly believe that the FDA should work with the plasma industry to assure greater predictability in lot release and to lessen the amount of time required for lot release.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman to respond.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PITTS. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, first, let me acknowledge the hard work the gentleman has already put forth on this issue. I agree with the gentleman, frankly, and applaud his efforts.

Plasma lot release times have varied greatly over the last few years. Predictability is important. I think the industry and FDA should sit down and begin a dialogue which will lead to greater cooperation and predictability in lot release, and I intend to help the gentleman make sure that dialogue occurs.

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I reserve my time.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. LUCAS), a member of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. LUCAS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, 8 months ago our perspective on the potential threats to our borders changed forever as we saw the true capacity of evil on our defenseless citizens. Three days ago we were reminded that that threat was still very real when the Vice President, Mr. CHENEY, said the question of another terrorist attack was not if, but when.

Today we in the House take an important step in preventing important attacks by passing this conference committee report. In November of last year I introduced legislation that addressed many of the issues that had been included in title III of the conference report before us today.

Included in both my bill and today's conference report are an increased presence of animal, plant and food and safety inspectors at the ports of entry. The APHIS and FSIS will develop strategies to prevent future incidents where animal and plant diseases are used by terrorists to attack U.S. citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support this conference report. I thank the chairman and ranking member for their diligent efforts.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. SCHIFF).

Mr. SCHIFF. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Public Health Security and Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Act conference report. It has been nearly 8 months since the deadly anthrax attacks, and authorities still have not determined who is responsible. However, it appears very likely that the highly concentrated form of anthrax did not originate from overseas, but rather may have come from an American laboratory.

In addition to unsecured anthrax, we have other challenges involving national, State and local health care workers and first responders, to make sure they are equipped with the tools they need to fight bioterrorism threats, and we also have food security issues to consider, as well as a potentially vulnerable water supply.

Today we are taking a major step forward in addressing some of these issues. In particular I am pleased that the bill contains provisions similar to those included in legislation that I introduced last fall with Senator FEINSTEIN.

Our bill, the Deadly Biological Control Act, will require that the Department of Health and Human Services maintain and regularly update a list of deadly biological agents, viruses and bacteria that poses severe threat to public health and safety. It requires every laboratory that possesses any of these select agents to be government-certified after proving that they will be used strictly for legitimate research purposes and that sufficient measures are in place to safely handle and dispose of those agents while ensuring protection against unlawful access.

□ 1300

Finally, lab employees would have to register with the Department of Health and Human Services and pass through a criminal background check. These provisions are critical because under current law, laboratories that acquired anthrax and other deadly agents prior to 1997 were not required to register with the government unless they were shipping the agent to another lab, as a result of the thousands of laboratories nationwide which stock deadly biological agents, viruses, and bacteria without uniform security standards or proper Federal oversight. Under these lax security conditions, a rogue employee or outside terrorist group could easily gain access to some of the most dangerous pathogens on Earth.

I applaud the leadership of the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) and the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) as they work with the Senate conferees to bring this bill to the floor, and I urge my colleagues to support this important conference report.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA).

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report and for the Public Health Security and Bioterrorism Preparedness and Response Act. I indeed thank the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), the chairman of the committee, and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) for their fine work and for the members and the staff of both committees. This is a terrific conference report, it is strong, and it is bipartisan, and it is critically important to our Nation as we continue to boost security in our preparedness against terrorism.

The conference report will improve the public health infrastructure at the national, State, and local levels to address growing threats of bioterrorism. The legislation provides additional resources to prepare us for bioterrorist threats or other public health emergencies.

I am particularly pleased that this legislation will boost programs and provide critical resources for many local communities who were on the front lines in the hours and the days following September 11, and the subsequent anthrax attacks. These brave men and women deserve our fullest commitment.

I look to my own district in Montgomery County, Maryland. Our first responders were there at the Pentagon on that terrible morning of September 11, and the Federal scientists at the National Institutes of Health and the Food and Drug Administration are working harder than ever to produce new treatments and vaccines for anthrax, among other bioterror agents.

The conference report we are considering today ensures emergency readiness and demonstrates a significant Federal commitment to local jurisdictions who ensure the safety and health of the American people.

In addition, the conference report improves protection of our water supply and increases the protection of our Nation's food supply. The Food and Drug Administration, headquartered in my district, will have an increased number of food inspectors to ensure our food is safe from bioterrorists.

Mr. Speaker, the conference report we are considering deserves our fullest support.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. WYNN), a member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

Mr. WYNN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report to H.R. 3448, the Bioterrorism Preparedness Act.

Let me take a moment and congratulate and thank our committee chairman, the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), for his outstanding work; as well as our own ranking member, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL), for his work; the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS); and my good friend and subcommittee ranking member, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN). They have done good work in bringing this bill to the floor in the true spirit of bipartisanship.

I am particularly pleased because this bill provides $1.6 billion for grants to States and local governments, the first responders of our frontline of defense, for public and private health care facilities to improve planning and preparedness activities. It will enhance laboratory capacity, educating and training for health care personnel, and develop new drugs, therapies and vaccines, all a very important task for our homeland security.

This funding is particularly critical to upgrade our local health infrastructure to respond to a bioterrorism attack. I represent suburban communities just outside of Washington, D.C. After September 11, we realized how much we were on the front line. For instance, in my district in Montgomery County, Maryland, we require much-needed assistance to improve disease surveillance and also to train our local personnel, as well as to restore and improve our hospital preparedness, so this is very important to us.

The measure also provides $1.5 billion of funding to expand the current stockpiles of medicines and vaccines such as smallpox. That is what people are concerned about in the area of bioterrorism, and the bill responds.

Finally, the bill provides $300 million in critically important funding to upgrade and expand the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention facilities. It will allow, again, the training of personnel, particularly critical as we enter this new age; facilities improvement for combating bioterrorism in terms of upgrading the security of our labs and also, again, expanding disease surveillance.

Mr. Speaker, this is an excellent bill. Again I commend our leadership on both sides of the aisle for putting it together, and I urge my colleagues to support the conference report.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time for closing.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remainder of the time.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. DINGELL) and the staffs of all of the Members that were involved for their excellent work on this very complicated bill.

All of us are clearly happy with the legislation and disappointed with the legislation. I would like to highlight again as we close in the last couple of minutes a couple of highlights of that. I am particularly happy with the antibiotic resistance language in this bill. It is really the first time Congress, and I give credit to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN) and really everybody involved, it is the first time Congress has addressed this issue as seriously as we have on this. It is a serious problem, with drugs as common as penicillin, a drug that we all know, now is not as effective an antibiotic as it was 20 years ago. We are seeing a whole host of antibiotics not as effective as they were. This bill is the first step.

What we have left undone is legislation that we will continue to come to this committee on and hope to work with the gentleman from Louisiana on where half the antibiotics in this country are used for nonmedicinal, nontherapeutic purposes in animals, not to cure sick animals, but to help animals grow faster and to help animals actually not get disease because of the way we pack these animals together in pens that are too small. We are going to need to make some changes there, and I hope this Congress will seriously take that issue up.

I think on food safety, while we have done a reasonably good job on this bill, I hope that we can look more seriously at country-of-origin labeling and some other issues.

I am pleased with post-market surveillance of prescription drugs, as we have pushed through, with PDUFA in speeding up, accelerating the process of approval of prescription drugs, a very good thing to get them on the market more quickly so that consumers can benefit from them, patients can benefit from them. We also have done something in this bill we had not done before, and that is fund post-market surveillance so that when those drugs get on the market more quickly than they have in the past, if there are problems, the FDA is looking much more closely as these drugs are used in a huge part of the population rather than just clinical trials so that we, in fact, can detect much more quickly than before if there is damage done to people with the vast increase in the use of these drugs, with direct consumer advertising and all that.

This legislation also has good provisions with something called DDMAC, which is Division of Drug Market Advertising and Communications at FDA. It is a review of marketing materials. As the drug companies, more and more, are spending huge numbers of dollars marketing their drugs, I think that will be a particularly positive direction.

I am disappointed, and I hope that we can move in a positive way on the pediatric rule so that as we passed legislation last year on the pediatric exclusivity, to give the drug companies 6 months more patent time, if you will, an extension of their patent so that they would test their drugs on children, test these prescription drugs on children that, in fact, we will codify the pediatric rule at some point so that drug testing will be done immediately on children as it is being done on adults during the clinical trials.

So those are some things I hope we can look for. We have done a good job on this bill with PDUFA; we have done a good job on this bill overall with bioterrorism; we have done a good job with food safety and antibiotic resistance. There is a lot more to do on antibiotic resistance; there is a lot more to do with food safety; there is a lot more to do with preserving safety and efficacy of prescription drugs on the market as we get them on the market more quickly.

So I would close by expressing my gratitude to the conference committee and by imploring the chairman of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), so that we can move forward on some of these other issues during the next few months.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remaining time.

Let me first thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) for his kind comments and for the extraordinary work that he and other colleagues on the other side of the aisle have provided us in producing, I think, an excellent bill from conference.

Let me first clarify something. In debate earlier, I think I heard the suggestion that the EPA would be required in the bill to review the vulnerability assessments submitted to it under title IV. I want to be very clear about this. Nothing in this conference report contains that requirement. The report simply makes that discretionary with the EPA. The reports are submitted to EPA, and they are not required to review them. It is a discretionary matter with EPA.

Mr. Speaker, let me first make a point that I think is important. This bill comes up at an extraordinary time in our Nation's history. It comes up in a week when partisanship reared its ugly head as we discussed issues involving 9–11 over the last several weeks. But I want to make something very clear. This bill represents the best of bipartisanship. This bill, shepherded through by the staff, by Reid Stuntz on the Democratic side and Mr. Dave Marventano on our side and the incredible work of the staffs on all three committees, the Committee on Agriculture and the Committee on the Judiciary, has produced a huge bipartisan response to the enemies of our country who think they can threaten us with biological agents or threaten us with attacks upon our food or water supplies and make this country more and more vulnerable.

There was a time before 9–11 when we did not think these thoughts, when we did not have to do what this bill requires. But 9–11 taught, I think, all of us some lessons; and I think it also demonstrated something to the world and to our enemies around the world, that this country is full of heroes. There are heroes who work in our own forces who are in Special Forces right now in Afghanistan and parts of the world we may not even read about who are defending us right now against al Qaeda and the folks around the world who would indeed threaten our security here at home. There are heroes who work in much more quiet and obscure places, in little hospitals, in the CDC, and they work at a border station where they inspect food and drugs coming into this country. They may be members of an ambulance team. They may be members of a first response team. But those heroes in America who demonstrated on 9–11 just how this country can respond when we need to are going to be better armed today with $4.6 billion of new tools.

This is an incredibly important bill. It is a statement, bipartisan statement here in America that we are ready to defend this country, and we are ready to make sure our heroes, both abroad and at home, are equipped with all of the tools they need to make us safer and more secure.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, when the Joint Statement of Managers was filed last night, it inadvertently omitted some important language concerning a Performance Goals Letter for the authorization of the Prescription Drug User Fee Act (PDUFA).

Chairman TAUZIN and Ranking Minority Member DINGELL hereby submit the following additional statement which they view as authoritative legislative history on the provision in question.

PERFORMANCE GOALS LETTER

Authorization of PDUFA is accompanied by a letter entitled "PDUFA Reauthorization Performance Goals and Procedures." The goals letter is unique to PDUFA. It does not have force of law, but nonetheless the Agency views it as a statement of their obligations, and they issue a yearly report on their performance in meeting the goals specified in the letter.

Title IX of the goals letter is entitled "Independent Consultants for Biotechnology Clinical Trial Protocols." Contained in this title, as negotiated by the agency, is a paragraph "D. Denial of Requests." As forwarded to the Congress, this paragraph previously read: "except in the most unusual circumstances (for example, it is clearly premature) FDA will honor the request and engage the services of an indep4endent consultant, of FDA's choosing, as soon as practicable. If the Agency denies the request, it will provide a written rationale to the requester within 14 days of receipt." Upon agreement of the Conferees, this paragraph shall now read "D. Denial of Requests: FDA will grant the request unless the Agency determines that engagement of an expert consultant would not serve a useful purpose (for example, it is clearly premature). FDA will engage the services of an independent consultant, of FDA's choosing, as soon as practicable. If the Agency denies the request, it will provide a written rationale to the requester within 14 days of receipt."

The requirement of the Agency to provide a written rationale for the refusal to engage an independent consultant is not intended to burden the Agency but rather to assist the applicant in understanding the reason for Agency action.

The goals letter also, for the first time, includes a title on "pre- and Peri-NDA/BLA Risk Management Plan Activities" (Title VIII). The Managers view this title as a strong addition to the PDUFA regimen. Under this title, user fee monies will be available for postmarket surveillance for up to three years for drug and biological products. The Managers strongly support this Title, and upon agreement of the Managers, the title will now include the following additional language at the end Section D of Title VIII: "FDA will allocate $76,319,879 in user fees over 5 years to the activities covered in this section. FDA will track the specific amounts of user fees spent on these activities and will include in its annual report to Congress an accounting of this spending."

W.J. "BILLY" TAUZIN,
Chairman.

Mr. BALDACCI. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that we will be passing legislation today to authorize vital funding for our state and local public health systems. Recognizing the difficulties facing our state and local governments and health facilities following the unprecedented attacks on our country, it's clear that we must greatly expand the resources of our health systems.

Mr. Speaker, immediately following the first Anthrax attacks, I met with public health officials from my State, and with representatives of community health provider systems. What I learned from this discussion is that our local and state health infrastructure and information systems is woefully unprepared to deal with the level of biomedical, chemical and radiological threats for which we clearly now must be prepared.

I am very concerned about the speed of which funds have been distributed to our state and local governments in order to update their health systems to deal with future attacks.

Today with passage of the Bioterrorism bill we will be making a commitment to our states, local governments and health facilities. We will provide significant assistance to their efforts to protect the health of our citizens. Funds will be translated into improvements in preparedness planning, surveillance, lab and hospital capacity and information and communication technology specific to meet the needs of our state and local health systems.

States will receive for bioterror-related activities $1.6 billion in grants in fiscal year 2003, and local hospitals will receive $520 to prepare for medical emergencies, with additional funds authorized at such sums as necessary for fiscal year 2004 through fiscal year 2006. These funds are on top of those already appropriated and distributed for the current fiscal year of over $1 billion.

I would add that as much as I appreciate these specific funds for bioterror threats, I believe other important issues facing our state and local governments should be addressed. In particular, I support forward funding of fiscal year 2003 monies the President has identified for First Responders in our districts and states. Many of those charged in our state and local governments for maintaining public safety are frustrated with the lack of funding for first responder needs. To date, no funds for local first responders has been sent to our states. I hope that significant funds for First Responders become available for distribution as soon as possible. While the Supplemental legislation which we will consider later today does provide $175 million for first responders, much more is needed to cover costs our local and state governments have incurred and will soon incur to put necessary safety and preparedness plans in place.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support today's bioterrorism conference report and urge my colleagues to support this measure to set aside vital funds to our state and local governments and hospitals.

Mr. GREEN of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of this Bioterrorism Conference Report.

I commend our chairman and ranking member, Mr. TAUZIN and Mr. DINGELL, for their hard work in developing this consensus legislation. This bill represents the kind of common-sense, worthwhile policy that can be produced when the two parties work together.

This bill includes a number of important provisions that will go a long way to improve our nation's ability to prevent and respond to a bioterrorist attack. With the formula grants in this bill, states will be able to better develop their public health infrastructure, so that they can recognize and contain bioterrist outbreaks.

The legislation creates a stockpile of drugs and vaccines, so we are able to quickly treat individuals who are affected. And it improves food safety inspection at our nation's borders to protect our food supply and makes sure that our water supply is not vulnerable to terrorist attack.

This legislation also reauthorizes and improves upon the Prescription Drug User Fee Act, which ensures that life-saving medications make it through the FDA approval process as quickly as possible.

Once again, I thank my colleagues for their hard work on this legislation.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, last Thursday, three men were arrested in Easton, Connecticut after being seen videotaping a water reservoir and filtration plant. The good news: A vigilant employee alerted local police. City and state emergency response teams were mobilized, the FBI was brought in, and the water was tested and found to be safe. The bad news: Before being seen, those three men got past security fences and "No Trespassing" signs, and could have destroyed or contaminated facilities supplying drinking water to 238,000 people in southeastern Connecticut.

It appears to have been an innocent mistake, a misguided desire to capture Connecticut's beautiful scenery from the wrong vantage point. But the incident demonstrates the vulnerability of critical water systems to biological terrorism.

This conference report begins to address protection of water supplies by directing updated threat assessments, vulnerability assessments and incorporation of both into current emergency response plans.

The current frustratingly vague string of alerts about potential terrorist acts cannot obscure one hard truth evident even before September 11: It is not a question of whether but only when, where and at what magnitude the United States will be attacked using biological, chemical, radiological or even nuclear weapons. To meet that threat, pharmaceutical stockpiles need to be augmented, disease surveillance should be strengthened, and public health capacities far better integrated into emergency response plans.

This bill is costly. More will be needed in the years to come. But the costs of an uncoordinated, ineffective response to bioterrorism will be paid in human lives, civil disorder, loss of civil liberties and economic disruption that could undermine both national security and national sovereignty.

If there is a ray of hope in the threat of bioterrorism it lies in this irony: improving the public health infrastructure against a man-made biological assault today better prepares us to face natural disease outbreaks every day. Just as biotechnologies can be used to produce both life-saving therapies and deadly pathogens, publics health capabilities are likewise "dual use," enhancing our protection against smallpox attack by a terrorist and an influenza pandemic produced by Mother Nature.

Mr. SHIMKUS. Mr. Speaker, I submit for the RECORD the following on Public Health Security and Bioterrorism Response Act conference.

FOOD AUTHORITIES OF BIOTERRORISM BILL

Title III of the bioterrorism bill responds to legislative proposals presented to Congress by the Department of Health and Human Services. We worked closely with Secretary Thompson and personnel of the Food and Drug Administration to craft the most extensive expansion of the food related enforcement authorities in the history of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (FFDCA). New authorities provide for expanded records access and maintenance, administrative detention of foods, registration of food facilities and several other provisions that are especially focused on assuring effective oversight of food imports. These new authorities strike a balance by adding significantly to the already strong enforcement authorities of the FDA, while assuring that the authorities will be used only for their intended purposes. I believe that my colleagues will be pleased with how this balance was struck to protect the American consumer and permit a robust competitive food system to provide consumers a wide variety of affordable foods.

ADMINISTRATIVE DETENTION: SECTION 303 OF THE TITLE

Amendment to Section 304 of the FFDCA provides the Secretary with limited authority to detain administratively an article of food where the FDA has "credible evidence or information indicating that such article presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death." "Credible evidence or information" requires that the FDA have specific evidence or information that it believes to be reliable and probative. The "serious adverse health consequences" standard, which is used consistently in Title III of this Act, relates to the situation in which there is a reasonable probability that the use of, or exposure to, a violative product will cause serious adverse health consequences or death. This standard corresponds to existing FDA guidance under section 7.3 of Title 21 of the Code of Federal Regulations.

A detention order must be approved by a senior FDA official (district director for the district in which the food to be detained is located or a more senior official). In general, the Secretary should expedite the processing of seizure or injunction actions with regard to food that has been detained. The Secretary is required to provide by regulation for the expedition of such actions in the case of perishable food, such as fresh produce and seafood.

Once a detention order is issued, the Secretary must insure that the detained article of food is kept in a secure facility under conditions commercially appropriate for the food to ensure that the safety and quality of the food is maintained during the detention.

Any person who would be entitled to claim the article of food if the food were seized may appeal a detention order to the Secretary. If an appeal is filed, the Secretary must provide an opportunity for an informal hearing which would be conducted in accordance with the procedures set forth in Part 16 of Title 21 of the Code of Federal Regulations. The Secretary has five days to confirm, modify or terminate the detention order; failure of the Secretary to provide for an informal hearing or to act on the appeal within five days of an appeal automatically terminates the detention order. The Secretary may not thereafter re-institute the terminated detention order.

This section also permits the Secretary to request that the Secretary of Treasury hold food offered for import at a port of entry for a period not to exceed 24 hours if the FDA is unable to inspect, examine, or investigate the food when it is offered for import and the Secretary has "credible evidence or information" indicating that the article of food "presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences or death to humans or animals." The purpose of the temporary hold is to permit the FDA to inspect, examine or investigate the article of food. Amendments to Section 801 of the FFDCA provide for prior notice of shipments of imported food; consequently, the temporary hold authority should not be used routinely.

DEBARMENT: SECTION 304 OF THE TITLE

Amendment to Section 306 of the FFDCA would provide broad authority for debarment of persons from food importation so that FDA may protect against persons who might willfully sell harmful foods. Debarment may be based on a felony conviction relating to the importation of food into the United States or upon a person engaging in a pattern of importing adulterated food that presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences. The conferees intend for this authority to be exercised reservedly to assure that only "bad actors" are the subject of debarment actions. The courts have defined a pattern of proscribed conduct as three or more separate instances of a similar character. Thus, three violative lots of a common shipment would be of a similar character, but not constitute a pattern because they were effectively shipped at the same time and afforded no notice to the importer. The events that make up the pattern must be of a sufficiently similar nature and time sequence to provide the innocent importer effective notice and opportunity to undertake precautionary procedures to guard against reoccurrence. The managers intend for this debarment authority ordinarily to be exercised based on felony convictions. In the absence of a felony conviction, permissive debarment authority should be exercised only pending felony prosecution.

REGISTRATION: SECTION 305 OF THE TITLE

A new Section 415 of the FFDCA would provide require that the Secretary implement an expansive program of registration of facilities engaged in manufacture, processing, packing or holding food for human consumption to assist the Secretary in promptly contacting management of concerned food facilities in the event of a threat to food safety. The registration is to include information regarding the name and address of the facility, as well as all trade names under which the facility conducts business. Also, if the effectiveness of the registration system would be significantly enhanced without undue burden, the Secretary may require by guidance that the general food category of products of the facility be specified. Within 18 months of enactment the Secretary is required to promulgate implementing regulations, which shall specify compliance timeframes and other requirements. The conferees fully expect FDA to complete the rulemaking in the 18 months provided.

The bill would require the Secretary to promptly notify each registrant of their registration number. The conferees intend for the Secretary to provide for electronic data submission and use of an electronic database to maintain a current listing of registered facilities. The listing of registered facilities is to be held strictly confidential. Since failure to register would be a violation of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, prompt issuance of registration numbers under this system is imperative.

The bill would authorize the Secretary to broadly impose the registration requirement to domestic facilities engaged in processing or distributing food for human consumption as the Secretary deems necessary. However, the registration requirement would not authorize registration of farming facilities (including facilities attendant to harvesting of food crops), restaurants or other retail food establishments (including facilities attendant to their operations, which are under the same ownership or management) or most fishing vessels. In addition, the Secretary would be authorized to require registration of a foreign facility, but only if food from such facility is exported to the United States without further processing or packaging outside the U.S. If an article of food that is offered for import is from a foreign facility for which registration has not been submitted, the article would be held at the port of entry until registration is submitted.

The conferees intend for the Secretary to exercise his discretion in the development and implementation of registration regulations to ensure that registration requirements are neither burdensome nor disruptive of the smooth flow of commerce.

MAINTENANCE AND INSPECTION OF RECORDS: SECTION 306 OF THE TITLE

A new Section 414 of the FFDCA would authorize FDA to have access to and to copy certain records in the possession of persons involved in the production and distribution of food. Access to records would occur only if the Secretary has a reasonable belief that an article of food is adulterated and presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences. The "reasonable belief" standard is intended to make clear that the Secretary must have evidence or information in hand that would cause a reasonable person to conclude that the food is both adulterated and presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences. Once the standard is met, the Secretary would have authority to gain access to and copy only those records needed to assist the Secretary in determining whether the food is adulterated and presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences.

Records that would be subject to inspection under this authority relate to the manufacture, processing, packing, distribution, receipt, holding, or importation of the food being investigated, regardless of the format or location of the record. This records access would not extend to the most commercially sensitive or confidential records of the record keeper, including recipes (including formulation and preparation or processing techniques), financial data, pricing data, personnel data, research data, or sales data (other than shipment data regarding sales). Clearly, the authority would not permit access to any records regarding employees, research or customers (other than shipment data), nor would it permit access to information such as correspondence or marketing plans.

This new records access authority is responsive to a request of the Department so that investigation may be made of possible threats to the public health, but strictly limited to avoid potential abuse of confidential business information. The managers intend for limitations on records access to be strictly observed. A determination that there is reasonable belief that a food is adulterated and presents a threat of serious adverse health consequences should be made under the direct supervision of senior officials of the FDA.

In addition, the Secretary would be required to take appropriate measures, presumably through rulemaking and assuredly with the benefit of comments from record keepers, to prevent the unauthorized disclosure of trade secret or confidential information obtained by the Secretary. The managers envision procedures whereby no agency personnel will have access to records without a specific need for such access, possession of all copies of records will be strictly controlled, and detailed records regarding all handling and access to these records will be kept. Shortcomings in such procedures or lapses in adherence to them should be viewed as a presumption of unlawful release of the records. Such record protections are to be in place prior to FDA exercising new records access authority.

A conforming amendment to Section 704 of the FFDCA is also included in this section. This conforming amendment would provide the Secretary no greater access to records (either in circumstances during which records access is permitted, the types of records that may be accessed, or protections afforded records that are obtained) than would be authorized under new Section 414.

PRIOR NOTICE: SECTION 307 OF THE TITLE

Amendment to Section 801 of the FFDCA would require that the Secretary promulgate regulations for submission of notice prior to the importation of any food to enable the Secretary to provide for inspection of food imports at ports of entry. The conferees intend for the Secretary to expeditiously promulgate the required regulations so that efficiency of food import inspections may be improved. The Secretary would be required to consult with the Secretary of the Treasury in promulgation of prior notice regulations to assure that smooth coordination is achieved between FDA and U.S. Customs. The managers intended for the Secretary to exercise discretion to ensure that neither the requirements of the notice nor the timing of prior notice be more burdensome than necessary to provide for the availability of food import inspectional personnel. The Secretary should exercise discretion in promulgating and implementing these rules to assure that prior notice requirements never become a barrier to the smooth flow of commerce. If an article of food were offered for import without providing the required prior notice, the article of food would be held at the port of entry until the Secretary has determined that notice is complete, but it would not be held longer than the unelapsed period of prior notice unless there is other basis for doing so. If the Secretary fails to promulgate prior notice regulations within 18 months of enactment, the bill specifies the information to be provided in the notice and that notice must be provided no less than 8 hours, and no more than 5 days, prior to offering the article of food for import. The conferees fully expect FDA to complete the rulemaking within the 18 months provided.

MARKING REFUSED ARTICLES: SECTION 308 OF THE TITLE

Another amendment to Section 801 of the FFDCA would authorize the Secretary to require that the outermost container of a shipment of certain foods that have been refused admission into the U.S. be marked "UNITED STATES: REFUSED ENTRY". The purpose of such a marking would be to alert inspectional personnel at the port of entry of a second attempt to import the refused food shipment. Accordingly, the conferees intend for this authority to be exercised in cases where there is reason to believe that the shipment may be offered for import at another U.S. port of entry. The conferees do not intend for this authority to be used to require markings that are unlikely to be observed at import inspection or that may inhibit the lawful marketing of a product in another country. The Secretary is expected to consult with the Secretary of Treasury regarding development of regulations to implement this provision.

Mr. COMBEST. Mr. Speaker, I would first like to commend Chairman TAUZIN, ranking Member DINGELL and all of the other conferees and their staffs for their hard work on this important legislation. This conference report represents a concerted effort by the Congress, the Bush Administration and numerous constituent groups coming together to tackle, head-on the threat of bioterrorism in the United States.

The attacks of September 11, and the subsequent mailing of Anthrax contaminated mail to the capitol, media outlets, and the devastating release of this deadly organism in postal facilities, led all Americans to reconsider the fundamentals. Members of Congress naturally turned to exploring ways that the public can be protected from potential terrorist attacks.

As Chairman of the Agriculture committee, my responsibility has been to evaluate and safeguard our nation's food supply. The Congress, working with the Executive branch, has a responsibility to farmers, ranchers, processors, retailers, and consumers to ensure appropriate steps are being taken to maintain confidence in our food supply.

Fortunately, the U.S. Department of Agriculture has been in the biosecurity business for a long time. The Animal Plant Health Inspection Service (APHIS) has its origins in the 19th century. The Food Safety Inspection Service (FSIS) started operations at the beginning of the 20th century.

Likewise, other sectors of our economy have recognized the fact that they have had to make wholesale changes in how they function. In some cases, organizations are in the process of being completely retooled or even created out of whole cloth. Thankfully, with regards to the Department of Agriculture, we already have broad legal authorities, plentiful resources, and trained personnel already in place to address the threats of the 21st century.

Nearly 5,000 APHIS employees securing our border from the importation of animal and plant diseases and 7,600 FSIS inspectors in every meat and poultry plant in America are already working to protect our food production system. Obviously, the events of September 11 have caused these and other agencies of USDA to increase their vigilance, but we are very fortunate to have them. Not unlike our firefighters and police, they do a difficult job every day; a job we appreciate even more during these troubled times.

With this legislation, additional resources will be authorized for the USDA to modernize its Agricultural Research Service laboratory facilities. Likewise, funding is authorized for the USDA to provide grants to agricultural colleges and universities to review their security needs. These grants, coupled with security upgrade grant authority included as part of the recently passed Farm Security and Rural Investment Act of 2002 will strengthen our biosecurity and food safety research capabilities for years to come.

Likewise, authority is granted to expand on USDA's biosecurity research programs, both in the Agricultural Research Service, and those programs involving colleges and universities throughout United States.

This conference report strengthens USDA's regulatory efforts with regard to food safety, and animal and plant health. Specifically, the conference report recognizes the inadequacy of current USDA authorities with regard to the regulation of biological agents and toxins that present a severe threat to plant or animal health, and the products of plants and animals. Based on this recognition, the conference report adopts provisions that would grant nearly identical authorities to the USDA as those granted to the Department of Health and Human Services for the regulation of possession, use or transfer of listed biological agents and toxins.

Mr. Speaker, I would close by once again thanking all of the conferees who have worked on this legislation. Likewise, I would like to thank the employees of the Department of Agriculture who worked very closely with my staff in hammering out the details of this legislation. Specifically, I would like to mention the outstanding efforts of Dr. Curt Mann and Deb Atwood from the Office of the Secretary, Molly Phillips from the Office of Congressional Relations, Pilar Ruttenberg and Sheila Novak from the Office of General Counsel, Courtney Billet, Dr. Andrea Morgan and Mr. Chuck Schwalbe from the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, and Christy Slamowitz from the Office of the Inspector General.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, when the Joint Statement of Managers was filed last night, it inadvertently omitted some important language concerning a Performance Goals Letter for the authorization of the Prescription Drug User Fee Act (PDUFA).

Chairman TAUZIN and Ranking Minority Member DINGELL hereby submit the following additional statement which they view as authoritative legislative history on the provision in question.

PERFORMANCE GOALS LETTER

Authorization of PDUFA is accompanied by a letter entitled "PDUFA Reauthorization Performance Goals and Procedures." The goals letter is unique to PDUFA. It does not have force of law, but nonetheless the Agency views it as a statement of their obligations, and they issue a yearly report on their performance in meeting the goals specified in the letter.

Title IX of the goals letter is entitled "Independent Consultants for Biotechnology Clinical Trial Protocols." Contained in this title, as negotiated by the agency, is a paragraph "D. Denial of Requests." As forwarded to the Congress, this paragraph previously read: "Except in the most unusual circumstances (for example, it is clearly premature) FDA will honor the request and engage the services of an independent consultant, of FDA's choosing, as soon as practicable. If the Agency denies the request, it will provide a written rationale to the requester within 14 days of receipt." Upon agreement of the Conferees, this paragraph shall now read "D. Denial of Requests: FDA will grant the request unless the Agency determines that engagement of an expert consultant would not serve a useful purpose (for example, it is clearly premature). FDA will engage the services of an independent consultant, of FDA's choosing, as soon as practicable. If the Agency denies the request, it will provide a written rationale to the requester within 14 days of receipt."

The requirement of the Agency to provide a written rationale for the refusal to engage an independent consultant is not intended to burden the Agency but rather to assist the applicant in understanding the reason for Agency action.

The goals letter also, for the first time, includes a title on "Pre- and Peri-NDA/BLA Risk Management Plan Activities" (Title VIII). The Managers view this title as a strong addition to the PDUFA regimen. Under this title, user fee monies will be available for postmarket surveillance for up to three years for drug and biological products. The Managers strongly support this Title, and upon agreement of the Managers, the title will not include the following additional language at the end Section D of Title VIII: "FDA will allocate $76,319,879 in user fees over 5 years to the activities covered in this section. FDA will track the specific amounts of user fees spent on these activities and will include in its annual report to Congress an accounting of this spending."

JOHN D. DINGELL,
Ranking Member.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I commend this conference report to the House, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, this 15-minute vote on agreeing to the conference report will be followed by two 5-minute votes on motions to suspend the rules that were debated yesterday.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 425, nays 1, not voting 8, as follows:

So the conference report was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

Stated for:

Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 189 I was unavoidably detained and unable to record my vote. Had I been able, I would have voted "yea."

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair will now put the question on motions to suspend the rules on which further proceedings were postponed on Tuesday, May 21, in the order in which that motion was entertained.

Votes will be taken in the following order:

H.R. 3717, by the yeas and nays;

H. Res. 424, by the yeas and nays.

The Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the time for each of these two votes.

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE REFORM ACT OF 2002

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The unfinished business is the question of suspending the rules and passing the bill, H.R. 3717, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. OXLEY) that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 3717, as amended, on which the yeas and nays are ordered.

□ 1354

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INTENTION TO APPOINT CONFEREES ON H.R. 4, ENERGY POLICY ACT OF 2002

(Mr. TAUZIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, the Speaker's office has authorized me to announce that it is the Speaker's intention to appoint House conferees to the conference of the disagreement between the House and the Senate on H.R. 4, the House energy bill, and the former S. 517, the Senate version of the same bill. Upon our return from the Memorial Day recess those conferees will be appointed.

Work in preparation for the conference is proceeding at a steady pace, and the House will be prepared to meet the Senate in the conference upon our return from the Memorial Day recess.

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 1577

Mr. SANDLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have my name removed as a cosponsor of H.R. 1577.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

CUSTOMS BORDER SECURITY ACT OF 2001

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY). Pursuant to House Resolution 426 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H.R. 3129.

The Chair designates the gentleman from New York (Mr. SWEENEY) as chairman of the Committee of the Whole, and requests the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LAHOOD) to assume the chair temporarily.

□ 1355

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3129) to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 2002 and 2003 for the United States Customs Service for antiterrorism, drug interdiction, and other operations, for the Office of the United States Trade Representative, for the United States International Trade Commission, and for other purposes, with Mr. LAHOOD (Chairman pro tempore) in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS).

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

This piece of legislation which was up before us some time ago on the suspension calendar is modest but extremely important. Obviously following September 11, and the creation of the homeland security structure, more and more people in positions of responsibility have begun to realize that one of the ways we can assure the security of Americans is to provide a more seamless control of our borders.

Historically, Customs officials have had an important, significant role to play normally in the area of commercial intercourse or commerce.

To the degree that they are going to be asked to integrate with other border enforcement structures such as security and the like, this bill becomes one of the assisting tools in making that happen. There are other uses looking at antidrug smuggling, antiterrorist, antichild pornography provisions, and in preparing this bill to come to the floor under a rule, since it did not get the two-thirds required on suspension, notwithstanding the fact it got a significant majority vote, the members of the majority looked at the bill and said are there any areas of this bill that we would still like to retain but that probably are far less essential today than they were when the committee moved on this bill some months ago?

Clearly, one of the obvious areas is an attempt to adjust what has been described as an inappropriate or unfair compensation structure for Customs officials at particular locales. Notwithstanding the fact that we believe those adjustments are overdue and need to be made, we offered to the Committee on Rules, and the Committee on Rules accepted, the willingness to delete those provisions which appeared to be controversial.

The labor union that represents Customs workers is not opposed to the bill in its current form, as they said in their letter, as long as this provision does not come back in.

□ 1400

I can assure anyone that if we make a change, our goal is not to change it today and then rechange it tomorrow. The commitment is to make the change now, because the other items in the bill are far more important to move forward and make into law than a debate that has been going on for some time, and I am quite sure will go on for an additional time.

Therefore, this bill is before us today in a form that should not illicit significant opposition, but that we would be very desirous of a significant bipartisan vote to let the American people know that in making sure that our borders are safe and protected, that the Customs Service is in the forefront of moving to the new structure to secure homeland security. This particular bill goes a long way toward assisting in that effort.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Let me join with the chairman in support of those parts of the bill that he spoke about and to indicate that our substitute merely tries to perfect two provisions.

The first provision deals with the question of immunity. I want to say that our customs officials and agencies and employees are our first line of defense against terrorism. They do a fantastic job. But under this particular bill they are granted immunity for their conduct when they perform searches, and personal searches, if indeed the search was made in good faith.

Now, under the Constitution, the standard for liability is not really whether or not there has been good faith but whether or not it has been reasonable, and that is the proper test that we have to use. This is the constitutional test we have to use. And there is no evidence that blanket immunity by the Federal Government and by the customs agency, even though the search may have been performed in good faith, should leave our American citizens without any recourse.

In our fight against terrorism, we must make certain that we do not do damage to the principles of civil rights and certainly not do damage to the constitutional rights of American citizens. So in the substitute, we maintain the aura of immunity for the particular customs officer, but we do allow for the aggrieved party. If indeed they are found to have been subject to an unreasonable search, they may sue the Federal Government, so that there would be some relief, and some incentives for the customs agencies not just to respond as to what they think is in good faith but what is reasonable under the Constitution.

It just seems to us that we would weaken the protections against racial profiling and other illegal and unconstitutional searches by the customs department if we left our citizens, having been treated in an unconstitutional manner, without any redress at all. It is in times of crisis, such as those we are going through, that truly tests a democracy. And I am certain that in voting for the substitute my colleagues will get the benefits of the bill but also this deficiency will be corrected.

The second thing that is provided here is that under current law the Customs Service is empowered to search without a warrant for inbound mail handled by the United States Post Office. And, of course, this border exception to the fourth amendment is derived from the traditional authority of a sovereign to protect its border against inbound contraband and to collect duties on inbound freight.

But the rationale of the border exception does not allow customs searches of outgoing mail without a warrant. Section 144 would allow customs officials to open mail with reasonable cause, which is a much lower standard than probable cause and would eliminate the need for judicial review. The United States Post Office believes that this is an unreasonable provision. They have written in support of the provision which I have mentioned would be in the substitute where we just strike the provision that gives the Customs Service the power to open mail just because they think it is reasonable but they do not have probable cause to do it.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS), a distinguished member of the Committee on Ways and Means, and ask that he be allowed to allocate time based on the requests made of him.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume. Let me respond briefly to the two provisions that my colleague from New York referred to.

That same letter that indicated that the union would not oppose if we move the labor provisions is in strong support of the immunity provision for customs inspectors. Rarely do you have a job which basically says you will examine people as they come across the border. There are clearly provisions, customs guidelines, that determine racial, religious, ethnic and gender profiling that prohibit that but do allow some protections for the customs officer.

If anyone would listen to the case histories of some of these cases that are in the courts, for example notwithstanding the fact that someone was searched and contraband was found, they nevertheless wanted to sue because they did not believe the customs officials had a right to search them. And that was notwithstanding the fact that the obvious evidence of the contraband on them was more than enough reason for the customs official to search them.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the substitute is a good-faith effort, but they are trying to walk a fine line; and it is the majority's opinion that there is no fine line that you can walk. Because if you provide inspectors immunity, and the Federal Government supports that immunity under a very clear guideline that would not violate any racial, religious, ethnic or gender profiling approach, then they are saying the Federal Government should waive its sovereign immunity notwithstanding. That then creates a new unprecedented class of Federal torts and we are right back in the courtroom with years and years of lives of people who were simply carrying out their job under a very narrow proscribed set of rules. Because even if they do that, there is no protection against this new form of Federal torts if the Federal Government waves its sovereign immunity.

It seems to me in this particular era, we either back up these people or we do not. If they are following the rules, we should protect them. If they are not, there are clear procedures to make sure they are treated in a manner they should be treated in if they violate administrative policy in carrying out their jobs.

So in looking at the bill itself, I do hope Members appreciate the broad support that the underlying bill has, and that although the substitute focuses on a couple of areas that will be addressed beyond the immunity question, if we are going to allow a true examination of the ways in which we can protect this country, under a search warrant, it seems entirely appropriate that based upon sufficient suspicion you ought to be able to read a piece of outbound mail. Under the courts of this country, you would only be allowed to then take a look at what the content of the mail was. But it seems to me if you can have the ability to deal with it with inbound mail, you certainly ought to, with full court protection, have the ability to look at it in terms of outbound mail as well.

As we are now becoming more and more aware through the news media of the ability of various terrorist groups to communicate using the modern technology which allows for rapid communication, and certainly would not ignore the good old-fashioned postage stamp on an envelope, if it was given unusual constitutional protection and they knew that no official of the government could, even with a court order, take a look at what was in a particular envelope that appeared very, very suspicious.

We believe it is an essential part of the bill; and we would like to retain it in the bill. Therefore, my colleagues should vote for the bill and against the substitute.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remainder of my time be controlled by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CRANE), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Trade, and that he be allowed to disperse the time in such manner as he sees fit.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HINOJOSA).

Mr. HINOJOSA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS) for yielding me this time.

I rise in support of H.R. 3129, the Customs Border Security Act of 2001. As a Member representing a border community, I am pleased that Congress is taking action to improve the security of our borders. The customs officials and inspectors who work along the U.S.-Mexico border are hardworking, dedicated people, who do an outstanding job with very limited resources. For too many years they have been short staffed and have worked long hours of overtime to keep our ports open. I want to thank the members of the Committee on Ways and Means for recognizing this problem.

This bill will authorize funding to hire additional personnel and to upgrade detection and inspection equipment. This new equipment and personnel will make it easier for customs officials to stop illegal drug trafficking and improve our anti-terrorism capabilities. At the same time, it will help keep trade, the lifeblood of border communities, moving efficiently through our ports.

I want to commend the ranking member, the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL), for his work in crafting an amendment that improves the underlying bill by addressing several concerns expressed by groups like the National Council of La Raza and the American Civil Liberties Union. The Rangel amendment protects customs officials from personal liability for monetary damages in civil suits while at the same time providing recourse to individuals whose civil rights are violated.

Our Nation's security depends on the security of our borders and ports. I urge my colleagues to support the Rangel amendment and the underlying bill.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. BACHUS).

Mr. BACHUS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, the approach taken in this legislation to outbound mail only makes common sense. There ought to be parity between outbound mail and inbound mail. Presently, there is absolutely no dispute that customs can search all inbound mail. And they do that. However, despite a number of court decisions, despite the Federal regulations, despite code provisions, postal regulations do not allow the post office to search outbound mail. It makes no sense.

If you ship something by FedEx or UPS, if you put it in a car, put it on a ship, fly it in an airplane, even put it in your own pocket and you leave the country, you are liable to search. The only search that is not allowed is if you put it in an envelope and mail it out.

Now, this disparity has been addressed, and I will name those decisions. There have been two Supreme Court decisions, Shultz, the Ramsey case. The Ninth Circuit has considered this; the Fifth Circuit has considered this. They have all said that customs has the right to do it. But what happens when they try to do it? Well, the postal service does not allow them to do it.

Now, as a result, when the postal service has stopped this, there have been several protests lodged. In fact, the first was that we had testimony in this Congress in 2000 and 2001 that drug dealers were using outbound mail to ship the proceeds of drug sales. And, in fact, I introduced at a committee hearing a drug dealer's Web site where they say this. Here is what they say, and I am going to submit this for the RECORD.

□ 1415

"Do not use UPS, Federal Express, or any other overnight express service, as customs may look at it. Regular mail is anonymous and safe."

That is actually on a drug dealer's Web site. But it was not just the drug dealers who knew this. President Clinton commissioned the International Crime Control Strategy Committee, a bipartisan committee. They looked at that. Among their findings was this:

"Customs has identified various methods of currency smuggling that remain a challenge. Notable among these methods is the exploitation of the U.S. mail. Hundreds of thousands of dollars can be smuggled out of the United States, at only the cost of postage, in letters and packages."

But scariest of all is testimony that we heard prior to September 11 that terrorists were using the U.S. mail, that they were exploiting the U.S. mail. We heard testimony, the committees of this Congress, that we were creating one of the greatest enforcement stumbling blocks United States agencies had in fighting terrorists and money laundering. Despite that, the post office continued not to cooperate with the Treasury, the FBI and the customs. Therefore, we had this headline which we could have avoided or possibly avoided by adopting this language prior to September 11: Attacks Show a Lack of Cooperation Between Agencies.

Has September 11 not taught us one thing? Has it not taught us that the post office ought to be a partner in our fight against terrorism? This language should have been adopted before September 11. Let us adopt it now. Let us slam the door on money launderers, terrorists and drug dealers and let us do it today.

The U.S. Customs Service should be able to inspect merchandise that is exiting the United States through the U.S. Postal Service—just like it can inspect all merchandise that enters the United States through the Postal Service.

Existing law enables the U.S. Customs Service to inspect merchandise exiting the United States via any mode of transportation—including truck, ship, car, airplane, private express carrier, or person.

The Postal Service claims that it is exempt from these laws—making it the only mode of export for which Customs cannot inspect outbound merchandise.

Customs' inspection of outbound and inbound merchandise is Constitutional.

Under the Constitution, the Customs Service has outbound and inbound border search authority for all merchandise, including that carried on or in an airplane, vessel, vehicle, person, package, or envelope departing or entering the United States. Neither the Fourth Amendment nor any statute prohibits Customs from inspecting outbound merchandise.

Courts have upheld Customs' general border search authority, and in particular over inbound mail and outbound shipments. These decisions support Congress acting to affirm Customs' authority. See United States v. Ramsey, 431 U.S. 606 (1977); United States v. Berisha, 925 F.2d 791 (5th Cir. 1991); United States v. Ezeiruaku, 936 F.2d 136 (3d Cir. 1991); United States v. Cardona, 769 F.2d 625 (9th Cir. 1985); United States v. Udofot, 711 F.2d 831 (8th Cir. 1983).

Some enterprising sellers of illegal drugs have even boldly stated on their internet site that mail-order customers should use the mails to avoid inspections:

> Do not use UPS, Federal Express, or any other overnight express service, as customs may look at it. Regular mail (registered, if you like), is anonymous and safe.

Recent congressional testimony of Customs pointed to the lack of export examination requirements as to USPS shipments as the "greatest enforcement stumbling blocks," creating "a money launderer's dream-come-true." Testimony, U.S. Customs Service, House of Representatives Committee on Government Reform, Criminal Justice, Drug Policy and Human Resources Subcommittee Hearing, May 26, 2000.

Customs testimony at this hearing pointed out that not just money laundering is involved, that this "loophole literally creates a haven for smugglers of all kinds. A flawed system such as this can facilitate many other illegal exports and intransit shipments such as child pornography, items or materials to be used in terrorist attacks, weapons, sensitive military or high tech products not licensed for exportation . . ."

The Postal Service's position is clearly anti-law enforcement and allows the US Postal Service to be the outbound smuggling method of choice for drug cartels and other criminal entities. No public policy is served by exempting outbound Postal Service shipments of merchandise from Customs' inspection.

Protect the U.S. Border While Maintaining Privacy—Privacy of the U.S. Mail Is Not at Risk

PARITY BETWEEN OUTBOUND AND INBOUND MAIL SHIPMENTS

The U.S. Customs Service should be able to inspect merchandise that is exiting the United States through the U.S. Postal Service—just like it can inspect all merchandise that enters the United States through the Postal Service. [19 U.S.C. §482; 19 U.S.C. §1581; 19 U.S.C. §1582; 19 C.F.R., Part 145; 19 C.F.R., Part 162]

PARITY BETWEEN MODES OF EXPORT

Existing law enables the U.S. Customs Service to inspect merchandise exiting the United States via any mode of transportation—including truck, ship, car, airplane, private express carrier, or person. [22 U.S.C. §401; 22 U.S.C. §2778; 31 U.S.C. §5317; 50 U.S.C. App. §2411]

The Postal Service claims that it is exempt from these laws—making it the only mode of export for which Customs cannot inspect outbound merchandise.

CONSTITUTIONAL BASIS

Customs' inspection of outbound and inbound merchandise is Constitutional.

Under the Constitution, the Customs Service has outbound and inbound border search authority for all merchandise, including that carried on or in an airplane, vessel, vehicle, person, package, or envelope departing or entering the United States. Neither the Fourth Amendment nor any statute prohibits Customs from inspecting outbound merchandise. [See, e.g., California Bankers Assn. v. Shultz, 416 U.S. 21 (1973). United States v. Ramsey, 431 U.S. 606 (1977). United States v. Cardona, 769 F.2d 625 (9th Cir. 1985). United States v. Whiting, 781 F.2d 692 (9th Cir. 1986). United States v. Berisha, 925 F.2d 791 (5th Cir. 1991).]

LETTER PRIVACY

Allowing Customs to inspect outbound merchandise sent via the Postal Service does not change the law that Customs Officers may not open sealed letter class mail that only contains correspondence without a warrant or consent. [19 C.F.R. §145.3]

For inbound Postal Service shipments, the Customs regulations prohibit Customs officers from opening letter class mail that contains only correspondence except when either a warrant or the consent of the sender/addressee is obtained. The Postal Service has endorsed these regulations for inbound shipments and they could easily be applied to outbound Postal Service shipments.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. SCOTT).

Mr. SCOTT. I thank the gentleman for yielding time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to H.R. 3129, the Customs Border Security Act, in its present form and urge my colleagues to support the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL).

Section 141 of H.R. 3129 is problematic because it offers full immunity from civil damages if a customs officer performed the search in so-called good faith. Since the bill does not define what constitutes good faith, it effectively expands the current immunity standard to the point of making it nearly impossible for a person to seek redress against a customs officer for an unconstitutional search.

Under current law, government officers performing their specified functions are afforded qualified immunity from civil damages as long as the officer's actions do not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights which a reasonable person would have known. The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals said in 1992 that officers "are not liable for bad guesses in gray areas, they are liable for transgressing bright lines." That is the current law.

The availability of qualified immunity is determined against a standard of objective reasonableness. Whether an officer may be held personally liable turns on the objective legal reasonableness of the action assessed in light of the legal rules that were clearly established at the time the action was taken. As the Supreme Court said in 1986, the present qualified immunity protects "all but the plainly incompetent and those who knowingly violate the law."

But this bill seeks to go further and extends the immunity to situations where customs officers allege that they were acting in good faith, regardless of whether they were transgressing a bright line in the law or not, and regardless of whether they should have known that their actions violated the law. Under this bill, a customs officer could engage in blatantly discriminatory conduct; but if he believed it was in good faith, then he could not be held liable.

Let us remember what we are talking about here. Unconstitutional, unreasonable searches by government officials, searches which could include strip searches and so-called cavity searches. Mr. Chairman, many of these searches have been found to have been conducted pursuant to policies of racial profiling. A March 2000 General Accounting Office report found that while African Americans were nine times more likely to be searched than white Americans, they were no more likely to be found to be carrying contraband. The only way to give victims an effective means to stop these practices is through lawsuits. And here we have a bill that will throw some of these people out of court, deny them compensation for violations of their constitutional rights, and make it even less likely that these illegal searches will be stopped.

The substitute offered by the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) offers a more balanced approach. Those aggrieved will still have their day in court, because although customs officers will still be immune from liability under the substitute, the Federal Government will ultimately be liable for violations. In cases like these, the government, rather than the individual officer, usually ends up paying the judgment anyway, so this should not be a significant burden. And this is a fairer alternative since the immunity is preserved but the person who is victimized can still be made whole, and the Federal Government will be encouraged to correct the practices of its employees.

I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of the Democratic substitute and, if it fails, to vote against H.R. 3129.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. CUNNINGHAM).

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, we pass a lot of legislation on the floor, and I hold very seriously what we are doing today. A lot of people do not understand, I think, those that listen to us, miss the significance of what we are doing. I support first amendment rights. There are certain limitations in which I think we all agree. I just sat through a Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence hearing, which I am very limited in what I can say about the memo that was written by Mr. Williams, and the reasons why that much of the information was not passed forth is because of the politically correct environment, the liability environment, the civil liberties union going after our agents for things in doing their job in which their hands are tied.

I think all of us after September 11 are living in a different world. Do we want people violated? No. But I will tell you, if an agent, whether it is DEA, whether it is customs or whether it is INS, feels that I am suspect due to my activities, due to suspicions or I am reacting a certain way, then I have no ill feelings to those individuals that search me. Every time I go through the airport now, and I do not think I look like a terrorist, although the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATERS) says, yes, I do. I disagree with the gentlewoman from California. But every day that I go through the airport, I had a knee replacement and I have got a steel knee. I have to stand and spread eagle, they go through my bags, I have to take off my shoes and put those through the machine. Does that violate my civil liberties? Yes. But in the name of protection of this country, I feel it is very, very important. There are some inconveniences.

Do you realize that today we have many of the people that we suspect as being terrorists that produce pro al Qaeda and pro bin Laden information in Arizona that are still in those flight schools? And our agents cannot deport them because under the first amendment they have got all the rights that they can. They are recruiting individuals to go fight in Afghanistan to defeat the Western world. One of the things we need to do is these individuals before a visa is ever granted, to do a better background research before we ever let them in. Because once they get in here, we sure as heck cannot get rid of them because of our politically correct laws which I feel personally endanger us in this country.

We had two individuals in 1999 on an airline, known al Qaeda supporters. One looked suspicious. The other actually went up and rattled the airline door, and they stopped. These individuals were arrested when they landed. They are now suing the airline for racial profiling. I guarantee you, there is some liberal judge out there that is going to grant them the case. My point is that if a customs agent feels with their professional training that there is a problem, a risk to American citizens, they be given the right to protect us, whether it is an Irish guy like myself or anyone else.

The gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) is one of my heroes. He is a Korean war veteran, fought for us, and we are good friends. But I think in this fine line of defense I would disagree with my friend from New York.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. I thank the distinguished gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS) for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, with great respect to the previous speaker and certainly his service to this country, I do believe that there is value in the balance between civil liberties, the Bill of Rights, and the Constitution. I might say as well that the headline read by one of the speakers, "Agencies Don't Communicate," goes far deeper than violating the civil liberties and civil rights of Americans who travel throughout this Nation. Let me say for once what we should be focusing on is very much what is transpiring in the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, but it should be going on in the Committee on Armed Services, it should be going on in Judiciary, Committee on International Relations, and a number of other committees and a select committee to investigate what happened in light of the July 6 memo and the August memo. The question is not so much as to agencies communicating; it is whether or not internally the memo went where it was supposed to go and it was acted upon, whether or not the FBI and the CIA communicates. This legislation does not speak to that issue.

And so I rise to oppose this bill today in its present form, and I rise to support the substitute by the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL). It is clear that the customs agents are to be respected and the work that they do is to be respected; but a violation and an undercutting and an undermining of civil liberties is not the solution to fighting terrorism. This bill would weaken protection against racial profiling and other illegal searches and undermine the right to privacy in personal correspondence.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to tell the story of Yvette Bradley, a 33-year-old advertising executive and her sister who arrived at Newark airport from a vacation in Jamaica. She is an African American woman. Upon encountering customs agents, Ms. Bradley recalls that she along with most of the other black women on the flight were singled out for searches and interrogation where she experienced one of the most humiliating moments of her life.

Ms. Bradley was searched throughout her body, including her private parts. And, of course, Mr. Chairman, no drugs or contraband was found. The gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS), of course, is well aware of these cases, as being a strong advocate on diminishing racial profiling by the U.S. customs department. I too happen to be a strong supporter of the customs department and its agents and the responsibilities they have. As we have said repeatedly on this floor, there is not a thin line of difference between Democrats and Republicans and others on fighting terrorism. Interestingly enough, however, they have all of the provisions that they need to ensure the safety of the Nation. That is, the customs department and the agents. The PATRIOT Act gave a number of new restrictions that would assist in fighting terrorism. There is no need in this bill to give a pass on the Bill of Rights and the Constitution, the understanding of unreasonable searches and seizures. It is unfair. The ability to search mail more than they have now is unfair, and it is not a solution to terrorism.

The legislation did not go to the Committee on the Judiciary. This legislation came out of the Committee on Ways and Means on a party vote. It is simply ludicrous that we throw to the wind our Constitution when we are fighting terrorism around the world. This bill fails to address the very serious problems of racial profiling and the invasion of privacy by our customs agents. It throws to the wind the ability to secure relief from the government if you are unfairly racially profiled. Mr. Chairman, it is going on right now. In spite of the random selection, I believe it is going on right now as we speak in our airports of random or racially profiled selections of individuals.

In addition, with respect to the mail provision, I believe that the substitute provides us a much better offering of this legislation. I would ask my colleagues to support the substitute; and if that substitute should fail, I would ask my colleagues to oppose the bill in its present form, that is, H.R. 3129.

□ 1430

We must find a better way to fight terrorism. I think what we can begin by doing is communicating with the agencies and for the agencies to do their jobs.

As I have said in the past, I have great respect for the services of the men and women in the Custom's service. This legislation, with the civil liberties protection, will further support their work.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose this bill today in its present form and rise to support the substitute by Mr. RANGEL. The bill would weaken protections against racial profiling and other illegal searches and undermine the right to privacy in personal correspondence. Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the story of Yvette Bradley. A 33-year-old advertising executive and her sister arrived at Newark Airport from a vacation in Jamaica, an African American woman.

Upon encountering Customs agents, Ms. Bradley recalls that she, along with most of the other black women on the flight, were singled out for searches and interrogation, where she experienced one of the most humiliating moments of her life. Ms. Bradley was searched throughout her body including her private parts. Mr. Chairman, no drugs or contraband was found.

I happen to be a strong supporter of our Customs agents and the responsibilities that they have. Interestingly enough, however, they have all of the provisions that they need to ensure the safety of this Nation. To take away, to give them a bye, a pass, on the Bill of Rights and the Constitution, the understanding of unreasonable search and seizures, is unfair. The ability to search mail, more than they have now, is unfair and it is not a solution to terrorism.

This legislation did not go to the Committee on the Judiciary. This legislation came out of the Committee on Ways and Means on a party vote. It seems simply ludicrous that we throw to the wind our Constitution when we are fighting terrorism around the world.

This bill fails to address the very serious problems of racial profiling and invasions of privacy by our Customs agents. The Customs Service has a poor record on racial profiling. A March 2000 General Accounting Office report found that while black female U.S. citizens were nine times more likely than white female U.S. citizens to be subjected to x-ray searches by the Customs Service, these black women were less than half as likely to be found carrying contraband as white females.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before us today, H.R. 3129, contains a number of problematic provisions that perpetuate these kinds of insidious acts. Most notably, two provisions raise significant constitutional and civil liberties concerns. First, the Good Faith Immunity provision of section 141 provides Customs inspectors immunity from lawsuits stemming from personal searches of people entering the country so long as the officers conduct the searches in "good faith." Importantly, this provision has nothing to do with preventing terrorists from boarding airplanes. Customs officers search passengers when they are exiting the plane, not when they are boarding. Nothing in the provision limits it to terrorist investigations.

Section 141 of the bill provides immunity to a Customs officer conducting a search of a person or property provided he or she was acting in "good faith." The term "good faith" is not defined in the bill.

Customs Service agents should not be provided with additional immunity because the Customs Service has an uneven record on racial profiling, it routinely conducts particularly intrusive searches, and has broad authority to seize property. A March 2000 General Accounting Office report found that while African American men and women were nearly nine times more likely to be searched as white American men and women, they were no more likely to be found carrying contraband. I do support the Rangel substitute which balances protecting hard working customs agents against liability while still allowing the grieved citizen the right to sue for unjust acts against them.

Section 144, "Border search authority for certain contraband in outgoing mail," would allow the U.S. Customs Service to open outbound international mail without a warrant if they have reasonable cause to suspect the mail contains certain contraband. Under current law, the Customs Service is empowered to search, without a warrant, inbound mail handled by the United States Postal Service and packages and letters handled by private carriers such as Federal Express and the United Parcel Service.

Section 144 would allow Customs officials to open sealed, outbound international mail without a warrant, without probable cause, and without any judicial review at all. People in the United States have an expectation of privacy in the mail they send to friends, family, or business associates abroad. The Customs Service's interest in confiscating illegal weapons' shipments, drugs or other contraband is adequately protected by its ability to secure a search warrant when it has probable cause. Short of an emergency, postal officials can always hold a package while they wait for a court to issue a warrant. I support the substitute of Mr. RANGEL which upholds present law requiring a warrant before mail is searched.

Recently, the U.S. Postal Service wrote a letter to the Chairman of the Financial Services Committee on the issue of searching outbound mail without a warrant: "There is no evidence that eroding these long established privacy protections will bring any significant law enforcement improvements over what is achieved using existing, statutorily approved law enforcement techniques."

I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on H.R. 3129 because the bill would weaken protections against racial profiling and other illegal searches and undermines the right to privacy in personal correspondence.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON), our distinguished colleague on the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman for yielding me time and rise in strong support of this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I want to remind the body that this bill will provide $10 million for the Customs Cyber-Smuggling Center. This center, along with FBI, does all that work that is so critical to protecting our children from people who lurk on the Internet in cyberspace with the explicit and sole goal of exploiting them for sexual purposes.

The Internet has become not only an opportunity for all of us and for America, but it has also become a new venue for crime. While most Members are not aware of it, most of the child pornography that flows into America from abroad now flows in through cyberspace. So the Customs officials are extremely involved in preventing cybersmuggling of pornographic material and stopping the cyberspace attacks on our children.

The Customs officials are very skilled now at going into the chat rooms on our computers, following the conversations that go on there and spotting those individuals who are posing as young people but are actually adults out to lure children into meetings where they can be sexually exploited, or, in the tragic case of a young girl in Connecticut, murdered. That happened just this week.

So the computers, their chat rooms, cyberspace, represents a new and terrible danger for our children. These same people used to lurk around school yards. That did have at least the advantage of our being able to see them and adults being able to report them and the police being able to pick them up. Now they do not have to lurk around school yards. They do not have to be seen visibly. They can lurk in the chat rooms that our children frequent and they can play on their innocence and their trust to build up communication with them and to give them the confidence to meet them. Then, when they have the meeting, when they get the child in their literal physical grasp, that child then is helpless.

So the Customs Cyber-Smuggling Center has been on the front line of stemming this attack on our children, and this bill gives them $10 million that is critical to their beefing up their staff, to their being more effective in intercepting conversations with children and preventing those critical meetings and thereby protecting our children. So I commend the chairman on this legislation, and particularly for being able to work with us and include this critical money in this bill.

But I also want to address the importance of voting for the bill and voting against the substitute. The protection that is given to the Customs officials in this bill is protection that was requested by the Customs Department, that is wanted by the Customs officers, that was supported by the Treasury last time around on this bill and responds very deeply to their need to be protected just for doing their job.

There are tragic stories of Customs officials carrying out their responsibilities, doing what they are required by law to do to protect us, and then being sued, left out there by the government to pay all their own costs of the litigation, losing their homes. There are terrible stories, and only because they are doing their job.

But we encourage litigation in our society. We encourage settlement of suits where there has been no wrongdoing, and we leave our Customs officials exposed. They explicitly asked for this protection. We can do no less than provide it for them.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Florida (Mrs. MEEK).

Mrs. MEEK of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I think the Rangel substitute does a lot to help this bill. I am in support of the Rangel substitute and am opposed to the bill in its current form.

First of all, Customs officials do need protection. We do need the agents of the Customs department to receive protection. The government is the one who should feel the full brunt of this. So we want to be sure our Customs agents are protected.

I do not take a second seat to anyone and I yield to no one in my support of the war against terrorism, but I refuse to accept government agents engaging in misconduct as a good faith method, in that the standards many times are too subjective, and we have seen it in law enforcement all around. We make the standards so vague and subjective that, when people abuse them, we are not able to bring them to task. These things are not grounded in the law. So we have to be very careful, and that is what the Rangel substitute does.

Secondly, we do not need to expand the search that the Postal authorities are doing without probable cause. The Postal Service opposes this provision, with good reason.

Racial profiling is too rampant and too important now. I urge my colleagues that when there is any hint of anything that would lead to impropriety or abuse of the civil rights and human rights of any individual, we should oppose it. Therefore, I oppose this bill, and I support the Rangel substitute.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. BECERRA).

Mr. BECERRA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Georgia for yielding me time.

Mr. Chairman, this is a bill which, compared to previous versions, certainly has done much better for our country and does much better for our Customs officers, our men and women in the Customs Service. This bill does not try to mistreat our employees, the men and women who place themselves in harm's way every day to defend this country against terrorism, who try to interdict the drugs that many would have come into our country, and it treats them the way they should be treated, with respect, when it comes to their employment status, their salary, their working conditions.

Those previous versions of the bill which would have harmed our Customs men and women are not in this bill, and that is good. We also give Customs the tools it needs to be able to fight terrorism, to fight narcotics that would come into this country, and that is good as well.

But for some reason this bill continues to include 2 provisions which under our Constitution would harm Americans, and that is bad. There is no reason why we should tell an American citizen that he or she is suspect simply because they happen to reside in this country and wish to send a piece of mail abroad. There is no reason why we should treat American citizens in their regular activities of sending correspondence abroad the way we treat foreign correspondence and packages that would come into our country.

I can understand and most of us would understand why it is we would have concern in a package coming from some other country into our country, and perhaps, perhaps, containing a bomb, anthrax, who knows what else it might have. For that reason we provide that package with less of the type of constitutional protection that we provide all of us in America when it comes to our privacy.

But when Americans are shipping something abroad, is there any reason why we are telling them we are going to open up their mail that goes abroad, open up packages, unless we have some suspicion there is reason to go in that?

Right now we can open up a package that is going abroad, but we just have to prove there is a reason why we are going to go into the privacy of each and every American citizen to do so. This bill changes the privacy right we have had since the founding of this Nation. That is wrong.

The other provision here that I believe if most Americans knew about it would be offensive to them is that which would allow profiling. Most of our Customs officers do not do this, but we have seen on occasion how someone is picked out of the crowd, and our numbers, our studies by Customs itself, have shown that the people that most often get picked, unfortunately, are African American women, succumbing to things like strip searches.

Now our government on occasion has been subjected to lawsuits because of the violations of the Constitutional rights of these individuals. Why are we going to make that easier and why are we going to tell Customs officers we do not have enough faith in them and that we are going to go ahead and let them have an exception to the law? Why would we want to tell people in this country that we are going to lower the standard of protection for people when it comes to their civil rights, simply so that we can protect the bad apples?

Everybody has a bad apple. We have bad apples in this whole institution. But that is no reason to say that every single officer in Customs is bound to violate an American citizen's rights by subjecting them to an unconstitutional search and seizure.

I do not think our Customs officers have requested this. I never heard that in committee, that they requested this. There is no reason to go to the point of providing immunity to Customs officers who violate the Constitution. They already have a qualified immunity to those types of protections. Why are we going beyond what they have even asked for?

In committee, when we asked the general counsel for Customs, please explain why you are asking this particular immunity exception to be applied, we could not get a good answer from the general counsel of the Customs Service.

This is a good bill. Why tarnish it with something that is unnecessary? Of course, most people are going to vote for this because most people will look at the fact that we are providing additional resources to Customs and doing the right thing for most of our officers. This does not belong there. That is why you should vote for the substitute. A vote for the substitute gets rid of the bad and makes this a completely supportable bill.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume to close.

Mr. Chairman, at the outset, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question: Do we know what a terrorist looks like? Did we know on April 19, 1995, that a man would get in a Ryder truck and drive it into the Federal Building in Oklahoma? Did we know just a few short days ago that a young college student, the age of 21, would put pipe bombs in mailboxes in several Midwestern and Western States?

Mr. Chairman, I must tell you I rise in strong opposition to the Customs Border Security Act of 2001, H.R. 3129. This bill threatens to violate and weaken the civil rights of innocent passengers by granting Customs officers immunity from lawsuits involving personal searches.

H.R. 3129 would increase the chances of racial profiling and illegal searches. This bill will also violate personal privacy by expanding the power of the Customs Service to search mail leaving the United States without a warrant.

While I, like many, appreciate the attempts made by the Customs Service to address its poor record of racial profiling of passengers, now is not the time to grant Customs officers immunity from lawsuits. Civil lawsuits against government officials and agencies are an important deterrent to racial profiling and unconstitutional and unlawful searches. As public officials, Customs agents already have qualified immunity, which is more than adequate to protect them if acting within the scope of their official authority.

Without the possibility of a lawsuit, individuals who have been treated in an unconstitutional manner by a government agency would have no redress, and the government agents would have less incentive to comply with the Constitution.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to protect the civil rights of innocent passengers and oppose this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 3129, the Customs Border Security Act of 2001, is the authorization for the U.S. Customs Service, International Trade Commission and Office of the U.S. Trade Representative through 2004. We have included a number of critical tools for fighting terrorism, drugs and child pornography.

□ 1445

The legislation will help customs close a gap in our border that lets illegal money be taken out of the country. This legislation will also significantly increase customs' ability to stop the flow of illegal drugs over our borders and into our children's hands. When this bill came to the floor last year, it was caught up in the general debate on trade and the subject of a lot of misinformation. I want to clear the record for Members' benefit.

The administration was intimately involved in drafting this bill and requested several measures that are here. There is a provision to require advanced electronic manifesting on passengers and cargo so that the Customs Service can have advanced notice of who is in planes and what is on ships about to land on American soil. This provision has attracted the most attention recently, as many agencies of the government, especially law enforcement and intelligence, currently obtain information through customs. It is clear that customs will be requiring more information in the future for antiterrorist efforts. It is equally clear that customs is the logical place to house the current and future data collection system that must interface with importers and carriers of all kinds. Through better and quicker information, the Federal Government can prevent crimes and keep our economy alive with the critical flow of trade.

Similarly, we seek to give our customs inspectors some protection, considering that now more than ever they will be scrutinizing and watching people who come into the country, knowing full well that the next terrorist may be stepping off the plane. For those who act in good faith, inspectors should not have to be afraid of frivolous lawsuits, so we are proposing that they have immunity against such lawsuits unless they wrongly use race, ethnicity, religion, or gender to profile passengers. At the committee markup, administration officials testified that they had drafted this provision and support it. The union representatives of the customs inspectors have specifically written in support of this provision. They make a strong case, and Congress should pass this provision.

The administration also requested that customs be able to search outgoing mail because the U.S. mail is often used to transmit laundered money out of the country. I want to assure members of the committee that we looked carefully at the privacy issues involved here and believe we adequately addressed them in this legislation. Our bill preserves our cherished fourth amendment rights against unwarranted search by requiring that no letter may be read by customs officers unless a valid warrant is obtained, just like current law with respect to inbound mail. Remember, money from illegal activities is what leads us to terrorists and drug smugglers.

We have increased funding to reestablish the New York Customs offices and an additional increase in funding to upgrade our textile transshipment monitoring and enforcement operations. We add $10 million for the Customs Cyber-smuggling Center. This legislation also contains authorization for funding for customs' new automation, the Automated Commercial Environment.

Mr. Chairman, I urge all of my colleagues who are serious about stopping terrorism, drugs, and online child pornography, while keeping our trade flowing, to support this bill. I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the Latino community I urge my colleagues to oppose H.R. 3129, the Customs Border Security Act, and to strongly support the Rangel substitute. H.R. 3129 will expand Federal authority for U.S. Customs officers by granting them expanded "good faith" immunity. Expanding Customs officers' immunity would only undermine the civil rights of many individuals who would be left without recourse to remedy unconstitutional and discriminatory searches, particularly when this agency has a history of targeting minorities. The Rangel substitute correctly addresses the racial profiling concerns while ensuring that customs inspectors are not liable for monetary damages in civil suits involving personal searches. The U.S. government would consent to be sued and to be held liable for civil damages for suits brought in connection with a wrongful personal search.

According to a Customs Service study conducted in fiscal year 1998, almost half of the people searched by customs were Latino or African-American, although the contraband produced by the searches was lower for minorities than for whites. Another study by the GAO in March 2000 revealed that black female U.S. citizens were nine times more likely to be subjected to X-ray searches by U.S. Customs officials than their white counterparts, although black women were less than half as likely to be found carrying contraband as white women.

There is also no reason why Customs needs expanded authority to search outgoing international mail without a warrant. We inspect mail that comes into the country because we do not know what it might contain. But the interests in outgoing mail are not the same and do not warrant invading our privacy. The Postal Service opposes this provision. Customs has every right to inspect mail by getting a search warrant. There is no need to change current law. The Rangel substitute also addresses the inspection of outbound mail.

I urge my colleagues to support the Rangel substitute and, if it fails, to vote no on H.R. 3129 because it will weaken protections against racial profiling, thus undermining the civil rights of many people and support the Rangel substitute.

Mr. BACHUS. Mr. Chairman, Customs currently can do border searches of everything that enters or leaves the United States—with one exception: outbound mail shipped by the U.S. Postal Service.

The U.S. Customs Service should be able to inspect merchandise that is exiting the United States through the U.S. Postal Service—just like it can inspect all merchandise that enters the United States through the Postal Service. [19 U.S.C. Section 482; 19 U.S.C. Section 1581; 19 U.S.C. Section 1582; 19 C.F.R., Part 145; 19 C.F.R., Part 162]

Existing law enables the U.S. Customs Service to inspect merchandise exiting the United States via any mode of transportation—including truck, ship, car, airplane, private express carrier, or person. [22 U.S.C. Section 401; 22 U.S.C. Section 2778; 31 U.S.C. Section 5317; 50 U.S.C. App. Section 2411]

The Postal Service claims that it is exempt from these laws—making it the only mode of export for which Customs cannot inspect outbound merchandise. In fact, the Postal Authority not only refuses to cooperate with the Customs Service, but they openly resist their efforts to carry out their statutory obligations.

Customs' inspection of outbound and inbound merchandise is Constitutional. Under the Constitution, the Customs Service has outbound and inbound border search authority for all merchandise, including that carrier on or in any airplane, vessel, vehicle, person, package, or envelope departing or entering the United States. Neither the Fourth Amendment nor any statute prohibits Customs from inspecting outbound merchandise. [See, e.g. California Bankers Assn. v. Schultz, 416 U.S. 21 (1973). United States v. Ramsey, 431 U.S. 606 (1977). United States v. Cardona, 769 F.2d 625 (9th Cir. 1985). United States v. Whiting, 781 F.2d 692 (9th Cir. 1986). United States v. Berisha, 925 F.2d 791 (5th Cir. 1991).]

Furthermore, courts have upheld Customs' general border search authority and, in particular, over inbound mail and outbound shipments. These decisions support Congress acting to affirm Customs' authority. [See United States v. Ramsey; United States v. Berisha; United States v. Ezeiruaku, 936 F.2d 136 (3d Cir. 1991); United States v. Cardona; United States v. Udofot, 711 F.2d 831 (8th Cir. 1983)]

The general public may not know about the inability of Customs to effectively search outbound merchandise, but others do. Some enterprising sellers of illegal drugs have even boldly stated on their internet site that mail-order customers should use the mails to avoid inspections.

> Do not use UPS, Federal Express, or any other overnight express service, as customs may look at it. Regular mail (registered, if you like) is anonymous and safe.

Recent Congressional testimony of Customs pointed to the lack of export examination requirements as to USPS shipments as the "greatest enforcement stumbling blocks," creating "a money launderer's dream-come-true." [Testimony, U.S. Customs Service, House of Representatives Committee on Government Reform, Criminal Justice, Drug Policy and Human Resources Subcommittee Hearing, May 26, 2000.]

Customs testimony at this hearing pointed out that not just money laundering is involved, that this "loophole literally creates a haven for smugglers of all kinds. A flawed system such as this can facilitate many other illegal exports and in-transit shipments such as child pornography, items or materials to be used in terrorist attacks, weapons, sensitive military or high tech products not licensed for exportation . . ."

The Postal Service's position is clearly anti-law enforcement and allows the U.S. Postal Service to be the outbound smuggling method of choice for drug cartels and other criminal entities. No public policy is served by exempting outbound Postal Service shipments of merchandise from Customs' inspection. I urge the membership to give this legislation the strongest vote of confidence.

Ms. DUNN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3129, the Customs Border Security Act. I want to thank Chairman THOMAS and CRANE for working with me to address my concerns for improving staffing and equipment on the Northern Border.

Almost two years ago, Customs personnel were able to apprehend a terrorist at Blaine, Washington. This action helped prevent a terrorist act against our nation. Today, we face greater threats of terrorism and we need to better protect our borders, especially our Northern Border.

For this reason, I am pleased that this bill authorizes more funding to hire approximately 285 additional Customs Service officers to protect the borders and ports along the U.S.-Canadian border. This legislation also increases equipment for the Customs Service to expedite the movement of goods and passengers on our Northern Border.

Over the past few years, Washington State has seen an increase in trade and passenger traffic on the U.S.-Canadian Border. In 1999, trade between Washington State and Canada has grown approximately $19 billion. Furthermore, we have seen a growth in the cruise industry in Seattle. Unfortunately, we had to deny ships from visiting Seattle because of insufficient Customs officers to inspect them.

The increases in staff and equipment in this bill are positive steps towards a comprehensive and sustained effort to better protect the Northern Border from potential terrorist activities, and improve the flow of goods and traffic between the U.S. and Canada. I ask my colleagues to support this bill.

Ms. KILPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I rise to announce my opposition to the underlying bill that we consider today. It is a near certainty that the substitute amendment offered by my colleague from California (Ms. WATERS) will not be approved, and without the improvements contained in her amendment, there is little choice for me but to vote against this bill.

Last December, I voted against this bill's passage when it was considered under suspension of rules. I did so because I objected to a provision in that bill that would have provided immunity to customs officers for personal searches at border locations, as long as the officers follow agency guidelines. That was too broad an exemption.

I share the view of many in this chamber that the men and women who make up the U.S. Customs Service are good and hard working people, dedicated to performing their jobs and committed to protecting the safety of this country's borders. Nowhere is the dedication of U.S. Customs Service personnel exemplified more than at Detroit's ports of entry.

Unfortunately, inspection abuses have occurred and civil rights have been violated. The grant of immunity provided in the earlier bill asked that the constitutional rights of Americans be surrendered at the border. I opposed passage of H.R. 3129 last December, and I oppose its passage today for the very same reasons.

I have dedicated my entire life to the advancement of civil rights under civil law. To vote for this bill as it is presently configured would require me to suppress a deep-seated core value that I hold dear. There are times when many in this chamber put aside their personal values in order to advance causes and issues that provide for the greater good. This is not one of those times.

This bill has the potential of short circuiting the civil liberties of Americans and international visitors who step on to U.S. soil from international ports. By doing so, we are compromising on the values that make up part of the American character and surrendering the protections guaranteed to us under the constitution. I cannot in good conscience surrender my convictions to protect the civil liberties of all Americans and those that come to this country. For that reason I oppose the passage of this bill.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). All time for general debate has expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute printed in the bill shall be considered as the original bill for the purpose of amendment under the 5-minute rule and shall be considered read.

The text of the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute is as follows:

TITLE I—UNITED STATES CUSTOMS SERVICE

Subtitle A—Drug Enforcement and Other Noncommercial and Commercial Operations

SEC. 101. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR NONCOMMERCIAL OPERATIONS, COMMERCIAL OPERATIONS, AND AIR AND MARINE INTERDICTION.

(a) NONCOMMERCIAL OPERATIONS.—Section 301(b)(1) of the Customs Procedural Reform and Simplification Act of 1978 (19 U.S.C. 2075(b)(1)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A) to read as follows:

"(A) $886,513,000 for fiscal year 2002."; and

(2) in subparagraph (B) to read as follows:

"(B) $909,471,000 for fiscal year 2003.".

(b) COMMERCIAL OPERATIONS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 301(b)(2)(A) of the Customs Procedural Reform and Simplification Act of 1978 (19 U.S.C. 2075(b)(2)(A)) is amended—

(A) in clause (i) to read as follows:

"(i) $1,603,482,000 for fiscal year 2002."; and

(B) in clause (ii) to read as follows:

"(ii) $1,645,009,000 for fiscal year 2003.".

(2) AUTOMATED COMMERCIAL ENVIRONMENT COMPUTER SYSTEM.—Of the amount made available for each of fiscal years 2002 and 2003 under section 301(b)(2)(A) of the Customs Procedural Reform and Simplification Act of 1978 (19 U.S.C. 2075(b)(2)(A)), as amended by paragraph (1), $308,000,000 shall be available until expended for each such fiscal year for the development, establishment, and implementation of the Automated Commercial Environment computer system.

(3) REPORTS.—Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, and not later than each subsequent 90-day period, the Commissioner of Customs shall prepare and submit to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate a report demonstrating that the development and establishment of the Automated Commercial Environment computer system is being carried out in a cost-effective manner and meets the modernization requirements of title VI of the North American Free Trade Agreements Implementation Act.

(c) AIR AND MARINE INTERDICTION.—Section 301(b)(3) of the Customs Procedural Reform and Simplification Act of 1978 (19 U.S.C. 2075(b)(3)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A) to read as follows:

"(A) $181,860,000 for fiscal year 2002."; and

(2) in subparagraph (B) to read as follows:

"(B) $186,570,000 for fiscal year 2003.".

(d) SUBMISSION OF OUT-YEAR BUDGET PROJECTIONS.—Section 301(a) of the Customs Procedural Reform and Simplification Act of 1978 (19 U.S.C. 2075(a)) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(3) By not later than the date on which the President submits to Congress the budget of the United States Government for a fiscal year, the Commissioner of Customs shall submit to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate the projected amount of funds for the succeeding fiscal year that will be necessary for the operations of the Customs Service as provided for in subsection (b).".

SEC. 102. ANTITERRORIST AND ILLICIT NARCOTICS DETECTION EQUIPMENT FOR THE UNITED STATES-MEXICO BORDER, UNITED STATES-CANADA BORDER, AND FLORIDA AND THE GULF COAST SEAPORTS.

(a) FISCAL YEAR 2002.—Of the amounts made available for fiscal year 2002 under section 301(b)(1)(A) of the Customs Procedural Reform and Simplification Act of 1978 (19 U.S.C. 2075(b)(1)(A)), as amended by section 101(a) of this Act, $90,244,000 shall be available until expended for acquisition and other expenses associated with implementation and deployment of antiterrorist and illicit narcotics detection equipment along the United States-Mexico border, the United States-Canada border, and Florida and the Gulf Coast seaports, as follows:

(1) UNITED STATES-MEXICO BORDER.—For the United States-Mexico border, the following:

(A) $6,000,000 for 8 Vehicle and Container Inspection Systems (VACIS).

(B) $11,200,000 for 5 mobile truck x-rays with transmission and backscatter imaging.

(C) $13,000,000 for the upgrade of 8 fixed-site truck x-rays from the present energy level of 450,000 electron volts to 1,000,000 electron volts (1–MeV).

(D) $7,200,000 for 8 1–MeV pallet x-rays.

(E) $1,000,000 for 200 portable contraband detectors (busters) to be distributed among ports where the current allocations are inadequate.

(F) $600,000 for 50 contraband detection kits to be distributed among all southwest border ports based on traffic volume.

(G) $500,000 for 25 ultrasonic container inspection units to be distributed among all ports receiving liquid-filled cargo and to ports with a hazardous material inspection facility.

(H) $2,450,000 for 7 automated targeting systems.

(I) $360,000 for 30 rapid tire deflator systems to be distributed to those ports where port runners are a threat.

(J) $480,000 for 20 portable Treasury Enforcement Communications Systems (TECS) terminals to be moved among ports as needed.

(K) $1,000,000 for 20 remote watch surveillance camera systems at ports where there are suspicious activities at loading docks, vehicle queues, secondary inspection lanes, or areas where visual surveillance or observation is obscured.

(L) $1,254,000 for 57 weigh-in-motion sensors to be distributed among the ports with the greatest volume of outbound traffic.

(M) $180,000 for 36 AM traffic information radio stations, with 1 station to be located at each border crossing.

(N) $1,040,000 for 260 inbound vehicle counters to be installed at every inbound vehicle lane.

(O) $950,000 for 38 spotter camera systems to counter the surveillance of customs inspection activities by persons outside the boundaries of ports where such surveillance activities are occurring.

(P) $390,000 for 60 inbound commercial truck transponders to be distributed to all ports of entry.

(Q) $1,600,000 for 40 narcotics vapor and particle detectors to be distributed to each border crossing.

(R) $400,000 for license plate reader automatic targeting software to be installed at each port to target inbound vehicles.

(2) UNITED STATES-CANADA BORDER.—For the United States-Canada border, the following:

(A) $3,000,000 for 4 Vehicle and Container Inspection Systems (VACIS).

(B) $8,800,000 for 4 mobile truck x-rays with transmission and backscatter imaging.

(C) $3,600,000 for 4 1–MeV pallet x-rays.

(D) $250,000 for 50 portable contraband detectors (busters) to be distributed among ports where the current allocations are inadequate.

(E) $300,000 for 25 contraband detection kits to be distributed among ports based on traffic volume.

(F) $240,000 for 10 portable Treasury Enforcement Communications Systems (TECS) terminals to be moved among ports as needed.

(G) $400,000 for 10 narcotics vapor and particle detectors to be distributed to each border crossing based on traffic volume.

(3) FLORIDA AND GULF COAST SEAPORTS.—For Florida and the Gulf Coast seaports, the following:

(A) $4,500,000 for 6 Vehicle and Container Inspection Systems (VACIS).

(B) $11,800,000 for 5 mobile truck x-rays with transmission and backscatter imaging.

(C) $7,200,000 for 8 1–MeV pallet x-rays.

(D) $250,000 for 50 portable contraband detectors (busters) to be distributed among ports where the current allocations are inadequate.

(E) $300,000 for 25 contraband detection kits to be distributed among ports based on traffic volume.

(b) FISCAL YEAR 2003.—Of the amounts made available for fiscal year 2003 under section 301(b)(1)(B) of the Customs Procedural Reform and Simplification Act of 1978 (19 U.S.C. 2075(b)(1)(B)), as amended by section 101(a) of this Act, $9,000,000 shall be available until expended for the maintenance and support of the equipment and training of personnel to maintain and support the equipment described in subsection (a).

(c) ACQUISITION OF TECHNOLOGICALLY SUPERIOR EQUIPMENT; TRANSFER OF FUNDS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Commissioner of Customs may use amounts made available for fiscal year 2002 under section 301(b)(1)(A) of the Customs Procedural Reform and Simplification Act of 1978 (19 U.S.C. 2075(b)(1)(A)), as amended by section 101(a) of this Act, for the acquisition of equipment other than the equipment described in subsection (a) if such other equipment—

CHAPTER 1—OVERTIME AND PREMIUM PAY OF OFFICERS OF THE CUSTOMS SERVICE

SEC. 121. CORRECTION RELATING TO FISCAL YEAR CAP.

Section 5(c)(1) of the Act of February 13, 1911 (19 U.S.C. 267(c)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) FISCAL YEAR CAP.—The aggregate of overtime pay under subsection (a) (including commuting compensation under subsection (a)(2)(B)) that a customs officer may be paid in any fiscal year may not exceed $30,000, except that—

"(A) the Commissioner of Customs or his or her designee may waive this limitation in individual cases in order to prevent excessive costs or to meet emergency requirements of the Customs Service; and

"(B) upon certification by the Commissioner of Customs to the Chairmen of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate that the Customs Service has in operation a system that provides accurate and reliable data on a daily basis on overtime and premium pay that is being paid to customs officers, the Commissioner is authorized to pay any customs officer for one work assignment that would result in the overtime pay of that officer exceeding the $30,000 limitation imposed by this paragraph, in addition to any overtime pay that may be received pursuant to a waiver under subparagraph (A).".

SEC. 122. CORRECTION RELATING TO OVERTIME PAY.

Section 5(a)(1) of the Act of February 13, 1911 (19 U.S.C. 267(a)(1)), is amended by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentences: "Overtime pay provided under this subsection shall not be paid to any customs officer unless such officer actually performed work during the time corresponding to such overtime pay. The preceding sentence shall not apply with respect to the payment of an award or settlement to a customs officer who was unable to perform overtime work as a result of a personnel action in violation of section 5596 of title 5, United States Code, section 6(d) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, or title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.".

SEC. 123. CORRECTION RELATING TO PREMIUM PAY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 5(b)(4) of the Act of February 13, 1911 (19 U.S.C. 267(b)(4)), is amended by adding at the end the following new sentences: "Premium pay provided under this subsection shall not be paid to any customs officer unless such officer actually performed work during the time corresponding to such premium pay. The preceding sentence shall not apply with respect to the payment of an award or settlement to a customs officer who was unable to perform work during the time described in the preceding sentence as a result of a personnel action in violation of section 5596 of title 5, United States Code, section 6(d) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, or title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.".

(b) CORRECTIONS RELATING TO NIGHT WORK DIFFERENTIAL PAY.—Section 5(b)(1) of such Act (19 U.S.C. 267(b)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) NIGHT WORK DIFFERENTIAL.—

"(A) 5 P.M. TO MIDNIGHT.—(i) If any hours of regularly scheduled work of a customs officer occur during the hours of 5 p.m. and 12 a.m., the officer is entitled to pay for such hours of work (except for work to which paragraph (2) or (3) applies) at the officer's hourly rate of basic pay plus premium pay amounting to not less than 18 percent of that basic rate.

"(ii) If the regularly scheduled work of a customs officer is 4 p.m. to 12:00 a.m., the officer is entitled to pay for work during such period (except for work to which paragraph (2) or (3) applies) at the officer's hourly rate of basic pay plus premium pay amounting to not less than 18 percent of that basic rate.

"(B) MIDNIGHT TO 6 A.M.—(i) If any hours of regularly scheduled work of a customs officer occur during the hours of 12 a.m. and 6 a.m., the officer is entitled to pay for such hours of work (except for work to which paragraph (2) or (3) applies) at the officer's hourly rate of basic pay plus premium pay amounting to 25 percent of that basic rate.

"(ii) If the regularly scheduled work of a customs officer is 12 a.m. to 8:00 a.m., the officer is entitled to pay for work during such period (except for work to which paragraph (2) or (3) applies) at the officer's hourly rate of basic pay plus premium pay amounting to 25 percent of that basic rate.".

SEC. 124. USE OF SAVINGS FROM PAYMENT OF PREMIUM PAY.

Section 5 of the Act of February 13, 1911 (19 U.S.C. 267), is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (e) as subsection (f); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (d) the following:

"(e) Use of Savings From Payment of Premium Pay.—

"(1) Use of amounts.—For fiscal year 2002, the Secretary of the Treasury—

"(A) shall determine under paragraph (2) the amount of savings from the payment of premium pay to customs officers; and

"(B) shall use an amount from the Customs User Fee Account equal to such amount determined under paragraph (2) for additional premium pay described in clauses (i) and (ii) of subsection (b)(1)(A).

"(2) Determination of savings amount.—The Secretary shall calculate an amount equal to the difference between—

"(A) the estimated cost for premium pay that would have been incurred during fiscal year 2002 if this section, as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of section 123 of the Customs Border Security Act of 2001, had governed such costs; and

"(B) the actual cost for premium pay that is incurred during fiscal year 2002 under this section, as amended by section 123 of the Customs Border Security Act of 2001.".

SEC. 125. EFFECTIVE DATE.

This chapter, and the amendments made by this chapter, shall apply with respect to pay periods beginning on or after 15 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

CHAPTER 2—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

SEC. 131. ADDITIONAL CUSTOMS SERVICE OFFICERS FOR UNITED STATES–CANADA BORDER.

Of the amount made available for fiscal year 2002 under paragraphs (1) and (2)(A) of section 301(b) of the Customs Procedural Reform and Simplification Act of 1978 (19 U.S.C. 2075(b)), as amended by section 101 of this Act, $25,000,000 shall be available until expended for the Customs Service to hire approximately 285 additional Customs Service officers to address the needs of the offices and ports along the United States–Canada border.

SEC. 132. STUDY AND REPORT RELATING TO PERSONNEL PRACTICES OF THE CUSTOMS SERVICE.

(a) Study.—The Commissioner of Customs shall conduct a study of current personnel practices of the Customs Service, including an overview of performance standards and the effect and impact of the collective bargaining process on drug interdiction efforts of the Customs Service and a comparison of duty rotation policies of the Customs Service and other Federal agencies that employ similarly-situated personnel.

(b) Report.—Not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Commissioner of Customs shall submit to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate a report containing the results of the study conducted under subsection (a).

SEC. 133. STUDY AND REPORT RELATING TO ACCOUNTING AND AUDITING PROCEDURES OF THE CUSTOMS SERVICE.

(a) Study.—(1) The Commissioner of Customs shall conduct a study of actions by the Customs Service to ensure that appropriate training is being provided to Customs Service personnel who are responsible for financial auditing of importers.

(2) In conducting the study, the Commissioner—

(A) shall specifically identify those actions taken to comply with provisions of law that protect the privacy and trade secrets of importers, such as section 552(b) of title 5, United States Code, and section 1905 of title 18, United States Code; and

(B) shall provide for public notice and comment relating to verification of the actions described in subparagraph (A).

(b) Report.—Not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Commissioner of Customs shall submit to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate a report containing the results of the study conducted under subsection (a).

SEC. 134. ESTABLISHMENT AND IMPLEMENTATION OF COST ACCOUNTING SYSTEM; REPORTS.

(a) Establishment and Implementation.—

(1) In general.—Not later than September 30, 2003, the Commissioner of Customs shall, in accordance with the audit of the Customs Service's fiscal years 2000 and 1999 financial statements (as contained in the report of the Office of the Inspector General of the Department of the Treasury issued on February 23, 2001), establish and implement a cost accounting system for expenses incurred in both commercial and noncommercial operations of the Customs Service.

(2) Additional requirement.—The cost accounting system described in paragraph (1) shall provide for an identification of expenses based on the type of operation, the port at which the operation took place, the amount of time spent on the operation by personnel of the Customs Service, and an identification of expenses based on any other appropriate classification necessary to provide for an accurate and complete accounting of the expenses.

(b) Reports.—Beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act and ending on the date on which the cost accounting system described in subsection (a) is fully implemented, the Commissioner of Customs shall prepare and submit to Congress on a quarterly basis a report on the progress of implementing the cost accounting system pursuant to subsection (a).

SEC. 135. STUDY AND REPORT RELATING TO TIMELINESS OF PROSPECTIVE RULINGS.

(a) Study.—The Comptroller General shall conduct a study on the extent to which the Office of Regulations and Rulings of the Customs Service has made improvements to decrease the amount of time to issue prospective rulings from the date on which a request for the ruling is received by the Customs Service.

(b) Report.—Not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Comptroller General shall submit to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate a report containing the results of the study conducted under subsection (a).

(c) Definition.—In this section, the term "prospective ruling" means a ruling that is requested by an importer on goods that are proposed to be imported into the United States and that relates to the proper classification, valuation, or marking of such goods.

SEC. 136. STUDY AND REPORT RELATING TO CUSTOMS USER FEES.

(a) Study.—The Comptroller General shall conduct a study on the extent to which the amount of each customs user fee imposed under section 13031(a) of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (19 U.S.C. 58c(a)) is commensurate with the level of services provided by the Customs Service relating to the fee so imposed.

(b) Report.—Not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Comptroller General shall submit to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate a report in classified form containing—

(1) the results of the study conducted under subsection (a); and

(2) recommendations for the appropriate amount of the customs user fees if such results indicate that the fees are not commensurate with the level of services provided by the Customs Service.

Subtitle D—Antiterrorism Provisions

SEC. 141. IMMUNITY FOR UNITED STATES OFFICIALS THAT ACT IN GOOD FAITH.

(a) Immunity.—Section 3061 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (19 U.S.C. 482) is amended—

(1) by striking "Any of the officers" and inserting "(a) Any of the officers"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"(b) Any officer or employee of the United States conducting a search of a person pursuant to subsection (a) shall not be held liable for any civil damages as a result of such search if the officer or employee performed the search in good faith.".

(b) Requirement To Post Policy and Procedures for Searches of Passengers.—Not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Commissioner of the Customs Service shall ensure that at each Customs border facility appropriate notice is posted that provides a summary of the policy and procedures of the Customs Service for searching passengers, including a statement of the policy relating to the prohibition on the conduct of profiling of passengers based on gender, race, color, religion, or ethnic background.

SEC. 142. EMERGENCY ADJUSTMENTS TO OFFICES, PORTS OF ENTRY, OR STAFFING OF THE CUSTOMS SERVICE.

(b) FISCAL YEAR 2003.—Of the amounts made available for fiscal year 2003 under section 301(b)(1)(B) of the Customs Procedural Reform and Simplification Act of 1978 (19 U.S.C. 2075(b)(1)(B)), as amended by section 101(a) of this Act, $9,000,000 shall be available until expended for the maintenance and support of the equipment and training of personnel to maintain and support the equipment described in subsection (a).

(c) ACQUISITION OF TECHNOLOGICALLY SUPERIOR EQUIPMENT; TRANSFER OF FUNDS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Commissioner of Customs may use amounts made available for fiscal year 2002 under section 301(b)(1)(A) of the Customs Procedural Reform and Simplification Act of 1978 (19 U.S.C. 2075(b)(1)(A)), as amended by section 101(a) of this Act, for the acquisition of equipment other than the equipment described in subsection (a) if such other equipment—

(A)(i) is technologically superior to the equipment described in subsection (a); and

(ii) will achieve at least the same results at a cost that is the same or less than the equipment described in subsection (a); or

(B) can be obtained at a lower cost than the equipment described in subsection (a).

(2) TRANSFER OF FUNDS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the Commissioner of Customs may reallocate an amount not to exceed 10 percent of—

(A) the amount specified in any of subparagraphs (A) through (R) of subsection (a)(1) for equipment specified in any other of such subparagraphs (A) through (R);

(B) the amount specified in any of subparagraphs (A) through (G) of subsection (a)(2) for equipment specified in any other of such subparagraphs (A) through (G); and

(C) the amount specified in any of subparagraphs (A) through (E) of subsection (a)(3) for equipment specified in any other of such subparagraphs (A) through (E).

SEC. 103. COMPLIANCE WITH PERFORMANCE PLAN REQUIREMENTS.

As part of the annual performance plan for each of the fiscal years 2002 and 2003 covering each program activity set forth in the budget of the United States Customs Service, as required under section 1115 of title 31, United States Code, the Commissioner of Customs shall establish performance goals, performance indicators, and comply with all other requirements contained in paragraphs (1) through (6) of subsection (a) of such section with respect to each of the activities to be carried out pursuant to section 102.

Subtitle B—Child Cyber-Smuggling Center of the Customs Service

SEC. 111. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR PROGRAM TO PREVENT CHILD PORNOGRAPHY/CHILD SEXUAL EXPLOITATION.

(a) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to the Customs Service $10,000,000 for fiscal year 2002 to carry out the program to prevent child pornography/child sexual exploitation established by the Child Cyber-Smuggling Center of the Customs Service.

(b) USE OF AMOUNTS FOR CHILD PORNOGRAPHY CYBER TIPLINE.—Of the amount appropriated under subsection (a), the Customs Service shall provide 3.75 percent of such amount to the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children for the operation of the child pornography cyber tipline of the Center and for increased public awareness of the tipline.

Subtitle C—Miscellaneous Provisions

SEC. 121. ADDITIONAL CUSTOMS SERVICE OFFICERS FOR UNITED STATES-CANADA BORDER.

Of the amount made available for fiscal year 2002 under paragraphs (1) and (2)(A) of section 301(b) of the Customs Procedural Reform and Simplification Act of 1978 (19 U.S.C. 2075(b)), as amended by section 101 of this Act, $28,300,000 shall be available until expended for the Customs Service to hire approximately 285 additional Customs Service officers to address the needs of the offices and ports along the United States-Canada border.

SEC. 122. STUDY AND REPORT RELATING TO PERSONNEL PRACTICES OF THE CUSTOMS SERVICE.

(a) STUDY.—The Commissioner of Customs shall conduct a study of current personnel practices of the Customs Service, including an overview of performance standards and the effect and impact of the collective bargaining process on drug interdiction efforts of the Customs Service and a comparison of duty rotation policies of the Customs Service and other Federal agencies that employ similarly-situated personnel.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Commissioner of Customs shall submit to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate a report containing the results of the study conducted under subsection (a).

SEC. 123. STUDY AND REPORT RELATING TO ACCOUNTING AND AUDITING PROCEDURES OF THE CUSTOMS SERVICE.

(a) STUDY.—(1) The Commissioner of Customs shall conduct a study of actions by the Customs Service to ensure that appropriate training is being provided to Customs Service personnel who are responsible for financial auditing of importers.

(2) In conducting the study, the Commissioner—

(A) shall specifically identify those actions taken to comply with provisions of law that protect the privacy and trade secrets of importers, such as section 552(b) of title 5, United States Code, and section 1905 of title 18, United States Code; and

(B) shall provide for public notice and comment relating to verification of the actions described in subparagraph (A).

(b) REPORT.—Not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Commissioner of Customs shall submit to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate a report containing the results of the study conducted under subsection (a).

SEC. 124. ESTABLISHMENT AND IMPLEMENTATION OF COST ACCOUNTING SYSTEM; REPORTS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT AND IMPLEMENTATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than September 30, 2003, the Commissioner of Customs shall, in accordance with the audit of the Customs Service's fiscal years 2000 and 1999 financial statements (as contained in the report of the Office of the Inspector General of the Department of the Treasury issued on February 23, 2001), establish and implement a cost accounting system for expenses incurred in both commercial and noncommercial operations of the Customs Service.

(2) ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENT.—The cost accounting system described in paragraph (1) shall provide for an identification of expenses based on the type of operation, the port at which the operation took place, the amount of time spent on the operation by personnel of the Customs Service, and an identification of expenses based on any other appropriate classification necessary to provide for an accurate and complete accounting of the expenses.

(b) REPORTS.—Beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act and ending on the date on which the cost accounting system described in subsection (a) is fully implemented, the Commissioner of Customs shall prepare and submit to Congress on a quarterly basis a report on the progress of implementing the cost accounting system pursuant to subsection (a).

SEC. 125. STUDY AND REPORT RELATING TO TIMELINESS OF PROSPECTIVE RULINGS.

(a) STUDY.—The Comptroller General shall conduct a study on the extent to which the Office of Regulations and Rulings of the Customs Service has made improvements to decrease the amount of time to issue prospective rulings from the date on which a request for the ruling is received by the Customs Service.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Comptroller General shall submit to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate a report containing the results of the study conducted under subsection (a).

(c) DEFINITION.—In this section, the term "prospective ruling" means a ruling that is requested by an importer on goods that are proposed to be imported into the United States and that relates to the proper classification, valuation, or marking of such goods.

SEC. 126. STUDY AND REPORT RELATING TO CUSTOMS USER FEES.

(a) STUDY.—The Comptroller General shall conduct a study on the extent to which the amount of each customs user fee imposed under section 13031(a) of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (19 U.S.C. 58c(a)) is commensurate with the level of services provided by the Customs Service relating to the fee so imposed.

(b) Report.—Not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Comptroller General shall submit to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate a report in classified form containing—

(1) the results of the study conducted under subsection (a); and

(2) recommendations for the appropriate amount of the customs user fees if such results indicate that the fees are not commensurate with the level of services provided by the Customs Service.

SEC. 127. FEES FOR CUSTOMS INSPECTIONS AT EXPRESS COURIER FACILITIES.

(a) In General.—Section 13031(b)(9) of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (19 U.S.C. 58c(b)(9)) is amended as follows:

(1) In subparagraph (A)—

(A) in the matter preceding clause (i), by striking "the processing of merchandise that is informally entered or released" and inserting "the processing of letters, documents, records, shipments, merchandise, or any other item that is valued at an amount under $2,000 (or such higher amount as the Secretary may set by regulation pursuant to section 498 of the Tariff Act of 1930), whether or not such items are informally entered or released (except items entered or released for immediate exportation),"; and

(B) in clause (ii) to read as follows:

"(ii) In the case of an express consignment carrier facility or centralized hub facility, $.66 per individual airway bill or bill of lading.".

(2) By redesignating subparagraph (B) as subparagraph (C) and inserting after subparagraph (A) the following:

"(B)(i) For fiscal year 2004 and subsequent fiscal years, the Secretary of the Treasury may adjust (not more than once per fiscal year) the amount described in subparagraph (A)(ii) to not less than $.35 but not more than $1.00 per individual airway bill or bill of lading. The Secretary shall provide notice in the Federal Register of a proposed adjustment under the preceding sentence and the reasons therefor and shall allow for public comment on the proposed adjustment.

"(ii) The payment required by subparagraph (A)(ii) shall be the only payment required for reimbursement of the Customs Service in connection with the processing of an individual airway bill or bill of lading in accordance with such subparagraph, except that the Customs Service may charge a fee to cover expenses of the Customs Service for adequate office space, equipment, furnishings, supplies, and security.

"(iii)(I) The payment required by subparagraph (A)(ii) and clause (ii) shall be paid on a quarterly basis to the Customs Service in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

"(II) 50 percent of the amount of payments received under subparagraph (A)(ii) and clause (ii) shall, in accordance with section 524 of the Tariff Act of 1930, be deposited as a refund to the appropriation for the amount paid out of that appropriation for the costs incurred in providing services to express consignment carrier facilities or centralized hub facilities. Amounts deposited in accordance with the preceding sentence shall be available until expended for the provision of customs services to express consignment carrier facilities or centralized hub facilities.

"(III) Notwithstanding section 524 of the Tariff Act of 1930, the remaining 50 percent of the amount of payments received under subparagraph (A)(ii) and clause (ii) shall be paid to the Secretary of the Treasury, which is in lieu of the payment of fees under subsection (a)(10) of this section.".

(b) Effective Date.—The amendments made by subsection (a) take effect on October 1, 2002.

SEC. 128. NATIONAL CUSTOMS AUTOMATION PROGRAM.

Section 411(b) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1411(b)) is amended by striking the second sentence and inserting the following: "The Secretary may, by regulation, require the electronic submission of information described in subsection (a) or any other information required to be submitted to the Customs Service separately pursuant to this subpart.".

Subtitle D—Antiterrorism Provisions

SEC. 141. IMMUNITY FOR UNITED STATES OFFICIALS THAT ACT IN GOOD FAITH.

(a) Immunity.—Section 3061 of the Revised Statutes (19 U.S.C. 482) is amended—

(1) by striking "Any of the officers" and inserting "(a) Any of the officers"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"(b) Any officer or employee of the United States conducting a search of a person pursuant to subsection (a) shall not be held liable for any civil damages as a result of such search if the officer or employee performed the search in good faith.".

(b) Requirement To Post Policy and Procedures for Searches of Passengers.—Not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Commissioner of the Customs Service shall ensure that at each Customs border facility appropriate notice is posted that provides a summary of the policy and procedures of the Customs Service for searching passengers, including a statement of the policy relating to the prohibition on the conduct of profiling of passengers based on gender, race, color, religion, or ethnic background.

SEC. 142. EMERGENCY ADJUSTMENTS TO OFFICES, PORTS OF ENTRY, OR STAFFING OF THE CUSTOMS SERVICE.

Section 318 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1318) is amended—

(1) by striking "Whenever the President" and inserting "(a) Whenever the President"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"(b)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Treasury, when necessary to respond to a national emergency declared under the National Emergencies Act (50 U.S.C. 1601 et seq.) or to a specific threat to human life or national interests, is authorized to take the following actions on a temporary basis:

"(A) Eliminate, consolidate, or relocate any office or port of entry of the Customs Service.

"(B) Modify hours of service, alter services rendered at any location, or reduce the number of employees at any location.

"(C) Take any other action that may be necessary to directly respond to the national emergency or specific threat.

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commissioner of Customs, when necessary to respond to a specific threat to human life or national interests, is authorized to close temporarily any Customs office or port of entry or take any other lesser action that may be necessary to respond to the specific threat.

"(3) The Secretary of the Treasury or the Commissioner of Customs, as the case may be, shall notify the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate not later than 72 hours after taking any action under paragraph (1) or (2).".

SEC. 143. MANDATORY ADVANCED ELECTRONIC INFORMATION FOR CARGO AND PASSENGERS.

(a) Cargo Information.—

(1) In general.—Section 431(b) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1431(b)) is amended—

(A) in the first sentence, by striking "Any manifest" and inserting "(1) Any manifest"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following:

"(2)(A) In addition to any other requirement under this section, for each land, air, or vessel carrier required to make entry under the customs laws of the United States, the pilot, the master, operator, or owner of such carrier (or the authorized agent of such operator or owner) shall provide by electronic transmission cargo manifest information in advance of such entry in such manner, time, and form as prescribed under regulations by the Secretary. The Secretary may exclude any class of land, air, or vessel carrier for which the Secretary concludes the requirements of this subparagraph are not necessary.

"(B) The Secretary shall cooperate with other appropriate Federal departments and agencies for the purpose of providing to such departments and agencies as soon as practicable cargo manifest information obtained pursuant to subparagraph (A). In carrying out the preceding sentence, the Secretary, to the maximum extent practicable, shall protect the privacy and property rights with respect to the cargo involved.".

(2) Conforming amendments.—Subparagraphs (A) and (C) of section 431(d)(1) of such Act are each amended by inserting before the semicolon "or subsection (b)(2)".

(b) Passenger Information.—Part II of title IV of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1431 et seq.) is amended by inserting after section 431 the following:

"SEC. 432. PASSENGER AND CREW INFORMATION REQUIRED FOR LAND, AIR, OR VESSEL CARRIERS.

"(a) In General.—For every person arriving or departing on a land, air, or vessel carrier required to make entry or obtain clearance under the customs laws of the United States, the pilot, the master, operator, or owner of such carrier (or the authorized agent of such operator or owner) shall provide by electronic transmission information described in subsection (b) in advance of such entry or clearance in such manner, time, and form as prescribed under regulations by the Secretary.

"(b) Information Described.—The information described in this subsection shall include for each person described in subsection (a), if applicable, the person's—

"(1) full name;

"(2) date of birth and citizenship;

"(3) gender;

"(4) passport number and country of issuance;

"(5) United States visa number or resident alien card number;

"(6) passenger name record; and

"(7) such additional information that the Secretary, by regulation, determines is reasonably necessary to ensure aviation and maritime safety pursuant to the laws enforced or administered by the Customs Service.

"(c) Sharing of Information.—The Secretary shall cooperate with other appropriate Federal departments and agencies for the purpose of providing to such departments and agencies as soon as practicable electronic transmission information obtained pursuant to subsection (a). In carrying out the preceding sentence, the Secretary, to the maximum extent practicable, shall protect the privacy rights of the person with respect to which the information relates.".

(c) DEFINITION.—Section 401 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1401) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(t) The term 'land, air, or vessel carrier' means a land, air, or vessel carrier, as the case may be, that transports goods or passengers for payment or other consideration, including money or services rendered.".

"(6)(A) If during the course of any audit concluded under this subsection, the Customs Service identifies overpayments of duties or fees or over-declarations of quantities or values that are within the time period and scope of the audit that the Customs Service has defined, then in calculating the loss of revenue or monetary penalties under section 592, the Customs Service shall treat the overpayments or over-declarations on finally liquidated entries as an offset to any underpayments or underdeclarations also identified on finally liquidated entries if such overpayments or over-declarations were not made by the person being audited for the purpose of violating any provision of law.

"(B) Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to authorize a refund not otherwise authorized under section 520.".

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 426, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CRANE) and a Member opposed each will control 5 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CRANE).

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

The substitute increases authorization funding levels at section 101, including earmark for resources at northern border at section 131, new section 121. It extends authorization through 2004. It deletes sections 121 through 125 concerning customs officer pay changes, and renumbers. It adds new section 127 to change customs' fees for couriers to a fixed fee structure. It clarifies in section 143 that advanced electronic manifest requirements applies only to inbound cargo, as provisions to require sharing of information collected by customs to other government agencies.

It clarifies in section 143 that advanced information for passengers and crew is not intended to create new immigration requirements. Specifically, the Secretary can demand passport and visa information only if such a requirement to have a passport or visa already applies to the passenger or crew.

Mr. Chairman, these provisions are designed to make the bill stronger. I urge a "yes" vote on the Thomas substitute.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Chairman, I claim the time in opposition to the amendment, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. HAYES), our distinguished colleague.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of this bill today, the manager's amendment, the substitute by the gentleman from California (Mr. THOMAS). H.R. 3129 will provide customs with better tools to protect America's borders during this time of war. But specifically, I would like to highlight some of the provisions for the textile industry.

Illegal transshipments are some of the most critical issues facing our domestic textile industry, and it is one of the issues that I said should be a part of any debate on trade. I want to thank the chairman and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CRANE) for their willingness to work with me and other Members and with the textile industry to address this growing problem of illegal textile transshipments.

Without question, one of the greatest threats to our domestic textile industry is the illegal shipment of textile and apparel goods from ports around the world. Our domestic industry can compete on a level playing field, but they cannot compete against a flood of illegal imports. This bill will go far in helping to address the problem. It adds $9.5 million to fight textile transshipment through added staff dedicated to specific geographic areas such as Hong Kong, India, Korea, Mexico, and the Middle East. It includes an additional 50 new staff, including investigators and inspectors.

By no means will this solve every problem, but it will be very helpful in fighting the problems of illegal transshipments; and I urge my colleagues' support.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, I am glad that this bill has within it the language regarding transshipment that has been mentioned by the distinguished gentleman who spoke before me. I do want to point out, however, that this bill is strictly an authorization; and unless there is an appropriation to carry it out, the language would not be meaningful.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I would urge our colleagues on a good, strong, bipartisan basis to support this substitute.

Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CRANE).

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. It is now in order to consider amendment No. 2 printed in House Report 107–482.

AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE OFFERED BY MS. WATERS

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATERS) the designee of the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL)?

Ms. WATERS. Yes, I am.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The text of the amendment in the nature of a substitute is as follows:

Amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Ms. WATERS:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

Subtitle C—Miscellaneous Provisions

SEC. 121. ADDITIONAL CUSTOMS SERVICE OFFICERS FOR UNITED STATES-CANADA BORDER.

Of the amount made available for fiscal year 2002 under paragraphs (1) and (2)(A) of section 301(b) of the Customs Procedural Reform and Simplification Act of 1978 (19 U.S.C. 2075(b)), as amended by section 101 of this Act, $28,300,000 shall be available until expended for the Customs Service to hire approximately 285 additional Customs Service officers to address the needs of the offices and ports along the United States-Canada border.

SEC. 122. STUDY AND REPORT RELATING TO PERSONNEL PRACTICES OF THE CUSTOMS SERVICE.

(a) STUDY.—The Commissioner of Customs shall conduct a study of current personnel practices of the Customs Service, including an overview of performance standards and the effect and impact of the collective bargaining process on drug interdiction efforts of the Customs Service and a comparison of duty rotation policies of the Customs Service and other Federal agencies that employ similarly-situated personnel.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Commissioner of Customs shall submit to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate a report containing the results of the study conducted under subsection (a).

SEC. 123. STUDY AND REPORT RELATING TO ACCOUNTING AND AUDITING PROCEDURES OF THE CUSTOMS SERVICE.

(a) STUDY.—(1) The Commissioner of Customs shall conduct a study of actions by the Customs Service to ensure that appropriate training is being provided to Customs Service personnel who are responsible for financial auditing of importers.

(2) In conducting the study, the Commissioner—

(A) shall specifically identify those actions taken to comply with provisions of law that protect the privacy and trade secrets of importers, such as section 552(b) of title 5, United States Code, and section 1905 of title 18, United States Code; and

(B) shall provide for public notice and comment relating to verification of the actions described in subparagraph (A).

(b) REPORT.—Not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Commissioner of Customs shall submit to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate a report containing the results of the study conducted under subsection (a).

SEC. 124. ESTABLISHMENT AND IMPLEMENTATION OF COST ACCOUNTING SYSTEM; REPORTS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT AND IMPLEMENTATION.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Not later than September 30, 2003, the Commissioner of Customs shall, in accordance with the audit of the Customs Service's fiscal years 2000 and 1999 financial statements (as contained in the report of the Office of the Inspector General of the Department of the Treasury issued on February 23, 2001), establish and implement a cost accounting system for expenses incurred in both commercial and noncommercial operations of the Customs Service.

(2) ADDITIONAL REQUIREMENT.—The cost accounting system described in paragraph (1) shall provide for an identification of expenses based on the type of operation, the port at which the operation took place, the amount of time spent on the operation by personnel of the Customs Service, and an identification of expenses based on any other appropriate classification necessary to provide for an accurate and complete accounting of the expenses.

(b) REPORTS.—Beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act and ending on the date on which the cost accounting system described in subsection (a) is fully implemented, the Commissioner of Customs shall prepare and submit to Congress on a quarterly basis a report on the progress of implementing the cost accounting system pursuant to subsection (a).

SEC. 125. STUDY AND REPORT RELATING TO TIMELINESS OF PROSPECTIVE RULINGS.

(a) STUDY.—The Comptroller General shall conduct a study on the extent to which the Office of Regulations and Rulings of the Customs Service has made improvements to decrease the amount of time to issue prospective rulings from the date on which a request for the ruling is received by the Customs Service.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Comptroller General shall submit to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate a report containing the results of the study conducted under subsection (a).

(c) DEFINITION.—In this section, the term "prospective ruling" means a ruling that is requested by an importer on goods that are proposed to be imported into the United States and that relates to the proper classification, valuation, or marking of such goods.

SEC. 126. STUDY AND REPORT RELATING TO CUSTOMS USER FEES.

(a) STUDY.—The Comptroller General shall conduct a study on the extent to which the amount of each customs user fee imposed under section 13031(a) of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (19 U.S.C. 58c(a)) is commensurate with the level of services provided by the Customs Service relating to the fee so imposed.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Comptroller General shall submit to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate a report in classified form containing—

(1) the results of the study conducted under subsection (a); and

(2) recommendations for the appropriate amount of the customs user fees if such results indicate that the fees are not commensurate with the level of services provided by the Customs Service.

SEC. 127. FEES FOR CUSTOMS INSPECTIONS AT EXPRESS COURIER FACILITIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 13031(b)(9) of the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (19 U.S.C. 58c(b)(9)) is amended as follows:

(1) In subparagraph (A)—

(A) in the matter preceding clause (i), by striking "the processing of merchandise that is informally entered or released" and inserting "the processing of letters, documents, records, shipments, merchandise, or any other item that is valued at an amount under $2,000 (or such higher amount as the Secretary may set by regulation pursuant to section 498 of the Tariff Act of 1930), whether or not such items are informally entered or released (except items entered or released for immediate exportation),"; and

(B) in clause (ii) to read as follows:

"(ii) In the case of an express consignment carrier facility or centralized hub facility, $.66 per individual airway bill or bill of lading.".

(2) By redesignating subparagraph (B) as subparagraph (C) and inserting after subparagraph (A) the following:

"(B)(i) For fiscal year 2004 and subsequent fiscal years, the Secretary of the Treasury may adjust (not more than once per fiscal year) the amount described in subparagraph (A)(ii) to not less than $.35 but not more than $1.00 per individual airway bill or bill of lading. The Secretary shall provide notice in the Federal Register of a proposed adjustment under the preceding sentence and the reasons therefor and shall allow for public comment on the proposed adjustment.

"(ii) The payment required by subparagraph (A)(ii) shall be the only payment required for reimbursement of the Customs Service in connection with the processing of an individual airway bill or bill of lading in accordance with such subparagraph, except that the Customs Service may charge a fee to cover expenses of the Customs Service for adequate office space, equipment, furnishings, supplies, and security.

"(iii)(I) The payment required by subparagraph (A)(ii) and clause (ii) shall be paid on a quarterly basis to the Customs Service in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

"(II) 50 percent of the amount of payments received under subparagraph (A)(ii) and clause (ii) shall, in accordance with section 524 of the Tariff Act of 1930, be deposited as a refund to the appropriation for the amount paid out of that appropriation for the costs incurred in providing services to express consignment carrier facilities or centralized hub facilities. Amounts deposited in accordance with the preceding sentence shall be available until expended for the provision of customs services to express consignment carrier facilities or centralized hub facilities.

"(III) Notwithstanding section 524 of the Tariff Act of 1930, the remaining 50 percent of the amount of payments received under subparagraph (A)(ii) and clause (ii) shall be paid to the Secretary of the Treasury, which is in lieu of the payment of fees under subsection (a)(10) of this section.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) take effect on October 1, 2002.

SEC. 128. NATIONAL CUSTOMS AUTOMATION PROGRAM.

Section 411(b) of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1411(b)) is amended by striking the second sentence and inserting the following: "The Secretary may, by regulation, require the electronic submission of information described in subsection (a) or any other information required to be submitted to the Customs Service separately pursuant to this subpart.".

Subtitle D—Antiterrorism Provisions

(a) EXCLUSIVE REMEDY.—Section 3061 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (19 U.S.C. 482) is amended—

(1) by striking "Any of the officers" and inserting "(a) Any of the officers"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"(b) The remedy against the United States for claims arising from the search of a person made pursuant to subsection (a) by any officer or employee of the Federal government while acting within the scope of his office or employment is exclusive of any other civil action or proceeding for money damages by reason of the same subject matter against the employee whose act or omission gave rise to the claim or against the estate of such employee. The United States shall be liable for any such claim, and any other civil action or proceeding for money damages arising out of or relating to the same subject matter against the employee or the employees estate is precluded without regard to when the act or omission occurred.".

(b) REQUIREMENT TO POST POLICY AND PROCEDURES FOR SEARCHES OF PASSENGERS.—Not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Commissioner of the Customs Service shall ensure that at each Customs border facility appropriate notice is posted that provides a summary of the policy and procedures of the Customs Service for searching passengers, including a statement of the policy relating to the prohibition on the conduct of profiling of passengers based on gender, race, color, religion, or ethnic background.

SEC. 142. EMERGENCY ADJUSTMENTS TO OFFICES, PORTS OF ENTRY, OR STAFFING OF THE CUSTOMS SERVICE.

Section 318 of the Tariff Act of 1930 (19 U.S.C. 1318) is amended—

(1) by striking "Whenever the President" and inserting "(a) Whenever the President"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"(b)(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Treasury, when necessary to respond to a national emergency declared under the National Emergencies Act (50 U.S.C. 1601 et seq.) or to a specific threat to human life or national interests, is authorized to take the following actions on a temporary basis:

"(A) Eliminate, consolidate, or relocate any office or port of entry of the Customs Service.

"(B) Modify hours of service, alter services rendered at any location, or reduce the number of employees at any location.

"(C) Take any other action that may be necessary to directly respond to the national emergency or specific threat.

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commissioner of Customs, when necessary to respond to a specific threat to human life or national interests, is authorized to close temporarily any Customs office or port of entry or take any other lesser action that may be necessary to respond to the specific threat.

"(3) The Secretary of the Treasury or the Commissioner of Customs, as the case may be, shall notify the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Finance of the Senate not later than 72 hours after taking any action under paragraph (1) or (2).".

"(B) Nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to authorize a refund not otherwise authorized under section 520.".

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 426, the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATERS) and a Member opposed each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATERS).

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer this substitute because the legislation, H.R. 3129, as introduced, needlessly expands the scope of Federal authority and threatens the protection of civil rights by granting broad search immunity to customs agents and by allowing warrantless searches of outgoing international U.S. mail.

We have said over and over again that we support efforts to give protection to customs agents; and when they talk to the Members of Congress about their need for protection, they were not in any way saying that they did not have some immunity. What they were saying is they wanted to get through the courts faster.

This bill goes far too far, and it is unfortunate that the majority has not been able to discuss or compromise on the critical issues of racial profiling and privacy that are raised in this legislation.

This substitute does address those civil liberties questions and retains the portion of the bill that fairly addresses issues of border security.

It has been consistently stated by the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL) and others that the existing doctrine of qualified immunity shields public officials performing discretionary functions from civil damages if their conduct does not violate any clearly established statutory or constitutional rights which a reasonable person should have known. The Supreme Court has repeatedly held that the reasonableness of an officer's behavior, not the subjective good-faith standard used in this legislation, is the proper test for liability.

What the Customs Service has complained about is the pace of trial through the Federal courts. Bluntly stated, they want the cases against their agents disposed of faster, like every other civil litigant in the country. This bill's response in section 141 is the creation of a broad category of immunity, unavailable to any other law enforcement officer.

That provision is both unnecessary and dangerous to the rights of the public who deserve their day in court to protect against racial profiling and other illegal and unconstitutional searches by the Customs Service that have been highlighted in recent GAO studies.

It is important to note that the Customs Service has argued that section 141 of this legislation would apply retroactively and result in the dismissal of a host of lawsuits, many of which were brought by African American women, who are contesting the legality of disparate, intrusive searches documented by the GAO. When viewed in that light, this provision looks less like a tool to address terrorism than a broom to sweep away troublesome cases that raise issues of questionable conduct and policy.

The substitute replaces section 141's grant of immunity with an exclusive remedy against the government for the actions of customs agents who act within the scope of their authority. This compromise fairly balances the interest of customs agents who follow policy with the interests of those aggrieved persons who have been the victim of questionable searches.

With respect to privacy interests, the authors of this bill have completely failed to make a case for weakening the legal standard for the search of U.S. mail. Under current law, the Customs Service is empowered to search, without a warrant, inbound mail handled by the United States Postal Service and packages and letters handled by private carriers such as Federal Express and United Parcel Service.

□ 1500

The Customs Service's interest in confiscating illegal weapons, shipments, drugs, or other contraband inbound or outbound is adequately protected by its ability to secure a search warrant when it has probable cause. Short of an emergency, postal officials can always hold the package while they wait for the court to issue a warrant.

The U.S. Postal Service has even taken the position that there is no evidence that eroding these long-established privacy protections will bring any significant law enforcement improvements over what is achieved using existing statutorily approved law enforcement techniques.

In short, experts from the postal service have determined that this provision is unnecessary. As we search for increased security, we must remain mindful of the fact that our civil liberties are a precious resource, and ensure that freedom is not a casualty.

We believe the Rangel substitute strikes the appropriate balance between civil liberties and security by correcting deficiencies in H.R. 3129 as introduced, because increased security should not come at the cost of our constitutional rights.

Of course, I would urge all of my colleagues to join me in supporting the Rangel substitute.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). Is the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CRANE) opposed to the amendment?

Mr. CRANE. I rise in opposition to the amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. FOLEY), our distinguished colleague from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his hard work on this bill. I strongly oppose the substitute and strongly support the base bill.

Are we giving up freedoms and liberties in this bill? Absolutely not. But when we have looked at what has happened in this country since September 11, I think it is incumbent upon us to strengthen the laws of this country and strengthen the rights of our agents to inspect packages that come. We lost a constituent in Palm Beach County through anthrax. We have lost a lot of relatives and family in the World Trade Center, and in the plane that went down in Pennsylvania.

Every time we start looking at tightening our borders and strengthening our integrity and our system, we hear these charges of civil rights abuse and civil rights violations. What about 2,800-and-some Americans who died in New York? What about their civil rights?

We have to protect our borders. This bill does that. I do not mean to be outraged, but I am at times, because I cannot understand, when we are protecting our own borders, when people are coming into this country as our guests, that we do not have the right to search them thoroughly, whether they are U.S. citizens or guests from other nations.

In order to protect domestic tranquility, we must work to focus our efforts to make certain that we do not hamstring our Customs agents, our mail inspectors, from being able to thoroughly search that evidence which may make its way into the country. Ships that come into the ports should be thoroughly screened.

We do this in this bill. We provide the mechanism and means, since we are asking for manifests before the flights and cargo arrive, so we can thoroughly screen it. We are giving $24 million for Florida and other Gulf Coast seaports. Florida has already been a leader in the Nation on this issue. This bill will provide technology to continue this work.

We also authorize a very important $10 million for child cybersmuggling, which gives the money towards the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children for its operation at the child pornography tip line. We strengthen our borders in Mexico and we strengthen our borders in the north, in Canada. We are not targeting any group. We are not racially profiling. We are providing security and protection for the United States citizens of this country.

I suspect there will be acrimony on this debate. This is the first time since 1992 we have reauthorized the U.S. Customs Service, the oldest law enforcement agency in our country. I am certain there are a lot of people having vigorous debates on civil liberties and civil rights. I do not disagree that we have to be careful not to tread on the basic premises of our Constitution.

But we are at war. We have people who have threatened the integrity of this country. We have people who have destroyed the fabric of our communities through fear, intimidation, and through reckless disregard for human life. We have packages that could come in this country that could destroy our ports. So I think we have to be more proactive. I think we have to give them the tools. I think we have to provide for them some legal protection so they can make the appropriate search.

If we are to wait for a court to rule on every package that comes in this country through the U.S. mail service, or by virtue of a person carrying it across our borders, we will forever jeopardize the safety and integrity of this country. The courts do not move that fast, they do not operate that quickly. What we are trying to do is provide a level of protection for our citizens. I think it is high time we do.

I salute the committee for its hard work on this bill, and the chairman, and I salute the many Members that I believe will vote for this, because it provides, finally, the tools I think we need to not only protect our borders, but to protect our people.

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. BECERRA).

Mr. BECERRA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman from California, my friend, for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, the substitute is very simple, because for the most part, as I believe most of us have said earlier, this bill is actually a very good bill. It just has two provisions which are heinous, which go against our Constitution. If most Americans would have an opportunity to examine this, they would say that this does not belong here.

The first provision grants an exception to our privacy rights to allow Customs, without ever having to go after a search warrant, without ever having to show probable cause, to open up American citizens' mail. This is a provision which they could not substantiate. They could not explain why it was so essential.

I think everyone understands why there is that exception for incoming foreign mail into this country. No one would argue that. But when it comes to Americans and the mail we send abroad, why is it so essential that Mrs. JONES' mail to her mother, who happens to live in the Netherlands, has to be opened without having to go through some scrutiny, legal scrutiny, to determine if it is fair or not for Mrs. JONES' mail to be opened without her consent?

We can do it if we just go through the regular course of getting a warrant, showing probable cause to open up Mrs. JONES' mail. But why all of a sudden do we want to be able to have exceptions?

Remember, just 6 months ago, we passed some laws that gave law enforcement much greater authority as a result of trying to deal with terrorism. But to just undo the mechanisms that we have in place to ensure that we are adequately protected from abusive officials does not seem to be right.

The second provision, which again would mostly target African American women, and that is not conjecture, that is a fact. The General Accounting Office in 2000 found that not only are African American women stopped and searched more often, but it is 9 times more often than their counterparts, Anglo or white women counterparts, 9 times more often. Guess what? It also happens to be the case that those African American women are half as likely to contain contraband as white women, American women.

So while the group that is most targeted is least likely to possess contraband, they are the ones who are most targeted. How does that make sense? When one has had their rights violated, rights under the Constitution, why should we not be able to go out there and seek justice, seek redress?

This substitute says you cannot go after monetary damage, but it also does not say forget about the constitutional rights, you also cannot go after that rogue official who went after you.

Most of our officials within Customs are excellent officers. Several have died in the line of duty. I know the person who stopped the suspected terrorist from coming down to Los Angeles and bombing, or rigging bombs at the Los Angeles International Airport, my airport, was a Customs officer in the State of Washington.

They do tremendous work. Why do we have to paint all of them with the broad brush and believe that they are all going to be bad apples or rogue officers and do these bad things? When there is one that does it, why deny us the chance to seek a constitutionally protected right?

Mr. Chairman, I would ask the chairman if he would engage with me in a brief colloquy. I have a concern that has also been raised as to whether or not this provision, section 141 in the law, is actually retroactive, which would mean that previous bad acts by officials would also be exempted from action if this legislation were to become law.

I guess if we had to pass this, at least let us make it forward-looking, so officers are now on alert.

Mr. Chairman, I would ask the chairman if he would be willing to entertain a brief colloquy. I am concerned that this legislation, as I believe Customs is trying to profess, would be retroactive. But as I read section 141, there is nothing in the provision that says that this will apply to previous conduct of Customs officials. I would hope the chairman would clarify whether or not this law is indeed retroactive.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECERRA. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that it is absolutely not retroactive.

Mr. BECERRA. It is not retroactive. I thank the chairman for that answer, and I reclaim my time.

Mr. Chairman, we need to do everything we can to give our law enforcement men and women the tools they need. This bill does a lot to go that route of giving them the resources, the tools they need.

One of the tools they do not need is the ability to violate the Constitution. One of the tools they do not need is the ability to violate our privacy rights. I don't believe any officer from Customs would stand here and say that is what I want.

I can understand if they are saying we want to have any frivolous lawsuit against our conduct while engaging in the scope of our authority, that that should not be appropriate; that those lawsuits while they were acting in the scope of their authority should not be appropriate. Those frivolous lawsuits, absolutely.

In fact, this substitute has language which, as I said before, would not permit monetary damages against a law enforcement official acting within his scope of authority.

So I would hope that the Members of this body will recognize that this substitute is reasonable, it is sensibly based, and it tries to go after the problem that Customs tried to identify, which completely missed in providing some exceptions to constitutional law which have no place in this good legislation.

I would hope that my colleagues, as they come down, would recognize that. We want to do everything we can to elevate our good officers, but there is no reason to protect the bad apples. I would hope that Members would vote for the substitute.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER).

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Chairman, first let me say that I believe that some of the statements that have been made in the course of this debate, while well-intentioned, have been bordering on outrageous. I would like to correct some of the record.

My particular involvement in this has been as chair of the Subcommittee on Criminal Justice, Drug Policy, and Human Resources in the Committee on Government Reform, where we have authorizing and oversight authority on the drug issues, which has led me into the border issues whenever we talk about drugs.

The reason our subcommittee also has jurisdiction over commerce is it leads us into trade. The reason we have jurisdiction over Justice is it leads us into immigration.

We have held 6 hearings since September 11, 3 on the north border, 3 on the south border, in addition to myself visiting many of these water crossings, as well as staff doing additional border crossings. So far, we have held hearings on the Vermont and upstate New York borders, we have held hearings in the Washington State corridor with Seattle, and in Los Angeles and Long Beach harbors, as well as in San Diego and as well as in Douglas, Arizona, on both borders.

I have also been to relatively obscure sights like Fortuna and Portal, North Dakota, where if you wanted to get a judge to clear something, you would have something in the vicinity of probably 120 miles to go with hardly a tree between there and the judge, where some of these counties only have 2 policemen in the whole county, and where our entire security perimeter is the Customs and the Border Patrol or INS agent at that little station. North Dakota ironically has more crossings with Canada than any other State.

We are totally dependent on our brave personnel at the border to make judgment decisions.

I want to cover a number of things in this, but first let me cover what I believe are some relatively outrageous statements made on the good faith searches.

First off, under this bill, they have to follow the Customs guidelines, which explicitly say never use a person's gender, race, color, religion, or ethnic background as a factor in determining any level of suspicion. That is in the report language. In the bill it says "good faith searches." This defines "good faith searches."

We have heard a lot of statements on the floor that are not accurate. In fact, when I met the officer, Diana Dean, at Port Angeles, who, because of her and 2 other Customs agents, they were able to intercept what was going to be a millenium bomber in Los Angeles, they themselves went outside of existing regulations in pursuit of the terrorist who had fled, because they had to make a judgment that this person seemed nervous at the border. They decided that the risk was so high that they would risk a lawsuit in order to try to save people's lives in Los Angeles.

The thanks that they get is to imply that somehow they are not going to follow the Customs guidelines in gender-specific or race-specific searches because they saved people's lives. We should not have people on the border who are risking their careers or their livelihoods based on their right to protect us, and we need to work out these types of questions. They did not search somebody's mail, but, in fact, they went in hot pursuit, which was something that had they not done, the terrorist would have escaped. Had we not captured that terrorist, we would not have much of the information on al Qaeda networks that are in Montreal and other places. We would not have been able to put together the schemes.

Every day on every border every Customs agent has to ask himself or herself, what is their priority; is their priority the safety of the citizens they are hired to protect, whether it be the laws of the United States or, in fact, a terrorist?

□ 1515

They have to make a decision, what is the priority. And at every border crossing, north and south, agents have told me that they are concerned about their flexibility and what their guidelines are and that they are inhibited in their ability not to racial profile, but how they are just extra cautious because they believe that without the ability to have good-faith searches and a little more clarity inside the Customs Department to change this. This is not a dramatic change, because, as I said, good faith says they cannot profile on the basis of gender, race, color, religion or ethnic background.

Now let me address another point. One of the big problems we have on the north border is that DC Bud and Quebec Gold are coming across from Canada. In the south border it is heroine and cocaine coming in. In the north border it is also precursor chemicals coming in for methamphetamines.

What goes back out from American citizens the other way or from illegals or citizens of other countries is the money. If we are going to track the money that goes to terrorists and drug cartels around the world, we have to have the ability to, when there is likely suspicion based on good-faith logical efforts, to be able to search in a timely fashion without hesitance because you are making judgment at the border. You have to establish it is a good-faith effort. You have to be able to track the money.

We have lost much of the terrorist networks around the world because we are losing track of the money. And much of that money is coming back from America going out. At the Canadian Parliamentary/U.S. Parliamentary session that we had this past weekend, one of their concerns is that we are slowing at certain borders, and on our side of the border we have slowed down the borders because we are doing so much checking going out. That is because a lot of the problem is not Canadian and it is not Mexican or Central American, it is American citizens who are, in fact, bringing things in and then taking it back out and we have to have some ability to track that money.

Furthermore, one of the big concerns for all the communities, whether it be Southern California or Texas or Arizona or in the north States like Michigan and Indiana and Washington State, for example, a pickup that is made in Fort Wayne will have as many as a hundred border crossings put in the pickup because they basically have 40 percent Canadian parts and about 60 percent U.S.; and the same thing on the reverse of the border. When you have that happen, we cannot be random checking every single person that is going through. Clearly we have to have some form of better intelligence and better screening.

But we also have to have, because of the biggest busts in United States history, whether it be of drugs on the Vermont border, whether it be at Port Angeles where people save many of thousands of lives because they use their judgment as a customs agent, they have to feel that they are making the best judgment. What one of the people at the Vermont border saw was they thought there was something funny on the bottom of a truck because the bottom of the truck, one of the pieces of equipment did not look right. They decided to check this truck. It was the biggest drug haul they ever got at that border.

We depend on the discretion of these brave people on the border to do this. We need to give them some flexibility because they are trying to protect us. They still cannot harass. They still cannot single out based on that. They have to have a logical good-faith suspicion that is there.

I have a full statement I would like to put on the record on the need to reauthorize the Customs Service. I am disappointed that we did not address the overtime question. We are using these people in many cases for 60 hours a week. We are running out of the budget. We need to figure out how we will deal with this. It has been a great privilege and honor to meet so many of them. I think they should be upheld and praised and not criticized.

1. NEED TO REAUTHORIZE AND IMPROVE CUSTOMS SERVICE

H.R. 3129 comes at an extremely critical time. In the wake of September 11, it is clear that we have to improve security at our nation's borders and ports of entry. Numerous threats face us at the borders: terrorism, narcotics smuggling, alien smuggling, weapons smuggling. The key agency in intercepting these threats is the U.S. Customs Service.

Customs has not been reauthorized for many years. While I am personally impressed with the job being done by the men and women at the Customs Service, it is clear that they will need more help. H.R. 3129 addresses many of the problems faced by the Customs Service, and will strengthen it as it meets the new challenges of the 21st century.

2. MANIFEST AUTHORITY

Section 143 of this bill will require all carriers who are entering the U.S., whether on land, by sea, or by air, to provide the Customs Service with advance manifests of their cargo, crew and passengers.

This provision is absolutely critical in our ongoing fight against terrorism, narcotics smuggling, and other illegal contraband. The Customs Service needs to have this information before a truck, ship or airplane reaches our borders and shores. Advance information allows Customs to determine which shipments and which persons need extra scrutiny, based on the level of risk. Customs can't target the riskiest cargo, crew members and passengers if it doesn't know in advance what and who they supposedly are.

Currently, carriers are required to provide some information. The amount of information, however, varies widely depending on where trucks, ships and airplanes are arriving. In enacting this provision, I believe we will help Customs standardize and improve its targeting procedures, thus enhancing our security.

3. ENHANCEMENTS IN STAFFING

Our Subcommittee has been conducting a comprehensive study of law enforcement and security at our nation's borders and ports of entry. We have been very impressed with the job being done by Customs employees at land crossings, sea ports and airports. But it is especially clear after September 11 that they need more help, particularly on the Northern border.

Section 131 of this bill authorized funds to hire 285 additional Customs inspectors for the Northern border. This is a good start in addressing the severe staffing problems faced at many of our ports of entry.

After September 11, Customs went to a heightened state of alert, meaning that Customs inspectors began conducting more inspections and working much longer hours. We have spoken to many Customs inspectors, and nearly all of them are putting in long hours of overtime. This will allow our inspectors to receive fair compensation when a national emergency forces them to put in the kind of hours they had to last fall.

4. IMPROVEMENTS IN TECHNOLOGY

Section 102 of this bill provides for additional equipment and technology for Customs inspections on both the Southern and the Northern borders. At each of the ports of entry we have visited, it has been clear that the experience, dedication and judgment of individual inspectors is the most important defense we have against those who would do us harm—like Ahmed Ressam, who was caught trying to smuggle bombs into this country in December 1999 by the alertness of Customs inspectors at Port Angeles, Washington.

However, our inspectors can't do their job if they don't have the right tools, and that means technology. Section 102 authorizes funds for additional equipment and technology at our borders and sea ports. This equipment, including VACIS scanning units, cargo container scanners, and other detection devices, allows Customs inspectors to examine far more trucks and cargo containers than they could manually.

5. AUTOMATED COMMERCIAL ENVIRONMENT (ACE)

Section 101 authorizes funds to continue the development of Customs'; "next generation" computer system, the ACE system. Customs is currently using computer technology that dates back to the mid-1980's. The program is cumbersome, it frequently breaks down, and it simply isn't adaptable to current trade realities. The ACE system will fix these problems and provide the international trade community with a "single window" through which to provide information to all government agencies that regulate and inspect the goods entering the country.

6. IMMUNITY FOR GOOD FAITH SEARCHES

Some people have criticized Section 141, which provides immunity from civil damages for U.S. officials conducting searches at our ports of entry. However, this provision is necessary if our Customs inspectors are going to be able to do the job we're asking them to do. We want our inspectors to be vigilant and thorough in protecting us from terrorists, drug smugglers and others who would do us harm. If so, then we need to give them the assurance that, if they are acting in good faith, they can't be hauled into court.

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. BECERRA).

Mr. BECERRA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me time.

Just to respond to my friend, the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER), the activities that the gentleman described of customs officials trying to apprehend individuals who were suspects or there was probable cause to believe they were suspects, whether it was contraband or terrorist activities, all that is protected under current law because those officials would have been acting under the color of law and would have had under an objective standard the right to do that because it would have been perceived to be reasonable.

What this legislation does, it removes the objective person's standard of what is reasonable under the Constitution, and says what is subjectively reasonable. So that if the officer said, well, I believed I was reasonable in going after that African American woman and strip searching her because I thought she might be carrying contraband, we under this legislation could not challenge that. Because so long as he believed he was acting in good faith, however that good faith is defined, because this bill does not define it, you could not go after that person.

This legislation would deny us any recourse, that African American woman, that individual who is innocent, recourse. What the substitute says, and I will yield with the time that I have, the substitute says, okay, let us protect the officers so they do not find themselves in court, but do not make the government free of liability for violations of the Constitution. Make the government clean up its act even if you do not cause individuals in the customs service to face lawsuits individually.

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BECERRA. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman made a misstatement of fact.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. NETHERCUTT). The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER).

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Chairman, the problem with this standard and, of course, somebody can take it to court if they do not think they filed in good faith, but the fact is that the burden of proof at the time of the actual what is going on at the border, the officer has to make a decision in his mind, not in an outside mind, as to whether it was in good faith. They did at Port Angeles which helped save people in Los Angeles. They made a good-faith effort in what they thought was a good-faith effort. But it intimidates a lot of officers who know if they may think it is a good-faith effort, but somebody outside does not, depending on what that group is and how, it is an inhibiting factor.

They can be sued or you can have a process if you feel it is not good faith in that officer's eyes and he would have to defend that position. It is a question of where the burden is, and you are implying that the customs officers on the border are not capable or we will have rogue officers. If they are rogue officers, they can be pursued. The question is what does the regular officer do and how is it intimidating in our border safety?

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute to continue to deal with the question that is before us.

I think the gentleman misunderstands. The fact of the matter is the gentleman from California (Mr. BECERRA) explained that we are not stripping away the protection. They will have immunity from liability. We are taking the liability and placing it in the hands of government rather than on the individual that would have made that decision who thought that it was a reasonable decision at that time.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from California (Mr. BECERRA).

Mr. BECERRA. Mr. Chairman, the further point where the gentleman from Indiana misstates what is current law and what I said, we base it because the Supreme Court has said, not on what the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER) believes is reasonable or what I believe is reasonable. It is an objective standard, not a subjective standard.

This bill changes the Supreme Court's law that says you base reasonableness on an objective standard, and it says based reasonableness on what that officer believed was reasonable. And that is not fair because that subjective judgment could cause people's rights to be violated.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. FILNER).

Mr. FILNER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me time. I want to thank the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATERS) and the gentleman from California (Mr. BECERRA) for their strong defense of the liberties of our citizens no matter where they are. And I would say to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER) who has become so expert on what is going on at the border, I was at the border with him in San Diego and I was at those hearings and I did those tours. And there was nothing in those hearings that could lead me to the conclusion that he has stated here in favor of the basic bill.

I represent a border district. I represent the southernmost area of California that borders Mexico. After next year I will represent the whole California/Mexico border. In fact, I represent the border crossing in which there are the most people crossing of any place in the world; and I have represented this area for a decade and a half. So I think I know something about what is going on there and what we can achieve and what we can protect. I think we can do both. We can provide customs with the tools that they need to do their job, and we can protect the constitutional rights of my constituents and citizens from all over this country.

We had a very good bill, I am told, that would have received a large vote in support; but the bill that came to the floor sacrificed privacy under the guise of security, and so we have the Waters substitute, which I am speaking in favor of.

The immunity that is requested has not been really supported by customs. They have not made the case of why the current standard of qualified immunity is insufficient. Officers are already protected from the unwarranted claims as we have heard many times before.

As far as the mail goes, we inspect mail that comes into this country because we do not know what it might contain. But with the mail going out, our privacy should not be unduly invaded. As we have heard several times, customs can search the mail already if they get a warrant. They can hold the mail if it is suspicious. But we should not authorize a wholesale opening of mail without a warrant.

Mr. Chairman, in these United States of America even in 2002, even after September 11, we should not try to guarantee the security of our Nation by crushing the civil rights of our people. This is not the way to go. Support the substitute. Vote down the basic bill.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Chairman, how much time do I have remaining?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATERS) controls 14 minutes. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CRANE) controls 18 minutes.

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentlewoman from Texas (Ms. JACKSON-LEE).

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I was very pleased to hear the dialogue and debate with the gentleman from California (Mr. BECERRA) and the distinguished gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER), but I think the more we can clarify what this substitute does we might be able to get legislation that all of us could support. It is a simple process. Those of us who live every day as Americans but also have a history of discrimination by this Nation against us are very sensitive to laws that would undermine even more those basic rights. It is our cause, if you will, our particular duty to bring to this House our diverse perspective, and that is to understand what it means to racially profile young African American males, young African American women, young Hispanic men and women and others of diverse racial backgrounds.

What we say today is that this is not an indictment of customs agents. As all of us have, we have excellent and outstanding customs agents working throughout our Nation in every one of our districts. As I go through the Intercontinental Airport in Houston, Texas, every day, I see the fine work of men and women of the Customs Service. We promote and support them.

As a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, we are constantly looking for ways to enhance and provide them with the resources that they need. Let us divide ourselves with that kind of negative attack which is trying to be drawn to those of us who are now speaking about civil liberties.

It is clear and simple. The substitute is not a complicated initiative. It says this: "Remain in current law with respect to the search of mail; require a warrant, a simple probable cause." That is not a difficult proposition. Might I say that most of us are not getting mail timely anyhow. This is not a comment on the U.S. Postal Service. It is not a comment on the U.S. Postal Service. It is a comment on the status of mail today because of necessary security precautions. We accept that. With that in mind, ample opportunity is given to those who believe there is need to search mail. I welcome them searching mail, but they can do it under current law and that is what the substitute provides.

Secondarily, with respect to the Customs agents, there is no chilling effect. Do the job. If someone determines suspiciousness, I give that person 100 percent latitude to do so. The question becomes those who willy-nilly want to seek persons who have no basis upon being sought, there is no suspiciousness, other than color of their skin, and what the substitute provides for us, which I cannot find a reason to divide on this, it protects the Customs agents 100 percent. It tells them to do their job.

If, however, an aggrieved citizen or person comes and says I know that I was targeted on the basis of not good faith, but on racial profiling, the government stands in the shoes of that agent, protects the agent, but then gives the opportunity of the aggrieved citizen to be able to seek address of their grievances.

That is the key to the substitute. Why this could not be supported by my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, to make this the kind of legislation that speaks to what we are trying to do, not a single divide on fighting terrorism but a recognition that the values of this Nation are different.

Let me finally say, Mr. Chairman, and I have said this before, we have a lot of work to do on fighting terrorism, and part of it is in the question of intelligence and sharing intelligence. It is a shame and a sham that there is a closed session dealing with this by 1 committee when other committees of jurisdiction, such as the Committee on Judiciary, have not yet held hearings regarding this important issue.

I believe if we spend our time trying to track why intelligence and memoranda is not shared up the track or up the line so that we can determine how to fix those problems, I think we can spend a lot of good energies doing that, and in this instance, I think we can spend good energies passing a good substitute to make this bill better so that we can fight terrorism in a unified voice but as well stand for the values that this Nation stands for.

Mr. Chairman, I support the substitute. I would ask my colleagues to do so, and I would ask my colleagues to join me in asking that we investigate fully why memos are not communicated that deal with protecting this Nation and providing good intelligence.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would say to the gentlewoman on the other side of the aisle the fact that none of our colleagues on the Committee on Ways and Means raised this issue during consideration of this bill in committee and the amendment, Rangel amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN).

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am here to urge support for the Rangel substitute which would strike, among other things, section 144 from the bill.

As the ranking member of the committee that has jurisdiction over the Postal Service, I am especially concerned about section 144. This section would allow Customs agents to inspect outbound mail without a search warrant.

Never in our Nation's history have we allowed law enforcement to inspect the outbound personal letters of our Nation's citizens without a search warrant. This is an intrusion on the privacy of the American citizens sending letters abroad, and it could have adverse effects on the delivery of letters by the Postal Service.

As many of my colleagues have heard, the American Civil Liberties Union opposes the measure, saying it violates people's expectation of privacy in the mail and that the Customs Service's interest in protecting our borders is adequately protected by its ability to secure a search warrant.

A leading association of business mailers is concerned about the provision as well, saying it would slow the pace of mail and add millions to the cost of shipping goods overseas.

The Postal Service is strongly opposed to the provision. They say it would have a detrimental impact on their ability to move mail and could jeopardize their international express mail service.

Not only is this provision troubling from a civil liberties standpoint and the standpoint of mail delivery, it may also violate our commitment under international mail treaties. In addition, it contradicts section 3623 of title XXXIX which prohibits inspection of certain classes of mail without a search warrant. The provision does not amend title XXXIX and instead would create a statutory conflict.

The Customs Service has full authority to search outbound mail now as long as it first obtains a search warrant. Customs argues that this requirement creates too much of a burden for them and that they need broader search authority. It may be that the Customs Service needs this authority, but the Committee on Ways and Means has never held a hearing on this issue to explore why this authority is needed or its impact on civil liberties, and the Committee on Government Reform, which has jurisdiction over the Postal Service, has not had an opportunity to examine this issue at all despite its impacts on the Postal Service.

These are serious concerns that need to be explored. We should not approve this unprecedented authority until the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Government Reform have had an opportunity to examine the issue very, very carefully. I urge my colleagues to vote for the Rangel substitute and give us an opportunity to explore these concerns.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WAXMAN. I yield to the gentlewoman from Texas.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN) for bringing that to our attention, and I have just been informed that the Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means raised some of those concerns under the gentleman's jurisdiction in committee and even tried to offer amendments. So I thank the gentleman very much for bringing this to the floor at this time.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, well, they might have raised concerns and offered amendments, but the committee that has jurisdiction over the Postal Service did not have a chance to examine it nor did the Committee on Ways and Means, as far as I know, hold hearings on the matter which would have brought in expert testimony.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Chairman, I have no more speakers. I reserve the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. NETHERCUTT). The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CRANE) has the right to close.

Ms. WATERS. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I thought we had the right to close.

The Rangel amendment, the substitute states that Customs inspectors are not liable for civil damages for suits brought in connection with a personal search. However, the bill does state that the U.S. Government consents to be sued and to be held liable for civil damages for suits brought in connection with the wrongful personal search. I think it is necessary for me to say that because I think there is some confusion about what this amendment does.

Before I talk about this amendment any more, I think it is important for me to clarify that there are many good things in this bill. This bill includes good legislation, all of which we include in the substitute. This bill includes important authorization for appropriations such as providing Customs with funding above the administration's request and equals that provided in the appropriations process.

Most of the increased funding allows for an authorization of $308 million for each fiscal year to ensure that the Customs automation system will be developed in a timely fashion, providing USTR with more than requested by the administration and providing the International Trade Commission with its full fiscal year request. The bill also authorizes such sums as needed to reestablish New York Customs headquarters and operations.

Finally, the bill authorizes $1.3 million for Customs to hire additional personnel to assist ATOA beneficiaries to comply with visa and textile transshipment requirements.

The bill also includes provisions that will help ensure the safety of our borders, including requiring all carriers to file an electronic manifest describing passengers and cargo before entering the country.

So I do not want anyone to get the idea that somehow because we have a substitute that we have ignored those parts of the bill that we think are good, but we think that it is very important for us not to jump on the bandwagon of undermining the civil liberties of American citizens in the name of fighting terrorism. We believe in fighting terrorism, but we do not believe that we undermine or waive the Constitution of the United States to do so.

Let me just say that our Customs agents have all of the authority that they need to do the searches that they want to do, that they are protected with qualified liability, and they do not need to have this bill which, in fact, goes far beyond anything that they have requested.

Let me remind the Members of this Congress that with this authority, with this protection, we do expect our agents to be careful and to be reasonable. They have the ability to strip-search. My colleagues heard the GAO study. We are not making this up. The GAO study talked about the fact that African American women are searched much more than other women. It talked about the fact that African American women have much less contraband, despite the fact they are searched more.

While there are those who are willing to throw out the Constitution, I suspect they are only willing to do it until their wife comes through, or their sister, or their neighbor or their friend, and is strip-searched in ways that they cannot believe is reasonable.

Let me just say that this bill will transfer the liability from the individual agents to the government where it belongs. There are many people who work for government and are agents of the government of the United States and they do not have to accept the liability, that it is on the shoulders of the government of the United States, and that is the way that it should be.

I think that the case has been made here today. I think that these issues were brought up in committee. We see the dissenting views of those who signed a letter indicating their dissenting views, and I would say that not only has the case been made but that the Members of the Congress of the United States should not go throw out the Constitution of the United States in an effort to deal with terrorism.

Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS), the ranking member of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, how much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. CONYERS) is recognized for the last 2 minutes on the debate of the gentlewoman's time.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WATERS) for yielding me the time, and I compliment her on her statement.

When H.R. 3129 came to the floor on suspension last December and here again today, we argued that the legislation introduced needlessly expanded the scope of Federal authority and threatened the protection of civil rights by granting search immunity to Customs agents so broad and by allowing warrantless searches of outgoing international U.S. mail, that the measure was unacceptable.

In defeating the legislation, we reiterated our commitment to aggressively investigating and preventing future terrorist attacks and agreed to work with the majority to improve the legislation, but, unfortunately, the majority has not been open to discussion and compromise on the critical issues of racial profiling and privacy that are raised by this legislation. Why? Although the Rangel substitute addresses those civil liberty questions and retains the portion of the bill that reasonably and fairly addresses the issues of border security.

Meetings between staff and the Customs Service have clarified the Customs immunity question and proven that the section 141 immunity provision is unnecessary. Although Customs failed to document the specific cases, they disclosed, and we are unaware of any case where a Customs agent, acting within the scope of his authority, has been subject to prejudgment attachment of their personal assets in any kind of a trial that followed.

When H.R. 3129 came to the floor on suspension last December and again here today, we have argued that the legislation as introduced needlessly expanded the scope of federal authority and threatened the protection of civil rights by granting broad search immunity to customs agents and by allowing warrantless searches of outgoing international U.S. mail. In defeating the legislation, we reiterated our commitment aggressively investigating and preventing future terrorist attacks and agreed to work with the majority to improve the legislation.

It is truly unfortunate that the majority has not been open to discussion and compromise on the critical issues of racial profiling and privacy that are raised by this legislation. We believe that the Rangel substitute addresses those civil liberty questions and retains the portion of the bill that fairly addresses issues of border security.

Meetings between staff and the Customs Service have clarified the customs immunity question and proven the fact that the Section 141 immunity provision is unnecessary. Although Customs failed to document the specific cases, they disclosed and we are unaware of any case where a Customs agent, acting within the scope of their authority, has been subject to a pre-judgement attachment of their personal assets or judgement of any kind following a trial.

As we have consistently stated, the existing doctrine of qualified immunity shields public officials performing discretionary functions from civil damages if their conduct does not violate clearly established statutory or constitutional rights of which a reasonable person should have known. The Supreme Court has repeatedly held that the reasonableness of an officer's behavior, not the subjective "good faith" standard used in this legislation, is the proper test for liability.

What the Custom's Service has complained about is the pace of trial through the federal courts. Bluntly stated, they want the cases against their AGENTS DISPOSED OF FASTER, LIKE EVERY OTHER CIVIL LITIGANT IN THE COUNTRY. THIS BILL'S RESPONSE IN SECTION 141 IS THE CREATION OF A BROAD CATEGORY OF IMMUNITY, UNAVAILABLE TO ANY OTHER LAW ENFORCEMENT OFFICER.

That provision is both unnecessary and dangerous to the rights of the public, who deserve their day in court to protect against racial profiling and other illegal and unconstitutional searches by the Customs Service that have been highlighted in recent GAO studies.

It is important to note that the Custom's Service has argued that Section 141 of this legislation would apply retroactively and result in the dismissal of a host of lawsuits, many of which were brought by African-American women who are contesting the legality of disparate intrusive searches documented by the GAO. When viewed in that light, this provision looks less like a tool to address terrorism than a broom to sweep away troublesome cases that raise issues of questionable conduct and policy.

The substitute replaces Section 141's grant of immunity with an exclusive remedy against the government for the actions of Customs agents who act within the scope of their authority. This compromise fairly balances the interests of Customs agents, who follow policy, with the interests of those aggrieved persons who have been the victim of questionable searches.

With respect to privacy interests, the authors of this bill have completely failed to make a case for weakening the legal standard for the search U.S. mail. Under current law, the Customs Service is empowered to search, without a warrant, inbound mail handled by the United States Postal Service and packages and letters handled by private carriers such as Federal Express and the United Parcel Service.

The Customs Service's interest in confiscating illegal weapons' shipments, drugs or other contraband inbound or outbound is adequately protected by its ability to secure a search warrant when it has probable cause. Short of an emergency, postal officials can always hold a package while they wait for a court to issue a warrant.

The U.S. Postal Service has even taken the position that "There is no evidence that eroding these long established privacy protections will bring any significant law enforcement improvements over what is achieved using existing, statutorily approved law enforcement techniques." In short, experts from the Postal Service have determined that this provision is unnecessary.

As we search for increased national security, we must remain mindful of the fact that our civil liberties are a precious resource and ensure that freedom is not a casualty of vigilance. We believe that the Rangel substitute strikes the appropriate balance between civil liberties and security by correcting deficiencies in H.R. 3129 as introduced. Because increased security should not come at the cost of our constitutional rights, I urge you to join me in supporting the substitute.

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

My bill would provide Customs with new, necessary search tools in light of America's new security needs while balancing the need for privacy.

The Rangel substitute guts some key provisions. By striking the outbound mail provision, the Rangel substitute allows continued money-laundering to occur. The Rangel immunity provision leaves the Federal Government open to a new class of torts. My bill protects only those inspectors who act in good faith.

Under my bill the government can be sued under the Federal Torts Claims Act.

Mr. Chairman, I urge a no vote on the Rangel substitute and a yes vote on H.R. 3129.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Ms. EDDIE BERNICE JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Rangel Amendment to H.R. 3129, the Customs Border Security Act of 2001.

As a Member of Congress, and as an African American, I cannot tolerate the practice of stopping and searching American citizens for no reason other than their race. As I studied H.R. 3129 that is what I feared would happen.

As I thought about this issue, I realized that the words that went to the core of this issue had been written over two centuries ago, and could be found within one of the documents sitting on my desk—The Constitution of the United States. For the Constitution's Preamble states: "We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect Union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the United States of America."

Let me repeat the key phrases that are critical to this issue: "We, the people of the United States . . . establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, do ordain and establish this Constitution."

The attitude demonstrated by too many law enforcement officers must change from inaccurately resuming the guilt of people of color. This is the least that our Constitution requires of them.

H.R. 3129 is bad for America's citizens. However, the Rangel Amendment addresses the core concern of Customs: that Customs inspectors are not personally liable for monetary damages in civil suits involving personal searches; the amendment also ensures that there is recourse for potential abuses of civil rights by providing recourse against the U.S. government.

Section 141 of the bill provides immunity to a Customs officer conducting a search of a person or property provided he or she was acting in "good faith."

The term "good faith" is not defined in the bill. An officer could engage in blatantly discriminatory conduct, but if he in "good faith" believes that he was justified in doing so, he could not be held liable.

Customs officers are already entitled to qualified immunity that protects them from unwarranted claims related to illegal and unconstitutional searches.

This bill would expand immunity so as to make it nearly impossible for a person seeking redress for an unconstitutional search.

No law enforcement official is entitled to this broad grant of immunity and the Customs Office, which has a documented history of racial profiling, should not be an exception to the qualified immunity standard. Given that Congress has recently expanded the police powers of government officials, it should not at the same time cut back on the mechanisms in existing law that are designed to ensure police powers are not abused.

It is our duty to breathe life into the words that protect every American Citizen, no matter the color of their skin. We must remember Dr. Martin Luther King's words: "Injustice anywhere is a threat to justice everywhere."

I urge my colleagues to vote against H.R. 3129 and support the Rangel Amendment.

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut and Messrs. YOUNG of Alaska, SHERWOOD, SKEEN, WELLER, BACHUS, LUTHER, and GILMAN changed their vote from "aye" to "no."

Ms. McCARTHY of Missouri, Ms. HOOLEY of Oregon and Mr. DAVIS of Florida changed their vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment in the nature of a substitute was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. WATTS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained in my district and missed Recorded Votes on Wednesday, May 22, 2002. I would like the RECORD to reflect that, had I been present, I would have cast the following votes:

On agreeing to H. Res. 427, rollcall vote No. 186, I would have voted "yea;"

On approving the Journal, rollcall vote No. 187, I would have voted "yea;"

On agreeing to H. Res. 426, rollcall vote No. 188, I would have voted "yea;"

On agreeing to the Conference Report, rollcall vote No. 189, I would have voted "yea;"

On Passage of H.R. 3717, rollcall vote No. 190, I would have voted "yea;"

On Passage of H. Res. 424, rollcall vote No. 191, I would have voted "yea;"

On Agreeing to the Waters Amendment, rollcall vote No. 192, I would have voted "nay."

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. NETHERCUTT). The question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD) having assumed the chair, Mr. NETHERCUTT, Chairman pro tempore of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3129) to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 2002 and 2003 for the United States Customs Service for antiterrorism, drug interdiction, and other operations, for the Office of the United States Trade Representative, for the United States International Trade Commission, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 426, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on the amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole? If not, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 327, noes 101, not voting 6, as follows:

☐ 1629

Messrs. SAWYER, RAHALL and HOLT changed their vote from "aye" to "no."

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 2002 through 2004 for the United States Custom Service for antiterrorism, drug interdiction, and other operations, for the Office of the United States Trade Representative, for the United States International Trade Commission, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material on H.R. 3129.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

☐ 1630

REMOVAL OF NAME OF MEMBER AS COSPONSOR OF H.R. 877

Mr. WYNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have my name removed as a cosponsor of H.R. 877.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 4775, 2002 SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS ACT FOR FURTHER RECOVERY FROM AND RESPONSE TO TERRORIST ATTACKS ON THE UNITED STATES

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 428 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 428

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 2(b) of rule XVIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 4775) making supplemental appropriations for further recovery from and response to terrorist attacks on the United States for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. All points of order against consideration of the bill are waived. General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Appropriations. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. The amendments printed in the report of the Committee on Rules accompanying this resolution shall be considered as adopted in the House and in the Committee of the Whole. All points of order against provisions in the bill, as amended, are waived except as follows: page 4, lines 18 through 23; page 57, line 6, through page 58, line 22; page 92, lines 3 through 5. During consideration of the bill for further amendment, the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole may accord priority in recognition on the basis of whether the Member offering an amendment has caused it to be printed in the portion of the Congressional Record designated for that purpose in clause 8 of rule XVIII. Amendments so printed shall be considered as read. During consideration of the bill, points of order against amendments for failure to comply with clause 2(e) of rule XXI are waived. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill, as amended, to the House with such further amendments as may have been adopted. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

SEC. 2. (a) Pending the adoption of a concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2003, the provisions of House Concurrent Resolution 353, as adopted by the House, shall have force and effect in the House as though Congress has adopted such concurrent resolution.

(b) The chairman of the Committee on the Budget shall submit for printing in the Congressional Record—

(1) the allocations contemplated by section 302(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, which shall be considered to be such allocations under a concurrent resolution on the budget;

(2) "Accounts Identified for Advance Appropriations," which shall be considered to be the programs, projects, activities, or accounts referred to section 301(b) of House Concurrent Resolution 353; and

(3) an estimated unified surplus, which shall be considered to be the estimated unified surplus set forth in the report of the Committee on the Budget accompanying House Concurrent Resolution 353 referred to in section 211 of such concurrent resolution.

(c) The allocation referred to in section 231(d) of House Concurrent Resolution 353 shall be considered to be the corresponding allocation among those submitted by the chairman of the Committee on the Budget under subsection (b)(1).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution before us is an open rule that provides for consideration of H.R. 4775, the Supplemental Appropriations bill for fiscal year 2002. The rule provides for 1 hour of general debate, and it waives all points of order against consideration of the bill. Additionally, amendments printed in the Committee on Rules report shall be considered as adopted in the House and in the Committee of the Whole.

This rule also contains a very important deeming provision as we move into the appropriations season, and it is important that we address this. Upon passage of this resolution, the rule provides that House Concurrent Resolution 353, as adopted by the House, shall have force and effect as though adopted by Congress. Finally, the rule provides for one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, today we are considering the emergency supplemental appropriations bill for fiscal year 2002. This wartime supplemental comes 8 months after the September 11 attacks against our Nation. While Americans have begun the process of healing and recovery, we must be mindful of the threats that continue to face our Nation. The alerts and intelligence reports that we receive are constant reminders that the war against terrorism is far from over.

After last September, America responded by fortifying our homeland and launching an aggressive global war on terrorism. Mr. Speaker, this wartime supplemental is absolutely critical to our continued ability to fight and win this war.

There are a number of important provisions in this bill, but none more important than the funds that will go towards helping America win this war on terrorism, both abroad and at home. The bill provides $15.77 billion for the Department of Defense. This money will go towards ongoing military operation costs, personnel costs, and costs associated with forced mobilization. Fighting the war is expensive, and this effort is no exception. However, I believe that the American people are united in their support for making sure that our military has the necessary resources to carry out its mission of insuring our national security. In short, we need to help our President to make sure that our military and the men and women who are dealing not only in law enforcement, but also our military, have the necessary elements to win.

Mr. Speaker, with the frequent announcement of possible terrorist attacks, many Americans are dealing with a sense of fear about our future. I want to emphasize that this bill addresses this uncertainty about the future and will hopefully help to instill confidence in people.

Priorities and funding have been given to allow our intelligence operations to track, analyze, and prosecute global terrorist threats against the United States and our allies. With the $1.5 billion included in the supplemental, intelligence funding has increased to record levels since September 11. This bill also provides funds to improve the Federal Bureau of Investigation's technology systems. These additional funds will enhance the FBI's overall counterterrorism and intelligence processing capabilities, allowing for better electronic sharing of information between Federal, State, and local law enforcement agencies.

In addition to protecting our national security, this wartime supplemental also provides funds to help secure our homeland.

One area of particular attention since September 11 has been Immigration and Naturalization, the INS Service, and its operations. In March 2002, the INS mailed a letter to a Florida flight school informing them that Mohammed Atta and another hijacker had been approved for student visas. Needless to say, many still-shaken Americans were very concerned when this news came out.

The supplemental builds on what Congress has already done to address this issue, and provides additional money to the INS to help them better account for individuals who have committed immigration violations and who have not followed orders to leave this country.

Since last September, a number of changes have been implemented to improve safety at our airports. For those of us who fly frequently, these changes can take some getting used to. I must confess that I too have been pulled out of the line and searched from head to toe on more than one occasion.

However, these safety changes are necessary to restore confidence in our airlines. Americans should be further assured because this bill provides additional funds for checking baggage, explosive inspection systems, as well as baggage screening and security enhancement at United States commercial ports. Other initiatives targeted at improving our homeland security include funds for secure transportation of nuclear weapons and materials, as well as money for the increased security at nuclear weapons facilities.

After the September 11 attacks, this Congress acted with expediency to pass a $40 billion emergency supplemental for recovery and to fight the war on terror. Today, we build upon our past efforts and continue to remember those who lost their lives in New York, Pennsylvania, and here in Washington, D.C. As our President has committed, and I quote our President, "We will direct every resource at our command, every means of diplomacy, every instrument of law enforcement, every financial influence, and every necessary weapon of war to the destruction and to the defeat of the global terror network."

This shared commitment means that we will continue to provide and fund whatever is necessary to winning the war on terrorism.

Yet this bill also advocates for fiscal discipline and restraint in other areas. On March 20 of this year, the House passed its budget resolution, H. Con. Res. 353. However, the absence of a budget resolution conference report makes it necessary for us to consider language that would deem the House-passed budget resolution to be a conference report. In effect, this language would bind the House to the spending and revenue levels established in the budget resolution, and the corresponding 302(a) allocations, and any related rulemaking provisions.

This language is necessary both to establish parameters on discretionary spending and to implement such mandatory initiatives accommodated in the budget resolution such as a prescription drug benefit under Medicare, concurrent receipt of military retirement and veterans disability benefits, and a new tax benefit for charitable giving.

I want to take a minute to remind my colleagues that this House-passed budget was a carefully crafted bill that balanced our priorities of winning the war and securing our economic and personal security. From providing the largest increase in 20 years to the national defense to growing our economy and paying down the debt, this wartime budget makes America safer, the economy stronger, and secures the future for every single American.

I am pleased that the measure that is before us today recognizes the critical needs associated with our continued war effort, while maintaining our commitment to fiscal discipline. I urge my colleagues to support this open rule and the underlying legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, last week, congressional Republicans were caught using a September 11 Presidential photo as a fund-raising prop for their political campaigns. It was a particularly shameless sparing of political war profiteering, one that did an immense disservice to the President, as well as to the country. Unfortunately, Republican leaders have not learned their lesson, and they are trying to do it again today by confusing the public with this rule.

So let me speak very plainly about the question posed by the vote on the rule today. If we want to increase America's national debt and write a blank check to keep raiding the Social Security trust fund, then vote "yes" on this rule. If, on the other hand, we believe we should be honest with the American people and sit down together to work out a bipartisan plan to stop raiding Social Security, then vote "no" on this rule. That will force the Republican leaders to stop playing politics with the war, and then we can overwhelmingly pass a bipartisan emergency spending bill crafted by the Committee on Appropriations.

Under this rule, the Republican leadership attempts to sneak through a provision paving the way for raising the debt ceiling, without a straight up-or-down vote on the issue. They are attempting to shield their weak-kneed Members from having to vote on putting us deep in debt. They want to put billions of dollars on the national credit card, without each putting the credit card through the credit card reader. They do not want a telltale receipt for their spending spree.

Make no mistake, Mr. Speaker. The Committee on Appropriations has written a good bill that reflects our bipartisan support for national defense and homeland security. It is true that many Democrats believe we should do a lot more for homeland security, but the bill does provide substantial resources for priorities like safeguarding nuclear facilities in airports. Additionally, it provides more than the President requested for the Department of Defense, most of it for Operation Enduring Freedom, and the Committee on Appropriations has provided $200 million for antiterrorism aid to Israel in its time of need.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY), the ranking member of the Committee on Appropriations, and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG), the chairman of the committee, deserve credit for their good work. Unfortunately, the Republican leaders do not hold in high regard such work, so they have overruled the Committee on Appropriations chairman and have crafted a rule that shatters the spirit of bipartisanship and the underlying bill. It is a rule that uses the war on terrorism as cover to take care of as many Republican political problems as they can think of.

For example, last year some Republican Members were criticized at home for siding with the Republican leadership on the fast track trade authority bill, despite the fact that it was harmful to people in their districts. So today, the Republican leadership is using this rule to provide them a textile provision that they can claim is their reward.

Here is another example, Mr. Speaker. A couple of Republican Members would benefit from a provision in the rule that would increase Medicare reimbursement rates for doctors and hospitals in their particular districts. That might be a good thing, but it would cost doctors and hospitals in every other district in the country. In other words, it helps only a very small fraction of the country and does it at the expense of everyone else. So it requires careful consideration in the light of day, not a procedural trick on a wartime appropriations bill.

As I explained at the beginning, Mr. Speaker, the most important issues hidden in this bill are Social Security and the national debt. The economic plan Republicans passed last year created massive, long-term deficits that threatened Social Security; and now, not even 18 months after President Bush inherited historic budget surpluses, this administration says the Federal Government has to borrow hundreds of billions of dollars more and put our children deeper into debt.

Democrats have repeatedly tried to sit down with the Republicans to work out a bipartisan solution to this threat to Social Security. Instead, just last night, in the Committee on Rules, four of the most fiscally conservative Members of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM), the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MOORE), the gentleman from Florida (Mr. DAVIS), and the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT), offered yet another approach to restore fiscal responsibility, but were denied by the Republican leadership.

That is because the Republican leadership is deathly afraid that Americans will notice how much of the Social Security trust fund they are squandering under the programs. After all, the key to the secret Republican plan to privatize Social Security is to keep it sacred until after the elections. So instead of allowing a vote on the Bush administration's request to go deeper into debt, Republican leaders have hidden in this rule legislative language that will allow them to do it in the secrecy of a conference committee without a straight up-or-down vote on the floor of the House.

This is just plain dishonest, Mr. Speaker. But it makes the vote on the rule very simple, because it means that Republican leaders have made the vote on this rule a vote to increase America's national debts and keep raiding Social Security.

So if Members believe that the American people deserve an open debate and a straight up-or-down vote on the future of Social Security, vote against the rule. Then we can give the underlying supplemental appropriations bill the overwhelming bipartisan vote it deserves.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, one of the greatest parts about the rule that we are doing here today, is it is an open rule. We can stand up on the floor of the House and talk about whatever we want to talk about. We are not trying to sneak anything through. We are doing it right out in the open.

The light of day will be the best disinfectant, and that is why this debate is so powerful, because the truth can be told. We are going to tell the truth about this supplemental, because it is all about helping the United States and our military and men and women who are in law enforcement get the money that they need to keep this country going, and to make sure that we win this war. That is what this is all about.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Mobile, Alabama (Mr. CALLAHAN).

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) is a great American, especially since he knew in advance that I was rising in opposition for the first time in my 18 years in Congress against a Republican rule before this House.

I do it out of principle and I do it in all good faith, not to be critical of the Committee on Rules, not to be critical of their goals, but to express some concerns that I have that I think are very important, and that is aid to Israel.

For Israel in this bill, suddenly, in the middle of the night, in the Committee on Appropriations, without any encouragement from Prime Minister Sharon, without any encouragement from Chairman Arafat, within the Beltway some decided that we ought to give Israel $200 million in economic support, and give Mr. Arafat's area $50 million in economic support.

But to bring some history to the House, to ask Members to reflect back to 1997 when Prime Minister Netanyahu came before this very body, stood right in front of the Speaker and told this body that it was time for Israel to wean themselves of American economic support because their economy was better than ours. When Mr. Netanyahu said that, I immediately arranged a trip. I sat down with Mr. Netanyahu. I sat down with him, just the 2 of us. We worked out a process to wean Israel of all economic support, because they said it was no longer needed.

Along with that, at the same time we were giving Mr. Mubarak in Egypt a proportional sum of money. Two-thirds of whatever Israel got, Egypt got; not necessarily good foreign policy, but that was the policy that has been in effect since Camp David.

So I went to Cairo and I talked to President Mubarak, and he, too, agreed that Egypt would be reduced, just as Israel was, provided that Israel did not come in the back door and try to bump up their economic support without considering Egypt.

So I went before the Committee on Rules and asked for an opportunity to present this amendment to this body, on this bill, to give the proportional amount of money to Egypt, but I was for some reason denied.

But at the same time, some of the other areas Members of Congress wanted to be considered, such as the wage indexing problem in Pennsylvania with respect to Medicare reimbursement. It is also a problem in another 30 States. Yet, somehow or another, in this bill a self-executing rule says that Pennsylvania's problems will be resolved, but no other State will be resolved, so we will be left out in the cold on the indexing of Medicare payments to hospitals in the State of Alabama. Why they would give them that and not give me this simple opportunity to present an amendment for an up-or-down vote is beyond comprehension.

I also am upset about the deeming resolution, an unnecessary provision that is placed in this bill for the first time that I can ever recollect since the Republicans have been in charge, an unnecessary provision that is going to cause havoc and chaos as we go through the appropriation process in the next several months.

So with that, Mr. Speaker, for the first time, I think I am going to have to vote against this rule. I am not lobbying people to vote against it, but I am just expressing my own consternation, my own fears, my own principles.

I am going to offer amendments as we go through the bill to strike all of the aid to Israel that was included here without any request from Israel, without any request from the administration, without any requests from anybody. But someone within this beltway decided since we were going to have a supplemental bill, they were going to get some pork in it for Israel.

It is wrong to do that in this bill at this time. We will have a foreign operations bill on this floor in the next couple of weeks. That would be the appropriate time to address any economic support increase for Israel, not in an emergency supplemental bill. It was not included in the President's request, and it was not even requested by the government of Israel. It is the wrong thing to be doing.

Many Members know in their hearts that I am right, but they feel politically they cannot vote for it. I know in my heart that I am not going to win my amendments, but I am going to give people an opportunity to at least vote to see whether or not we ought to be doling out foreign aid in this emergency supplemental bill.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY), the ranking member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, we all come here individually as politicians, and as we are assigned committees, as we develop expertise on substance, we become legislators, rather than mere politicians.

On the Committee on Appropriations, I think it is safe to say that we can take people with the most extreme ideological differences, and if we send them out in the field to examine a problem, when they come back to this Chamber, 8 times out of 10 they will probably have the same ideas about how to deal with the problem. That is what happens in a legislative body when we have the normal course of give-and-take and the normal willingness to compromise.

That is not just true of the Committee on Appropriations; it is supposed to happen on every other committee in the Congress. That is what is supposed to turn us into what we have been called when we have been called "the greatest legislative, deliberative body in the world."

But we have fallen a far, far pace from that on this bill. At least 6 times on major legislation, on patients' protection, the energy bill, the Airline Security Act, the Patriot Act, the pension reform, and welfare-to-work, each time, rather than running these bills through the committee process and accepting the committee result, we have seen the majority party leadership instead dictate a different result and dictate that a different package be brought to the floor. We are seeing the same thing here.

We had a bipartisan bill which was the product of 6 weeks of hard work between the 2 parties on the Committee on Appropriations. Then when the committee went into full committee, a number of amendments were adopted. Some of them I did not like, but with the exception of the DeLay amendment, which gave the President the authority to engage in a military attack on The Netherlands, I basically had no real problem with what the committee did.

But then it went to the Committee on Rules, and the instructions came down from on high that a number of extraneous items should be added to the bill. The first was that the House would deem that the budget resolution brought out by the Committee on the Budget months ago would be deemed now in effect.

That produces for discretionary funding in the next fiscal year a level $10 billion below the level being spent this fiscal year.

In the end, any knowledgeable Member of this House on either side of the aisle, and most especially knowledgeable Members on the Committee on Appropriations, understands that that is not deliverable.

I do not believe that we will find a majority of votes on either side of the aisle for the education bill, for instance, that would be produced as a result of those limitations because I do not believe either party is going to cut President Bush's education budget. But that is what it requires.

But the biggest outrage of all is this: We have in this rule a proposition which will allow seemingly innocuous language to be added, which is really the door-opener in order to raise the national debt, the limit on the national indebtedness, the limit on the Nation's credit card, by $750 billion.

The plan is to have the Senate insert increased debt, and then have it come back here wrapped in a package so that no Member ever has to actually vote on that freestanding item. Yet they will force an increase in the Nation's credit card debt.

□ 1700

And this proposition is being brought to us by a lot of the same people for the last year that have been parading all over this floor, talking about how they were going to support a constitutional amendment. This is a copy of H.J. Res. 86. There are 110 Republican sponsors on this resolution to require that not a dime of additional debt could be added without having a three-fifths vote of this House. Yet today this would facilitate raising the debt without individual Members having to stand up and take the heat for that vote. And if you take a look at the people who are listed on it, I would ask all of them how they can justify putting their names on this resolution and telling their constituents that they are against raising the debt without a full firm vote on it and then engaging in this sleight of hand.

This resolution is sponsored by people like the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY); the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. GOODE); the gentlewoman from Kentucky (Mrs. NORTHUP); the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. RYAN), my own State; and a variety of others. I would ask each and every one of them, how can you justify going to your constituents and saying you are going pass this constitutional amendment and then you flip-flop and come back here and do this?

I do not think this process does a credit to the House, and I do not think it is a real process. I think it delays delivering money to the Pentagon that we need to get to the Pentagon in order to reimburse them for the costs of the war.

This day, if we proceed to pass this rule, will not go down as one of the glory days in the history of the House.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from San Dimas, California, (Mr. DREIER), the chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I thank my friend for yielding me time, and I congratulate him on his management of this rule.

This is obviously a great challenge. It is important to note that this rule is for consideration of a wartime supplemental appropriations bill. The gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG) described this before our Republican conference yesterday very appropriately as a wartime supplemental appropriations bill.

What has happened in the last 24 hours? We have seen an increased threat of terrorism. We have seen instability in a wide range of areas in the world; and this administration is, I believe, doing the best job possible to deal with this. The President months ago asked for a supplemental appropriations bill that would provide Israel with the resources necessary.

Now, a number of people who have been speaking against this have talked about some other issues. Let us remember, 99 percent, Mr. Speaker, of this legislation deals with supplemental appropriations for our war efforts. Now, we have heard talk about what some have said is an unprecedented use of the deeming process. Well, my Democratic colleagues had something known as the Gephardt amendment which regularly deemed an automatic increase in the debt ceiling. We, in the past several years, have had three occasions, had a deeming of the budget, of parts of the budget before. So I think it is very important to note that this is a very challenging time.

We are dealing with a situation which will begin here and then move to a joint House/Senate conference. My friend, the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. CALLAHAN), raised the issue of Egypt. We know that this administration is determined to do everything that it possibly can to bring about peace and stability in the Middle East. It is a challenge. Administrations in the past have tried and failed. But we know under the stellar leadership of President Bush, Vice President Chaney, the National Security Advisor, Dr. Rice and Colin Powell and Donald Rumsfeld, that we have a wonderful team working on this. That is why I believe it is important for us to provide the support the administration wants. And, yes, he is right that the administration did not make the additional request for aid to Israel, but there is no indication that the President would not be supportive of what is taking place here, because we clearly stand by our ally, the State of Israel, the one democratically elected government in the region.

What I am saying, Mr. Speaker, is that I believe we need to realize that our number one priority is to win the war on terrorism. And to do that, as the President and others have said, we have to have the resources necessary to win that war. And that is why every Member of this House should vote in favor of this rule and in favor of the supplemental appropriations bill.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 30 seconds.

I listened to the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER). If we really wanted to help the war effort, strip all this extraneous nonsense out of the bill, strip all of these baubles that they are trying to use to buy votes on the other side on Medicare and trade and all this other stuff and just do a supplemental that provides the money to fight the war. That is all you need to do.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. RANGEL).

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, what the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER) said is that we are at war and the Committee on Rules has now usurped all the responsibilities of the standing committee. It really makes no difference what the Committee on Appropriations wants to do, what the Committee on International Relations wants to do, the Committee on the Budget, the Committee on Ways and Means. The President of the United States and the chairman of the Committee on Rules, they will decide what is the best for this great country and for the Congress.

Imagine that in this appropriation we have issues that we hold sacred in the Committee on Ways and Means. That is the budget ceiling where we debate among each other as to what it is going to be. But instead of just coming out and saying that the Committee on Rules has decided that we have got to raise the debt ceiling, instead of doing that, what do you put in here?

Again, you wave the flag and say that the Committee on Rules has dictated that the Government of the United States will take all steps necessary to guarantee the full faith and credit of the government.

Is this gobbledygook? Is this patriotism or is this stealing the jurisdiction of another committee? What you mean to say is we will find some sneaky way to get the debt ceiling increase by passing a nothing rule over here and allowing the Senate to take our jurisdiction and to bring it back, wrap it up in the flag and dare someone during wartime to vote against it.

What is the next thing he is going to do? Oh, the Committee on Rules now knows how to handle Medicare. Not the Committee on Energy and Commerce, not the Committee on Ways and Means, not the House. What you have decided is there are certain hospitals in Republican districts that are in trouble, and you are going to give them assistance at the expense of other hospitals. Is it in here? Yes.

Lastly, you are going to violate trade agreements in the rule. Shame on you.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Columbus, Indiana (Mr. PENCE).

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time and for his strong leadership on this rule which will bring before the Congress today a critical piece of legislation, a supplemental appropriations bill for a Nation that is at war.

The President of the United States comes to this Congress and asks for supplemental assistance, and this Congress provides it today: $15.7 billion in national defense, $5.8 billion in homeland security. And, Mr. Speaker, we commit ourselves in this rule and in this measure to live within our means as a Congress. In the months ahead as we consider appropriations, we commit ourselves to the budget resolution that has been passed by the so-named deeming elements of this rule.

These are the priorities of the Nation, Mr. Speaker: a national defense and prosecuting the war, homeland defense as we hear recriminations and discussions of what was done and what not done prior to September 11. The American people want us to respond in this Congress to these needs, and they want us to live within our means and to practice the fiscal discipline for which this majority is so rightly celebrated.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, there has been talk about the $200 million for Israel. I, being one of the Members who have called upon the leadership and urged the leadership despite the lack of the call for the administration to add to these funds, I see them as perfectly appropriate to a defense supplemental bill: 493 Israelis have been killed since September of 2000; 3,955 wounded. Israel has spent $255 million in their front in this war on terrorism in the third and fourth week of Operation Defensive Shield alone.

America must stand by Israel in her darkest hour. Let us do no less than those we remember on this Memorial Day. Let us do our duty.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT), the Democratic leader.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to urge Members to vote "no" against this rule.

Over 1 year ago, Republicans passed an economic plan. They said at the time that their plan would generate economic growth, protect the surplus that we built up in the 1990s, and safeguard Social Security. Republicans enacted a giant tax bill for the wealthy, while promising that there would be enough room in the budget for Social Security, education, Medicare prescription drugs, and the defense of the United States of America.

Today, Republicans are making it clear that they are refusing to confront the consequences of their economic plan.

This rule is an outrage. It places full faith and credit language in the bill to avoid a desperate request by the President's Secretary of the Treasury to bail the administration out of the economic folly of their own making. It hides the fact that Republicans took a record surplus, turned it into a huge and mounting deficit, and put Social Security in jeopardy. It makes a mockery of the Republican rhetoric to safeguard the trust fund. It makes a mockery of the Republican votes to create a lockbox. It ignores and it weakens our intergenerational contract and commitment in the 21st century.

Instead, Republicans refuse to work with Democrats. They deny debate on a plan the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MOORE) and the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT) sought to offer. That plan provides a way out of spending the Social Security surplus. It puts Social Security first, not last. It is sensible. It is responsible. It is the right thing to do for the American people.

Republicans did not give it one second of time on this floor today. They are silencing the voices of the American people on the future of Social Security. Now is not the time to give the Federal Government carte blanche to run up the debt. Our economic future is at stake. People's retirement security is on the line. We ought to be talking today about a 1-month extension of the debt limit. We ought to be coming back here in the next month to talk about how to fix this problem. We ought to have a budget summit between the President and the bipartisan Congress to find out how we can write a budget that is in tune with the changed circumstances that we have faced since September 11. We need to bring both parties and the President to the table, and we need the parties to work together. We need communication. We need collaboration to put our fiscal house back in order, to save Social Security first and today.

The American people deserve a comprehensive, fair debate on Social Security. So I hope Members will vote "no" on this rule, and I hope Members in both parties would decide to vote "no" on this rule.

I can tell you that every family who lost somebody on September 11 has been around the dining room table trying to figure out a new budget because of their changed circumstances. Well, America had a tragedy on September 11, and, as a family, we ought to be sitting around the table in respect and honesty to work out a new budget for this country. We cannot do that through gag rules that silence the voices of the American people on this side of the aisle. Vote "no" against this rule.

□ 1715

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Evidently we have failed to communicate this openly to all Members. This is an open rule. This is an open rule for any Member of Congress, including the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. GEPHARDT), to offer any sort of amendment that he would like to. This is no gag rule. This is no sham. This is no trick. By presenting an open rule, it means that both sides are presented an equal opportunity to present their case.

There has been a lot said today about Social Security. The fact of the matter is that there is a part of this rule that says, "The United States Government shall take all steps necessary to guarantee the full faith and credit of the government." That is what we are trying to do.

We are trying to make sure that this supplemental bill has an opportunity to be debated under an open rule today to where we have an opportunity to pass this bill and to where we can engage the other body, the Senate, which is controlled by the other party, the other body who controls that, to where we can work together as Republicans, as Democrats, with the President of the United States.

The fact of the matter is the song is always the same. The bottom line is that for years a clear majority of Democrats have been opposed to funding the military, and that is exactly the same way it is today. This is about funding our military. This is about a wartime budget. This is about trying to make sure that we win the war.

I know where the opposition comes from. We hear it over and over and over again.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. CUNNINGHAM).

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY). Does the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I do not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. CUNNINGHAM) is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I am under the impression that the Chair has to yield for a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. CUNNINGHAM) has been recognized for 2 minutes.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order on that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi will state his point of order.

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, that I believe a parliamentary inquiry has precedence over that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would respond to the gentleman that the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) had yielded 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. CUNNINGHAM). The gentleman from California had the floor. The gentleman from Mississippi was not yielded to for the purpose of a parliamentary inquiry. The floor belonged to the gentleman from California who has been recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I had not planned on speaking but the minority leader came to the floor, and he talked about Social Security trust fund safeguards, tax breaks for the rich, Social Security, Medicare, prescription drugs.

Let me remind my colleagues that not a single Democrat economic package went forward when President Clinton was President. None of my colleagues' policies went forward. We passed them to create a surplus by welfare reform, by tax relief, by stimulus packages, whatsoever. Matter of fact, in 1993, the Democrats, when they had the entire majority of the House, the Senate and the White House, increased the tax on the middle class. They took every dime out of the Social Security trust fund. They increased Social Security taxes. They cut military COLAs and veterans' COLAs. So do not tell me about saving Social Security.

I have been waiting for this debate. I have in my office the leadership of the Democrat party, since every one of them have been here, the number of times that they have voted to cut the Social Security trust fund, which I am going to submit. So do not talk to us about cutting the Social Security trust fund. It is just rhetoric.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his inquiry.

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, my parliamentary inquiry, would the open rule the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) makes reference to allow me to offer an amendment that would remove the language that allows this bill to raise the debt limit?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is unable to deliver an anticipatory ruling on what may later occur in Committee of the Whole if the gentleman were to attempt or any Member would attempt to offer certain amendments.

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Gentleman will state his inquiry.

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, it would be my understanding that an open rule would allow me to offer any amendment that I wish to keep the Republican majority from raising the debt limit and plunging us more than $6 trillion in debt.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is unable to construe the resolution which the House is debating at this time. That is a proper subject for debate among Members.

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman may state it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, when the Chair is construing whether or not a Member can offer an amendment, is that in itself limiting the rules of the House and, therefore, not an open rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is a difference in the Chair interpreting or construing a resolution which the House has already adopted and the Chair giving an interpretation of a resolution which is currently under consideration and the subject of debate in the House.

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman may state it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, if I may understand, the passage of this rule would indeed prohibit me or any other Member of this House from offering an amendment that would keep us from raising the debt limit. Does that not in itself constitute a restrictive rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would respond that the Chair has already answered the gentleman's question. The Chair is not in a position to construe or characterize resolutions which are currently pending before the body.

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, who would be in a position to construe that?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the Chair has previously stated, that is a proper subject of debate when debating the resolution.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 15 seconds.

Under the rule pending, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM) and the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MOORE) would not have the opportunity to offer their amendment that has previously been described on the debt ceiling. That is fact. This is not an open rule. They would be prevented from offering their amendment.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI).

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST) for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this rule because it takes another giant step, a big step in the Republican march toward fiscal recklessness that has characterized their performance in the 107th Congress. The majority has done everything possible to hide, hide from the American people the fact that this rule allows the second largest increase in the Nation's debt limit ever.

The Republican tax cut has already driven the Nation back into deficit spending. As a result, every penny of this back-door increase in the debt limit will come from the Social Security and Medicare trust funds.

We all agree, Mr. Speaker, that additional resources are needed to meet our Nation's defense and homeland security needs. We all support that, Democrat and Republican alike.

As the senior Democrat on the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, I understand full well the investments that are necessary for a strong response to the ongoing terrorist threat must be met. However, I must say shame on the Republican majority for hiding their raising of the debt limit and their raid on Social Security and Medicare behind our legitimate need to protect our forces and to protect our country.

It is possible to fight terrorism and put forth a fiscally responsible budget, but the Republican leadership has failed to do so. Again and again we have heard excuses from the majority that they attempt to explain the dramatic shift from surpluses to deficits and the raid on Social Security and Medicare trust funds that has resulted. A wartime budget, a recession, forecast errors, the list goes on. The question remains, where is the plan to get us out of this mess? Why should we sign a blank check to pay for the Republican tax cut by raiding Social Security and Medicare?

Last year, the majority said they had an economic plan that would pay down the maximum amount of debt possible and promise to protect the entire Social Security surplus. Today, they are requesting the second largest increase in the debt limit in our Nation's history to continue their raid on Social Security and Medicare. We have to have an up-or-down vote on their stealth plan to mortgage our children's future.

I urge my colleagues to oppose the rule.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

The song is always the same. The bottom line is that for years a clear majority of Democrats have been opposed to funding the military, and today is no different.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, how much time is remaining on each side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST) has 12¼ minutes remaining. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) has 7 minutes remaining.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN).

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, my colleagues have heard any number of reasons why this is a bad rule. Let me give my colleagues another one.

If this rule passes, one of our premier airlines is liable to go out of business because this rule specifically protects language that terminates the airline loan guarantee program. After the events of September 11, we passed legislation knowing that the airlines were hurting, knowing that some of them could go into insolvency.

One airline in particular, U.S. Air, is headquartered at Washington's National Airport. Washington National Airport was closed down for an entire month, and for 8 months it has only had partial service. So understandably U.S. Airways has not had the revenue to stay afloat. That is what this loan guarantee program was for, but this rule protects $1.3 billion in savings by terminating the program because it knows that that is the amount of money that U.S. Airways needs to stay afloat.

So we are forcing an airline into bankruptcy, 40,000 jobs, 204 cities served. Now, this is not what the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG) wanted. This is not what the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS) wanted. They have been trying to work it out along with the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. DAVIS). They have been trying to do the right thing, but this rule does the wrong thing. It is outrageous to try to save money through this kind of a budget gimmick and cause the loss of 40,000 jobs, and think of what it is going to do to the economy of 204 cities that are served by U.S. Air. Unbelievable.

This rule needs to get defeated. It is one of the worst rules to come before the House of Representatives.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to, if I could, engage with the gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST) and let him know that the time appears to be unbalanced at this point, and I would like to see if he would like to get us to more of an even stance.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to yield additional time at this point.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT).

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this rule for many reasons, and not because I am opposed to defense funding. If this were a clean increase for the war in Afghanistan, it would be passed unanimously.

First of all, this rule deems what the House could not do directly. It deems the budget resolution and sets the discretionary spending ceiling at $759 billion. That is $9 billion less than the other body. Mark my word, that $9 billion discrepancy will cause us problems before this fiscal year is out.

The second reason to get the votes necessary for passage, the rule claims $1.2 billion in savings to offset the amendments that the committee added in the supplemental over and above the President's request. The largest amount of these comes from obligational delays. They are not saying they are obligational delays.

The rule would prevent the Air Transportation Stabilization Board from guaranteeing any more airline loans for the rest of this fiscal year, but beginning the next fiscal year, they could make those loans. Someone may say that is harmless. Not for U.S. Air. It is a matter of life and death for U.S. Air because they told us they need funding by August 1. So it saves no money, but it does not do U.S. Air any good at all.

Most of all, I am really upset with this rule because it gets too clever by half, much too coy when it comes to something that is gravely serious, and that is the debt owed by the United States of America. We are creeping up on our statutory debt limits, and rather than face up to this issue squarely, this rule makes passing reference to the statutory debt ceiling just enough to have this matter originate in the House and leaves the heavy lifting to the other body.

What it seeks to avoid most of all is a direct vote on this very important issue, and our constituents need to know where we stand.

Now, we would have offered, if the committee had made it in order, an amendment that would have offered a suitable procedure for undertaking something this serious. It simply would have provided that if we take up the debt ceiling, we can increase it by $250 billion, but if we increase it by any more we must have in place a budget resolution that will put the budget in balance in 5 fiscal years.

That amendment was not made in order, which is another reason to vote against the rule.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM).

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, why can we not just for once be honest with the American people?

Every single Member of this body is in favor of supporting our troops in Afghanistan. And any rhetoric notwithstanding is not being honest. Everyone that makes statements like my friend from Texas made a moment ago knows better than that. The war on terrorism is too serious to play political games with.

To call this rule an open rule is laughable. The answer to the question of my colleague from Mississippi, Mr. Speaker, is no, he will be held out of order when he offers an amendment to pay for this war and not charge it to our grandchildren.

I cannot imagine how anybody that purports to be a conservative would support this resolution and this rule if they look at the scoring that is being applied, and then saying to their colleagues it is being paid for, when my colleagues know better.

Back in 1994, I joined with 321 of my colleagues, including 166 Republicans that are still here, that said we ought to put a stop to emergency spending bills having nonemergency issues being added to them. It passed 322 to 99. There were only four Republicans that opposed it in 1994. Then in 1995, when the Republicans took over the majority, they thought it was a darned good rule and they put it in saying when we have emergency spending, we ought to confine the issues and the spending to emergencies. Yet this rule waives any amendment that strikes any of those spending bills that are not emergency, because suddenly my Republican colleagues have seen the light and they believe that spending for any purpose is okay; but yet they are going to call themselves conservatives.

A vote for this rule is a vote for using parliamentary tricks to sneak an increase in the debt limit into law without addressing the fiscal problems highlighted by the need to increase the debt limit. That is my opposition to this rule. That is my opposition to this bill.

My colleagues should be open and honest and come out and say they are in favor of increasing the debt of this country $750 billion. But they choose to hide it. That is wrong and it is not honest.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. TANNER).

Mr. TANNER. Mr. Speaker, if the Democrats had proposed this rule, I would be up here speaking against it. This rule is, I think I will put it this way, if I were doing business with someone who devised or ran their business like this rule, I would quit doing business with them immediately; and I think the American people ought to as well.

What my Republican colleagues have done with this rule is they have made passing reference to the statutory assurance that the United States take all necessary means to protect our credit, which is the debt ceiling, and then they have provided that the amendments printed in the Committee on Rules shall be considered as adopted. That is not an open rule and they know it.

No one can call that an open rule. We cannot get at striking section 1403 because it will be held out of order. So when my colleagues say it is an open rule, it is not and my colleagues know it. It is crystal clear that it is wrong. It is dead wrong.

We are engaged in a generational mugging of the next generation here because we will not face up to what we are trying to do to pay for this. It is wrong.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Savannah, Georgia (Mr. KINGSTON), who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I just want to say that I support this rule, and I will support the supplemental bill as well. I am supporting the rule and the bill because of three things, three important things that it does.

Number one, it continues the war internationally against terrorism; number two, it protects our homeland; and, number three, it helps complete the job of rebuilding New York City.

Just to go through some of these things. This wartime supplemental provides $15.7 billion to aid the troops in the ongoing war. I have visited Afghanistan and Central Asia and the countries of Tajikistan, Pakistan, and Uzbekistan. They need our support. It is not time to turn our back on them.

This bill secures our homeland as well with $850 million for checking baggage for explosive devices, $630 million for baggage screening and $75 million for security enhancements at commercial ports.

Just to give one statistic, Savannah, Georgia, which I represent, last year brought in one million containers. Of those containers, only 1 percent were checked. This bill helps address that problem.

This bill also, in the name of homeland security, provides local law enforcement the tools that they need to track down terrorism. How often do my colleagues get these calls, which I know I have been getting since 9–11, from the local police officers and the sheriff departments: they have seen something suspicious, but they do not know who to call or what to do. This helps them hook in with the national tracking system.

It also helps our communities in terms of disaster preparation. One of the issues we have to deal with is the EMS folks, training them and getting them up to speed on what is needed. I think that it is very important that we continue to work with our local law enforcement training people.

Then, finally, our $5.5 billion to help build New York City, that great city which we in America all love and like to talk about.

This bill is about making sure we never forget what happened to our Nation on 9–11, and I urge my colleagues to support the rule and the bill.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. TAYLOR).

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, we all want to take care of the troops. What a lot of us do not want to do is to lie to the American people and mislead them and tell them we are not borrowing money to do it.

The gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) misspoke, and I am going to leave it at that, when he said they are paying down the national debt. In the past 1 year, the national debt has risen by $323,329,559,211.21. Now that is straight off the Treasury report. Do not tell the people that we are balancing the budget. My colleagues are suggesting that we vote to increase the debt limit by $750 billion. That is a thousand times a thousand times a thousand times 750.

If we have to pay for this war, and we should, then let us cut spending someplace else, like the American people do.

I would tell the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) that on the day my daughter was born our Nation was less than $1 trillion in debt. The gentleman is proposing that we go over $6 trillion in debt, and she is not yet 24 years old. Where does it stop? Where is the shame?

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

What the majority party, my Republican Party, is trying to do is to make sure that our President, that our law enforcement, that our military has the money that is necessary to fight this war. It is not a war we wanted to get into; it was a war that was thrust on America on September 11. It was a war that America was thrust in and now our President and our Vice President are leading our Nation.

We all saw the destruction and the damage that happened. We stood up with pride and in awe of the men and women of the New York City Fire Department and Police Department as they battled these terrorists and then looked after the people of New York. We, as Members of this body, responded within days. We are now trying to respond again.

We believe it is honest and forthright that we follow procedures that people out in Dallas, Texas, and all across this country understand, not just in my congressional district but all the Members, when we say that we are trying to do the things that the President has asked for and that are in the best interest of this country to fund our military and law enforcement and the men and women who protect not only our borders but our parameters well out, including Afghanistan and our allies.

What we have said is very plain and simple. We are following a constitutional process where we have to go and negotiate with another body called the United States Senate. We are trying to make sure that while this negotiation is going on that we can say that the United States Government shall take all steps necessary to guarantee the full faith and credit of the government. I think to do anything different would be irresponsible.

I cannot say what the debt is going to do between now and the time we reach an agreement with the United States Senate and the President signs this bill. But what I can say is that we are responsible enough to say that the United States Government will stand up for what it should.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. TANNER).

Mr. TANNER. Mr. Speaker, in the previous comments, the majority manager of the bill has referred to this as an open rule. Therefore, under this open rule, I would like to ask unanimous consent that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MOORE) be made in order in the ensuing debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY). The Chair would respond that the gentleman's request is out of order. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) has yielded to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST) for the purposes of debate only, not for the purposes of amending the rule, even under unanimous consent.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MOORE).

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, we have heard over and over and over that this is a rule about the war. What the majority party has done is wrapped this rule in the flag and wrapped this rule in the war and is trying to hide the fact from the American people that they are trying to increase the credit card debt of this Nation by $750 billion, three-quarters of a trillion dollars.

We all are Americans, we all stand together against terrorism, and we will all provide whatever resources and money are necessary to win this war on terrorism. But at the very least we should be, we should be, and we must be honest with the American people and tell them what it is we are doing. What the Republicans are attempting to do is to sneak through a $750 billion increase in the debt limit here without a stand-alone vote.

That is absolutely wrong, because what my colleagues are going to do is to pass that debt on to our children and grandchildren. Shame. Shame.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN).

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. Speaker, it is ironic that 1 year ago we were having a debate in this House about how much of the debt we could pay down. Today, the House is being asked to pass in this rule, having nothing to do with the underlying bill, a measure that will allow for the public debt of the Nation to increase by three-quarters of a trillion dollars without debating it in the light of day.

We have soldiers abroad who are fighting to defend the Constitution, yet we have the majority party which does not even want to allow the public to see the debate of whether or not we want to raise the national debt to pay for the war.

All of us support the war effort. There is not a Member on either side, that I am aware of, who is not in favor of the war effort.

□ 1745

But what is a shame is the fact that the Republicans want to slide a fast one past the American people so they can have it both ways and say we can cut taxes and we are not going to increase the debt when in fact that is what they are doing. They are raising the national debt with this vote.

We should defeat this rule and start over and bring a clean supplemental up that every Member will vote for.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, having listened to the comments of the gentleman from Tennessee, my parliamentary inquiry is this: Would it take an amendment to change an open rule in order to make it open?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has not stated a parliamentary inquiry which is appropriate for the Chair to answer.

Does the gentleman have a further parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. EDWARDS. Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. EDWARDS. It is my understanding that this has been described by the majority as an open rule. Yet a few minutes ago, the Speaker said in response to the comments of the gentleman from Tennessee that it would require a change in the rule in order to make it an open rule.

My parliamentary inquiry is if this is an open rule, why would it require a change in the rule to make it an open rule?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would simply respond to the gentleman, the House has a mechanism to amend a pending rule if the House sees fit. The Chair responded in such a fashion earlier on several occasions.

Mr. EDWARDS. I thank the Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) has 3 minutes remaining. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST) has 2½ minutes remaining.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the money that we are spending in this bill is for the national defense, and it is for men and women who protect us. Tonight when Americans go to sleep after hearing this great and vigorous debate, they can go to sleep knowing that this House is talking about the things that are important to make sure that our sons and brothers and fathers and aunts and uncles, the freedoms that we enjoy as a result of this House talking about the debate that will get our military and law enforcement the money that is necessary to make sure that we win this war.

That is what this debate is simply about. I am proud of what we are doing here.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN).

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. Speaker, in 2000, Congress passed the CBI bill. In the most sensitive area of apparel and textiles, the bill endeavored to build on the strengths and complementarities of Caribbean countries. CBI nations were provided enhanced access to the U.S. market with some important requirements as to use of American fabric, and within these requirements the ability to dye and finish this material in their nation. Included was enhanced implementation of core labor standards.

In order to obtain a few votes to pass their fast-track bill, the administration cut a deal that turns its back on CBI. The attempt in this bill to carry out that deal is antithetical to the administration's rhetoric about the importance of expanded trade and about the needs of evolving economies. It is another troubling result of the decision of the administration and House Republicans to pass fast track on a partisan basis, refusing to address concerns of Democrats who have worked hard to craft constructive trade legislation these last years. The administration has missed an historic opportunity to build a viable, strong, bipartisan foundation for trade policy and the consequence is the attempt to ratify in this bill an act of expediency. It has zero to do with the war against terrorism.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM).

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, my friend from Texas has now three times made a very impassioned speech regarding that this is for the troops, and I want to again say, every single person over here supports our troops. In addition to that, I will say I support our President 110 percent. In fact, I believe in our opposition to this rule that I am supporting the President more than you are.

Here is why. The President asked for $27.1 billion. This bill is $29.4 billion. You made reference to the Senate, in having a package to go to the Senate. The Senate is proposing to spend $31 billion. That means we are going to compromise somewhere between 29.4 and 31. That is not what the President asked for.

This is more than just supporting our troops. We all support the troops. This is about fiscal responsibility and the debt limit.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. ANDREWS. I thank my friend for yielding time.

Mr. Speaker, the House is in the business of taking votes to decide things. This week we took a vote on whether to congratulate the people of East Timor, as we should have. We took a vote on naming a Federal building, as we should have.

The majority has a plan to borrow $750 billion and pass along the bill to our children. But they do not want to put that up for a vote. The choice that is before the House on this rule is very simple. Should we or should we not take a recorded vote on borrowing $750 billion? Our only chance to cast a vote on that, if the majority has its way, is on this rule vote.

Defeat the rule, bring this question, like the question of congratulating the people of East Timor, before the American people so they can see where we as their elected representatives stand. Defeat this rule.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HASTERT), the Speaker of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois, the Speaker of the House, for 2 minutes.

Mr. HASTERT. Mr. Speaker, we have heard a lot of debate on this bill today. This bill has been on the docket for about 6 weeks trying to bring it together. In this bill is $14 billion-plus for our men and women who fight the war in Afghanistan and around the world. In this bill is $5 billion for New York so that they can recoup and rebuild their city for the losses they got on September 11. In this bill is $7 billion for defense against terrorism in this country, air marshals, police, things to make this country safer so that we can travel, so that we can live our lives.

There is a lot of debate and a lot of demagoguery that goes on in a place like this. But there are times when you need to move forward, pass legislation, get it done and do the right thing. I have heard a lot of, again, conversation from the other side of the aisle. Do we need eventually to raise the debt ceiling in this country? You know we have to do that. There is not one person in the room who will deny that that has to be done. Do we do it in this bill? No. Do we give ourselves a possibility that we can do it at a later date? Yes. Do we have to make sure that there is some discipline in the budget as opposed to the other side of the Rotunda where there is no discipline? Yes. We need to do that. We need to do it for our own good. We also need to do it on mandatory and discretionary spending if we want to do the things in health care and prescription drugs that is right for this country.

You can vote no against this. If you vote no, you ought to know that you are voting against our military, you are voting against the people in New York. You need to know that you are also voting against the ability for us to solve the problems that we have in this country. If you want to vote against trying to solve the problems in health care and prescription drugs, vote no for this bill.

If you want to move forward and have the Congress do the things that the American people expect us to do, then you want to vote yes for this rule and vote yes for the bill.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to this rule, because it robs the Department of Defense of $13.2 billion that was requested by the President. I must say that I am surprised and frankly feel let down by my colleagues and good friends on the other side of the aisle, many of whom have in the past stood shoulder to shoulder with me in calling for more defense spending.

This rule includes a so-called "deeming" provision which says that the House shall consider the Budget Resolution to have passed a conference committee just as it passed the House. Doing so weakens national security because the budget resolution made two incredible raids on the Defense budget, reducing the money available to be appropriated for Defense by $13.2 billion.

First, the Budget Resolution reduced the Budget Authority available for defense by $10 billion by eliminating the contingency fund requested by the Department of Defense. I share some of the Budget Committee's concerns that this request was vague, but Congress is more than capable of working with the Department to determine how that funding can best be used, and no serious defense observer believes that the Department of Defense will not need this $10 billion, and even more, for its operations in FY03. This rule today puts that funding off limits.

Second, the Budget Resolution reduced the Budget Authority available for Defense by $3.2 billion which had been set aside by the Department of Defense for civilian health care accrual. The Budget Committee doesn't support doing this accrual accounting change, but taking the money away from the Department of Defense is the wrong answer. We have seen a consistent pattern in recent years of underestimating the costs in the Defense Health Program and many Operations and Maintenance accounts. The $3.2 billion included for civilian accrual costs should be maintained as a hedge against cost escalations in these accounts.

In addition to being $13.2 billion below the President's Request for defense, this resolution puts us as much as $6.9 billion under the Defense Authorization bill the House approved just a few weeks ago. That bill maintained the $3.2 billion originally requested for civilian accrual and it allocated $3.7 billion of the contingency fund to high priority operational items.

We should reject this rule Mr. Speaker, and allow the Appropriations Committee to bring to the floor a Defense Appropriations bill that is at least equal to the President's request, a request which is already $40 billion below what is required in procurement alone. That's not just according to me, that is the testimony given by the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Gen. Richard Myers, before the Defense Appropriations Subcommittee this year.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, is including $10 million in this bill to assist in State efforts to prevent and control transmissible spongiform encephalopathy, including bovine spongiform encephalopathy, chronic wasting disease, and scrapie, in farmed and free-ranging animals, does that constitute a vital defense need?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has not stated a proper parliamentary inquiry.

The gentleman from Texas moved the previous question on the resolution.

Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 216, nays 209, answered "present" 3, not voting 7, as follows:

☐ 1844

Mr. SHOWS changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

So the motion to adjourn was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 4775, and that I may include tabular and extraneous material.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ISAKSON). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

PERMISSION TO INCLUDE EXTRANEOUS MATERIAL DURING CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE RESOLUTION 428

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may be allowed to include extraneous material immediately following my remarks on the rule that has earlier passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

□ 1845

2002 SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS ACT FOR FURTHER RECOVERY FROM AND RESPONSE TO TERRORIST ATTACKS ON THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ISAKSON). Pursuant to House Resolution 428 and rule XVIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 4775.

□ 1845

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 4775) making supplemental appropriations for further recovery from and response to terrorist attacks on the United States for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes, with Mr. THORNBERRY in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as having been read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG) and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG).

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to bring to the House the 2002 Supplemental Appropriations Bill. This is the first appropriations bill that we will be considering this year, and it should prove to be an interesting experience.

The Committee on Appropriations ordered this legislation reported last week. The bill is extremely important, and I believe it will enjoy broad bipartisan support. It is extremely important, Mr. Chairman, because this is a wartime supplemental appropriations bill. This is to pay for our wartime activities in Afghanistan and other places that our military troops might be deployed. This is a wartime appropriations bill to repay our military services for the monies they have already expended from their fourth quarter accounts.

This is an extremely important bill in that it also, besides providing money for the Defense Department, provides for our homeland security. As we get further away from September 11, we may be tempted to forget what happened on that day in the United States of America. But, Mr. Chairman, we were attacked. Our people were attacked. We are going to fight back. We are going to finance our effort to fight back.

The President of the United States is doing an outstanding job in leading our Nation in the prosecution of the military campaign. He is doing an outstanding job in leading our Nation in seeking out terrorist organizations wherever we can locate them and proceeding to bring them to justice. So it is a very important bill, Mr. Chairman. However, over the last 5 weeks, some of the focus has gotten lost on this important bill. It has been sort of like a ship growing barnacles. Everyone knows this is a must-pass bill, and there are probably 435 ideas of what should be added to or subtracted from it. But I want to remind everyone again, the focus of this bill is and must continue to be that this is a wartime supplemental appropriations bill. It provides money for our troops. It provides money for our intelligence community. It provides money for the safety and security of our people and our community. It provides support for the victims of the attack in New York at the World Trade Center. And it provides funds to promote the U.S. foreign policy to prevent future attacks.

The committee reported a bill that provides $29.387 billion and half of that, or $15.8 billion, is for the Defense Department to continue to prosecute the war on terrorism. This bill supports the President. It fully funds his requirements for national security, foreign policy; and it provides an additional $5.5 billion in support for recovery in New York. There is $1.77 billion in additional funds for the Defense Department to pay for costs relating to the mobilization of the Guard and Reserve forces and to cover their operational expenses.

It provides for our country's biggest concern, securing our homeland, by providing $5.8 billion. That is $522 million above the President's request. It ensures that our nuclear assets can be secured and that law enforcement and our first responders, who are so important in providing for the safety of our people in our community, have adequate information to prevent, hopefully, or, if necessary, to respond to acts of terrorism.

It also gets the Transportation Security Administration up and running so that the traveling public will be safe. We have all heard the concerns raised over the past few days that the FBI had information that somehow was left out of security briefings for the President. The most important thing we can do to protect our country and our constituents from future attacks is to ensure that law enforcement and our intelligence community and the Commander in Chief, the President of the United States, have timely access to accurate and complete information.

I have been to the FBI; and my friend and colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) has been to the FBI. We have seen firsthand their antiquated technology equipment that needs to be enhanced, that needs to be updated, that needs to be brought into today's world. We looked at this closely and determined that the President's request did not provide enough for that purpose. So in the terrorism supplemental last year we added $132 million above the President's request for the FBI's information technology, and this supplemental bill contains an additional $100 million above the President's request for additional technology enhancement for the FBI.

At this point, there will be some who try to assess the blame. We are here to find solutions and to provide the funding necessary to put those solutions in place.

Now, in addition to defense and homeland security, we had a shortfall in the Pell grant program, an important program for the education of our young Americans. We added $1 billion to provide funding for the Pell grant program.

Our leadership, on a bipartisan basis, asked for funding to pay for the election reforms that we enacted earlier this year. So we added $450 million for that purpose. We increased the President's budget request for defense by $1.8 billion. In the committee, added by amendment, was $250 million for Israel and for humanitarian relief for the Palestinians. We have added $275 million over the President's request for veterans health care.

Mr. Chairman, we did not just spend the money. We had offsets. We had offsets of $1.8 billion more than the President's budget request had asked for. And so, Mr. Chairman, this is a good supplemental bill. It is well within the budget limits placed on us by the 2002 budget resolution.

I hope that we can consider this bill as what it is, a wartime emergency supplemental. I hope that we are not distracted by the other issues that were debated heatedly during the consideration of the rule. Let us focus today on this wartime emergency supplemental for our troops, for our security agencies, for our intelligence agencies, for the FBI and for the President of the United States to be able to do the things that we are demanding that he do, and that is to make America secure and to seek out those who perpetrate or would perpetrate terrorist attacks against our Nation.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to first of all congratulate the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG), for doing his usual good job in trying to produce a bipartisan bill.

As members of the committee know, our committee worked for 6 weeks and produced a bipartisan bill. And I want to tell you some of the things that it did to correct some of the chaos that we see in some of the agencies that are dealing with counterterrorism.

We found out that the Department of Energy had asked for $380 million to upgrade security so that weapons of mass destruction and nuclear material would be less susceptible either to terrorist attack or theft. OMB only approved 7 percent of that money. The committee provided the amount that was needed.

We also discovered that the Immigration and Naturalization Service had asked for $52 million because they had the reasonable idea that we ought to be able to determine which immigrants, or which persons here on visas I should say, had overstayed their visas; visas had expired; they had been asked to leave the country and, yet, had refused to do so. The INS wanted $52 million to set up a system to stop that nonsense. The OMB denied it all. The committee put in enough money to deal with the problem.

The FBI, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG) has indicated that we discovered after September 11, the FBI had a great need for computer modernization. We discovered, for instance, that less than half the computers at the FBI could be used to send a picture of a suspected terrorist from one FBI office to another around the country. So last year, over the threat of a veto by the President of the United States, we inserted enough money to see to it that that problem was corrected. As a result, Operation Trilogy will be up and running by the end of this summer, and we will have that capacity at the FBI.

In January, the FBI asked for an additional $635 million to secure their records and to take other actions necessary to protect against terrorism. OMB denied 625 of the $635 million, and the committee corrected that. In the last bill last year, we provided enough funds so that the Corps of Engineers could provide additional security for the hundred most vulnerable Federal sites in the country. The Corps of Engineers asked for an additional $128 million to deal with threats to additional sites. OMB denied it. The committee moved to take care of it.

We also saw the chaos at the Transportation Security Administration, very well described in the committee report. That planning has been so bad that the agency, for instance, suggested that we ought to be paying the guards who are looking over the shoulders of screeners at airports up to $84,000 a year, more than local mayors, more than airport directors would be paid in those same towns. It provided for 650 additional headquarters staff people here in Washington. And yet the budget request provided no money to house the new screening equipment that airports are supposed to install. So there would have been no way that we could have met the deadlines for having that equipment up and running. And the administration requested insufficient dollars to make certain that cockpit doors are fully secure by the end of the calendar year.

So the committee took actions to correct that.

The OMB also turned down the request from the Department of Defense for $790 million to avoid the demobilizing of 20 percent of the Guard and Reserve forces who presently are filling slots on the border, in ports, on a temporary basis until people can be trained to take their place, and the committee took action to fix that problem. So I think that we had a good bipartisan product.

Now, there were problems with the bill after it emerged from the full committee. We did have an amendment offered by the distinguished majority whip, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY), which gave the President the authority to use our military forces to invade The Netherlands, if necessary, in order to extract Americans who might be held by the World Court.

I have a chart here labeled TOM DELAY's Proposed Invasion of The Netherlands. Gives you some idea of where The Hague is and what will be required by way of carrier capacity, tanker capacity, if we were to invade The Netherlands. If somebody wants to take that seriously, feel free. I think that it leaves us open to considerable ridicule. But in spite of that I was willing to support this bill. But then we had the leadership attach this ridiculous rule to this bill which provided a convenient device by which the Nation's indebtedness could be raised by $750 billion without any Member ever having voted on it directly, and they also imposed the House budget resolution, which will mean, I guarantee you, we will not have enough resources to produce appropriation bills that the House will pass.

So we have seen again, and this has happened often in this House, we have seen an original bipartisan piece of legislation emerge from this committee, and we have seen it fundamentally screwed up by adding extraneous items that have no business on an appropriations bill.

So I think we are going to be here a long time because some of us feel that the ability of the House to proceed in an orderly and fair-minded fashion is worth arguing about, and we will be doing that through a series of actions that we will be taking and amendments that we will be offering.

I do ask one additional question. As I said, we have had 116 of our Republican friends offer a resolution requiring that a three-fifths vote of this House be required in order to raise the indebtedness of the United States, and yet we have seen this flip-flop action here today, and I would ask the following Members, Representatives ADERHOLT, BACHUS, BARR, BARTON, BILIRAKIS, BLUNT, BONO, BRADY, BRYANT, CALVERT, CANTOR, CHABOT, CRANE, CULBERSON, DELAY, DOOLITTLE, DUNN, ENGLISH, FORBES, GEKAS, GOODLATTE, GRAVES, HAYWORTH, HERGER, BAKER, BARTLETT, BASS, BOEHNER, I can't read that signature, CANNON, CASTLE, CHAMBLISS, CUNNINGHAM, DEAL, DEMINT, DUNCAN, and all the others whose names I put in the RECORD earlier, I would ask them how they can go home to their constituents and tell them that they are going to vote to require a new higher threshold of votes on this House before the Nation can be plunged into more indebtedness and then engage in the flip-flop that they engaged in today whereby they have guaranteed that we will see a huge increase in national indebtedness when this bill comes back from the Senate?

I find that to be quaint and interesting.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia (Mr. KINGSTON), a member of the committee.

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG) for allowing me to speak tonight and I stand in support of this bill.

This bill does 3 things, and it all goes back to that horrible day, 9/11. This bill continues the war on terrorism. This bill continues the battle for homeland security, and it helps rebuild our beloved national city of New York.

Just remember, the American people will never forget September 11 and what this Congress has done immediately after 9/11 to start the battle. We will never forget the brave who died. We committed ourselves almost immediately to make sure that Osama bin Laden and all the terrorists around the globe would not be victorious.

This bill tonight is part of that battle. This bill has $15.77 billion to support our troops, and I had the opportunity, with the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. KOLBE), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Foreign Operations, Export Financing and Related Programs of the Committee on Appropriations, to go on a bipartisan basis to Afghanistan. We went to Uzbekistan, Tajikistan and Pakistan. We visited 4 of our bases, and we met with our troops, we met with Afghan soldiers, and I can say that they appreciate what the United States of America is doing. They are happy that we are there.

Their biggest concern is will we stay committed, and this bill tonight helps show the world that we are committed, not just behind our troops but behind the people over there so they can have a secure future. But the battle is not just in central Asia; it is all over the streets of America.

So the second thing this bill does is help secure our homeland. One of the things that it does is work with local law enforcement personnel to track down any potential suspicious terrorists or activities on a local level. This bill also helps secure everybody who is traveling; $850 million to help check for baggage, explosives and detection systems; $630 million for baggage screeners; $75 million for security enhancements at U.S. ports. And I just want to talk about this.

Not all of us are traveling. Prior to 9/11 there were 1.2 million Americans in the air at any given day. Nowadays it is about 800,000, and what this does is it secures our airlines even further, but also our ports.

I am from Savannah. Last year in Savannah, we had 1 million containers come in. Of the 1 million, only 1 percent were actually screened and checked as to what their contents were. This bill helps expand that so that our ports can be secure.

It also strengthens our communities for any other disasters, working with EMS facilities and giving the local hospitals the support that they need and the expertise.

Our war against terrorism is not going to be over until every city in America is safe. As somebody told me, this war is about making sure we can go to Wal-Mart and not have to worry, and I think that that is something we all have to keep in mind.

Finally, in this bill is $5.5 billion to help rebuild the great New York City, and that is going to be a long job, and I think it is certainly in the national interest to do so.

There are some other things in this bill that are less high profile but very important, and one of the things is there is $1.6 million for additional staff and resources for the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, and one of the issues that has come up recently is do we need a blue ribbon committee to study what went wrong on 9/11 and how can we do a better job.

Well, this bill addresses that because we already have an existing intelligence committee. It is bipartisan. One chairman is BOB GRAHAM of Florida, a Democrat. Another chairman is the gentleman from Florida (Mr. GOSS), a Republican. A bipartisan committee that has been working since January to look into 9/11. It is bicameral, Senate and House together, and it is comprised of experts. This bill addresses that, and I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5½ minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from New York (Mrs. LOWEY).

Mrs. LOWEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the ranking member for yielding me the time, and I also want to take the opportunity to thank our chairman of the committee, and to me it has been a pleasure to work with the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. KOLBE), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Foreign Operations, Export Financing and Related Programs, and I rise to address the foreign operations component of this bill.

The foreign operations portion of the supplemental contains $1.6 billion for various priorities and provides for the vast majority of the administration's requests. I am particularly pleased that the committee did not grant the broad waivers sought by the administration along with these funds but, rather, included specific waivers where appropriate.

This bill will give the President the broad latitude and flexibility that he sought to carry out the war on terrorism. While many have expressed concern that unnecessary funds for foreign operations were added to the bill, in excess of the President's request, I believe the funding added by this committee is extremely important.

In light of the fact that the committee received few details as to how the funding requested will actually be spent, we were well within our discretion to provide what we thought was necessary. I strongly support the additional funding in this bill for rebuilding Afghanistan, a long-term commitment we simply cannot shortchange, and I also support the additional funds provided for Israel.

The bill contains both military and economic assistance to a number of countries outside the immediate area of Afghanistan, such as the Philippines, Georgia and Yemen, where United States troops are or will be engaged in training indigenous forces to combat terrorism. The committee has approved funding in these instances with the clear expectation that the administration will keep Congress fully informed of any change or expansion in the role of the United States forces. I hope this will indeed be the case.

As I said before, I strongly support the additional assistance to Israel that is included in this bill. Maintaining Israel's security and stability has long been a fundamental priority of the United States foreign policy. Israel has devoted precious resources to fighting the terror that continues to threaten its own citizens, 3 of whom were murdered just this week by suicide bombers, and the country is a key democratic ally in our war against terror.

This funding originally requested by the State Department as part of its supplemental request to OMB is essential to ensure our key partner in the Middle East remains strong. I urge my colleagues to oppose amendments to cut this funding.

I would like to take a moment to discuss 2 specific items of concern. First, the current status of fiscal year 2002 funds for the United Nations Population Fund. The conference agreement on the fiscal year 2002 foreign operations bill provided $34 million for the organization, a deal that was painstakingly negotiated. The administration knew about our negotiations, and after the bill passed the House by an overwhelming margin, the President signed it on January 10, 2002.

Only after signing the bill did the administration express concern about as-yet unproven allegations that UNFPA supported coercive family planning practices in China in violation of U.S. law. In a direct challenge to clear congressional direction, the President waited 5 months to even investigate these claims, and UNFPA was forced to cut its staff and curtail its life-saving programs around the world.

During committee consideration of this bill, the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. KOLBE) and I offered an amendment which would have ensured that UNFPA received the funds intended for it by July 10, 7 months after the signing of the bill, unless the President determines that the organization is in violation of the U.S. law.

I am deeply disappointed that the Committee on Rules left this provision and another dealing with UNFPA unprotected. In my judgment, it was inappropriate to single out this particular issue while allowing the bill to come to the floor with highly controversial provisions regarding the International Criminal Court, the budget resolution and Medicare provider payments.

I anticipate the Senate bill will have something to say about UNFPA, and I look forward to discussing it in conference.

I am also disappointed that the rule did not allow me to offer an amendment increasing funding to address the global AIDS crisis. While this bill already contains $200 million for HIV/AIDS, a clear indication that Congress recognizes the emergency nature of the crisis, we can and should be doing more. Applications to the Global Fund to Combat Infectious Diseases have far exceeded the fund's resources, and this situation will only get worse as time goes by. Our own bilateral programs, while highly effective, will reach 25 percent of affected areas.

□ 1915

Our response to this tragedy must be as expansive as the pandemic itself so that we stop the wholesale destruction that AIDS is causing in Africa and will cause in other areas around the world.

As a global leader, we have the responsibility to take the initiative, jolting other donors into contributing more. Again, I anticipate that the Senate bill will far exceed ours, and I look forward to discussing this in conference as well.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS), the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Transportation of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ROGERS of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman for yielding me this time, and I rise in support of the bill.

This bill provides much-needed appropriations for the Department of Transportation, particularly the new Transportation Security Administration and the U.S. Coast Guard. The bill also provides $1.8 billion in additional expenses for the City of New York to address its transit needs in the wake of 9-11. And I am pleased that we were able to provide the vast majority of requested funds for all DOT agencies, except the TSA; and that is a special case.

The administration requested $4.4 billion in supplemental funds, but the request made a curious statement. It admitted that OMB did not have a clue whether or not $1.9 billion, almost half of the amount, was necessary. It asked Congress to write a blank check for that amount and let OMB figure it out later. Well, Mr. Chairman, that is not the way we do things on the Committee on Appropriations. We expect the administration to justify their request, all of it, in great detail. While some of that material is now being developed and being presented, it is clear much more work remains to be done. Because of that lack of supporting justification, the committee was unable to support the full request for contingency emergency funding for TSA.

Members should know that unless a change in direction is made, the TSA will be monstrous in size. When this agency was established last year, we thought we were creating an agency of about 33,000 people. The current estimate now is almost 70,000. We are planning to create a vast army of new Federal workers, some of whom would do nothing more than check your driver's license and airplane ticket or run your shoes over to an x-ray machine and bring them back to you. TSA plans to hire over 3,000 people just to sit in a chair and make sure someone does not run the wrong way down an exit lane.

Mr. Chairman, there has to be a better way. I do not intend to recommend funds for a 70,000-man bureaucracy full of shoe runners and exit-lane watchers. Technology can obviate the need for thousands of these positions, and others are not the purview of TSA or simply not essential. So I believe strongly that TSA needs to look more carefully at its growth plans, and I will continue to press them as the fiscal year 2003 appropriations process unfolds.

This supplemental bill asks TSA to begin that review now. We provide full funding for the procurement and installation of bomb detection systems at airports. In fact, we even raise those funds because the request, we thought, was inadequate. But we have not provided funds to build up that 70,000-man agency. The bill caps staffing at no more than 45,000 full-time positions. I believe that anyone who reviews TSA's plans in detail, as I have, will conclude that this is sufficient for the first year of that agency. In fact, it is about twice the number of people who were performing screening activities just 1 year ago.

I am pleased that the bill provides even more funding than requested by the Coast Guard, an agency on the front line of the fight for homeland security. We provide the FAA flexibility to address operating budget shortfalls which stem from extra security expenses at air traffic control facilities, and we provide additional funds for review of truck drivers who apply to drive hazardous materials within the country. These are all vitally needed transportation security improvements, and I am pleased we were able to fund them, especially given the tight budget constraints placed on us in this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I think this is a good bill given the constraints placed on the committee, and I ask Members to support it.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. FARR).

Mr. FARR of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise with some concern about the process here in the United States House of Representatives. I am a proud member of the Committee on Appropriations, and I am proud of the work we do there. I am also very proud of the Chair, who I think manages that committee very fairly. But something happened on the way through the process here that stinks.

The committee worked very hard to try to pay for the needed costs of what has happened in this country since we were here last year, the unexpected costs; and that is why this bill is needed. This is an emergency bill. It provides additional funds to pay for essentially contingencies that were not anticipated; and as we have heard, 9-11 is the biggest of those. But also there is an old adage here that says this is the only train that is going to make it all the way to the White House, and if you want to be on that train, you better load up.

I think that the committee did a good job of making sure that this was not a big pork process and that it did not load up too much; and that is always a tough bipartisan effort to put out a good bill. But after the bill was put out of the committee, it went to the Committee on Rules, and there the word came down that this bill was going to be beefed up. It was going to be loaded up, and it was going to take care of the political problems that certain Members of this House were having.

I am from California, and we all know that California is facing a big financial problem. It is in debt. It is a big State, the biggest producer of taxes in the United States, and the biggest contributor of taxes to the Federal Government. It is a State that probably can take credit for the surge in the economy in the last decade, and a State that was hardest hit in the recession, particularly to the dot-com industry that was such a success.

So that is why the State is in debt. Its revenues just did not meet expectations. It had incredible costs to pay for energy, costs that we are now seeing were not the State's problem, but a manipulation of the market by the private sector. Yet we find in California that we have a lot of hard-liners who feel that we ought to have constitutional amendments on requiring a balanced budget, as we do in California. The State is not allowed to go into debt; and, therefore, the legislature, at this moment, is cutting like mad and in fact doing some tough political things in an election year. They are even raising some new revenue.

But Members of the California delegation who are here in the other party have come out in signing a resolution, H.J. Res. 86, introduced this year, to amend the United States Constitution to require a two-thirds vote if we are to raise the debt limit. But guess what, they are the ones, the first ones to criticize a Democratic Governor in California and then turn around in this House, put their name on a resolution to require a constitutional amendment to do the same as California.

But this bill, because of the way it was amended in the Committee on Rules, it allows them to essentially duck a vote on the debt increase, a huge debt increase, of the Federal Government. We have a dozen Republicans from California that are coauthors of that bill who now run away from the responsibility of having a balanced budget to allow the United States Government to go into a big deficit. That is wrong. It is the wrong way to handle this emergency appropriations bill.

We will see in the debate tonight a sort of in-your-face; that if you do not vote for this bill, you are not voting for the soldiers; if you do not vote for the bill, you are not voting for the firemen; if you do not vote for this bill, you are not voting for a half dozen other particular interests out there. That is not the reason why a lot of people are going to vote against this bill. The reason is that this process has been corrupted by essentially hijacking a legitimate bill and making it a bill with all kinds of other political riders on it, the kind of process that we around here always complain about; that we ought to be fair and open and full of transparency. The process was hijacked. And it is not the fault of the appropriators; it is not the fault of the good work of the Committee on Appropriations. It is the fault of the Committee on Rules taking mandates from Republican leadership. That is wrong.

I just hope that tonight, as the debate goes on, that people realize this was a good bill, put out by a good committee, and it was hijacked along the way to do wrong for the United States and to do evil in the budgetary process. This essentially takes money that is in our Social Security account, takes money that is in the Medicare account and requires those monies to be spent on things that should not be spent on by those accounts.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Alabama (Mr. CALLAHAN), the chairman of the Subcommittee on Energy and Water.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

First, let me say I have great admiration for the chairman, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG), and for the efforts he has put into this bill, as well as those of the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) representing the minority of this House.

Secondly, as I approach the last year of my tenure here in the Congress of the United States, I just want to tell my colleagues that today is a classic example of how great this institution is. In America and in every democracy, a majority rules. Just a few minutes ago I was in the well of this House arguing against something on a principle that I believe very deeply in, and I lost, because a majority rules. When this bill passes it will be because a majority of us will vote for it. And if a majority votes for it, it will go on to the Senate.

But this is a great institution, filled with great people, with great minds, with great Americans, who have one thing in common, and that is we all want to do what is best for America.

As I listen to the debate on this floor each week, I hear the Democrats on the one hand saying this is not the right avenue to take. And I hear my majority Republican Party saying this is the avenue we should take. But very seldom do we have different destinations. We are all trying to get to the same corner of the room. Now, the Democrats, in many cases, choose to go to the left to get there; and the Republicans choose to go to the right to get to, guess what, the same destination.

There is no doubt that we want to do everything we possibly can in this war on terrorism. There is no doubt that we all want to support the President of the United States to make certain that the administration has ample facilities and ample resources to provide the services they need to provide to the American people. It is only right that we disagree, but it is only right that a majority rules. And while I was defeated in my quest to change the rule to move in a different direction, a majority of the Members of this House voted to tell me that they disagreed with me, and I respect that.

I will have amendments tonight to change the direction of this bill, amendments that will reduce some sections of this bill I do not like. But guess what, I have $378 million for energy and water in this bill, which is vitally needed by the areas of government that my committee has jurisdiction over. There are so many good things in this bill, and there are a few things that I wish were not in there. So a majority should prevail there too, Mr. Chairman.

As we debate this issue tonight to decide whether we ought to vote "yes" or "no" on final passage, we weigh the good over the bad. And while these are some things that I disagree with in here, the good in this particular case outweighs the bad.

So as I leave, I respect this institution. I respect all of my colleagues. I respect the great tradition of this House. And I respect that we live in a democracy where we can differ, but, nevertheless, in a democracy where a majority rules. And that is what America is all about.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. LEWIS), the distinguished deputy whip.

Mr. LEWIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank my friend and my colleague, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY), for yielding me this time.

This evening, I rise in strong opposition to raising the debt limit.

□ 1930

The Republicans are trying to sneak in a provision that increases the debt ceiling without a full, fair, open and honest debate. Apparently the other side, the majority party, are hiding something. What are they hiding? What is the great secret?

The American people deserve to know that the funds for a debt limit increase will come directly from the Social Security trust fund. We need to protect Social Security and ensure that we meet our obligations today. Instead, the majority party, the Republicans, are stealing from the Social Security trust fund and increasing our national debt every chance they get. For the next 10 years, we will increase the debt by more than $300 billion. Something is wrong with that.

This party, the Republicans, are mortgaging the future of our children. They are ripping away the safety for our Nation's seniors. Increasing the debt limit is like increasing the credit limit on your credit card. What does this do? It just puts you in a deeper and deeper hole. That is what the Republicans are doing. So do not be fooled. They are putting us in deeper debt and it is their obligation to get us out of it. We should not spend Social Security on anything other than Social Security. American families work hard to pay into a system that they should be able to count on when they retire. Social Security is a sacred trust, a sacred covenant between the American people and our government. We must never, never, ever take away the security out of Social Security. Let us keep our promise to the American people.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. REGULA), the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services and Education.

Mr. REGULA. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I want to point out to my colleagues that this bill contains $1 billion for the Pell grants. Why? Because more Americans are seeking these grants. This amount ensures that every qualified student applicant will receive a Pell grant and this can spell the difference of more opportunities for a better job and a chance to participate more fully in the American dream. I think it is vitally important that we approve the legislation with this particular feature in the bill.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF), chairman of the Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, State and Judiciary.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of this legislation. The bill includes $112 million for the FBI, which is $102 million above the request of the administration; but it will help the FBI do what they have to do. The recommendation also includes $10 million for the foreign terrorist tracking task force, a multiagency effort to prevent terrorists from coming into the country. We certainly need that as quickly as possible.

$75 million is recommended for the INS, $40 million above the request. Again the administration was low in its request. You cannot complain about the INS and then not fund its necessary programs, including $49 million to address the shortfall in the immigration inspection account; $25 million to bolster efforts to track and apprehend people who have absconded on deportation orders; and $1 million to continue development of an entry-exit system.

The bill also has $175 million for the Justice Department for State and local first responder equipment, training and planning needs. This funding is provided to the Department of Justice as authorized by the USA Patriot instead of being provided to FEMA as requested.

For the State Department and the Broadcasting Board of Governors, the bill includes a total of $337 million for critical embassy security and public diplomacy needs. After September 11, a lot of attention has been paid to the inadequacy of public diplomacy efforts. We are not doing an adequate job of telling America's story to the world and communicating effectively with the foreign public. To improve this effort, the bill includes $52.6 million for information, exchange and broadcasting programs of the State Department and the Broadcasting Board of Governors, $27.7 million above the request. The amount also includes $17.5 million for information programs, $20 million for international exchange programs, $7.4 million for the continuation of the Radio Free Afghanistan, and $7.7 million to expand the reach of the Middle East Radio Network.

Then in closing, the bill also includes $20 million for 100 additional positions at the SEC to address the immediate and urgent need for increased oversight of the accounting industry.

Finally, the bill includes a provision authorizing the closed circuit transmission of the Moussaoui trial to victims of the September 11 attacks, and we also provide the requisite funding for that.

Mr. Chairman, this is a very important and an emergency issue. I urge quick passage of the bill, hopefully through the Senate and to the President for his signature.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. DICKS).

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to engage in a colloquy with the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and the gentleman from New York (Mr. SERRANO) concerning INS fee collections.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WOLF. I would be pleased to engage in a colloquy with the gentleman from Washington and the gentleman from New York.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, the fiscal year 2002 Commerce-Justice-State appropriations bill authorizes the Attorney General to charge and collect a $3 fee per individual for immigration inspection and preinspection activities related to commercial ships.

It is my understanding that it was not the intent of this provision to levy additional costs on regularized commuter ferry traffic between foreign countries and the United States and that it was this concern that led the committee to include an exemption for ferries operating on the Great Lakes between Canada and the United States in the legislation. I would like to bring to the committee's attention another region of the United States that I believe should be provided an exemption from this fee. Several passenger ferries operate between Washington State and Canada carrying passengers, cars and freight daily between the two countries. The new fee would significantly increase ferry ticket prices charged to commuters and businesses.

It had been my intent to offer an amendment to this bill exempting certain ferry vessels from this fee. However, the committee has indicated that it would prefer to deal with this issue comprehensively in the fiscal year 2003 Commerce Justice State appropriations bill. I would like to ask the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from New York if my understanding accurately reflects their intention.

Mr. WOLF. I would say, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Washington is absolutely correct. It was our intent to differentiate these commuter vessels from cruise ships. As part of the fiscal year 2003 appropriation process, we absolutely will explore legislative exemptions to ensure that the fee does not have unintended consequences. I thank the gentleman for bringing this to our attention. We will take care of it.

Mr. SERRANO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DICKS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SERRANO. I agree with the gentleman from Virginia and look forward to working with him and the gentleman from Washington to ensure that this fee is fairly and equitably imposed.

Mr. DICKS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlemen very much for engaging in the colloquy.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. ISTOOK).

Mr. ISTOOK. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time and for the opportunity to speak in favor of this legislation that is before us.

Mr. Chairman, as it has been mentioned, there are three purposes behind this bill: it is a wartime supplemental. First, to pay for the expenses, the huge expenses of our war against terrorism. Secondly, to pay the major expenses of homeland security to protect the United States borders and the people in the country. And, third, to provide the emergency assistance for those that have suffered through these disasters relating to terrorism.

I rise to address some of the elements relating to homeland security. We did not begin just after September 11 to try to address homeland security. Our subcommittee, among other things, funds the U.S. Customs Service. Even before September 11, we had allocated major funds to put 285 additional agents of the Customs Service at our borders, to add $33 million in inspection technology to examine the cargo that is coming into the country, looking for dangerous substances as well as drugs that could be sought to be brought in. Then we continued this process in the supplemental that we passed in December, not only paying for recovery and restoration of the offices that were destroyed in New York City but also beefing up the air and marine operations of the Customs Service, providing the funding with which the Customs Service is already adding over 300 additional special agents, over 600 additional border inspectors and the support people to go along with it.

There is another $68 million in the technology to be able to examine, without having to open all the containers, the cargo that comes into the country; and the major expansion of the training that is necessary for the people that are coming in as new Federal law enforcement people. This supplemental continues those efforts. For example, the Federal law enforcement training center in Georgia has to train some 6,000 investigative personnel of the Transportation Security Administration. This bill has the funding for those personnel. It has additional funding to add more security at the Federal buildings under the supervision of the General Services Administration which is the landlord for our Federal Government. It has some $87 million to help pay for better filtration equipment and other items to protect workers in the postal system against the threats of anthrax or any other substance that someone might send as part of a terrorist act through the mail.

There are major other elements of this bill trying to protect our Nation, trying to secure our borders, to detect and deter and halt threats before they get into the United States of America. This is a major and significant effort. I want to thank Chairman Young and everyone who has been responsible for making these resources available to better secure our homeland.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana (Mr. VISCLOSKY).

Mr. VISCLOSKY. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I want to express my concern about the procedures used to bring this important legislation to the House floor and the lack of inclusion in doing so. I would point out in the rule that was adopted earlier today in this Chamber, section 1404 was added to the underlying legislation relative to the treatment of certain counties for the purpose of reimbursement under the Medicare program. I do not rise today to express my opposition to the inclusion of those counties if relief is necessary for them. I rise in opposition to a point that other counties were not included as well.

The fact is, under this legislation, counties in Lackawanna, Pennsylvania; Luzerne, Pennsylvania; Wyoming, Pennsylvania; Columbia, Pennsylvania; Lycoming, Pennsylvania; and Mercer, Pennsylvania, were included. Hospitals in Orange County, New York, were included. Hospitals in Dutchess County, New York, were included.

On November 7 of last year, I wrote to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means explaining that Porter Memorial Hospital in Porter County, Indiana, was experiencing similar difficulty as far as an inequitable reimbursement under their classification in Medicare reimbursement. On January 22 of this year, I received a response from the honorable chairman indicating that he had received my communication, that hearings would be held and I would be notified. On February 5 of this year I wrote to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means and asked that we be allowed to testify on behalf of Porter Memorial Hospital in Porter County, Indiana.

□ 1945

Subsequent to February 5, no hearings were held that I am aware of. We were not asked to provide any materials for justification as far as the arguments for Porter Memorial Hospital. But tonight, on May 22, I find out that we have 8 hospital counties in the States of Pennsylvania and New York whose problems are being rectified tonight. That is not fair. That is not inclusive in this legislative process. Porter Memorial Hospital in the State of Indiana, in the County of Porter, is as deserving.

I would hope as this session proceeds that the representations made by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means on January 22 that hearings were going to be held and that action on this vital issue to Porter Memorial Hospital would be taken.

The fact is that Porter Memorial Hospital is located very near Chicago, Illinois. Their costs of providing care to residents in that area are comparable to the City of Chicago, Illinois, but the reimbursements are not. There is a differential for an adjoining county between Cook County, Illinois, and Porter County, Indiana. That is Lake County, Indiana, and that places the people at Porter County in a further disadvantage. I would hope that this problem is rectified.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. WALSH), the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on VA, HUD and Independent Agencies of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Florida (Chairman YOUNG) for being a champion for my State, New York.

As a number of Members have mentioned, there are 3 goals to this supplemental. I would like to address the New York City component of that. We remember well President Bush's pledge to do whatever it takes. A number of $20 billion was discussed. There was a lot of discussion, a lot of contention about that in the last supplemental. The President said, "I am good for my word." The chairman said the President's word is good. I said the President's word would be good. And the President's word is as good as gold. In fact, this brings the total appropriation for New York City to $21.5 billion.

There is $5.5 billion additional in this for the reconstruction and recovery of New York, $1.8 billion for transportation, $2.75 billion for FEMA, and $750 million for HUD. The HUD fund, CDBG funds, have enabled New York City to begin to put itself back together again and at the same time retain the businesses and the residences of the people who live in that Lower Manhattan neighborhood.

I was there just 2 weeks ago, and I was there the Friday after the attack, with President Bush. It is a remarkably different place. Then it was total devastation. Today the World Trade Center site looks like a construction site. It is hallowed ground, clearly, but New York is back to work.

Is there more to do? There is lots more to do. Decisions have not yet been made on what to do at that site. But the fact of the matter is the neighborhood is alive, it is vibrant, and it is New York City again. It has that hum in Lower Manhattan.

So the President kept his promise, the Congress is keeping its promise, and it is a remarkable thing to see the vibrancy of that city returning.

Is there more to do? Yes. Is there planning to be done at the World Trade Center site? Yes. But the New Yorkers will make that decision, with the help of the Federal Government and the people of the United States.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. FATTAH).

Mr. FATTAH. Mr. Chairman, I was very supportive of the supplemental appropriations bill as we worked our will in committee under the quite able leadership of our chairman and ranking member. I am, however, somewhat concerned about the rule and the self-executing nature of the various amendments to this, particularly the one related to the debt ceiling and the like.

I just want my colleagues on the Committee on Appropriations to know that I think the original work of the committee as reported represented, I think, an appropriate response to a number of issues facing the country at this time, and I was particularly pleased with the work that was done to help the District of Columbia meet some of the needs that have been associated with September 11 in terms of police overtime and the like. I just want to thank the chairman and the ranking member for their work on those important matters.

As we conclude our work, I would hope that in the future we would not have these types of add-ons. But it is part of the process, unfortunately, and we will have to work our will here on the floor. But the committee deserves, I think, appropriate thanks from the House for the original work that was done.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time. I do so to yield to my friend, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. SMITH), for the purpose of a colloquy.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, first may I compliment the gentleman and his committee on his efforts to get needed support to our first responders, our firefighters, so they can better prepare for any terrorist attack that may occur.

Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman knows, the President's fiscal year 2003 budget request proposes consolidating existing preparedness programs under the Office of National Preparedness within the Federal Emergency Management Agency. This is a proposal Congress will be addressing in the coming months.

However, a concern I have is that the first responder supplemental grant funding for fiscal year 2002 in this bill goes to the Department of Justice. I understand the reason behind providing Justice with funding, but I hope it does not mean that the anti-terror needs of firefighters and emergency medical personnel will be implemented without the input of the U.S. Fire Administration, which is part of FEMA.

Can the chairman provide some assurance that he and his House conferees will take into account the needs of firefighters and EMS personnel as it distributes these supplemental funds?

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, the gentleman makes a good point. There is no question, as we watched on television as the recovery and the first response in New York City and at the Pentagon unfolded before our very eyes, we saw the importance of the first responders in not only protecting property, but especially saving lives. So I would have to tell the gentleman we are still in the process of figuring out the best division of responsibility among the various agencies for providing assistance to first responders, which we are going to do. There is no question about that.

I agree with the gentleman from Michigan that we have to involve those agencies with responsibility for assisting firefighters and EMS personnel to help assure that they are prepared. I can assure the gentleman that the Committee on Appropriations will continue to work to make sure it takes into account the needs of firefighters and EMS personnel, as well as law enforcement officers, when it considers how to distribute the supplemental funding in this bill and in the fiscal year 2003 appropriations bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I thank the chairman for his statement, and certainly all his personal support for our first responders and law enforcement personnel in this Nation.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, I thank the gentleman for this opportunity to have that colloquy.

Mr. SCHIFF. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of emergency security assistance to our democratic ally Israel. The $200 million in supplemental assistance to Israel contained in the FY 2002 Supplemental Emergency Appropriations bill provides vital emergency resources to a key U.S. ally and a frontline state in the war against terror.

Mr. Chairman, it became painfully evident after September 11 that Israel and the United States are engaged in a common struggle against terrorism. Neither country asked for this struggle; both have constantly chosen a path of peace when given the choice. Israelis must know that the U.S. stands with them in this difficult hour, as they have repeatedly stood with this country throughout the years.

The United States has never been more resolved to eliminate the threat of terrorism against innocent civilians and free society. The democratic State of Israel stands shoulder to shoulder with the United States in this effort. Terrorist attacks against innocent Israeli civilians are taking place on a constant basis. In the face of terror, Israel is attempting to rout out the forces that threaten the daily lives of its citizens. But Israel continues to suffer a systematic and deliberate campaign of terror aimed at inflicting as many casualties as possible.

Mr. Chairman, as the world's leading democracy, we have a responsibility to stand by a democratic friend and ally threatened by a wave of terrorist aggression. At this volatile stage of developments in the Middle East, Israel needs to know that it can count on U.S. security assistance.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to H.R. 4775, the Supplemental Appropriations Bill. For the last few years supplemental appropriations bills have been brought to the floor to cover shortcomings in the previous year's appropriation bills. Increasingly, these bills have strayed from their original purpose of merely appropriating funds for certain programs. Instead, they make changes in policy, create new regulations, or implement new and completely unrelated laws. This bill continues this unfortunate trend. It sends billions of dollars in foreign aid to other countries, cuts funding to low-income and elderly housing, and includes specific Medicare "fixes" for hospitals in the districts of three Republican House members. Most egregious of all, the bill raises the federal debt limit to let the government keep spending money above what we should.

The Republicans have a problem and they don't know what do about it. Their irresponsible tax cut has eaten up so much of the government's resources that we are about to exceed the federal debt limit. Rather than admit that they caused this problem, the Republicans have slipped language into the bill to raise the debt limit without anyone knowing. In other words, they've taken a page from Ken Lay's book: cover up irresponsible spending with hidden accounting tricks. What a disgrace.

Keeping up these tricks, the Republicans want to send $1.4 billion in aid to foreign countries four months ahead of time in order to dodge the budget bullet. There is simply no justification for this funding. Even worse, the bill further relaxes controls that prevent human rights violators from receiving military assistance.

And the bill doesn't stop there. Listen to this: we're going to give Israel $200 million to continue destroying Palestinian infrastructure while at the same time giving the Palestinians $50 million to rebuild! The bill relaxes restrictions on aid to Colombia despite its ongoing human rights violations in its war against revolutionaries within its own boarders. It even appropriates $1.8 billion in military funding above the President's request.

The Republicans naturally need a method to pay for all this new spending and they have proposed to do so in two ways: first, as I've already described, they want to raise the debt limit. Second, they want to cut valuable programs here at home. For example, the Republicans have cut $300 million for low-income and senior housing in order to pay for this bill. In doing so, they turn their backs on 13 million Americans who spend more than half of their income on substandard housing.

This bill wastes more of our precious resources and then covers up for it with hidden, below-the-table gimmicks. I will vote against this awful bill and urge my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. HOEFFEL. Mr. Chairman, once again the GOP leadership in the House has taken a necessary bipartisan effort to fund our war on terror and bolster our homeland security, and riddled it with partisan budgetary maneuvers including a thinly veiled provision that would permit an increase in our nation's debt ceiling.

This supplemental appropriations bill includes $15.6 billion in necessary military and defense-related expenditures to fight the war on terror, and another $13.6 billion for homeland security, financial help for rebuilding efforts in New York City, and foreign assistance, including $200 million for Israel—all necessary expenditures that I support and will vote for.

However, the rule for this legislation includes seemingly innocuous language that would allow a huge increase in the debt ceiling to be inserted in the conference report without a separate vote. This is unconscionable.

Raising the debt ceiling, coupled with the current reckless fiscal policy of increasing spending while reducing tax revenue, will put us on the track for a fiscal train wreck.

This will plunge this country back into a level of debt, borrowing, and higher interest rates that we thought we had permanently left behind. In just a year, we have seen actual and projected surpluses erased. Today, the most recent analysis suggests that we will run a $300 billion non-Social Security deficit in this fiscal year. Even if we spend Social Security dollars to fund the government—a policy that I adamantly oppose—we will still run a $150 billion deficit this year.

Our debt ceiling is like a limit on a credit card, and if we keep raising it without taking action to put our fiscal house back into order, we are heading for fiscal disaster. It is not prudent for a family in financial trouble to seek a higher limit on the family credit card nor should Congress impose a long-term debt ceiling increase without a sound fiscal plan.

I would support a time-limited increase in our debt limit to help fund our war efforts—possibly one to three months—but that must be accompanied by a budget summit between leaders of Congress and the Administration to put our budget back into order and prevent us from further fueling our debt with money from the Social Security and Medicare Trust Funds.

While the supplemental bill is generally a good bill—absent the provisions contained in the rule—I am troubled by one particular provision. In order to keep the cost of the bill under $30 billion, the bill drafters offset $643 million of the costs by striking airline loan guarantees that Congress passed after 9/11. These guarantees are a matter of survival for the airlines, particularly US Airways. I will work with my colleagues in the Senate to see that this language is not included in the conference version.

Although I support this supplemental spending, I will quite possibly vote against it in a conference report if an unfettered debt ceiling increase is included. Funding our war on terror, making America safe and putting our fiscal house back in order are not mutually exclusive pursuits. We need a budget summit to come to a bipartisan agreement on ways to fund our current spending needs, stabilize our tax policy and protect Social Security and Medicare without throwing our budget into turmoil from which it will take years to recover.

I have been a hawk on our national debt since I came to Capitol Hill, and I will remain so in this crucial fiscal period.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Appropriations Committee's effort to bring forward a bill that provides funds to address the current shortfall in the Pell Grant Program for this nation's neediest students.

Specifically, this bill puts forward an additional $1 billion to ensure the largest maximum award in the history of the Pell Grant Program—$4,000. This bill, while providing for the $4,000 annual maximum Pell Grant award as proposed by the President, will also provide assurances to students and their families that the necessary funds will in fact be available for them when they are needed.

This President and this Congress stand firm in their commitment to the Pell Grant Program. That commitment is clear as evidenced by this chart, which shows a steady and substantial increase in the annual maximum award since fiscal year 1995, the point when Republicans gained control of the Congress, through the current year. We will continue our pledge to support the Pell Grant Program as we move forward with the President's education agenda.

The Pell Grant Program is the foundation of the Federal need-based student financial assistance programs, and is often the only hope low-income students have to achieve their dream of obtaining a higher education. Currently, the Pell Grant Program serves more than 4.4 million students and in FY 2003, the President's budget request will serve an additional 55,000 students, allowing more students to move forward and obtain a quality education.

We can do nothing better than provide an opportunity for this nation's citizens to obtain a quality education.

In addition, I'd like to thank the Appropriators for including $190 million to help replenish the National Emergency Grant program, and for restoring $110 million to the dislocated worker program. These funds will go a long way in supporting American workers who have lost their jobs due to the economic slowdown and last year's terrorist attacks.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to show their support for American workers and the very important Pell Grant Program by voting yes on this legislation.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for general debate has expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the 5-minute rule and the amendments printed in House Report 107–484 are adopted.

During consideration of the bill for amendment, the Chair may accord priority in recognition to a Member offering an amendment that he has printed in the designated place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Those amendments will be considered read.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4775

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes, namely:

TITLE I—SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS

CHAPTER 1

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Food Safety and Inspection Service

For an additional amount for "Food Safety and Inspection Service", $2,000,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That the entire amount shall be available only to the extent an official budget request, that includes designation of the entire amount of the request as an emergency requirement as defined in the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended, is transmitted by the President to the Congress: Provided further, That the entire amount is designated by the Congress as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) of such Act.

Food and Nutrition Service

SPECIAL SUPPLEMENTAL NUTRITION PROGRAM FOR WOMEN, INFANTS, AND CHILDREN (WIC)

For an additional amount for "Special Supplemental Nutrition Program for Women, Infants, and Children (WIC)", $75,000,000, to remain available until September 30, 2003, which shall be placed in reserve for use in only such amounts, and in such manner, as the Secretary determines necessary, notwithstanding section 17(i) of the Child Nutrition Act.

Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

For an additional amount for "Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, Salaries and Expenses", $10,000,000, to remain available until expended, to assist in State efforts to prevent and control transmissible spongiform encephalopathy, including bovine spongiform encephalopathy, chronic wasting disease, and scrapie, in farmed and free-ranging animals: Provided, That the entire amount shall be available only to the extent an official budget request, that includes designation of the entire amount of the request as an emergency requirement as defined in the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended, is transmitted by the President to the Congress: Provided further, That the entire amount is designated by the Congress as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) of such Act.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

Food and Drug Administration

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

For an additional amount for "Food and Drug Administration, Salaries and Expenses", $18,000,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That the entire amount shall be available only to the extent an official budget request, that includes designation of the entire amount of the request as an emergency requirement as defined in the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, as amended, is transmitted by the President to the Congress: Provided further, That the entire amount is designated by the Congress as an emergency requirement pursuant to section 251(b)(2)(A) of such Act.

GENERAL PROVISIONS—THIS CHAPTER

SEC. 101. None of the funds appropriated in this or any other Act for the Department of Health and Human Services may be used to consolidate the Food and Drug Administration Office of Public Affairs or Office of Legislation at the Office of the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. ADERHOLT. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that section 101 of the bill, beginning on line 18 through line 23, violates clause 2 of rule XXI of the Rules of the House of Representatives prohibiting legislation on appropriation bills.

The language in question prohibits the Food and Drug Administration from consolidating its Office of Public Affairs or Office of Legislation at the Office of the Secretary of Health and Human Resources under this bill or "any other Act." As such, the language changes current law and constitutes a violation of clause 2 of rule XXI.

I insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any Member wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, reluctantly, I must concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is conceded.

The point of order is sustained. The provision is stricken from the bill.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 102. Of the funds made available for the Export Enhancement Program, pursuant to section 301(e) of the Agricultural Trade Act of 1978, as amended by Public Law 104–127, not more than $28,000,000 shall be available in fiscal year 2002.

CHAPTER 2

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Mr. ROTHMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, people at home must be scratching their heads wondering what are these folks talking about? Let me tell you what we are not talking about. There is no disagreement between the majority of Republicans and the majority of Democrats as to whether we should fund our war against terrorism, because we all support that; or that we should increase funding for the Defense Department, because we support that; or increase funding for agencies that protect us and inspect things coming into the United States, things and people, Customs, Secret Service, et cetera; or provide money for the rebuilding of New York City. There is no disagreement.

So what have we been hearing about this debt ceiling that bothers the Democrats so much? Well, you see, the problem is that my friends on the Republican side of the aisle decided that they would force through a rather large tax cut, a $1.35 trillion tax cut, last year, that benefited, in my opinion, disproportionately, the richest 5 percent in the United States. At the time they said America could afford that, there would be no deficits; that surpluses that were present under President Clinton would continue now under President Bush, even with this $1.35 trillion tax cut.

Something happened. A war on terrorism; the recession was still going on. But then about 45 percent of what will now be a $300 billion deficit in the year 2003 is a direct result of this tax cut forced through by the Republican party.

The problem with this bill, and I am going to support this bill because I support all the aid to our men and women overseas defending us, standing in harm's way, and all of the good things in the bill, the problem with the bill, that we hope will get fixed by the Senate because the Democrats are in control of the Senate and they will hopefully hold the line on this, is my Republican colleagues have inserted into this supplemental appropriations bill a way for the new deficits created, 45 percent of the reason for which is their tax cut, they have created a way to fund these national deficits that are expected for the next 10 years, and they buried it in this bill. They did not have a debate on it. They would not let us debate whether we should postpone the tax cuts for the very richest of Americans in order to eliminate 45 percent of these new deficits, next year projected to be $300 billion, and we all know where this money is coming from. It is coming from our children and grandchildren and Social Security, as they stick their hands deeper and deeper into the pockets of future generations to pay for a tax cut that benefits primarily the rich.

Again, they did not plan on it this way. They thought there would be surpluses. Then the war on terrorism came, and the recession. So we said now there is a war on terrorism and a recession. Perhaps we ought to delay this tax cut that benefits primarily the very rich. They said no. So rather than admitting to the American people that the Republicans have now created this huge deficit, 45 percent of which is related directly to their tax cut that goes to primarily to the rich, admit they have a deficit this year and projected for the next 10 years, admit that 45 percent of the reason for this new deficit is their tax cut that goes primarily to the very rich, they have buried language in this bill preventing a debate on it so that the American people will not realize that when they said they could do a tax cut that benefited primarily the rich and created surpluses, they were wrong. They guessed wrong.

I think that that is a terrible mistake that needs to be rectified.

What else could we do with this money? We could pay off our debts if we did not have this tax cut for the very rich. We could even just postpone it, delay it for a year, take a look around, see what the war on terrorism is like, whether we are out of the recession or not. Reasonable people of goodwill could debate whether a tax cut is important in the midst of a recession. We are out of the recession, according to all of our official estimates, and most of this tax cut is going to take effect for the rich in the next 10 years, except we have to pay for it now.

So if anyone is wondering why there appeared to be a disagreement between Democrats and Republicans about a bill where we all support an increase in defense, the war on terrorism, all of the agencies rebuilding New York, et cetera, et cetera, we all support that. What we do not support on the Democratic side is the unwillingness of the Republican majority to hide the effect of their tax cut, which by conservative numbers, 45 percent of the reason for the upcoming deficits will be as a direct result of their tax cuts; and we say, if you want to cause these deficits, cause us to dig into Social Security, to pay for your tax cuts that disproportionately benefit the wealthiest of Americans, at least debate it out in the open. Do not hide it in this bill. We are hoping that the Democratic Senate, when this bill goes to conference with the Senate bill on this emergency supplemental, will be resolved at that point.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support this bill, but encourage the Senate and the conferees to remove this hidden, deficit-hiding device.

MOTION TO RISE OFFERED BY MR. OBEY

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I move the Committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 134, noes 250, not voting 50, as follows:

Mr. SUNUNU changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

Mr. HILLIARD and Mr. RUSH changed their vote from "no" to "aye."

So the motion to rise was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Ms. KILPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise as a Member of the Committee on Appropriations, having served with the gentleman from Florida (Chairman YOUNG), who was very dignified as this Committee on Appropriations spent over 3 days, 14 hours on the first day, trying to bring to this House of Representatives a supplemental bill to really react and respond to our war on terrorism.

Many of us, over 60 of us who sit on that committee, vowed that we would do the work necessary. We put 20 hours-plus on the bill over 3 days, and brought a bill to this floor, an emergency supplemental. I am appalled with what the Committee on Rules has done with our work. It has emasculated the committee system in this House.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Florida (Chairman YOUNG) has done a wonderful job, and our ranking member, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY). We have worked together in a bipartisan way to bring the bill to the floor of the House. But what we have before us is not the bill that came out of the Committee on Appropriations. It is not the bill we were told was an emergency and had to be passed right away to address the war on terrorism.

What we have before us now is a bill with all kinds of amendments added onto it, and all kinds of things we cannot amend as Members of this House that do not address the emergency before us.

This bill will increase the debt limit without a vote of this House. We may have to increase the debt limit, primarily because of the $1.3 trillion tax cut that was given to the wealthiest of Americans just last year at the time when the economy was slowing.

The CBO has told us that we will be in deficit $2.7 trillion, so perhaps we will have to increase the debt limit, but let us vote on it. Let us debate it. Do not bury it in this emergency supplemental that we spent so much time and energy and hours on.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is unfair, and it emasculates the committee system in this House of Representatives. The Committee on Rules has gone ahead and gone deeper into the Social Security trust fund, leaving everything to be taken care of in conference, and again, not allowing us, the elected Members of this House, to have the proper forum in which to debate it.

There is no new money for education, and again, if we adopt this supplemental that the Committee on Rules has rewritten, we automatically adopt the Republican budget resolution that passed this House earlier this year. That budget resolution, if we remember, did not fortify Medicare, did not take care of Social Security, did not take care of education. If we adopt this Committee on Rules supplemental tonight, we automatically adopt that poor budget resolution that was passed a few months ago.

Mr. Chairman, these are trying times for our country. We are at war. We do need to address the emergency needs of our troops, our homeland security. But we also need to address the national defense, homeland, problems of education.

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. KILPATRICK. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

□ 2030

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I agree with the gentlewoman that it was the Committee on Rules because that is where the action is. But it was the majority on the Committee on Rules that undertook this. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding.

Ms. KILPATRICK. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Florida (Mr. HASTINGS) for making that caveat. It was the majority, the Republican members of the Committee on Rules who emasculated the work of the fine Committee on Appropriations and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG) and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY), and now we have before us not an emergency supplemental that deals with terrorism, but a bill that will raise the debt limits for this country, making us have more bills to pay and at the same time not having an up-or-down vote on it; nor will we be able to debate that. I think that is unconscionable.

We live in a time in this country where leadership is paramount, where we must stand up and be counted. This is not the way this House should be run. This is not the way the majority should run it. I hope we will vote against the supplemental. Some people say they cannot vote against it because of what is in it. I think you can vote against it, come back and put together a supplemental for the American people that will address the emergency needs of our country.

Our health care industry is about to collapse. I have been visited by doctors in this country. I am sure you have too. They are not taking Medicare senior citizen patients. The reimbursements are too low. Our children cannot stand up to the competition of people all around the world. We can fix that. This supplemental does not begin to address that.

At a time when we need leadership, we are finding more and more that we are doing the wrong things for the people of this country. They expect us to be leaders. They sent us here for that.

Mr. Chairman, I would urge my colleagues, watch what we do over the next few hours. Vote against this supplemental.

We are being asked to do something today that we have not done in almost 6 years—pass legislation that paves the way for increasing the debt limit that will allow the government to borrow money to pay its bills. The majority is attaching this on to a must-pass bill, an emergency supplemental appropriations to fund homeland security and the war on terrorism, in order to minimize its exposure as the party of fiscal irresponsibility.

For more than 60 years, the other side of the aisle has billed itself as the party of balanced budgets, budget firewalls and Social Security lockboxes. But their rhetoric does not comport with reality and they know it. In the last half of the 20th century through last year, the only budget surpluses this nation enjoyed came under Democratic administrations and Democratic financial management.

That's a point the Republican majority does not want to acknowledge. Consequently, it wants to slip debt-increase legislation through on the sly without a full and fair debate of the fiscal position of the country, how we got there, and how we're going to deal honestly about digging ourselves out of the hole in which we now find ourselves.

The problem is the other side is in a state of denial. It does not want to expose itself as the party of deficit spending after a Democratic administration produced the longest string of budget surpluses in the history of this country. And it doesn't want to own up to the fact that it has to raise revenues before the country can get back on the right track to fiscal sanity. Yes, the economic slowdown and the war on terrorism caused us to spend more than general revenues allow. But the primary reason we are spending beyond our means is because of a $1.3 billion tax bill Congress passed last year.

Because the other side doesn't want to deal with the deficit situation honestly and openly, the majority wants us to approve must-pass legislation, so it can have a license to raid the Social Security and Medicare trust funds.

We need to ensure that all areas of our budget are adequately funded. While it is necessary to fund defense and national security priorities, it is not acceptable to ignore domestic priorities that are of crucial importance to our nation and the American people. By insufficiently funding key priorities such as education and prescription drugs, we are shortchanging our families and children. Yes, they might be safer on the national security front, but if we cannot ensure our nation's children a quality education, if we can't ensure seniors a sound prescription drug coverage, and if we can't ensure the solvency of our Social Security for so many people in the future, we are truly off the mark.

The budget resolution presented a distorted vision for our future by laying out a budget that does not sufficiently fund our education and health care needs. This is not a budget that the appropriations committee should adhere to if we really want to keep the promises we have verbally made to our people. It is time to match our words with real funding levels on paper.

EDUCATION

In January, the President signed into law landmark education reform legislation with the "Leave No Child Behind Act." Yet, his proposed budget and the Republican budget that was passed in the House does not make the title of this bill a reality. If we continue along the Republican funding path, more and more children will be left behind. Both budgets provide a $1.4 billion (2.8 percent) increase over FY 2002 funding levels to the Department of Education, which represents the smallest increase in funding in recent years.

Not only does the budget for education represent the smallest increase in recent times, it actually eliminates funding for 28 key education programs such as Drop-Out Prevention, Rural Education, Close-Up Fellowships, and numerous other programs that enrich students' education.

At the same time, the budget resolution proposes cutting or freezing many other elementary and secondary education programs, including educational technology (cut $134 million—15.7 percent), improving teacher quality programs (cut from $105 million to $3 billion total), and safe and drug-free schools (cut $102 million or 13.7 percent). It also freezes funding for 21st century community learning centers after-school programs, comprehensive school reform. Even keeping funding for programs for FY 2003 at their current level represents a cut in funding when inflation and rising costs are taken into account.

If we expect schools to implement the provisions laid out in the "Leave No Child Behind Act", then we must give them the funding resources needed to help them succeed. Mandates without adequate funding is leaving our schools and teachers with their hands tied.

In my state of Michigan, funding for educational priorities such as school construction and class size reduction have been eliminated. Other programs have been cut, such as Even Start which provides grants for family literacy projects that include early childhood education for children through age 7.

HEALTH

The Republican budget proposed a mere $350 billion for Medicare reform and prescription drug coverage over ten years. This represents a gross underfunding just for a prescription drug coverage, which would cost $700–800 billion over 10 years alone if we want a comprehensive, meaningful drug coverage plan for seniors and disabled individuals. This funding level does not even account for what will be needed to strengthen Medicare for our future. If Republicans, in their maneuvering today, really expect us to stick with the funding levels proposed in the budget resolution, then their actions on the floor definitely contrast with the verbal promises that they offer seniors everyday on the floor and in their districts.

Overall, the health care outlook in the GOP budget is bleak. If we are asked to stick with their numbers, major programs will be cut, such as rural health programs (41.9 percent cut), Telehealth (84.6 percent cut), and other programs that assist in coordinating care for the uninsured.

SOCIAL SECURITY AND MEDICARE RAIDS

The huge tax breaks for the wealthy that Republicans passed have left us looking at deficit spending. And where will the funds for all our programs come from? Social Security and Medicare trust funds. This is what they have to resort to when just last year, Members pledged not to raid Social Security and we passed Social Security lockbox legislation on the floor. This promise has been broken and the lockbox is locked no more.

The Congressional Budget Office (CBO) projected last January that the course of the Republican path would lead Congress to spend $845 billion of the Social Security trust fund over the next 10 years. And this in only taking into account the FY 2002 budget.

This return to deficit spending and raiding of the Social Security trust fund cannot be explained by the recent recession or the war against terrorism. When taking into account the Administration's own numbers, the national debt will be $2.75 trillion higher than what was originally projected early last year before the President's FY 2002 budget proposal. When adding recessionary costs and the war, these numbers combined total $800 billion of projected debt. This means that $1.9 trillion is left that cannot be explained by either the economic downturn or the war against terrorism.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, we are gathered tonight in a place of great and high honor. This is a Chamber in which decisions that have profoundly affected the history of our Nation and of humankind have been debated with great dignity and honor. In this Chamber we have debated questions of civil rights, questions of war and peace, questions of education and health care. And what brings honor to this institution and what humbles each one of us privileged enough to serve in this institution is the process of debate, of exchanging ideas, of laying before the people of the Nation, the people of the world, our divergent and heartfelt views.

What we are doing tonight in this Chamber does not measure up to the standards of honor of this Chamber. Because this bill is being used as a vehicle to make a decision of monumental importance for the future of this country, but we are not debating that decision. We will not take a vote on that decision. We will not let the public hear our voices on that decision.

There is a plan to move innocuous language in this bill that talks about protecting the full faith and credit of the United States to a conference with the other body. There is an anticipation that the other body will add a law which authorizes the borrowing of $750 billion, the bill which will be handed off to the children of this country. The bill will then be brought back here, and it will be put to a vote where that $750 billion borrowing is wrapped in the holy garments of all the good things that are in this bill, aid to the troops, aid to loyal allies of this country, reconstruction of New York City, things for which there is broad, even, unanimous appeal.

The majority has chosen to hide its plan rather than to debate its plan, and that is just plain wrong. I think I know why, Mr. Chairman, the majority has chosen to do that. In 1990 when I came here, for every $100 that we needed to run the government, we were bringing in $70 worth of revenue. And we made up the difference by pilfering money from the Social Security trust fund and borrowing the rest from the private markets in a way that drove up interest rates and drove down economic activities. President Clinton made good decisions to change that. Members of Congress of both parties made good decisions to change that. The American people worked very hard, paid a lot of taxes and changed that. And by 2000, for every $100 we spent to run our country, we brought in $108. And we were told that $108 would be $115 and then $125 and then $135, and there would be all this money to spend.

In the summer of 2001, the majority voted to rid the Treasury of about $2 trillion worth of money in one of the largest tax cuts in American history. There were voices, mostly on this side, who warned against the risk of that proposal. Our warnings when unheeded. The bill became law. A recession came along. The terrorist attacks of September 11 came along. And where do we find ourselves?

For the fiscal year that will end this September 30, instead of having $108 in revenue for every $100 we will spend, we will have 80. So here we are once again borrowing the rest. Borrowing once again from the Social Security trust fund and robbing the pensions of Americans. Borrowing once again from the same markets that our entrepreneurs and companies looked to grow their businesses.

The majority understands that the public would rebel against such a plan. So rather than bring that plan to this floor and defend it, they have chosen a procedural vehicle that will obscure it. That is the wrong thing to do. This is a bill that does much good and many of us will support it for that reason. I believe that if the leadership of this committee had been permitted to bring this bill forward, that is all the bill would have done.

But the majority leadership has a different agenda. It is to obscure the agenda that will result in the borrowing of $750 billion. We vote on congratulating the people of the East Timor in this Chamber. We vote on the naming of Federal buildings. We vote on resolutions honoring people that win NCAA basketball championships; but we are not going to cast a vote on indebting the children in this country to the tune of $750 billion.

It is so wrong, it is so indefensible the majority will not put this on this floor. It is the wrong way to proceed.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to engage in a colloquy with the chairman of the committee, as well as my colleague, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF), also I think that the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN) and the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Mrs. MYRICK) also are concerned.

This regards section 1103 of the bill dealing with the Federal loan guarantee program for air carriers. The airline industry has changed dramatically and permanently since September 11. Business air travel is down 30 percent industry-wide and total industry revenue is down 15 percent since 2000.

It is an unfortunate reality that some carriers' financial situation is currently unsustainable. We cannot now pass the provision that moves the goal post on the very companies for whom the legislation was intended when it was passed a mere 9 months ago.

I ask the chairman, this section would upon enactment of the bill delay disbursement of loan guarantees until October 1 of this year. Is it the chairman's understanding that while this provision would prevent the actual issuance of a loan guaranteed until October 1, that the air transportation stabilization board may continue and complete processing of applications during the remainder of this fiscal year?

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, first let me say it is essential to the United States that a viable air transportation system be up and running. So I would say to the gentleman that what he suggests is my understanding.

The Office of Management and Budget in a letter sent to our committee interprets this provision as only preventing the actual issuance of credit pursuant to the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act. The stabilization board may continue accepting and fully considering qualified applications as authorized by that act.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) for further inquiry.

Mr. WOLF. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for that statement.

As the chairman knows, many of our colleagues, and certainly I am in that group, strongly support this program and we want to ensure that no changes are enacted that would prevent a qualified carrier from receiving a loan guarantee as early as the stabilization board may act on the application. This particular program was enacted to assist carriers suffering losses as a result of the terrorist attack on September 11. The Federal Government's closure of Reagan National Airport made matters even worse for some of the carriers.

I know the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. TOM DAVIS), the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN), the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Mrs. MYRICK), and the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS) have been very, very concerned about this. We are aware of one or more carriers that may apply for a loan guarantee before the deadline of June 28, 2002.

There are concerns that the provision, if enacted, might have the unintended consequences of preventing a qualified carrier from securing a Federal loan guarantee in time to avoid bankruptcy or other irreparable harm to a carrier's operations, employees and customers.

Would the chairman be willing to work with us and other Members, and there were so many that were interested in this, to ensure that that provision does not have those unintended effects?

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. If the gentleman would yield again, the committee does not intend to prevent any carrier from having an application fully considered, nor does it intend for this provision to result in the kind of outcome the gentleman is concerned about.

We will work with the gentleman and other Members as we go to conference with the Senate on this bill to address any concerns that affected parties may have.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. I thank the gentleman for his assurances.

Mr. Chairman, I include in the RECORD a letter from the Office of Management and Budget which clearly states the provisions which we are considering today permit the Air Transportation Stabilization Board to continue to complete the processing of qualified loan guarantee applications that are properly filed.

EXECUTIVE OFFICE OF THE PRESIDENT, OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET,
Washington, DC.

Hon. J. DENNIS HASTERT,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This letter provides the Administration's interpretation of Section 1103 of the pending House FY 2002 supplemental appropriations bill (H.R. 4775) regarding airline loan guarantees. This provision was not proposed by the Administration but was added by the House Committee on Appropriations during committee consideration of the supplemental appropriations bill.

Under Section 1103 of the bill, the Air Transportation Stabilization Board would be able to continue and complete processing of qualified applications for loan guarantees during the balance of FY 2002 consistent with the authorities of P.L. 107–42, the Air Transportation Safety and System Stabilization Act.

While the Board could not obligate loan guarantee funds during the balance of FY 2002 (from enactment through September 30, 2002), it can, after October 1, 2002, issue the loan guarantees to qualified applicants.

Sincerely,

NANCY P. DORN,
Deputy Director.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friend, the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. TOM DAVIS), and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF) and I thank the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT) and the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY) and the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. ROGERS), all of those folks who have tried to protect USAirways' ability to be financially solvent.

I have to say, though, that I am convinced that the language in this supplemental appropriations bill does just the opposite. I do know that the Chair of the Committee on Appropriations and the Chair of the subcommittee want to make it right. But I think we need some assurance that it will be made right. I see the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. MURTHA), who will be affected.

There are 204 cities whose economy is going to be severely damaged if USAirways is not able to continue operations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. TOM DAVIS) has expired.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, as I was saying, there are 204 cities who are dependent upon the air service that USAirways provides. There are 40,000 employees who are dependent upon the income that they earn from employment with USAirways. This is a very, very serious issue. I know we have discussed previously that it looks an awful lot like a budget gimmick, $1.3 billion by terminating the ability to apply for a loan. But it is serious business when you are talking about one of our premiere airlines. And I know that we have substantial support on the other side of the aisle, and certainly those who voted against the rule, this is one of the reasons that virtually all Democrats voted against the rule. And I know there is substantial support on the majority side. But we have got to find a way to make USAir whole, at least to the extent we are capable of doing so.

And that is why we passed the airline guarantee program. We did it right after November. We know that USAirways is the most adversely affected. National Airport was closed down for an entire month and for 8 months it has been in partial operation. How can an airline survive under those conditions? I do not know.

So this is the airway that was most likely to benefit from the legislation we passed, and now we turn around and say we are going to terminate the loan program knowing that they are ready to apply so we can save $1.3 billion to get under their nonofficial ceiling?

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. SPRATT).

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that USAirways has indicated that it needs this loan guarantee so it can get loan proceeds by August 1. But under the bill as presented to us, nothing will be payable until October 1, the first day of the next fiscal year and this is sooner than it could possibly be paid. It would be soon after that, that is the soonest possible date, and that is too late according to their indication, is it not?

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I thank the ranking member on the House Committee on the Budget. What he says is absolutely the case. USAirways indicates that it will run out of money by August and it will need the infusion of loan money by then. What this language does is to not make any of that money available until October 1. And unless we can work out some language, it has no assurance that it can give to the creditors that money, in fact, will be authorized.

□ 2045

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I think one of the purposes of colloquy is to assure we have full leadership working to make sure one way or the other, the right thing happens should they qualify for this loan. In fact, the money will be available on a timely basis. We have received assurances that this, it still has to go through conference. There is Senate language that still needs to be worked through, and I just want to say I am comfortable with the fact that we are going to work this out, but I appreciate the gentleman's being very aggressive on this issue because I think it is very important, not just for the airline, as the gentleman has mentioned before.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I will reclaim my time to tell my good friend from Virginia that I know he has been aggressive as well in supporting U.S. Air, but I think the gentleman also knows that on the Senate side they have capped this loan program in such a way that U.S. Air will not have access to the money. So if the money is not available on the House side, if it is not available on the Senate side, we are not going to be able to get it in conference.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. TOM DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, they have only capped it in committee. It still has to go to the floor. It has a long way. I know Senator BYRD is concerned about this as well.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that CBO has scored this particular provision as saving temporarily for this fiscal year $343 million, that is all, under the Credit Reform Act. It is not the full amount of the loan. It is the likely loss on the loan that is scored as an expenditure on the loan this year. However, this is nothing but an obligational delay, so it does not really save anything.

What it means is that what would be obligated in the remaining few months of this fiscal year will instead be obligated after October 1. Why go through shenanigans like that and send a message to the lenders that U.S. Air will not be able to take down the cash it needs to survive until after October 1? Sure, it can complete its loan application, but it cannot get the cash it needs, and that message will go out again tonight. It will chill the atmosphere for lending. My colleagues know the Transportation Stabilization Board will not want to process anything for fear that Congress is about to undercut it. Why are we doing this? What sense does it make? It does not save a dime.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN) has expired.

(On request of Mr. OBEY, and by unanimous consent, Mr. MORAN of Virginia was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY), ranking member of the full committee.

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. I yield to the gentlewoman from North Carolina.

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's dedication to this issue, as well as the other Members on his side of the aisle and on our side of the aisle, and I would tell my colleague that we are very committed to doing everything we can to make sure this problem is taken care of.

Yes, there is a problem here on the House side, we understand that, but by the same token, it does have to work its way through the whole process, and that is what we are looking at and working on, to get the assurances that we need that the money will be there, that they will be able to get these loans, and that they are not going to go bankrupt. We have no intentions of allowing that to happen.

It is very unfortunate these provisions were put in this bill the way they are, but we want to do everything we can through our leadership and through the Senate to make sure that this is taken care of, and I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

There are 2 distinct issues on this point. First is what will happen to U.S. Air, and, frankly, I cannot tell, and that is the problem.

The second problem is that the original committee provision was scored as saving $400 million. That was the proposition that said that the Transportation Department could not issue any loans from this point on for the remainder of the fiscal year. That was estimated by CBO to save $400 million, but now we are being told that even though it is being suggested that this loan may go ahead, we are still being told by OMB, and I understand the House Committee on the Budget, that we are going to save $1.3 billion by this provision, even though the loan that is being foregone is allegedly going ahead.

I find that hard to follow.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Chairman, CBO scored it, I have a letter and I put it in the RECORD, at $343 million. That is the accurate scoring for this, and that is the question I am raising. For that sum of money, why put U.S. Airways flying into jeopardy?

Mr. OBEY. My point is, I understand that is a legitimate concern, but my point is another concern. I am concerned about putting the integrity of the Federal budget process in jeopardy, and my problem is that when we are told that the loan that was not going to go through is now going to go through and yet we are going to save more money than we were to spend originally, that is sleight of hand to me, and it looks a little bit like Arthur Andersen accounting to me.

So I do not understand how we can say this loan is going to go through and yet we are going to save three times as much money as CBO originally estimated. It does not compute and it also does not make clear what is going to happen to the airline, which is an overriding and justifiable question in the minds of many Members tonight.

Mr. SPRATT. Mr. Chairman, if I could simply ask, am I wrong? I believe the $343 million is exactly what CBO scored it as, and number 2, does this really save anything? If this is just an obligational delay that says that the money cannot be obligated during the summer, but come October 1 it can be obligated, it does not save anything, why do this? Why go through shenanigans like this just to claim a credit that is not really a credit? It is not a savings. If I am wrong, I will stand corrected.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, reclaiming my time, I would say to the gentleman, I have seen the CBO analysis dated today, that it is only $343 million. It is not $1.3 billion.

Mr. SPRATT. But that is for 4 months.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is absolutely correct.

My other concern is I know how sincere the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the chair of the Subcommittee on Transportation, the chair of the Subcommittee on Commerce, Justice, State and Judiciary, and the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. TOM DAVIS) has been working very hard on this.

I believe we had the votes in full committee to strike the language. We were assured that we would not have to do that because it would be taken care of, and my concern is that I do not know at this point how it is going to be taken care of, and if the House bill leaves the floor, I am very much concerned it is going to be too late.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest the answer to the gentleman is that the only reason at this point that this is in here with this outlandish estimate is to make the bill look like it is paid for when it is not. This $1.3 billion savings, in my view, is a fictional savings of OMB and the Committee on the Budget.

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I was listening with interest to the discussion about U.S. Airways. I represent Baltimore, which has an interest in the direct health of U.S. Airways, and I think it is very clear that we are using accounting gimmicks again in order to satisfy budget rules because we do not have a straightforward budget, and I mention that, Mr. Chairman, because there is a lot of good things in this supplemental appropriations bill, and many of us are going to be voting for a lot of the issues that are underlining the bill itself, but we are compelled to speak about the unfair procedure and the undemocratic principles that are being used in the legislation that we are considering on the floor this evening.

We are talking about provisions that were added after the bill came out of the Committee on Appropriations. I want to compliment the chairman and ranking member of the Committee on Appropriations. Many of these issues were worked out in committee that are good provisions, and we want to move them forward, but, unfortunately, what was added by the Committee on Rules and by our last vote, we are, for example, deeming the Republican budget as being enacted for the purposes of the Committee on Appropriations work.

Well, that gives approval to a budget that is just not realistic. It does not protect the priorities that many of us believe in, that the majority of this House believes in. We are not going to be able to deal with education or Medicare, prescription drug or transportation or homeland security or the airline industry in a straightforward way on the budget that was deemed by the rule that we approved a little bit earlier this evening.

So now what are we going to do? We are going to go back to gimmicks. We are going to go back to waiving all these rules. No budget discipline at all. That is the concern that many of us have about the procedure that is being used tonight.

We clearly are going to move to large deficits again. We are going to protect large tax cuts, but we are going to move to large deficits, and we are going to use Social Security funds. We are going to borrow those funds to cover the other obligations of the United States Government.

How often have I heard the Members of this body talk about a lockbox? We are going to make sure that money is not used, and, oh, yes, we have had some unexpected expenses, but that is not the reason we have the large deficits. The large deficits are a direct result of the budget and the tax bills that were passed. My colleagues know that; I know that.

We should be able to debate that issue here on this floor, but, instead, what are we doing, we are using a magic wand to do certain things rather than having a full and open debate on the budget issues and on the debt ceiling. So it will be extremely difficult for us to deal with Social Security.

Mr. Chairman, let me point out that the moneys that were in the surplus were used in just about every proposal that has been brought forward to deal with Social Security, including the bill that was filed in the last Congress by the gentleman from Texas (Mr. Archer) and the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW), and now those funds are to be borrowed and used for the general obligations. That is wrong, and we all know that we are using a stealth process so we do not have to deal with the direct debate on this floor on the debt ceiling.

We should have a direct vote on that issue. We should talk about it. We should talk about how we are going to deal with the future debt. As I understand it, Republicans are going to be asked to raise the debt by $750 billion. $750 billion. Look at how much of the tax bill is going to have to be paid for by additional borrowing. I am not sure that is exactly what the American public wants us to do.

We are going to go back to the red ink again. What we should be doing, we should take a little pause in the action, we should sit together and work out a bipartisan agreement on a budget, and if we had a bipartisan agreement on a budget, with the other body, with the administration, then we would have a supplemental appropriation bill here that could be considered in a relatively short period of time.

We could have a prescription drug bill for Medicare that we could all agree upon and really get something done for our seniors at last. We could have a budget that would speak to the priorities on education and on homeland security, on the other issues, and we could really deliver for our constituents.

So, Mr. Chairman, many of us are going to express the frustration tonight that the process that the majority is using is unfair; not unfair to the Democratic Members, it is unfair to the American people. We deserve better. The American public deserve better, and I would urge my colleagues to use the time to get together so that we can produce a bipartisan budget so we can produce results for the people of this Nation.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I listened attentively to all of these speeches. What I have to say is this is an emergency, wartime supplemental. Political speeches about whatever my colleagues want to make political speeches about, that is all well and good. Why do my colleagues not do that on some other bills? This is a wartime, emergency supplemental.

The military is running out of money, especially those who are directly involved in the war in Afghanistan. We have got to protect those soldiers that are deployed. We have got to make sure that they have whatever it is that they need to fight this war. We have got to provide for the FBI and the intelligence agencies. Let us focus on what this bill is all about, and it is about protecting America. It is about seeking out those who would terrorize America. It is about securing our places and our people, our seaports, our airports, our airplanes, public gathering places. That is what this bill is about. This should not be a vehicle for political speeches.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word. And, Mr. Chairman, I do so to applaud the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN) for raising appropriately the issue of USAirways. I think it is, to put it mildly, bad faith on the part of Congress to terminate the loan guarantee program, and it is an act at the worst possible time for this carrier, and for other carriers along with it, who have indicated their likely need to apply for the loan guarantee program.

Virtually everybody in this House voted for both the compensation program and the loan guarantee program last fall when it was crucially necessary to save America's airlines from financial liquidation. That legislation passed overwhelmingly to the great credit of the administration. They came forward and said, yes, we need to do this, when we in the House were already talking about the need to save America's airlines, who were bleeding at the rate of $360 million a day because they could not operate.

And the reason we enacted that legislation was that it was an act of government that shut down the Nation's airlines in the national interest, out of security concerns. It was an appropriate action. But we caused the airlines, we, the government, caused the airlines to lose billions of dollars in the national interest. We recognized that it was a necessity for the government then to come back and not make the airlines whole, but at least put them in the position they were in at the moment of the order for all airline operations to cease on September 11.

Mr. Chairman, 2,460 commercial airliners were brought on the ground within 2½ hours and did not operate for 3 days. And then, for a month after other airports were opened, National Airport remained closed. This is the hub, the base of USAirways' operations. The order of government not to operate out of National Airport hit this carrier disproportionately greater than any other carrier in the United States. I find it short-sighted, bad faith, poor judgment, poor calculation to say, oh, we have taken back what we offered you last fall. It is just simply not right. It is not fair.

And I do not want to get into all these other discussions about what else is in this supplemental appropriations bill. This particular provision is really harmful and hurtful and goes back on our word that we gave in this body to the airlines of the United States: we will make you whole to the point that you were at when you could not fly, and we will provide loan assistance, payback with all sorts of guarantees that I participated in crafting into the loan guarantee program in the Speaker's office, the night of the President's address to the Nation. And now the program is there; and all of a sudden you are pulling the rug out from under this carrier that has suffered a disproportionate burden compared to other carriers in the country because of the shutdown of National Airport for over a month.

Now, I heard the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. TOM DAVIS) say that we will fix this somehow over the course of the next few days. "Somehow" is no help to the financial institutions. It does not give them a whole lot of confidence at all. It gives them zero confidence, in fact. This needs to be fixed now, before this bill leaves the House, whether it is a statement by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations or a statement by the Office of Management and Budget.

I think our ranking member on the Committee on the Budget has already spelled out how little, how ephemeral, how chimerical the savings will be. Surely we can do something in the course of this evening, which apparently is going to be a very long evening; and I appeal to the chairman. I do not fly USAirways. They do not serve Minnesota.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. OBERSTAR was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I have an interest only because of my many, many years of action in the aviation sector as the former Chair of the Subcommittee on Aviation and a desire to do the right thing.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBERSTAR. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, we want to do the right thing as well, but I want to remind the gentleman that this loan program was enacted into law on September 22 last year.

Mr. OBERSTAR. I said that just a moment ago.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. I just want to remind everybody. And as of tonight, as we stand in this Chamber, certain airlines have not even made their application, knowing full well that under the law that we passed last September the application process terminates on June 28. That is rapidly approaching. So the airlines are not totally free of guilt in not getting the job done.

All that aside, we are prepared to try to help keep our airline industry viable. And the only airline that I can fly direct to my district is USAir. I do not want USAir to go out of business or to go bankrupt. I want to help them. But I have to tell my colleague that they could have applied for this loan guarantee a lot earlier and they did not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. OBERSTAR was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, I just want to point out to the chairman that the regulations for the loan guarantee program were not available until early this year, along about January-February. And the person administering the program was not put in place until just about that time. It has been very difficult for the carriers to understand how this program would be administered. Further, they wanted to wait and see whether they could be whole on their own.

So I do not exonerate the airlines, but there were mitigating factors. And this carrier is particularly vulnerable. If we lose USAirways, then on the east coast the cascading effect will be that there will be a diminution of competition in the airline sector.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. OBERSTAR) has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. OBERSTAR was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBERSTAR. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, our heart is in the same place, I would tell the gentleman. But the gentleman's facts are not exactly correct, because the first application under this program was America West and it was filed on November 28 of last year. So the regulations were in order much earlier than the gentleman suggested.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Reclaiming my time, Mr. Chairman, America West filed before the regulation process had been fully implemented. They were in much more desperate shape than USAirways, no question about it. The full set of regulations was not in place at that time.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBERSTAR. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, let me just share some information regarding USAirways. In the first place, USAirways attempted to sustain its operations as long as possible without having to draw on a Federal loan guarantee.

In the second place, as I think the gentleman knows, USAir has been working very diligently in working out labor agreements and showing a long-term plan so that this loan guarantee will be able to be paid off and they can show a viable financial plan into the future.

This is a very difficult process for such a large airline.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, before my colleagues jump again to react to the airline industry, I would caution that we think about the way the airline industry responded to our last legislative action. Within hours, Mr. Chairman, within hours of the passage of that airline bailout, USAirways fired hundreds and hundreds of its employees. Not only did they do that, they fired and closed reservation centers of their most senior, most experienced reservationists because they could save more money that way. And then they did not give them the opportunity to be rehired at other locations. They went out and the reservation centers that needed additional employees, they hired people "off the street," because they could hire them at a lower wage.

This is the airline that charges customers seven times what other airlines serving the same two cities charge. This is the same airline that has average employee costs of $87,000. This is the same airline that provides service in 37-seat prop jets when they could go out and purchase new regional jets that would provide dramatically better service, and they are asking people to fly in those 30- and 40-year-old planes because their contract with their pilots will not allow them to buy new regional jets. This is the same airline that came back to us and said we need your help on this bill, and they still have not got their loans filed.

It is no surprise that an airline this poorly managed would not have their paperwork done. So before we proceed to give them more help, let us remember what they did the last time we provided them with help. Lord knows what they will do to their employees and their customers this time.

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, many of us wait not just minutes but hours to come to the floor to speak, and this evening, after listening to this debate about only a slice of what is in this supplemental, I cannot help but observe that this distinguished body, this great House of Representatives, has somehow created a mess. And I think the mess, and I do not like using the word, it is not out of disrespect to any individual, but haste can make a mess.

I listened to my colleagues who serve on the committee who said we had something drawn up and then something happened at the Committee on Rules. There is a frustration on my side of the aisle that we cannot offer anything to amend this. That is wrong. For people that served in the minority for 40 years, my Republican colleagues know that is wrong.

My colleagues know, and we all know, what a credit card is. If someone took any one of our credit cards and put $750 billion on that credit card without our knowing about it, we would be the first ones to dial up and say, something has gone wrong. I have taken votes when I was new here and my leadership said it is important for the country to raise the debt limit. But, no, no one is brave enough on the other side to take that straight vote up or down.

We are accountable to our people. And so now the Nation's debt goes higher. I should not, and none of my colleagues on the minority side should be lectured to say that what we say is political. We ran for this office because we love this country. We all do. But we are not doing right by her by hiding in a poorly drafted, jammed-through-a-committee supplemental.

This is not right. It is not becoming of this House and this body. All joking aside, my colleagues know when they go home how their constituents respect them. How can anyone answer for raising this, incurring more debt, and not explaining it to the American people without even taking a vote.

I have heard over and over and over again the lectures. I do not need to be lectured, and no one here does about how much we love our country and want to defend her. That is not the issue. That is not the issue. So it is with deep regret that I stand up this evening with a great deal of frustration and an enormous amount of sadness.

We can debate our issues and hold our ground and still respect one another. But to do this, this is wrong. This is wrong. America, tonight, $750 billion was placed on America's credit card and we could not stand up and debate and offer a better idea.

□ 2115

If you have more votes, you can outvote us. But ideas are at the heart of this democracy. I believe my constituents would object to this, Republicans, independents, and Democrats, because it is not becoming of those we represent, it is not becoming of the process that we should follow in a democratic institution, and I want you to know that I object. I object. I object. I object.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, if I might for a moment revisit the issue of USAir. The Eighth District of North Carolina has a number of USAir employees. I want to reassure them in spite of some of the things that they may have heard, that I and others here are vitally interested, whether they are machinists, pilots, caterers or other people who work at USAir. We worked very, very closely with every aspect of USAir to make certain they had every possible chance to work with us.

My colleagues here on the floor heard earlier today a very specific colloquy between the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. MORAN), the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. TOM DAVIS), the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF), and the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Mrs. MYRICK), very specific, about our ability, desire and capability of working with USAir to make sure that there is a proper outcome for those very valuable employees.

Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, with all due respect to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, when Republicans put the debt ceiling in this legislation, they politicized the process. When they put deeming the budget, the Republican budget, in this process, they politicized the process. So to be lectured to that we are politicizing the process, we are responding to what you have created on the floor which you control as the majority.

For those who might not understand the sometimes arcane rules of this institution, let me put what is going on here in very plain language. Republicans have already spent all of the surpluses we had well into the future and now they are trying to get a further credit line increase without even giving us a chance, those of us who represent 49 percent of all of the American people on this side of the aisle, to approve it in an up-or-down vote.

There are some of us here, and many Americans out there, who think that raising America's debt limit is irresponsible. Why are you hiding your efforts to increase America's debt? You are hiding behind it because you clearly must be ashamed of the mess that you have made of America's budget. They are hiding behind it because they do not want the American people to know that you are raising the ceiling on how much they will owe, and their children and their grandchildren. And why do they need this debt limit increase in the first place? Not because of the recession. After all, the Congressional Budget Office is projecting deficits long after the recession is supposed to be over. Not because of the war on terrorism, which we support. Because even if you add up every last additional dollar we are spending on the war abroad and here, it does not even come close to accounting for the debt increase Republicans are proposing. So why the huge increase in debt? The answer is obvious. Republican fiscal mismanagement.

Democrats support fiscally responsible tax cuts that are paid for. But this bill saddles our children and grandchildren with huge debts that will take generations to pay off, by taking funds from Social Security and Medicare that our seniors are, and baby boomers soon will be, relying on, by increasing the amount of interest Americans pay on this debt, which is nearly $1 billion a day.

Huge debts, deficits as far as the eye can see. Social Security raided; higher interest rate payments; the Republican fiscal plan is a disaster. Republicans passed this budget. They cannot blame anyone but themselves for the fiscal mess we are now faced with. But today they want to pass the buck to working Americans to clean up their mess and they think they can pull the wool over the eyes of the American people while doing it. At least you should have the courage to stand up and vote for what you have done. At least they should have the courage to do this out in the open instead of by illusion.

We Democrats demand the chance to vote on and oppose your irresponsible debt limit increase, this reckless credit card spending binge that you are on. But if you will not give us the chance to vote against a debt limit increase, this reckless credit card spending, if you are determined to hide it from the American people in this bill, if you are determined to raise the debt of all Americans even without so much as a single vote, then the shame is theirs, as are the consequences.

This is exactly what we Democrats said would happen if you passed your irresponsible budget. So I would say to my Republican colleagues, you who want to blame this fiscal mess on the recession, tell that to the laid-off workers whose unemployment benefits you held hostage for weeks. And do not try to blame it on the war on terrorism. You dare not use our fighting men and women as an excuse for the deficits you have created. If you want to know who is to blame for our return to deficits, merely look in the mirror. This is an abomination on the greatest democratic institution in the world that in the marketplace of ideas that we promote throughout the world we cannot have a vote up or down on the debt ceiling so that the American people will know how you are hocking their future generations for generations to come.

It is a shame. It is an abomination. That is why you will hear the anger throughout this evening as I think you will hear it from the American people in the days ahead.

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise today with great admiration for my colleagues across the aisle. That is because I admire what my family calls chutzpah, or nerve, some might say gall, but not me. An ordinary person watching tonight might think that the Republican leadership would be just a little bit sheepish about coming here today and proposing a supplemental budget that we really do not have the money to pay for without dipping into the Social Security trust fund, a trust fund that just a few short months ago was safely ensconced in a lockbox, a lockbox that, if I remember correctly, one after another of those same Republican leaders declared loudly and eloquently would never, ever be unlocked. Oh, no, we would never dip into the Social Security lockbox. And why? Because we had such a huge surplus, a surplus, if I can be rude enough to mention, was inherited from the Clinton administration, a surplus of $5.6 trillion, a surplus so large that these leaders scoffed at those of us who warned that the future is too uncertain to throw trillions of dollars of tax giveaways to the richest of the rich.

I admire my Republican colleagues that despite the fact that $5.6 trillion of surplus is gone, gone, that we are now facing a $300 billion deficit this year, rather than being even the slightest bit embarrassed or apologetic, they are pressing aggressively ahead with a supplemental budget that, among some very worthwhile things, also takes money out of rural hospitals, expands the war in Colombia, ignores our housing and health care needs and is all paid for by raiding the Social Security trust fund. And I admire their arguments. It is war. How dare we be so unpatriotic as to bring up trivialities such as Social Security or debt or even fiscal responsibility? We are just being political. Although it does occur to me that there just might be such a concept as economic patriotism, that at a time of new demands caused by war, caused by our efforts to end terrorism, that it might be just the perfect moment to reconsider such things as tax cuts for the richest. Their forcefulness, some might call it sanctimony, but I do not, is laudable.

And perhaps the cleverest of all, some would say too clever by half, but not me, is the way that the Republican leaders are disguising the way they want to come up with the money that we simply do not have. They want to borrow $750 billion more money than the law currently allows, borrow even more money from Social Security and also the Medicare trust fund. But just asking for it would not look good. After all, so many of their Members sponsored a resolution to amend the Constitution making it especially hard to borrow more money, a resolution that proves how fiscally responsible they are.

Some of my Republican colleagues from Illinois, including the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. SHIMKUS) and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. CRANE) are proud cosponsors of this resolution. Perhaps they can explain the embarrassing truth that this supplemental appropriations bill is nothing more than a stealth maneuver to orchestrate a backdoor increase in the debt limit, the same as raising the credit card limit on a credit card, but I do not expect that they are embarrassed by this fiscal sleight of hand. I congratulate them for it. As I said, I admire chutzpah. But maybe, just maybe, their constituents, who not only talk about fiscal responsibility but who practice it every day balancing their checkbook, paying their credit card bills, saving for college and saving for a rainy day, might not be as admiring as I am of this squandering of the surplus, this raiding of the Social Security, this cynical effort to borrow more money without even taking a vote on it, without any apology. They might not appreciate, as I do, the chutzpah it takes to play with such finesse at this dangerous budget game.

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, when this bill was presented to the Committee on Appropriations, a committee on which I sit, the distinguished chairman of the committee sent a report to each member saying that one of the pluses of this legislation was that it was a clean bill designed to provide emergency funding to fund our war against terrorism and homeland defense. I applauded that approach. Unfortunately, because of the late-night, closed-door, secret plan effort of the Committee on Rules, this bill is no longer a clean bill. It has been sullied by partisan amendments that have absolutely nothing to do with funding our war on terrorism. I find it somewhat ironic that some of the same people who say we should support this process tonight out of patriotism for our war against terrorism just happen to be exactly the same people who orchestrated the process of the Committee on Rules so that these controversial extraneous amendments would be forced on this legislation, thus slowing down the funding for our war on terrorism.

What is wrong with all of this? Let me count the ways. First, adding $750 billion in deficit spending could certainly undermine the future of Social Security and Medicare. When you add that extra debt onto our already enormous $6 trillion national debt and consider the enormous interest payment that taxpayers have to pay each year on that, we could in effect be putting at risk benefits for Medicare and Social Security recipients.

Second, $750 billion in deficit spending will increase the cost for homeowners to buy a new home, for family businesses to build or expand their businesses, or for families to buy a car by increasing interest rates, a direct result of massive deficit spending. In fact, if we increase the mortgage rate, interest rate on a $100,000 home in America, that family will have in effect their taxes increased by $1,000 a year. That is what is wrong with this secret, late-night plan to raise our deficit spending by $750 billion.

Let me count the additional ways that this is wrong. Third. This kind of deficit spending will lead to higher taxes for hard-working Americans. In fact, interest on the national debt today is one of the 5 largest expenditures of the Federal Government out of the thousands and thousands of programs we fund. In fact, last year on average every man, woman, child and infant in America was responsible for $1,200 in taxes just to pay the interest on our present national debt, not to speak about the extra $750 billion we are going to add to that debt.

□ 2130

In fact, if one assumes a 5 percent interest rate on this $750 billion increase in deficit spending, that amounts to about $37.5 billion a year in increased taxes on the American people, simply to pay the interest on that debt. That is what is wrong with this bill and this process.

Fourth, in increasing deficit spending by $750 billion through this measure, we are going to make it harder to fund priority national programs such as national defense, veterans' health care and education.

Fifth, I think it is wrong to burden our children and grandchildren with a $6.7 trillion national debt. We in this generation of Congress have no right to drown our grandchildren in a sea of national debt.

Sixth, by slowing down this bill with controversial, unrelated amendments, partisan amendments that have nothing to do with funding the war on terrorism or homeland defense, we basically end up harming national defense, because we will force military training at bases such as mine, Fort Hood in my district, to be delayed or canceled in order to fund our war on terrorism, because we will not pass this bill as quickly as we could pass it had we not had these extraneous, late-night, secret amendments added to this bill.

Now, perhaps the handful of Republican district hospitals given special treatment at the cost of every other rural hospital in America stuck in this bill, maybe those hospitals have some unknown direct relation to fighting our war on terrorism and homeland defense. I certainly have not heard that explanation in this debate tonight.

Mr. Chairman, if increasing the national debt by $750 billion, if adding that burden on our children and grandchildren, cannot pass the test of open debate and an honest vote, it does not deserve to be hidden in a bill purported to fund our war on terrorism. Shame on our House if we do that.

Mr. POMEROY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, a man for whom I have great respect, a colleague I enjoy working with, has described this bill as the emergency wartime supplemental. Indeed, much of the content of this bill does exactly as the chairman describes. Unfortunately, and I believe it is extraordinarily unfortunate, the chairman was unable to keep his bill relative to the emergency wartime supplemental purposes he speaks so convincingly about.

Once again we see critical legislation hijacked somewhere in the legislative process, in the bowels of the majority leadership somewhere, and turned into something quite different than what it initially purported to be.

There is a feature of this bill that I feel is extraordinarily unfortunate, and that is what I rise to point out tonight. Language in this bill sets the stage for a significant increase in the national debt. One year ago, 1 year ago tonight, we were not talking at all about raising the national debt, we were not talking about deficits; we were looking at a 10-year surplus of $5.6 trillion. What we now know is the 10-year outlook has deteriorated $4 trillion.

Mr. Chairman, we have presided over the worst reversal of financial fortune of the United States Treasury in the history of the country. We all ought to be alarmed. Those who voted for legislation contributing to this reversal ought to be ashamed.

But we all ought to realize, one to another, that something has got to be done. We wanted to have, at the time you were going to seek to raise the debt, because we know now the budget is in the red this year, running in the red to the tune potentially of $140 billion, that is almost half a billion dollars more out the door in spending a day than we are bringing in, and you were going to ask us in participating in raising the debt limit, we had a request for you, a very simple, very straightforward request: Show us your plan. Show us your plan to get us out of this debt. Show us your plan to get us back to the black. Reverse this run of red ink, this shame you have brought upon the fiscal policy of this country.

We deserve that, and the American people deserve that, a discussion about what was required by way of raising the debt limit, a discussion about a plan and a process to get us back to black, as simple as one, two, three: The majority passes their budget, we go into the red, debt limit increase required. But show us a plan to get out.

It is important, it is very important, that we work together to get back to the black as soon as possible. There is nothing Republican, there is nothing Democrat, about the demographics facing this country. Those demographics have a very harsh fact that we ought to think about every single day. Seventy-eight million Americans in the year 2010 will be within 10 years of turning 65. Within that next decade they will be on Medicare. Within that next decade they will be on Social Security. Should I be alive, I will be one of them, because we are the great baby-boom bulge, about to place a strain on entitlement spending like never before.

Obviously we know this is coming. We can see it in the age trends. We have got to prepare. There is no great mystery of fiscal policy to prepare for the hit we are about to take. We have got to pay down the debt. We have got to make sure the Social Security dollars coming in are held for the benefit of Social Security. We have got to prepare.

Instead, we are doing the worst thing we can do. If paying down the debt and making our country fiscally stronger is the best thing, we are doing the worst thing. We are taking Social Security revenue and we are spending it on other programs; we are taking dollars coming in from payroll taxes from the guys working hard every day, counting on that Social Security, and we are spending it on other programs. Rather than strengthening our fiscal position, we are back into borrowing and adding debt onto our country.

We have to stop this practice. Chickens have a way of coming home to roost, and unchecked debt means reduction in Social Security benefits.

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I support providing whatever funds the President needs to fight the war on terrorism. I do not think there is a Republican or a Democrat in this body that does not support the President in fighting this war on terrorism; all the more reason Congress should not be playing politics with this bill, a bill that supplies important funds for our fighting men and our fighting women.

Hiding a huge increase in the national debt limit and an assortment of other budget gimmicks to this bill under the cover of darkness, literally in this case, is a political game. A $750 billion increase in the national debt requires, for heaven's sake, an open and thoughtful debate. A $750 billion increase in the national debt requires, surely, an up-or-down vote, not in secret. But we are not going to get either one of those offers this evening. And to this I say shame on the majority.

I know all of my constituents expect certain things, regardless of their party affiliation: Straight answers and a willingness to be held accountable for our actions. They know if they charged their credit cards to the limit, they have to pay down their balance or work out an arrangement with the credit card companies to get an increase in their credit limits. They most certainly cannot write a small note on the memo line of their checks to the credit card companies asking those same companies to "please raise our credit limits" and expect it to happen.

Why should Congress be any different? Why should Congress get to operate under a different set of rules? The short answer is that Congress is no different and should not be able to operate under a different set of rules.

Congress should be held accountable for this $750 billion increase in the debt limit and the actions that have made this increase necessary. The days of surpluses are gone, and in a very short time the Social Security lockbox has been emptied and the days of deficits and borrowing money from the public to pay the government's bills are back. Yet the majority has no stomach for taking a step back, looking at the whole budget picture, figuring out how we got into this mess and how we are going to work to try to get out of this mess.

My colleague, the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. MOORE), and I each offered amendments that would have helped restore fiscal discipline to the Federal budget process. In fact, the Moore-Spratt amendment would have provided limited increases in the debt limit and required Congress and the President to develop a plan to balance the budget without counting Social Security.

My amendment would have imposed discipline and accountability in the budget process by extending and strengthening the spending limits and pay-go rules in the Budget Enforcement Act, something that we have been living under for the last several years, something that you all think is necessary, that you voted for. And yet you will not allow that amendment to be put in this spending measure. My amendment would have imposed discipline.

But both amendments were ruled out of order. Instead of an open debate on these amendments and what should be done with the government's maxed-out credit card, the majority hid a $750 billion increase in the national debt in this important bill. That, I am afraid, is an action my constituents would find to be a little less than honest.

I have been told by my colleagues on this side of the aisle that if the Democrats would be in the majority this evening and would have been offering this bill here this evening, that you on the other side of the aisle would be yelling to the heavens against it, that we should not be increasing this debt limit. And I have no doubt, I have only been here for 2 years, I have no doubt that we have been guilty of what you are doing tonight.

So it is time to put away the foolishness of the past. It is time to admit the Democrats in the past have done the wrong thing, and it is time for you all to admit, I would hope, in the sense of doing the right thing, that we have the opportunity to vote up and down on this vote; that we are not doing it in the dead of night; that we do it in a way that is honest; that we not resort to the politics as usual; that we be bipartisan and straightforward with the American public; and that I think the American public would appreciate that.

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to point out that under the protocols established by the majority leader, the Committee on Rules is to bring forward rules that do not protect from points of order provisions that violate House rules if an authorizing committee notifies the Committee on Rules of concerns they have regarding such provisions. Unfortunately, these protocols were not followed in the case of the rule for this supplemental appropriations bill. The Transportation and Infrastructure Committee in a May 21, 2002, letter to the Chairman of the Rules Committee requested that four specific provisions which violated clause 2 of rule XXI not be protected under the rule. Unfortunately, three of the specific requests were ignored, including two involving unauthorized appropriations out of the Highway Trust Fund.

We have worked very hard in this body over the last several Congresses to reestablish the concept of a Highway Trust Fund; to put trust back in the Highway Trust Fund. And yet the legislation, unfortunately, would provide for funding some $19.3 million for border enforcement activities. This may be a very good program, but one that is not authorized from the trust fund. That will mean less money available for important transportation needs in our country. It is something that should be done out of our general revenue, not out of the Highway Trust Fund without an authorization.

The second thing I would like to point out is that the legislation does provide for some $5 million for the Safety Permitting Program to come from the Highway Trust Fund. Again, the Safety Permitting Program is under the Hazardous Material Transportation Program. The HAZMAT Program is funded from general funds and registration fees.

This is something that again will result in less money being available for transportation needs in this country and will free up funds for other programs. I understand the problems that we have, but this is not a proper use of the highway trust fund.

In addition, as part of the $19.3 million, there are over $4 million being provided for background security checks, ordered in the USA Patriot Act as part of the Haz Mat program, again out of the highway trust fund. This is not something that was contemplated, it has not been authorized, and it should not have been done; and I regret it. I want to call this to the attention of the Members as this legislation moves forward through the process, which I am confident it will do, so that we can refine this legislation in conference and when it comes back to the floor, maintain the principle of the integrity of the transportation trust fund that we have all worked so hard, really all of us have worked so hard, to establish.

Ms. SOLIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am looking at the clock now and wondering what my constituents are doing on the west coast in Los Angeles, California; and I know that they are probably just finishing up their dinner, and maybe not dwelling on what we are doing here in the Congress. But I can tell my colleagues that the people in my district would be shocked. They would be alarmed to know that language has been inserted in this bill that is going to be voted on tonight to allow for a huge increase in the national debt limit, and I think it is irresponsible; and I know that many of them would feel that same way. Worst yet, it forces us to play Russian roulette with the livelihood of our Nation's seniors and the future of America's children. Social Security should provide just that: security. But by raising the debt limit today, we endanger our Nation's safety net which allows our senior citizens to live out their golden years with dignity and respect.

We are playing with the lives of our senior citizens, men and women who have worked hard for our Nation and deserve the full benefits of Social Security to help pay for their rent, their food, and their prescription drugs. We are playing with the lives of our baby boomers, who must not only help care for their senior citizen parents, but also have to plan for their impending retirements. What about those people?

We are playing with the lives of our young people who every day pay into Social Security, but which may not be there to provide for them when they need it.

Just last year, our Nation enjoyed one of the largest surpluses in American history, but then the Bush administration and the Republican leadership ran through what I call a reckless series of tax cuts designed to provide the most benefit to the richest 1 percent of Americans, many of whom are not seen on this floor tonight. By raising the debt limit, this administration continues to rob the working poor and middle class by stifling them with the additional debt. Raising the debt ceiling weakens Social Security for our current senior citizens and baby boomers like myself.

Look in the mirror. Look at the American future. Last August the Treasury Secretary, Paul O'Neill, predicted that the United States would not reach into its debt ceiling until late 2003, but now that the Republican leadership has passed its huge tax breaks for the very wealthy, we are quickly being forced to juggle our Nation's accounting books. Raising the ceiling steals, literally steals hundreds of billions of dollars from the Social Security trust fund, from that fund which my parents rely on right now. It is a backwards Robin Hood policy, stealing from the poor and our Nation's seniors to give to the rich.

Mr. Chairman, every day Americans pay $1 billion in interest on our national debt. That is about 16 cents for every dollar we pay into taxes. Raising the debt ceiling will do nothing to alleviate the problem; it just gets worse.

I am staunchly opposed to this plan. I support a responsible budget that makes needed investments in our national security, protects our Social Security, Medicare, and does not saddle our children and our grandchildren with enormous national debt.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, there are a lot of good things in this bill. It will provide appropriations to help us fight the war on terrorism. It will provide some good things for our veterans. All of these are things that we all support. But I have to tell my colleagues, Mr. Chairman, the way that the attempt is being made to deceive the American people in the dark of night to make it possible to add to the debt of our children and grandchildren, to steal the Social Security trust fund, to endanger the well-being of our senior citizens makes me want a dip of snuff, and I do not even use tobacco.

I grew up in a community where there were a lot of bootleggers. They look like paragons of virtue compared to this crowd. The great country music singer Merle Haggard wrote a song called "Rainbow Stew." I just want to paraphrase this. He said, "When a Member of Congress goes through the Capitol door and does what he says he will do, we will all be drinking that free Bubble-up and eating that rainbow stew."

Well, I am here to tell my colleagues we are getting fed a big pot of rainbow stew tonight.

If this is an emergency wartime appropriations bill, why does it have a stealth effort to raise the debt ceiling to put more debt on our children and grandchildren? Why does it do that? If that is what this is about, why do we not just have an appropriations bill? We do not need one of these chicken-hearted rules that allows for some kind of stealth effort to put more debt on our children and grandchildren, to threaten our senior citizens with losing their Social Security. Why would we want to do something like this? Why not have a vote up or down on whether or not to raise the debt ceiling?

Let us face reality. All the money is gone. It has all been spent. This time last year we had money in the bank. We were paying off debt. I remember so well the Director of the Office of Management and Budget coming to the Blue Dogs and saying, our greatest fear is that we are going to have so much money that we are going to pay off all the debt and there will not be any U.S. Treasury bonds. Well, dear heart, you can rest easy tonight. There is going to be a U.S. Treasury bond available for as far as anybody can imagine, and our children and grandchildren are going to have to pay it off. That is not right.

I can tell my colleagues that they may do it just because they have more votes; but my colleagues are not going to do it without me coming to this well and raising the issue, and I am not going to go back home and face my children and grandchildren. I am not going to look at my three grandchildren, and they are to me just as dear as anything can possibly be, just like everybody's grandchildren are, and let them look at me 20 years from now, if I am still around, and say, Granddaddy, why did you not do something about that? Why did you let that happen? Why did you put this debt on us? Why did you destroy this country over the only reason you had that was to stay in power and reduce taxes on the wealthiest people in this country? Why did you do that?

When I have to face that question, I at least will be able to stand before them and say, I did everything I could do; but we were not in the majority. We did not have any control over that.

I ask my colleagues to think about what they are doing. Think about what they are doing. All we ask is for my Republican colleagues to sit down with us in this bipartisan spirit I have heard so much about, and if this is bipartisanship, I am a space scientist, and everybody who knows me knows that is not true.

We hear about bipartisanship, but yet we have this single-handed attempt to cram this down our throats. Let us sit down in a bipartisan way. Let us do an honest budget. Let us recognize what we are doing and not steal from our children, our grandchildren, and our senior citizens to do it.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues not to pass this bill.

Mr. BARTON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I really had not intended to speak tonight on the supplemental appropriation, but I have been locked out of my office due to my own inability to remember my keys, so I have had no recourse but to sit on the floor and actually listen to the debate, which is a very enlightening experience.

Now, I got elected in 1984. From 1985 in January when I got sworn in, to 1995 in January, when the first Republican majority took this House in over 40 years, there was one balanced budget presented to the House of Representatives to vote on. One, in the first 10 years that I was a Member of this body serving in the minority, and that was the budget that President Reagan supported. I think it got 13 votes, and I voted for it. There was a reception down at the White House and President Reagan asked all of the folks that were willing to vote for a balanced budget to come down, and I believe there were 13 of us. I think all 13 were Republicans, but it is possible that there were one or two Democrats, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. HALL) and perhaps the gentleman from Texas (Mr. STENHOLM). I would have to go back and look at that.

So the first point I want to make about that is that when my good friends who are in the minority tonight were in the majority, they did not present any balanced budgets for the American people; they did not present any balanced budgets on the House floor. Now, when the Republicans got into the majority, we did. In fact, I remember when President Clinton was in office, we had a partial government shutdown because the Republicans were insisting that there be a balanced budget; and at least in that first year, President Clinton said, balanced budgets do not count. We do not need a balanced budget. He later changed his position, and we got balanced budgets; and I will say for the record that both Republicans and Democrats voted for those balanced budgets.

Now we are at a point in our Nation's history where we have had a recession, we have to fight the war on terrorism, we have had to present some budgets that are unbalanced. But let us think about that. There are actually two parts to a Federal budget. There is the discretionary spending budget, and this year that budget is about $769 billion, $759 billion, somewhere in that range; and then there is an entitlement portion of the budget, and that entitlement portion of the budget is over $1 trillion. Then there is interest on the national debt, and that portion of the budget is over $200 billion.

Now, I have brought to the floor, in the time that I have been a Member of this House, budget process reform bills to change the way we do budgeting, and I had good support from the Democrats in those efforts, trying to change the budget process itself. But under the system that we are operating under today, we cannot do anything about the entitlement part of the budget; we can only do something about the discretionary part of the budget.

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has moved heaven and Earth to hold the line on discretionary spending. I am told that the increase from last year to this year in the budget resolution, in the budget the appropriators are working on, is 1 percent, 1 percent.

□ 2200

The chairman of the Committee on the Budget that is sitting at the back of the room, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. NUSSLE), presented a budget on the floor that has held the line on discretionary spending. So we are going through the budget process under rules that I think need to be fixed. I want to fix them. I talked to the Speaker of the House yesterday about fixing them.

But under this budget resolution, the budget resolution that we are operating under, we cannot do anything about entitlements. We can only do something about discretionary spending. This supplemental spending bill that is before us this evening is somewhere between $27.1 billion and a little over $29 billion in supplemental discretionary spending. That is a good number, and we should vote for that and then work together on a bipartisan basis to reform the budget process later on so that we can do something about the larger issue.

Mr. Chairman, let us keep in mind that there is politics and there is policy. The policy embedded in this supplemental appropriation bill is a good policy. We should vote for it.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have taken this time in order to discuss the schedule for the rest of the evening and, indeed, the rest of the week with the Members of this body.

Mr. Chairman, let me begin by apologizing to all the Members of this body. It had been my hope and my expectation that we would be able to complete our work for the week and our work on this bill this evening.

Given that expectation, which seemed reasonable at the time, it was me who advised so many of you to go ahead and make your travel plans so that you could return to your district work periods in your respective districts across the country as early as possible tomorrow. We are all anxious to get home to be with our families, to be with our constituents, and to take up that important work we have scheduled in our districts.

However, it seems that there are a large number of Members of the body that do not have that desire to get home, and have decided they would like to prolong this debate and discuss any number of matters. We could go on through the evening. We could work all night. But, Mr. Chairman, there would be nothing productive, worthwhile, or contributing to the well-being of this Nation if we spent our time in that way.

Far better, I would think, for us to go ahead and complete our work for the evening, rise from the committee, and then resume our work tomorrow. It being a Thursday, we will not be able to resume our work before 10 a.m. I can only make my commitment to the Members of the body that I and the other Members of the leadership, I am sure, on both sides of the aisle will do everything we can to work out whatever agreements might be possible so that we might be able to complete our work at a reasonable time tomorrow, so that people might be able to reschedule their planes and their travel arrangements, and perhaps make it home by even possibly Friday for their district work period.

The distinguished chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. YOUNG), is a man of an extraordinary high ability and good heart, as is the distinguished ranking member, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. OBEY). I have every confidence that given the encouragement we might give these two gentlemen, we might find them capable of coming in tomorrow and working out an agreement between themselves and others who have amendments that might pend so that we can accommodate to the desire of the Members to complete this work.

I must say, however, that failure to arrive at these kinds of agreements would result in our staying through Friday, through Saturday, if necessary. I would hope that is not necessary. I know we all have family and constituents that we long to see. But this is about funding the war on terrorism and the security of this Nation. I am sure there is nobody in this body that wants to go home without completing this bill.

Mr. Chairman, while I will ask the Chairman of the Committee to rise from our work this evening and resume it in the morning, it is, again, as I said before, with my most sincere apology to all of the Members on both sides of the aisle who made travel plans based on my assurances that they will have to reschedule them, and it is my sincere hope and belief that we will be able to tell Members a timetable in the morning that will make it possible for them to reschedule in a manner that will be, let's say, accommodating to Members and their families and their travel plans.

I hope Members have a special evening. Let me just say as a final note, the Colorado Avalanche is winning tonight, so all is not lost.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. ISAKSON) having assumed the chair, Mr. THORNBERRY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 4775) making supplemental appropriations for further recovery from and response to terrorist attacks on the United States for the fiscal year ending September 30, 2002, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

COMMUNICATION FROM HONORABLE RICHARD K. ARMEY, MEMBER OF CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Honorable RICHARD K. ARMEY, Member of Congress:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, May 21, 2002.
Hon. DENNIS J. HASTERT,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This is to formally notify you, pursuant to Rule VIII of the Rules of the House, that I have determined that the subpoena for documents and testimony issued to me by the United States District Court for the District of Columbia is not material and relevant, and may be inconsistent with the privileges and rights of the House. Accordingly, I have instructed the Office of General Counsel to object to and to move to quash the subpoena.

Sincerely,
RICHARD K. ARMEY,
Member of Congress.

COMMUNICATION FROM HONORABLE TOM DeLAY, MEMBER OF CONGRESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Honorable TOM DELAY, Member of Congress:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, May 21, 2002.
Hon. DENNIS J. HASTERT,
Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This is to formally notify you, pursuant to Rule VIII of the Rules of the House, that I have determined that the subpoena for documents and testimony issued to me by the United States District Court for the District of Columbia is not material and relevant, and may be inconsistent with the privileges and rights of the House. Accordingly, I have instructed the Office of General Counsel to object to and to move to quash the subpoena.

Sincerely,
TOM DELAY,
Member of Congress.

INDEPENDENT COMMISSION NEEDED TO DETERMINE FACTS

(Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous material.)

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, evidence continues to mount that we suffered a major, major failure of intelligence prior to September 11.

Our colleague, Senator JOHN MCCAIN, writes in this morning's Washington Post that asking and urging and demanding answers by various agencies, the Federal Government failing to understand the enormity of the danger facing the United States is an obligation shared by all elected officials.

We were told in Newsweek earlier this week that even after the President asked, What is going on here, his intelligence advisors were unable to tease out the facts or decipher the information.

Mr. Speaker, that is why we need an independent commission. We need an independent commission to determine the facts.

Senator MCCAIN goes on to say, "It is hardly a surprise that in a lively democracy, the partisan and institutional loyalties will influence both sides of an honest debate challenging and confronting Federal Government." That is all the more reason to consider impounding an independent commission of trustworthy and experienced statesmen who are not entirely devoid of partisan loyalties.

George Will, the columnist, then goes on to suggest such Americans as George Schultz, Sam Nunn, BOB GRAHAM, DICK LUGAR, Senator Danforth and others who can make up that commission. We owe it to this Nation. We owe it to the families of the victims of September 11.

THE WAY OUT

(By George F. Will)

"The best way out is always through."—Robert Frost.

The Bush administration is in a quandary which is, as Washington quandaries so often are, partly self-inflicted. There is only one way out of the growing—tardily growing; by no means grown too large—controversy about investigating intelligence inadequacies prior to Sept. 11. The way out for the administration is to go through an investigation, and not one conducted by itself.

Eleven days. That is how long it took President Roosevelt after Pearl Harbor to appoint a blue-ribbon commission, headed by Supreme Court Justice Owen Roberts, to examine what was known, and what should have been, prior to Dec. 7, 1941.

More than 250 days have passed since Sept. 11. Last week, one of the most dispirting in recent Washington history, the administration seemed surly and defensive regarding the inevitably rising tide of questions about governmental intelligence operations before the terrorist attacks.

Understandably, the administration was provoked by some Democrats' crassness in casting their questions in Watergate-era cadences—what did the president know and when did he know it? Actually, a blue-ribbon commission, concerning itself with all three branches of government, almost certainly would vindicate President Bush, who, after all, initiated the Aug. 6, 2001, briefing on the threat of al Qaeda operations in the United States.

The commission also would find that Congress has already begun correcting some problems—for example, belatedly funding modernization of FBI computers, more than 13,000 of which were too old to be compatible with crucial software last year. Given the rapid multiplication of new means of communication, from cell phones to the Internet, the commission should recommend revisions of the Foreign Intelligence Surveillance Act, passed in 1978. The commission should evaluate judicial standards of probable cause when law enforcement agencies seek wiretaps, access to computer hard drives and bank records, and other forms of surveillance covered by Fourth Amendment privacy protections.

The commission should be balanced between Republicans and Democrats but should have an even number of members to underscore the assumption that its proceedings are not expected to be internally adversarial, producing party-line votes and requiring a tie-breaker. A commission of sufficient prestige can perhaps impart to its recommendations momentum that will overwhelm the institutional rivalries that can make national security a hostage to jurisdictional jealousies. So the co-chairman of the commission should be former secretary of state George Shultz and former senator Sam Nunn, the Georgia Democrat.

Shultz, who also was secretary of labor and of Treasury and was the first head of the Office of Management and Budget, has had more highlevel government experience than perhaps any American in history. And his memoir of his 6½ years running President Reagan's State Department, "Turmoil and Triumph," contains this laconic sentence: "Our knowledge of the Kremlin was thin, and the CIA, I found, was usually wrong about it." Nunn has a long-standing interest in a matter of increasing urgency: Russia's surplus nuclear weapons.

Sens. Bob Graham, the Florida Democrat, and Richard Lugar, the Indiana Republican, with considerable experience on the Intelligence and Foreign Relations Committees respectively, can represent the legislative branch. Former senator Jack Danforth, the Missouri Republican, having conducted the investigation of the 1993 Waco disaster, understands investigating government misadventures. Former representative Lee Hamilton, the Indiana Democrat, served on the International Relations Committee for 34 years. Prof. Donald Kagan of Yale, author of "On the Origins of War," would bring a historian's understanding to the challenge of making retrospective judgments about events viewed through the lens of present knowledge. The eight and final member of the commission could be former senator Pat Moynihan. He was vice chairman of the Intelligence Committee—and in 1984 he resigned from it until CIA Director William Casey apologized for not informing the committee of CIA involvement in mining Nicaraguan harbors.

In his book "Secrecy: The American Experience," Moynihan says it is an iron law of institutions that the ration of unnecessary to necessary secrecy increases—including secrecy maintained by one part of the government against other parts. President Truman could have used the proof contained in intercepted messages between the Soviet Union and its agents in America, of espionage by Alger Hiss and the Rosenbergs—but the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff kept it from him.

Secrecy renders societies susceptible to epidemics of suspicion. A blue-ribbon commission would be immunization against such an epidemic and preventive medicine against future failures. The administration and the nation need to go through it.

(By John McCain)

PROBE DEEP, AND FAIRLY

President Bush is a patriot. He responded forcefully to the terrorist attacks of Sept. 11. And had he known that enemies of the United States were planning to seize four passenger aircraft and crash them into American buildings, I'm sure he would have done everything in his power to stop them. We can also safely assume that Vice President Cheney is a patriot, and a watchful guardian of our national security. That said, the government of the United States, which they now have the privilege of leading, failed the American people in the weeks, months and years leading up to Sept. 11.

The Sept. 11 attacks were incredibly depraved but not, as it turns out, unimaginable. As early as 1995, an accomplice of Ramiz Yousef revealed that the mastermind behind the 1993 World Trade Center attack intended to plant bombs on 12 U.S.-bound airliners and crash a light plane packed with explosives into CIA headquarters. The accomplice had trained as a pilot at three separate U.S. flight schools. In 1999 the Library of Congress prepared a report for the National Intelligence Council warning that al Qaeda suicide bombers "could crash-land an aircraft packed with high explosives" into the Pentagon, CIA or the White House.

Last July Kenneth Williams, an FBI field agent in Phoenix, suspected that terrorists had enrolled in an Arizona pilot training school. He urged the bureau to begin investigating whether other U.S. flight schools might be training terrorists to fly. A month later, FBI agents in Minnesota arrested flight school student Zacarias Moussaoui, whose lack of interest in learning how to land an aircraft had aroused the suspicions of his instructors, who dutifully alerted the FBI. It is uncertain how far up the chain of command suspicious about Moussaoui's intentions traveled. A week before Sept. 11, the FBI did notify the FAA of Moussaoui's arrest, his terrorist connections, and his interest in flying large commercial aircraft. The FAA chose not to share this rather pertinent information with the airlines.

Throughout last summer, CIA analysts were increasingly anxious that Osama bin Laden's operatives were planning imminent terrorist attacks against the United States and possibly planning to hijack planes in this country. The agency shared its concern with the president in August. Apparently no one from either the CIA or the FBI shared with the president information that terrorists might intend to use hijacked planes to destroy civilian and government targets.

Nor did the FBI and CIA make much of a habit of sharing information with each other. Had they done so, one presumes the President's Daily Briefing on Aug. 6 would have included a suspicion that the hijackers might have something much more atrocious than ransom demands on their agenda.

As administration officials have observed, the president is not expected to work as an intelligence case officer. It is not his job to drag from different agencies various bits of information, murky clues and suspicions that, considered together, begin to reveal the dimensions of a clear and present danger. But it is the responsibility of officials who serve at his pleasure.

Asking for, urging and demanding answers for why various agencies of the federal government failed to understand the enormity of the danger facing the United States is an obligation shared by all elected federal officials. As is the responsibility for understanding why and how the previous administration failed to combat the growing menace of international terrorism more effectively. As is responsibility for questioning Congress's inability or unwillingness to exercise more diligently its oversight responsibilities for these agencies. As is the expectation that officials who did not competently discharge their responsibilities be held accountable.

It's hardly a surprise in a lively democracy that partisan and institutional loyalties will influence both sides of an honest debate on the most critical challenge confronting the federal government. The administration's critics and its defenders suspect each other of motives less civic-minded than an honest search for answers, impairing our own and the public's ability to arrive at fair conclusions about what went wrong and how to repair it.

This is all the more reason to consider empaneling an independent commission of trust-worthy, experienced statesmen who, if not entirely devoid of partisan loyalties, are sufficiently removed by time and wisdom from the appeal of such loyalties to know when they conflict with the national interest.

Give them complete access to all intelligence reports and internal documents with arguable relevance to their inquiry, and charge them with rendering a judgment about who failed and why in this administration and its predecessors, as well as in Congress, and with recommending appropriate remedies to guard against a recurrence.

An independent inquiry will not impose a serious burden on the administration as it prosecutes our just war against terrorism, any more than a similar inquiry after Pearl Harbor impeded Franklin D. Roosevelt's prosecution of World War II. Nor should it prevent members of Congress, the press or any American citizen from questioning or criticizing the government's apparent failures before and after President Bush's inauguration. All wars and national security failures have occasioned contemporaneous criticism, and the Republic has managed to thrive.

It is irresponsible in a time of war, or any time for that matter, to attack or defend unthinkingly or because partisan identification is one's supreme interest. But it is not responsible or right to shrink from offering thoughtful criticism when and to whom it is due, and when the consequences of incompletely understanding failures of governance are potentially catastrophic. On the contrary, such timidity is indefensibly irresponsible especially in times of war, so irresponsible that it verges on the unpatriotic.

What Went Wrong

(By Michael Hirsh and Michael Isikoff)

Forget James Bond. Intelligence gathering is more like taking a metal detector to the city dump. So much comes in, rumor, hearsay, disinformation, so little of it more than trash: once in a blue moon an agent-prospector may get lucky. But even then an agent's warning is likely to be dismissed as what Condoleezza Rice last week called "chatter." "There's always TMI—too much information," says former CIA agent Milt Bearden. Often agents poke fun at the sometimes obsessive quirks of their colleagues. "If a confidential memorandum comes from a guy out in, say, Phoenix, the first thing that goes up the line is, 'That's Harry again. He's like a broken clock twice a day'," one ex-agent says. Even today, long after 9–11, streams of new threats pass unnoticed through Washington. In recent weeks, for instance, the FBI has gotten specific threats about a car- or truck-bomb attack on an "all-glass" building near the U.S. Capitol, and another threat against a Celebrity cruise ship off Florida. Neither was corroborated, or publicized.

Yet every now and then, amid the piles of dross, a nugget of pure gold turns up in intel files. The key for American national security—now and into the future—is to know it when we see it. Back in July 2001, Bill Kurtz and his team hit pay dirt, and no one seemed to care. A hard-driven supervisor in the FBI's Phoenix office, Kurtz was overseeing an investigation of suspected Islamic terrorists last July when a member of his team, a sharp, 41-year-old counterterrorism agent named Kenneth Williams, noticed something odd: a large number of suspects were signing up to take courses in how to fly airplanes. The agent's suspicions were further fueled when he heard that some of the men at the local Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University were asking a lot of questions about airport security.

Kurtz, who had previously worked on the Osama bin Laden unit of the FBI's international terrorism section, was convinced he and his colleagues might have stumbled on to something bigger. Kurtz's team fired off a lengthy memo raising the possibility that bin Laden might be using U.S. flight schools to infiltrate the country's civil-aviation system. "He thinks of everything in terms of bin Laden," one colleague recalled. The memo outlined a proposal for the FBI to monitor "civil aviation colleges/universities around the country."

Williams, the agent who sniffed out the link, was described by one former colleague as a "superstar," a former SWAT sniper and family man who coaches Little League and, in 1995, helped track down Michael Fortier, Timothy McVeigh's former Army buddy. "Anything he says you can take to the bank," says former agent Ron Myers.

But little of that seemed to make a difference back in Washington, where the Kurtz team suffered a fate even worse than Cassandra's: not only were they not believed, they were ignored altogether. The FBI was concerned about racial profiling. Moreover, it wasn't used to gather intelligence, especially domestically, given American sensitivities about intrusive government and civil liberties. Its intelligence-assessment system was almost laughably antiquated. And under Attorney General John Ashcroft, the department was being prodded back into its old law-and-order mind-set: violent crime, drugs, child porn. Counterterrorism, which had become a priority of the Clintonites (not that they did a better job of nailing bin Laden), seemed to be getting less attention. When FBI officials sought to add hundreds more counterintelligence agents, they got shot down even as Ashcroft began, quietly, to take a privately chartered jet for his own security reasons.

The attorney general was hardly alone in seeming to de-emphasize terror in the young Bush administration. Over at the Pentagon, new Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld elected not to relaunch a Predator drone that had been tracking bin Laden, among other actions. In self-absorbed Washington, the Phoenix memo, which never resulted in arrests, landed in two units at FBI headquarters but didn't make it to senior levels. Nor did the memo get transmitted to the CIA, which has long had a difficult relationship with the FBI—and whose director, George Tenet, one of the few Clinton holdovers, was issuing so many warnings that bin Laden was "the most immediate" threat to Americans he was hardly heeded any longer.

Last week the tale of the missed signal from Phoenix became, for thousands of families of 9–11 victims, yet another tendril of pain stemming from that day. Indeed, it was part of a whole summer of missed clues that, taken together, seemed to presage the terrible September of 2001. The same week in early July that Kurtz and his team were dispatching their memo, the White House acknowledge for the first time, Bush was privately beginning to worry about the stream of terror warnings he was hearing that summer, most of them aimed at U.S. targets abroad. On July 5, five days before the Phoenix memo, Bush directed Rice to figure out what was going on domestically. A month later, America learned for the first time last week—nine months after the attacks—Bush received a "presidential daily brief" in Crawford, Texas, that mentioned the possibility of an airline hijacking as a domestic threat. The Aug. 6 briefing was only "an analytic report that talked about [bin Laden's] methods of operation, talked about what he had done historically," rice said in a hastily called conference to contain the damage from the news.

Because Bush has long insisted he had no inkling of the attacks, the disclosures touched off a media stampede in a capital long deprived of scandal. The fact that the nation's popular war president might have been warned a little over a month before September 11—and that the supposedly straight-talking Bushies hadn't told anyone about it—opened up a serious credibility gap for the first time in the war on terror.

There were, in fact, failures at every level that summer: from the shortcomings in the law-enforcement trenches—the FBI's poor record at domestic surveillance, the CIA's poor record at infiltrating Islamic groups and the lack of cooperation between the two agencies—to the fixed strategic mind-set of the Bush administration. Between the claims by the FBI and CIA that they did't get enough information and the White House's insistence that it didn't receive any reports—"He doesn't recall seeing anything," Rice said when asked if Bush had read the Phoenix memo—the buck seems to be stopping nowhere. "If I were an average citizen, I'd be pissed at the whole American government," says a senior official who has worked on counterterrorism.

The question is not so much what the president knew and when he knew it. The question is whether the administration was really paying much attention. Terrorism is by nature stealthy and hard to crack, even in the face of the most zealous efforts to thwart it. What Americans should be asking is why the Bush administration in its first eight months, like the Clinton admiration for much of its eight years, did not demand the intelligence cooperation that was needed. At issue is not whom to blame for the past, but how to learn from it to safeguard our future.

The fact is, in a nation that prices itself on its mastery of the Information Age, almost no one in the U.S. government seemed to know what anyone else was doing. Even as what Rice called "major threat spikes" began to appear on Washington's . . .

In any case, few Americans seem to be in the mood any longer for more-of-the-same from Washington. September 11 has often been compared to Pearl Harbor as a fault line between a complacent and war-ready America. And, like Pearl Harbor, questions about whether it could have been prevented will forever haunt us. To give the Bush administration some credit, no government in modern history has every predicted a major surprise attack. Britain and France missed the Blitzkrieg in 1940. The Germans missed D-Day in June 1944. And everyone missed Iraq's invasion of Kuwait in August 1990.

Even so, it's too simple to say that postmortems now are somehow unfair or unpatriotic in "wartime America." The latest revelations could open up a Pandora's box of questions about the administration's pre-9-11 performance on terror—questions with complicated and interesting roots.

By the end of the Clinton administration, the then national-security adviser Sandy Berger had become "totally preoccupied" with fears of a domestic terror attack, a colleague recalls. True, the Clintonites had failed to act decisively against Al Qaeda, but by the end they were certain of the danger it posed. When, in January 2001, Berger gave Rice her handover briefing, he covered the bin Laden threat in detail, and, sources say, warned her: "You will be spending more time on this issue then on any other." Rice was alarmed by what she heard, and asked for a strategy review. But the effort was marginalized and scarcely mentioned in ensuing months as the administration committed itself to other priorities, like national missile defense (NMD) and Iraq.

John Ashcroft seemed particularly eager to set a new agenda. In the spring of 2001, the attorney general had an extraordinary confrontation with the then FBI Director Louis Freeh at an annual meeting of special agents in charge in Quantico, Va. The two talked before appearing, and Ashcroft laid out his priorities for Freeh, another Clinton holdover (though no friend of the ex-president's), "basically violent crime and drugs," recalls one participant. Freeh replied bluntly that those were not his priorities, and began to talk about terror and counterterrorism. "Ashcroft didn't want to hear about it," says a former senior law-enforcement official. (A Justice Department spokeswoman hotly disputed this, saying that in May Ashcroft told a Senate committee terrorism was his "highest priority.")

That was unfortunate, because Freeh, despite his late-tenure interest in global terrorism, had left behind an FBI that badly needed fixing, especially its antiquated evidence-gathering methods. So fouled up is the FBI's communications system that it is almost impossible for agents to send classified e-mails to another agency like the CIA; the effect is that little is shared.

It wasn't that Ashcroft and others were unconcerned about these problems, or about terrorism. But the Bushies had an ideological agenda of their own. At the Treasury Department, Secretary Paul O'Neill's team wanted to roll back almost all forms of government intervention, including laws against money laundering and tax havens of the kind used by terror groups. At the Pentagon, Donald Rumsfeld wanted to revamp the military and push his pet project, NMD. Rumsfeld vetoed a request to divert $800 million from missile defense into counterterrorism. The Pentagon chief also seemed uninterested in a tactic for observing bin Laden left over from the Clinton administration: the CIA's Predator surveillance plane. Upon leaving office, the Clintonites left open the possibility of sending the Predator back up armed with Hellfire missiles, which were tested in February 2001. But through the spring and summer of 2001, when valuable intelligence could have been gathered, the Bush administration never launched even an unarmed Predator. Hill sources say DOD didn't want the CIA treading on its turf.

And while most of the current controversy is about what America didn't do defensively, Rumsfeld and Bush didn't take the offensive, either. Upon entering office, both suggested publicly that the Clinton administration left America with a weak image abroad. The day after the Oct. 12, * * *

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members will be recognized for 5 minutes each.

REVISIONS TO ALLOCATION FOR HOUSE COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. NUSSLE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. NUSSLE. Mr. Speaker, I submit for printing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD revisions to the 302(a) allocations and budgetary aggregates established by H. Con. Res. 83, the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 2002. My authority to make these adjustments is derived from Sec. 314 of the Congressional Budget Act and Sec. 221(c) of H. Con. Res. 83.

As reported to the House, H.R. 4775, a bill making supplemental appropriations for fiscal year 2002, includes emergency-designated appropriations. The total amount of emergency-designated appropriations included in the reported bill is $29,432,000,000. Outlays flowing from those appropriations total $8,466,000,000 in fiscal year 2002. Under the provisions of both the Budget Act and the budget resolution, I must adjust the 302(a) allocations and budgetary aggregates upon the reporting of a bill containing emergency appropriations.

Accordingly, I hereby increase the 302(a) allocation for fiscal year 2002 to the House Committee on Appropriations to $735,432,000,000 in new budget authority and $736,420,000,000 in outlays. I also increase the budgetary aggregates for fiscal year 2002 to $1,708,604,000,000 in new budget authority and $1,653,073,000,000 in outlays.

Section 2 of House Resolution 428 provided that House Concurrent Resolution 353, as adopted by the House, shall have force and effect in the House as though Congress has adopted a concurrent resolution on the budget. That section also directed me to submit for printing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD: (1) allocations contemplated by section 302(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 under a concurrent resolution on the budget; (2) accounts identified for advance appropriations, referred to in section 301(b) of House Concurrent Resolution 353; and (3) an estimated unified surplus, referred to in section 211 of such concurrent resolution.

The attached tables, which I submit for printing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD as directed, provide the required information.

82ND AIRBORNE BIRTHDAY AND MEMORIAL DAY

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ISSA). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. HAYES) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, this week, an incredibly brave fighting force will mark its 86th birthday. This fighting unit is the 82nd Airborne Division, which is based at Fort Bragg, North Carolina. As the U.S. Congressman for the Eighth District of North Carolina, I am honored to represent these troops and the many others that serve in the Eighth District in North Carolina.

In 1917, the 82nd was designated as an infantry division, but became airborne in World War II. As the United States first airborne unit, they have been serving with this distinction ever since.

One of the most impressive aspects of the 82nd is their rapid response ability. They can be packed and en route and ready for battle within 18 hours of being called up to duty. I have met with members of the 82nd and seen them in action during their training exercises. If you have any doubt, let me assure you, you want these guys on your side.

We live in an uncertain world, a world made even more uncertain by the tragic events of September 11. But in this world of uncertainty, there are a couple of things we can count on. One is when the Commander in Chief calls, the men and women of the 82nd Airborne Division are ready to answer that call.

Throughout the storied history of the 82nd Airborne Division, brave young patriots have stood in the breach and sacrificed anything necessary to defend freedom throughout the world. They were among the first units put on the alert after the terrorist attacks of September 11. 3,000 Members of the 82nd have recently been activated to head to Afghanistan. A commander of the 82nd Airborne, General Dan McNeill, will head the new joint task force and will consolidate operations in Afghanistan under one umbrella. I have full faith that those members of the 82nd that will accompany him will serve honorably and effectively.

North Carolina, particularly the Eighth District, has long played a key role in our Nation's military forces. Fort Bragg is one of the premier military installations in the world. Some of our finest military personnel are stationed there. As a matter of fact, when President Bush wanted to say thank you to our troops, Fort Bragg is where he went to say thanks.

Pope Air Force Base, which I visited a few weeks ago, is another important installation. The odds are pretty good that if the U.S. is involved in a military action, then troops from Fort Bragg and Pope are probably going to be there on the front lines.

In addition to celebrating the 82nd birthday, this week is All American Week in Fayetteville, and Memorial Day is just around the corner. These occasions give us reason to celebrate the tremendous job that all our armed forces are doing in waging the war on terrorism.

I would like to take a moment to commend some other units from North Carolina that have played an important role in Operation Enduring Freedom. National Guardsmen from across the Eighth District have helped to secure our airports and participated in other homeland defense activities here in North Carolina.

The 145th Air Wing of the North Carolina National Guard, based out of Charlotte, has been flying over the skies of Afghanistan. The 211th Military Police Unit has been helping to guard prisoners in Afghanistan awaiting transfer to Guantanamo. The 263rd Combat Communications Squadron has recently returned to Stanley County after serving in Qatar.

While we are on the subject of the Eighth District military personnel who are serving with distinction, I should also note that Andrea Quillen was recently named as Airman of the Year. While Airman Quillen is currently serving in South Carolina, she is a native of Fayetteville, and another reason we recognize our North Carolina military pride.

Since 1868, when Memorial Day was first established, more than half a million soldiers have died in the course of serving in major wars to defend our freedom. This Memorial Day, May 27, at 3 p.m., the President is encouraging all Americans to take a moment to remember the men and women of our armed forces who have made the ultimate sacrifice for the liberty that we cherish.

I encourage you all to remember these troops and their families in your daily prayers. I think we can all agree that this is more important than ever before as Memorial Day 2002 approaches. Next time you see a soldier, sailor, airman, or Marine, tell him or her thank you for their service. If the individual is a member of the 82nd, you might want to add "G.I. gravy, G.I. corn, sure am glad that I'm airborne."

WORLD BANK PLANS MORE LOANS TO IRAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ISSA). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California (Mr. SHERMAN) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, yesterday evening I came to the floor to bring up a subject that has gotten far less attention than it deserves. And that is the plan of the World Bank, an organization funded substantially with your tax dollars in mind, to lend up to $755 million to the Islamic Republic of Iran.

Last night I put into the RECORD of this House an article that was published by the Dow Jones International News that reviewed the facts, and I would like to review that article with you tonight along with some additional commentary.

The article begins: "The World Bank undeterred by President George W. Bush's condemnation of Iran as part of the axis of evil, undeterred by the fact that it is arming itself to threaten a peaceful world, the World Bank is pressing ahead with a plan that would provide as much as $755 million in loans to that government over the next 2 years."

Mr. Speaker, there are a few apologists for the government in Iran who note that there are reformers who play front roles, a president of Iran who exercises no power, it is almost an honorary position, who claims to have different views than those actually carried out by the government. But the reports of the American State Department say that reformers have been silenced, that there are public executions, public floggings which increased last year. And just on Monday the State Department announced that Iran is the number one governmental sponsor of terrorism.

Now, in January President Bush identified Iran as a key threat to American security. But as he was doing that, a team of bank directors from the World Bank returned from a visit to Tehran, and they made a clear recommendation to the bank, "deeper and faster involvement in Iran." That is the quotation attributed to Jean-Louis Sarbib, the bank's vice president for Middle Eastern and North African affairs.

Now, the bank staff is reported by the Dow Jones International News to be planning first a loan of $150 million by the end of this year, and then as an element of a tentative plan, endorsed already by the bank's board of directors, the bank would proceed with up to $755 million to Iran in fiscal years 2002 and 2003.

Now, keep in mind the United States contributes 29 percent of the World Bank's capital. We are given only 16 percent of the World Bank's votes. But do not believe that our 16 percent of votes will be sufficient to block this loan, because 2 years ago the World Bank over America's strenuous objections loaned $232 million to Iran. And let us not believe that this is just for humanitarian purposes. Because as the article continues, and I am quoted in the article as saying, and I think I said it right, "The government of Iran will engage in the minimum domestic expenditures necessary to cling to power. Whatever is left over they are going to spend on terrorism and nuclear weapons." When the World Bank finances those minimum amounts of expenditure that the Iranian Government needs to hold on to power, it is freeing up oil revenues for terrorism and for a nuclear weapons program. It will certainly not be sufficient for us to do business as usual and to simply vote against these loans.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I hope that others will join me in crafting legislation that I am working on now and will present to this House just as soon as we return from Memorial Day. And under that legislation we would draw a line in the sand and tell the World Bank that if they approve any additional loans to Iran that no additional American money would be given to that bank.

We are planning to give them $877 million. We should not give them a penny after any day when they approve a loan to Iran.

TRANSFER OF CHINESE MISSILE TECHNOLOGY TO PAKISTAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the opportunity on the House floor this evening to express my concerns regarding the continued transfer of missile technology from China to Pakistan. The Bush administration has reported that the transfer of this highly sensitive information persists even today.

Mr. Speaker, in May 1996, China pledged to not provide technological assistance to nuclear facilities in countries such as Pakistan, where such facilities are not safeguarded. However, Chinese authorities did not effectively ban technology transfers which continued to take place after May of 1996.

In November 2000, China entered into an agreement with the Clinton administration that prohibited China from transferring missiles or missile technology to specifically Pakistan. Apparently, missile technology transfers continued even after this specific prohibition.

Mr. Speaker, what concerns me is that John Bolton, Undersecretary of State for Arms Control and Security has said that the Bush administration's policy on the illegal export of missile technology from China to Pakistan has not changed since the Clinton administration, which on November 21, 2000 imposed sanctions on Pakistan for engaging in missile technology proliferation activities with China. But from my understanding, the Bush administration has already waived substantially all of the missile technology control regime sanctions previously imposed against Pakistan citing the authority of S. 1465, which provided the President with increased flexibility in the exercise of his waiver authority with respect to Pakistan.

I am extremely disappointed that the Bush administration would publicize that its policy has not changed since the Clinton administration, even though the opposite is true and that the Clinton prohibition was recently waived under President Bush's authority.

In addition, I cannot emphasize strongly enough how important it is that missile technology transfers from China to Pakistan be terminated. The current political situation in Pakistan is extremely unstable given their military dictator Musharraf's standing as president and the escalating conflict in Kashmir. Further, there are reports that Osama bin Laden, members of al Qaeda and the Taliban may have shifted into Pakistan. Bin Laden has been known to confer with nuclear scientists in the past. And it is imperative that no further missile or nuclear technology information be filtered into Pakistan for fear of the information getting into deadly hands.

Mr. Speaker, the administration has the authority to reauthorize the prohibition of November 2000 that mandates China not transfer missiles or missile technology to Pakistan. I sent a letter to President Bush today, which I would like to include in the RECORD, Mr. Speaker, requesting that the prohibition be put back in place. The letter is as follows:

Congress of the United States,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC, May 22, 2002.

Hon. George W. Bush,
President of the United States,
Washington, DC.

Dear Mr. President: I would like to take this opportunity to express to you my concerns regarding the continued transfer of missile technology from China to Pakistan as reported by your administration.

In May 1996, China pledged to not provide technological assistance to nuclear facilities in countries such as Pakistan, where such facilities are not safeguarded. However, Chinese authorities did not effectively ban technology information transfers, which continued to take place after May 1996.

In November 2000, China entered into an agreement with the Clinton Administration that prohibited China from transferring missiles or missile technology to specifically Pakistan. Apparently, missile technology transfers continued even after this specific prohibition.

What concerns me is that John R. Bolton, Undersecretary of State for Arms Control and Security, has stated that your administration's policy of the illegal export of missile technology from China to Pakistan has not changed since the Clinton administration, which on November 21, 2000, imposed sanctions on Pakistan for engaging in missile proliferation activities with China. From my understanding, however, your administration has already waived substantially all of the MTCR sanctions previously imposed against Pakistan, citing the authority of S. 1465, which provided the President with increased flexibility in the exercise of his MTCR waiver authority with respect to Pakistan.

I am disappointed that your administration would publicize that its policy has not changed since the Clinton administration even though the opposite is true and that the Clinton prohibition was waived under your authority. In addition, I cannot emphasize strongly enough how important it is that missile technology transfers from China to Pakistan be terminated. The current political situation in Pakistan is extremely unstable given their military dictator Pervez Musharraf standing as President and the escalating conflict in Kashmir. Further, there are reports that Osama bin Laden, members of Al-Qaeda and the Taliban may have shifted into Pakistan. Bin Laden has been known to have conferred with nuclear scientists in the past and it is imperative that no further missile or nuclear technology information be filtered into Pakistan for fear of the information getting into deadly hands.

Your administration has the authority to reauthorize the prohibition of November 2000 that mandates China not to transfer missile or missile technology to Pakistan. This is a matter of not only security in the South Asia region, but is a national security concern as well. Reinstating this prohibition is the only means to ensuring that the transfer of information will be terminated and that China will in fact put in place punitive measures towards companies that continue to attempt to provide information illegally to China. Therefore, I respectfully request that you use your authority to reauthorize the prohibition on missile technology transfers from China to Pakistan.

Thank you for your consideration.

Sincerely,
Frank Pallone, Jr.

Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of not only security in the South Asia region but is a national security concern as well.

Reinstating this prohibition is the only means to ensure that the transfer of information will be terminated and that China will, in fact, put in place punitive measures towards companies that continue to attempt to provide information illegally to Pakistan.

SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS 2002 IS NOT FISCALLY RESPONSIBLE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Oregon (Mr. BLUMENAUER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, even though the hour is late, I appreciate your courtesy.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard on the floor this evening why the supplemental appropriations bill before us is not fiscally responsible. We have heard how we are not having an honest vote or even vigorous debate on key issues like raising the debt ceiling and what we are going to do with Social Security.

People who have listened to the debate so far this evening have heard how this bill is setting the stage to surreptitiously increase the debt limit. Remember a year ago, the administration predicted we would not need a debt limit increase until the year 2008. Now after $4 trillion has disappeared from the expected surpluses, now we are going to continue to increase the Nation's debt instead of honestly assessing proposals dealing with the ongoing tax cuts and domestic spending program.

We have heard how all the funds that are available for the debt limit increase must come directly from Social Security and Medicare trust funds. And we have heard that the interest payments on this mounting debt are estimated to increase over $1 trillion over the next decade above what was projected just a year ago.

But, Mr. Speaker, I am most concerned and it is something that is going to be buried in terms of legislative consideration, about the signal that the Congress is sending by its efforts to legislate in the supplemental appropriations found in areas dealing with the environmental policies of this country. There will be a proposal that we will have buried in this provision that would exempt the Department of Defense from environmental regulations having to do with water consumption off the immediate adjacency of the properties under control of the Secretary of the Defense, but nonetheless directly affected by it.

I find it sad, because I have long argued on this floor and in communities around the country, that the most effective way to enhance the environment is not passing new rules and regulation, taxes and fees. The most powerful tooling to protect the environment is for the Federal Government to simply lead by example, to model the behavior that we expect from the rest of America.

Here we have a provision that would exempt the largest manager of infrastructure in the world and one, sadly, with a decidedly mixed environmental record, from compliance with its environmental responsibilities. The latest count shows that there are about 150 Department of Defense facilities on the Superfund national priority list and another five proposed for listing. Indeed, I think we can safely assume that the Department of Defense is the largest Superfund polluter in the United States. The last thing we want to do is to grant this important Federal agency with vast environmental impact, sweeping exemption from environmental laws, at least without going through the appropriate legislative process involving the stakeholders having an honest debate with the American public. Yet that is exactly what we are given under this supplemental.

The exemption provision in this bill would not only do irreparable damage to an important eco-system in Arizona, and that is the purpose of this amendment, to deal with the San Pedro River which is slowly being dewatered because of the impacts of the Department of Defense, but this sets a terrible precedent for the effects of the Department of Defense actions on the environment around the country.

Now, I would be the first to admit on occasion there must be accelerated decisions, shortcuts that are necessary for the sake of military necessity. We do not do an environmental impact statement for every bomb we drop, nor should we. However, it is embarrassing that what we are doing today with this provision is to relieve a Department of responsibility for its foreseeable environmental impacts which are under the control of the Department.

The amendment is unwarranted and at the very least premature. Even the Government Accounting Office says the Department of Defense has not done the research and investigation necessary to determine whether such an exemption is justified.

Mr. Speaker, it is yet another example why this House should reject the supplemental appropriation that is coming before us.

RAISING THE DEBT CEILING

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ISSA). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. TURNER) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TURNER. Mr. Speaker, tonight the House began the debate on the supplemental appropriations bill, a bill that funds the war on terrorism and makes sure that our troops in the field have the necessary equipment and tools they need to win this war. Every Member of this House supports funding the war on terrorism. That is not what the debate was about tonight nor will it be what the debate is about tomorrow, as we continue to debate this supplemental.

The debate tonight was about a provision of the bill that the Republican leadership put in there that would allow an unlimited increase in the statutory debt ceiling. The statutory debt ceiling is a law that provides the maximum amount that our Federal Government can go into debt. It is one of the few tools that we have to promote fiscal responsibility and require fiscal discipline in this House.

The Democrats tonight stood up to tell the American people that we deserve to have an honest and open debate regarding this very critical issue. If we increase the national debt limit by $750 billion, as Secretary O'Neill has requested, we will be giving this Congress a blank check for uncontrolled spending for ever-increasing debt and for deficits.

It is wrong for us to ask the young men and women in uniform who are sacrificing tonight to fight this war against terrorism to be the very generation that comes home and pays the bills for this war.

The fundamental question before the House tonight was who is going to pay the bill for this war on terrorism. Are we going to pay it as the generation that is able to do so? Are we going to say to the young men and women in uniform, we will let them fight the war and then when they come home and when they are in their good income-earning years they can pay the debt for the war that they fought?

Democrats believe that is wrong. We believe it is wrong to hide an increase in the debt ceiling in this very important supplemental appropriation bill.

We must not use the Social Security trust fund, the American people's retirement fund, to pay for this war. We must not ask that we borrow money from the public to pay for this war. We believe that it is our responsibility today to pay for this war.

The patriotic thing to do as Americans is to be willing to sacrifice along with the men and women in uniform, and the sacrifice that we must pay is we must be willing to pay the bill.

At your house and mine and your business and mine, we understand what it means to balance the budget. We understand that when changed economic circumstances lower our income, that we have to make adjustments in our budget. We have to cut our spending, and if we need to borrow money, we establish a plan to pay it back. It should be no different in Washington. In Washington we also should pay the American people's bills.

Every Member of this Congress recognizes that the debt ceiling must be raised. In fact, as we speak tonight, Secretary O'Neill is using unusual emergency measures to keep the Federal Government from defaulting on its obligations, by using the retirement funds of Federal employees to prevent a default in Federal obligations.

Even after using every trick in the bag, the tricks will run out by the end of June and the debt ceiling must be raised, but Democrats believe that when we raise the debt ceiling we need at the same time to establish a plan to put us back into a balanced budget. Democrats have offered before the Committee on Rules amendments that would do that in a bipartisan way and those have been rejected.

In the first 7 months of this fiscal year, the Federal deficit is $66.5 billion. To give my colleagues a picture of how things have changed in Washington, if we go back just 1 year and look at what the budget looked like in the first 7 months of the last fiscal year, we had a surplus of $165 billion. After having 4 straight years of surpluses in the Federal budget, we are back into deficit spending, and we need a plan to get us back on the road to fiscal responsibility.

Our failure to balance the budget means that we are going to be using the Social Security trust fund to finance this war. That is wrong, and Democrats want a plan to get us back on the right track.

CELEBRATING TWO GREAT EVENTS OF HUMAN ACHIEVEMENT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Washington (Mr. INSLEE) is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. INSLEE. Mr. Speaker, I come to the House today to celebrate 2 great events of human achievement that are both adjoined that we recently experienced, and those achievements are surrounding a fellow named Erik Lindbergh who is a constituent of mine from Indianola, Washington.

Erik's grandfather was Charles Lindbergh, and on May 1 this year, Erik took off from New York in his plane called the New Spirit of St. Louis, a Lancair Columbia 300, and flying alone, 19 hours later, landed, as his grandfather did, at Le Bourget Airport in Paris. A significant event of human achievement, as was his grandfather, Charles Lindbergh's, when he took off in his Ryan N-X-211 and landed in Le Bourget after 33 hours.

This is something our Nation appropriately honors Erik for, his achievement in honoring his grandfather, in making a solo crossing of the North Atlantic in a single engine plane, and for that we honor Erik. We honor his spirit. We honor his achievement, but that is really only part of his story of human achievement, and it is only part of the reason that he flew across the North Atlantic.

Because at age 21, and Erik is now 37, Erik started to develop rheumatoid arthritis that pretty well stove him in. It got so bad that a few years ago he really could not work or fly consistently. He had two artificial knee replacements, and he was having real significant problems, but he had some neighbors in the Puget Sound area working for a company called Immunex and those neighbors at the Immunex Corporation, who are now working with the Amgen Group, were working on a product they wanted to develop to help people with rheumatoid arthritis.

After about $350 million of investment and thousands and thousands of man-hours of a lot of my constituents, some who live on Bainbridge Island where I live, they developed a product called Enbrel. It is a self-injected product. It is what is called a TNF inhibitor. It is a man-made protein, and it works with the immune system to reduce the onset of the symptoms associated with rheumatoid arthritis.

About 2 years ago, Erik started to take Enbrel, and within 2 weeks he noticed a very significant change in his ability to walk around, get up and do the daily functions of life, and it allowed him, and he will tell my colleagues this because I talked to him today, it allowed him to train and work towards his goal of duplicating Charles Lindbergh's, his grandfather, flight across the Atlantic, which he successfully achieved on May 1.

It really is a story of 2 great spirits of human achievement, one his individual, one flying across the Atlantic in a single engine plane, and two, a group, one of people harnessing the creative genius of this country to develop a product like Enbrel to help Erik train for this particular endeavor.

So I would like to honor his achievement that he did; one, to recreate and celebrate the 75th anniversary of his grandfather's great achievement; two, to honor the future of medicine and to give a message of inspiration to the others tonight and today who may be having medical problems, who may be just an invention away of really getting a life change as Erik experienced.

I know that he wants America to be inspired by the achievements of Immunex and his personal achievement so that we can go forward to harness this creative genius, not only in aeronautics but in biotechnology. As we go forward in a way to try to make drugs available to people at an affordable price, we hope that we can find a way also to inspire people to continue this creative effort that my other constituents who live in the Puget Sound area of Seattle, Bothell, where some of the labs are located, they can be honored as well.

I may also note, too, Erik is associated with a group called the X Project which is a challenge project that has a $10 million reward for creative geniuses who can put 3 people in space with a privately funded vehicle and do it 2 weeks in a row, and we really appreciate his efforts to create an incentive to have a prize. As he told me, we have had great aeronautic advances either when we have a war or a prize and he is working to have this prize to give people some incentive to get privately into space.

So, again, I want to really commend Erik for his tremendous personal achievement, my friends in Immunex for helping him to make that achievement, and I hope this inspiration will help others go forward.

EDUCATION TAX CREDITS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of January 3, 2001, the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFFER) is recognized as the designee of the majority leader for half the time remaining until midnight, 40 minutes.

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Speaker, it is late here in Washington, but it is not too late to talk about children, and school children, to be even more specific about it. This is an important issue and an important topic. Education is one of the subject matters that I have focused on in my 6 years here in Congress. It is a topic that I devoted quite a lot of time to as a State legislator in Colorado in the 9 years before I came to Congress, something I take quite personally.

I have got 5 children of my own back home, and those that are of school age are in public school right now, and trying to find a way to improve America's education system has been pretty much a perpetual pursuit of mine and something I believe in very firmly and passionately, and I will be talking tonight about education tax credits, which is a central education issue that will be debated this year before the House of Representatives and the Senate also, and something that is very important to our President and, even more importantly, to people around the country.

I would like to invite any of our colleagues who may be monitoring this proceeding, if they are interested in the topic of education tax credits, I would be happy to yield a little time to them if they are inclined to participate.

Last August, President Bush came to Colorado. He came to my district, as a matter of fact. We went up to the mountains and visited Rocky Mountain National Park, and I had an opportunity to spend a little time with him in the motorcade talking about the issue of education. It is very important to our President, as we all know. It is a topic which he featured prominently in the course of his many campaign issues. It is a topic upon which he built a great record in the State of Texas, and that success, I think, captured the attention of Americans around the country and I believe figured prominently in the successful conclusion of his campaign for election of the presidency of the United States.

In that motorcade, the President and I discussed the topic of education tax credits. We did so because at the time the President's education proposal, the Leave No Child Behind proposal, which became known as H.R. 1, was still pending in the Congress, and to our chagrin, the both of us, the core element of that bill had been taken out by this House and, in fact, it was ripped out of the bill before the bill even had its first hearing. That core element was all about education choice, school choice, leaving at that point really 2 other elements, flexibility to States, and the second element, national testing, intact.

That school choice provision was something that was very important to the President, very important to me. So we talked about tax credits as the next strategy to try to compensate for the failure of the Congress to deliver that core element of the President's proposal for the Nation.

Education tax credits involve reducing the cost associated with paying taxes to those who will make a contribution to education, to those who are willing to invest in America's education system.

□ 2245

And our vision entails a contribution to America's education system in a way that does not discriminate between schools based on who happens to own them.

The vast majority of schools in America are owned by the government and owned in a monopoly structure when it comes to American schooling. That monopoly structure is something that is very heavily guarded, certainly by those who are employed and who are a part of the public education monopoly, but in too many cases that monopoly structure of service delivery abandons children, especially children who need education services the most.

Education tax credits are blind to the ownership of schools and, instead, focus on the children who want and deserve a quality education in America. It, in effect, increases our likelihood as a Federal Government of leaving no child behind, a theme that is emblematic of the President's vision for education and is further amplified by this proposal of education tax credits.

So at the end of that conversation, we renewed our vows together to promote education choice, and this is what the President said. He said, "We have to do this." That was August 14, 2001. And so these words have really inspired me to push hard in this Congress for education tax credits, and I am proud to say that as a result of the President's commitment that day, August 14, 2001, to support our efforts here in the House to move an education tax credit bill, our leadership here, our Speaker, our majority leader, our majority whip, and others, the chairman of our Committee on Education and the Workforce, and the chairman of our Committee on Ways and Means which deals with tax policy, have rallied around these words: "We have to do this."

That is not a statement of intentions with respect to just manipulating the Tax Code or doing something that we believe is important for improving schools. We have to do this because we really have changed the debate here in Washington and have led this country to a dramatic departure over where the education debate has led us over the previous 8 years, those years prior to President Bush taking office. And what I mean by that is that for 8 years, and really many, many years before that, the debates in this House with respect to education centered on the relationship between schools or school buildings, which ultimately came down to a debate and an argument over who owns these schools. So anything that was proposed in Washington or even in the 50 States that would help children who do not attend the government-owned monopoly schools was summarily dismissed by the education establishment here in Washington. And it is a large establishment, let me assure you.

But we are moving beyond all that by beginning to focus on children. And when we do that, if we focus on children first, one can only really come to this conclusion that when it comes to school choice and education tax credits, just as our President said, we have to do this. It is important to understand how education funding in America works today because it is a mammoth bureaucracy that funnels cash to children, and it does so in a very inefficient way.

This chart is really a description of the American education system managed by our government. This little guy at the top here is a carpenter and is representative of hardworking taxpayers around the country. They work hard to earn a living, and the government confiscates a certain portion of their wages in every paycheck as taxation. And these wages, or a portion of the wages, if you live in Colorado, are sent to Utah, from Utah they are sent to Washington, D.C., and they are collected by our Treasury Department. The Treasury Department, we find here, are the first to get their hands on the taxpayers' cash. They distribute these funds based on rules that are established by those of us here in Congress, the politicians, and they are distributed through a variety of programs in the U.S. Department of Education.

There are some 760 different Federal education programs, and that number grows every year. Because regardless of whether Republicans or Democrats are in charge of our government, the size of this Department of Education grows at exponential proportions. So we just keep enacting program after program after program with the expectation and the lofty hope that these programs will help children.

Well, these funds then are distributed through these 760 Federal programs down to the States, typically. Sometimes directly to school districts, but primarily to States. At the State level more politicians, State legislators, redistribute those dollars and mingle them with State funds, and those are distributed through 50 State Departments of Education. Once those funds are distributed through the State Departments of Education, through their several programs, those dollars are given to school districts. Once those dollars go to school districts, there are more politicians who are in charge of redistributing those funds, elected school board members. Those elected school board members distribute those dollars way down here to schools in the district. Those schools are managed, of course, by principals and other administrators, finance people, and business managers. Those dollars get to classrooms and teachers distribute those funds on supplies and books and computers, depending on the perceived needs and priorities set by teachers. And eventually, way down here at the bottom, is the child, who we all say we care about.

The tragedy is, in order for this taxpayer to get his money to that child through the government-owned education system, it is necessary to funnel the dollars all the way through this process. It is a long, cumbersome process, and it is established on a centrally designed basis. I mean, we make these decisions here in Washington, D.C., and we attach strings and red tape to these education funds, and more strings and red tape are attached at the State level, and more restrictions are placed on these dollars at the local level.

So by the time the taxpayer's money gets to the child, what little is left of those dollars is really bound up in all these rules and regulations. And often, the further away we get from Washington, D.C., the less likely these dollars are spent in a way that helps the child. So what we are trying to accomplish here in Washington is to find a mechanism to bypass all of this.

Now, we cannot replace it. We have tried that. We have tried to shrink the size of this bureaucracy, to reduce the red tape, to reduce the rules, to reduce the regulations, to reduce the number of programs. But I concede that it is such a big task. The politics of education are some of the most vicious in America. The special interest groups that have organized around these different agencies are so dramatic and so powerful, they hire lobbyists and so on, and their goal really is to protect the system. The child down at the bottom and the taxpayer here up at the top soon become irrelevant.

So we are going to concede that this system, regardless of who is in charge of the government, is going to grow; and so we are not going to touch this. In fact, we are just resigned to the reality that this is going to continue to get more funding because people are comfortable with this in Washington, and we want to find a way to get around that.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to now yield to my colleague from Michigan, because he has the description of our answer to this.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Well, Mr. Speaker, I think the other thing I want to reinforce with the chart my colleague was holding up is that that system not only exists for education, but we had a remarkable display of how powerful the system is last week when we tried to put more flexibility into the welfare system.

We were going to just move some control within that pyramid, moving control from Health and Human Services in Washington and actually moving some of the decision-making for how the money would be spent down to the State level, to help those people who need help by having decisions made as close to them as possible. And some folks just about shut down the House on the welfare reform debate because they said no way are we going to move decisions from Washington to somewhere else in this pyramid. Heaven forbid we move it closer to the people that actually would understand the kinds of concerns and the issues that people on welfare would have in their local State.

But we do have a proposal, a solution. The first thing that it does is it allows for more money to go into education. So we are not talking about taking some of the money that goes through that system and taking it out of it and redistributing it. As my colleague indicated, that is a sacred cow.

Mr. SCHAFFER. It sure is.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. That money is going to stay there. Matter of fact, it has been growing rapidly. It will probably continue to grow at a pace that is higher than the rate of inflation. And as my colleague well knows, as we have worked together on the subcommittee dealing with oversight on the Committee on Education and the Workforce, up until the last year or so the folks at the Department of Education here in Washington, who get $40 billion per year, could not even get a clean audit. Tells you how much they think about the money.

But we have a better system, or an ancillary or companion system to that bureaucratic model, that bureaucratic model that funnels about $40 billion from Washington, trying to get it down to our children but losing about 30, 35 cents of every dollar, and that is what we call an education scholarship plan, or an education investment plan. This is where the taxpayer, the person making the living and contributing to growing the American economy, the person that really makes America special, the person who goes to work each and every day, that person having the capability of saying our public education system in our community is a great public education system, they have some special needs, and I want to give them some money.

So this person can write that public school, his local public school, where his kids go to school, where he knows the teachers' names, he knows the superintendent, knows the principal, and he says, these guys are really doing a good job, they want some more technology, or they have some special programs, they have some kids where English is a second language and they really need to help those kids, so I am going to give them $1,000. I am going to put it directly into that school, directly to my kids, or my neighbors kids; and I am going to help them out.

So this taxpayer gives them $1,000. And none of it gets siphoned off by bureaucracy. The taxpayer gets a tax credit for $500. So that system, that inverted pyramid the gentleman is holding up, where we start with the dollar from the taxpayer in Washington and it finally gets to the classroom where it has shrunk down to 65 cents, what we are doing here with this model is we are taking the dollar and actually growing it because we are giving a dollar tax credit for $2 of investment in education.

Or this individual can say, you know, I want to put this into an investment scholarship fund, an education scholarship fund where there are kids who, for whatever reason, are going to a different school, maybe another public school, where some States have it if a child goes to a public school that is outside of the geographic boundary where they live, they have to pay tuition to go to that school, so this taxpayer is going to give money to that scholarship fund for public school students who want to go to a school outside their district and they can get a scholarship to help pay their tuition.

This, by the way, is not a revolutionary idea. This has been implemented in a number of different States and it is putting new money into public education. It is putting money into these education investment funds so that kids, some kids will have the opportunity, who choose to do so, can go to private or parochial schools. We are also trying to find a way to make this system work for home schoolers. It is really kind of tough.

Today, it was kind of exciting. You know we talk about some of the kids that we have the opportunity to meet in our jobs. Today, we had a young man from Jenison, Michigan, Calvin McCarter, 4-foot-6, 10-year-old Calvin McCarter, who won the geographic bee today, being able to, I guess, take a look at that globe and identify places that some of us did not even know existed.

He is 10 years old. He is in the fifth grade. He was competing against eighth graders, up to eighth graders. He won the national geographic bee. His parents have chosen to home school him. So here is a home schooler. It is not costing the government any money to educate him. And his parents cannot receive any kind of a financial break to provide the resources and the materials that they would like to use to educate Calvin. Obviously they are doing a great job. Congratulations to Calvin, to his parents, to his older brother who I guess was his first geography teacher, but just an absolute testimony to the diversity of education models that we have in America today. We have got great public schools. We have great private and parochial schools. We also have a growing number of parents and adults who are choosing home schooling. What this system does is provide some kind of an education investment fund, it allows taxpayers to significantly increase the money that is going to education, but when they do that, these education dollars can flow to our public schools, they can flow to our private and parochial schools and can help our home schoolers out.

Mr. SCHAFFER. Here is the proposal right here, the draft resolution. We expect to introduce this in the first, maybe the second week of June when we return from our Memorial Day district work period. There is quite a lot of interest in this legislation already. Again, the way it works is every American who pays taxes will be able to get a tax credit up to $250, a 50 percent credit for every dollar they contribute to a public or private school, a public school directly under the way we have designed it or a scholarship fund that would be used by children to apply for a scholarship so they can attend private schools if they would want. There is also a corporate component that is really very essential in this legislation and that allows corporations to invest in America's education system as well, again with the incentive of a 50 percent tax credit.

The beauty of this from the government's perspective is how we stretch the dollars. When we spend a dollar through the bureaucratic model of education funding, again this is a $40-billion-a-year exercise in Washington. When we spend those $40 billion, only about two-thirds of those dollars ever make it to a child. The rest are lost in here somewhere. So we lose money investing through this system. The children are important, so we invest a lot because we know we are going to lose money, we want to make sure that of the $40 billion that we invest, that some fraction of that makes it down to the child.

But the education tax credit does just the opposite, because it is only a 50 percent tax credit. Let us be frank, it would be nice if it were a bigger tax credit, but 50 percent is what we built into our budget this year, which means for every dollar the government invests in education, every dollar we spend through this tax credit, two dollars end up going to a child somewhere in America.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Really, we get three times the bang for our buck. Because when it goes through the system, it ends up with 60 cents. When you go with the tax credit model, you end up with $2 in your local classroom. Three times the 60, 65 cents, gets you to the two bucks. This is a much more effective way to invest in education.

The other thing is the model of the pyramid that you are outlining; there is a tremendous amount of accountability in there. Because when we in Washington give people some of their money back, we do not trust them to do exactly what they are supposed to do so we put together a whole set of rules and regulations telling these folks exactly how the money should be spent. And then once they spend the money at the local level, they have got to go back up the reporting chain to tell everybody that the thing we got the money for, that is what we actually spent it for. Of course then again the Federal Government will not believe them, so then we will send an auditor back to make sure the reports they sent back to us are exactly right. That is an inefficient model; but as we have said, that model is going to stay.

We want to come up with a companion piece where the accountability becomes the accountability directly between a local school, a scholarship fund and the taxpayer.

So for this individual who is very pleased or has been convinced that his local public school needs some help, writes them the check and finds out 6 months later or 9 months later that they have taken his money and that this fund they have put it in, they have squandered it, he does not write a check the next year.

Mr. SCHAFFER. In the current education model, the bureaucratic model here that is represented in this poster, accountability is really achieved on a sampling basis. The Treasury Department tries to make sure the Department of Education is spending its money the way it is supposed to, so it does audits and it samples certain programs and follows certain dollars. It cannot follow every single one of the $40 billion that are spent here. The U.S. Department of Education has to try to make sure the States are spending money right. They do not really audit every single State. They choose a sample of them, and they sample a certain handful of programs. The States sample programs through the State departments and the schools.

So what happens is only a portion of the funds spent are really held accountable, that we really make sure those dollars reach a student. And even though it is a sample, it is still a nightmare for people involved in a system, especially the lower down this food chain you go. The principals at these schools, my goodness, they have got auditors and people coming in all the time from all these different levels of government to try to make sure the money is spent right, but even that is just a sample.

But with tax credits, the auditing is not a sample, it is not a fraction, it is not just a portion of the dollar spent. It is 100 percent when it comes to the dollars spent. The reason is because rather than one agency spending cash, one body of politicians, the Congress, spending the money, 50 State Governors and legislators, we magnify the accountability by tens of thousands.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. The beauty of this system, and the example that I used is probably wrong because I said if a local public school squanders that money and does not use it wisely, they will not get the check the next time. I think what would happen, I think what we would expect to happen, is because of the close connection that our public schools have to their communities, that when they get these dollars for a specific cause, such as in my hometown they want to rebuild or renovate the performing arts center, I think they could raise the money for it through this process, both through corporate and private gifts. I think they would do a whale of a job working with our local contractors to have that thing come in on budget, we would end up with a beautiful facility, it would be great for the kids and maybe the next year if they do not have something or maybe in 2 years they have got another need, they will go back to our community and when the community sees the investment that they are making in our kids, that they are spending the money wisely, these people will ante up again and they will give them a check the second time.

Mr. SCHAFFER. What you see here in the United States now through the bureaucratic model is the schools that are the worst failures, they get more cash. In fact the worse they do the more money they get, it seems like. This is a terrible model. The reinforcement ought to be just the opposite in my mind. We ought to be rewarding success. Because teachers and principals, administrators, even in the most challenged inner city schools, they can do a good job and they do from time to time. But what happens is when you find a collection of legitimate leaders in a community that are helping the most needy children, they are treated just as all of the others that are not doing a good job. This tax credit model really serves to reinforce those schools that are doing a good job. In fact, the way we have written it, it targets the children who need the help the most, the poorest in America.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. It is exactly what we are finding at the State level. The important thing here at the State level, it shows the tremendous commitment that the American people have to education. Because there is significant money flowing, new money flowing into education through this model. Again, all of our kids are benefiting, kids in public schools are benefiting because people are writing that extra check to their local public school saying, absolutely, this is a worthwhile expenditure, you are doing a great job with our kids. You got some special needs, you got some special promise, we are going to write you a check.

Mr. SCHAFFER. It underscores the contention we have that we bring to this debate and, that is, that Americans will contribute more and they are willing to invest more in America's education system if they are convinced and assured that there will be meaningful results for real children. Today they do not get that assurance. Under the tax credit model, that is an assurance that is delivered to their door, something that they can see in their neighborhood, they can make a difference with their own contributions and it is such a positive idea that the government is willing to reduce the tax burden, the Federal Government, for any individual who will make contributions to the neighborhood schools. That is really what the tax credit bill is all about.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Again, one of the criticisms that may come up, this will be a great program for your middle class suburban areas, for your wealthy school districts and those types of things. But when you take a look at what is happening at the State level, again, it is pretty amazing, and it shows the true character of America, because a tremendous amount of this money that is being driven by tax credits at the State level is not going to the local public school.

There is a significant amount going there, but there are significant numbers of individuals and corporations who are willing to say, "I am going to put that money into a scholarship fund, and I do not know who the beneficiary is going to be." And those scholarships are maybe going to go to, and a lot of them have the funds, have them limited to kids who come from families who are 200 percent of poverty or whatever. So they are willing to put that money into a scholarship fund which may go to a child who lives on the other side of the State, who lives in one of our large urban areas, and they are fully willing to write that check, knowing that that money is going to leave their community, but they are going to help some child out somewhere else in the State, and they may or may not ever know the name of that child. But they know it is an investment to make sure that we do not leave a single child behind in education.

I think that is kind of a common goal that we have in America. When you take a look at the tax credit model, this money is flowing to all of our kids. It is not just going into certain pockets within the State. There is a tremendous amount of opportunity. There is a tremendous amount of interest in making sure that every child has the opportunity to get a good education. And for those kids that are locked into schools where there is a high level of violence or where there is drugs or where there is crime, these kids are the ones that may be applying for a scholarship.

One of the things we like to say is the only thing that a child should be afraid of when they go to school is the test in the afternoon, the exam they are going to have. No child should be forced to go to any school where they feel threatened or where there are drugs in the school or where they believe that they are in an unsafe environment, because we know that kids cannot learn in an unsafe or insecure environment.

Again, what is happening in the States that have these plans in place, dollars are flowing into scholarships that are intended to help those kinds of kids.

Mr. SCHAFFER. The proof is right here in Arizona. There are 6 States that have enacted tax credit plans that are similar to what we have proposed for the whole country, and they are tax credits on State taxes that taxpayers pay in those States. This is one study that was done by two researchers, Carrie Lips and Jennifer Jacoby, of the Arizona plan. It is the first plan and one we talk about a lot that has the greatest track record.

Between 1998, its first year, and the year 2000, this tax credit in Arizona generated $32 million, Mr. Speaker, in new money for Arizona school children. Not only did it generate new money, these are dollars that did not come from the Arizona public schools.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. This is people voluntarily writing a check to their local school district and saying, here, I will take the tax credit. Arizona is 100 percent tax credit. But, again, it is new money, and people are willing to let the schools decide where that money is going to be spent, rather than them spending it on their own discretionary items.

Mr. SCHAFFER. Thirty-two million new dollars in the State of Arizona as this program got up and running between 1998 and 2000. There are more than 30 scholarship organizations that sprung up as a result of this tax credit bill, and those scholarship organizations made it possible for 19,000 students to receive scholarships and go to the schools that they chose, not the schools that the government told them they have to go to or schools not meeting their needs. Instead, these 19,000 students went to schools that they picked, that their parents selected, based on what was most suitable for their children.

Here is the most interesting statistic, because it addresses the criticism that some have of a tax credit proposal. This answers the question of whether these dollars are headed to children who have the greatest need.

In Arizona, according to the study, more than 80 percent of the scholarship recipients were selected on the basis of financial need. That is certainly true in Arizona. It has been studied over and again. It is also true in Pennsylvania, Florida, Illinois, in a handful of other States that have enacted similar legislation, Minnesota, Iowa. Those are the 6.

These tax credit proposals have been attempted in over 30 States throughout the country, and they generate bipartisan support. When we start talking about children, for a change, rather than who wins or loses in the battle over the support for the mighty teachers' union, or the administrators' association and so on, when we ignore all that nonsense and the political benefits of appeasing those groups, and instead focus on trying to help children, as Arizona has done, this is something both parties and both sides of the aisle can rally around. We have seen that in all the States.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. My colleague brings out a critical point. When we are dealing with the funnel, starting with the Federal bureaucracy and running through the Department of Education, running through the States, running through the State Department of Education, what happens is we end up focusing more on the process, the bureaucratic process, than we do on the child at the end of the process and making sure that that child gets the results.

My colleague knows the debates that we go through here. We come up and say, what is the funding formula? What State is going to get what? If you identify a higher number of kids as having disabilities with learning, you get more money. So you actually create sometimes an incentive to label kids in certain ways. And if you label them in certain ways, you get more money, and if you label them in different ways, you get less money. You have got to keep score of what kids fall in what box.

You go through that whole process, and at the end of the day you spend so much time and energy on the process, the forms, the rules and the regulations, you lose sight of the child at the end of the process, and the tax credit model is very, very simple.

Mr. SCHAFFER. The scenario you just described, for those who do not get to see the inside of the political process like we do on the Committee on Education and the Workforce, it is really disgusting sometimes when we start talking about school funding through the bureaucratic model.

What happens is somebody will offer an amendment in the committee to change some aspect of the finance mechanism, and the staff hands out computer runs of all 50 States and how this change will affect the different States and the different programs in each of these States, and every Member of Congress that serves on these committees, as the person who offers the amendment is speaking, we are all shuffling through the graph trying to follow the line. In the State of Colorado does this amendment give my State more money or take money away? That is the basis for the vote. But the kid does not matter. There are no names of children associated with that. There are no faces associated with that. It is just accounting.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. We try to figure out why the student in Colorado gets maybe $650, or the State gets $650 per child, and Michigan gets $635, and some other State maybe gets $675. It is how did this all happen and why does one State get more? We go through this debate.

Then you get the large States coming together to pass an amendment to make sure that the large States with large urban areas, well, we deserve more. Then the rural States try to come together, but they do not have as many votes, because all of Montana has one Representative, so it is pretty hard for them to come out and say even though the cost of education may be more there, it is kind of like, you know, you collect this money and this bureaucratic process tries to reallocate it in somewhat of a fair model. But it is based on political clout, seniority within the system, and the whole debate takes place, focused on the process, forgetting about where the money came from, from the taxpayer, and forgetting about who we are trying to help, the child.

Mr. SCHAFFER. The very first hearing we had on this proposal in Congress was not like that at all. We sat across the committee table looking at real live children and their parents, their grandparents, and real live community and neighborhood activists, who work on school issues. All of a sudden this became a debate about humans, about people, about kids. It was a remarkable exercise.

Let me conclude and summarize by thanking the gentleman from Michigan for joining in this special order, and to thank the President also for making this debate possible.

Again, it was the President of the United States in Colorado on August 14 when we talked about education tax credits, and here is what he said: "We have to do this." And it is as a result of this commitment and promise that he made not only to me in Colorado, but elsewhere throughout the country, that we are here today.

□ 2320

Si it is a debate about which we are quite serious.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ISSA). The Chair would advise the gentleman from Colorado (Mr. SCHAFFER) that he may have up to 20 minutes longer because of the absence of a minority representative at this time. Does the gentleman move for that?

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Speaker, if there is no objection, we would claim the remaining time.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, if my colleague will yield, I just want to go to a different subject for a couple of minutes, and I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I just want to focus on something that I think the gentleman from Colorado and I are both very concerned about as being members of the Committee on Education and the Workforce, but it is also the Committee on Education and the Workforce, so we do a lot of work on oversight and business practices and those types of things.

A few months ago we were all exposed to the fiasco at Enron, and then I could not help but to take a look, just with amazement, taking a look at the front page of the business section of The Washington Post on Tuesday. Here is what is happening in our business community today. We have a large energy company in Michigan that was doing round-tripping. What is round-tripping? You sell energy to somebody and you buy it back immediately for the same price that you sold it to them for, and all it basically does is it allows you to escalate your trading activity. The comment was, no harm, no foul. It is kind of like no harm, no foul; no harm no foul, but no benefit, so if there is no benefit and it did not hurt anyone, why would you even do it? But they did it, and for one of their trading units, it was almost 80 percent of their business. I think that is very questionable.

But then we get to the front page of this business section on Tuesday. Headline: "Ernst & Young ties decline improper," and I think this has to do with the accounting firms doing both accounting and consulting. Then we go down to the follow-on story, the Enron saga, "Anderson tape shows order to clean files." And then here is another one, "Former software executives charged."

Mr. Speaker, so much of our business system and the free market system is based on trust, that the numbers that we get that represent, that have been audited, that tell us about the performance of a company, we trust that the auditors in the company have given us accurate information by which we can make decisions. The buying and selling of bonds and companies going public, there has to be a certain integrity in the process. The reason I bring this up is that I think that these are very disturbing trends.

Mr. SCHAFFER. They sure are.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. The other reason that I bring it up is I was with a group of business people on Monday, and we both know how business people complain about rules and regulations. They said, Are you guys doing anything to lift the burden of rules and regulations? I basically said to them, as long as we continue seeing headlines like this, and I do not know how many of the energy companies were involved in this round-tripping, but I think a number of them; but as long as we keep seeing headlines and stories like this, the role of Congress is probably disappointingly going to have to be to put more rules and regulations in place, rather than fewer, because there are some businesses and some business leaders who have decided that they are going to push the envelope as to what is "technically" legal, although it is clear that the end result is that they are presenting information that does not clearly represent the condition of their business and the volume and the activity or the health of their company at a given time, and I can only deduce that it is being done to deceive investors, customers and shareholders; and it is outrageous.

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is exactly right, and I appreciate the gentleman for raising the issue and bringing that example before us. Because these people who are in the business of deception where their only intent and purpose in some of these business transactions is to deceive and falsify the true picture of business activity, they are not business leaders; they are, in fact, scoundrels. And what they are doing is selling short the capitalist system in America, which is the bedrock of our foundation and liberty and freedom. When they behave in that sort of way, they betray the legitimate entrepreneurs that have made America great.

Those legitimate entrepreneurs are the rule, not the exception. These scoundrels are the exception. It is truly unfortunate, because this is not just about whether certain entrepreneurs and CEOs make cash; it is about making unethical, immoral decisions that threaten the jobs and livelihoods of millions of Americans; and beyond that, they imperil our capitalist system here in our country, something for which many, many Americans have dedicated their lives; and in fact, some have died in the course of preserving and protecting our way of life.

It is a sacred system. It is the hope for the world, really. It has been the American system of capitalism, has been the model of freedom and prosperity that every single other country in the world looks to for leadership and guidance. And when our own entrepreneurs in America, and when the Congress and when the country in general allows these kinds of scoundrels to begin to define capitalism in America, they threaten our liberty, they threaten our republic.

I do not think we can spend enough money, I do not think we can hold enough hearings, I do not think we can throw enough people in jail until everyone who is engaged in these kinds of activities are essentially cleaned off the streets and placed in some place where they are incapacitated and cannot harm our Nation any more.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, what I think it points out also is how fragile the system is, and the fragility of the system is based on the very fact that it is based on trust. As soon as people start abusing that component, it threatens the entire system, and then we become a bureaucratic system, because we cannot trust, we cannot trust the system any more. It becomes trust and verify, and verify means bureaucracy, more cost, more cost in doing business.

I think this Congress and I think we as Republicans need to stand up and really go after it the way the gentleman said, that these individuals, they are the minority, they are grabbing the headlines, but they threaten and imperil the very future of the capitalistic system by these kinds of abuses.

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Speaker, it ultimately comes down to the American citizens themselves and the importance of having an American electorate that is economically literate is absolutely essential and it has been for all of the years of our Nation's history. Because the reality is we here in Congress can hold all the hearings, we can make all the tough speeches like I am doing right now, and it will not make one bit of difference if Americans continue to invest in companies that are, in fact, scams. It will make not one bit of difference unless there is a moral outrage among the American electorate based on their understanding of the need to preserve a capitalist society.

That maybe gets us back to this education issue again, because this country cannot afford to see more children graduating from schools who are indifferent to the functioning of the American economy and do not see any cause for moral outrage when they see, when they see a Nation that is composed of generally honest, hard-working, conscientious business leaders against the absolute scoundrels of American commerce who are really spoiling it for everyone else.

We need to start making consumer choices, investment choices, so companies like the ones you just cited that are in the business of deception in order to pad the profits of CEOs are out of business and are shut down, and cease to exist in America.

We cannot do it alone in Congress. We will certainly try if it comes to that, but it is essential for the American people to play a personal role in the solution to the effort to preserve and maintain our capitalist society.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. I think what will happen in the business world is that individuals drive the business community by the decisions they make as to where they work, where they buy their products from, what they invest in, who they loan their money to. Those same kinds of dynamics are what we are trying to introduce into the education system with this tax credit.

We are going to leave the bureaucratic model in place, allowing a significant portion of money to flow through the bureaucratic process, but what we want to do is open up some level of entrepreneurship in a strengthening of the relationship between educators at the local level and the communities that they serve so they can raise money at the local level for the special needs that communities, those schools, and those kids have.

I am very excited about that. I am also excited about the placard that the gentleman holds up where the President says that we need to do this, because it is very much the complement to H.R. 1 that we passed last year.

The gentleman and I were not all that pleased with H.R. 1. We embraced the concept at the first part, but as the bill went through the process, we found out how powerful that bureaucratic process was. That is where much of the emphasis of H.R. 1 ended up being.

H.R. 1 ends up cleaning up that process, putting more accountability into it, but not empowering parents or local communities in the way that the President articulated in his "leave no child behind" vision, saying that we are going to improve that system, but at the same time, we are going to empower parents and we are going to put more money into the system.

What the tax credits really do is they fill out the President's total agenda on education that he outlined in the year 2000.

Mr. SCHAFFER. The national testing and the new accountability measures in and of themselves, and standing alone, cannot reform schools. They were never proposed or it was never promised that that would be the case. These are diagnostic tools that are important and can be useful, but they are only useful if there is some consequence associated with it.

As that bill passed, it was simply a national testing mechanism. If it has some mandates in it that are going to force States to get into conformity with this new national mandate, then there is some expansion of some Federal programs, but government, government cannot ever be trusted to fix America's schools. Government can be a useful tool if parents are empowered in a marketplace of academic ideas to reform an education system, so with these diagnostic tools the participation of government is important and can be useful, but the necessary element is choice.

Why on earth our country over the years has evolved, or I should say devolved, to the system that it is now of a government-owned, unionized, bureaucratized monopoly is beyond me.

We just talked about the great advantages for hope and liberty that are emblematic of our capitalist economy. If that is true, and I believe it is, then we should be looking for free market solutions where education is concerned.

This testing provision is helpful, it is a useful tool to begin to compare government-owned schools versus a different government-owned school, or maybe a government-owned system versus a private system and so on, but none of that matters until we get choice. This tax credit provision that we proposed, it provides choice in two areas: One, it gives greater liberty to the student as a consumer; and it gives greater liberty to the taxpayer as an investor.

It runs, in principle, with the government system. It is just an alternative model, a different model, and something that I believe can have revolutionary, positive consequences for America's schoolchildren.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. It also gives a great liberty to our public school system, because what it does in our State of Michigan, basically, our public school superintendents who care passionately about the kids in their districts have become beggars to Lansing, our State capital, to get the money to flow into their districts. They are always going to Lansing to get the money.

What this now really does, it empowers them, because so many of the schools in my district have such a loyalty from their constituents and their parents and the kids, but there is no effective way for these people in these communities to put more money into their public schools.

Tax credits will enable them to do that so that, again, there will be some more balance in the system so that these public school superintendents will be able to get some of their money from Lansing, but when they are doing a great job and their test scores come in and say, man, look at how we are doing, in our district some of the public school students have gone to the military academies, and they go there and they are in the top 10 percent of their class at the military academies.

When people see that kind of performance, they are going to say, I am willing to give more money to that superintendent because he or she is doing a great job for our kids, and I think they are going to spend that money wisely.

So it gives a tremendous degree of flexibility, like the gentleman said, to the parents, to the kids, to the taxpayers, but also to the traditional public school system. This should not threaten them because it really will enable them to enhance their relationship with their community and enhance their education programs to take those schools to the next level, as well.

Mr. SCHAFFER. Money follows freedom. That is true almost no matter what we are talking about, whether we are talking about the leadership of countries. If we look around the world, those countries that have a heavy, autocratic, bureaucratic system of rules and no property rights, they have a very difficult time keeping their economies afloat. Those countries that have made the reforms toward property ownership, toward real liberty and freedom for their citizens begin to see capital being created within those countries.

Here in the United States, our capitalist system of competition and freedom has resulted in wealth creation beyond anyone's wildest dreams, and in the history of human civilization. The same is true in education. If we can begin to cut the strings and the red tape and the restrictions that are associated with school money, we will see more of it generated, and that is our goal.

The current system, for all the things that people see in that as beneficial, the fact remains that at the end of the day, for every dollar spent, approximately 60 cents makes it to a child. What we are talking about is a freedom-based model of education tax credits wherein, under our proposal, for every dollar that it costs the government, $2 makes it to a child.

We do not have to be rocket scientists to figure out this is a great bargain for the government, a great bargain for the taxpayer, and it is a better bargain for the student.

For the teacher in the middle of all of this, today they are not treated like professionals; I hate to say it. We expect a lot of them, we call them professionals, but the reality is, the worst teacher in a district in a public school model gets paid the same and on the same terms as the best teacher in a district.

What kind of incentive is that for good teachers, when they see the lazy teacher that is not that committed or maybe burned out? And they are the exception, not the rule, but they exist. But when you see these kinds of teachers that I am describing leaving the school when the bell rings, and yet getting the same pay raise on the same pay scale, it does not take more than 4 or 5 years for a good, hard-working teacher to get burned out on that. It is not a motivating factor.

Education freedom through education tax credits begins to allow teachers to be teaching like the professionals they are, too. If they are attracting students, if they are attracting customers, cash will begin to follow that, and these teachers will begin to be paid according to the professional scale I think they deserve.

Mr. HOEKSTRA. I think it holds great opportunity. It is not a perfect system, and it is not going to fix it by itself. Tax credits are not going to reform the system. But when you can combine the tax credits with H.R. 1, more parental choice, cutting some of the rules and regulations out of the bureaucratic model so that, again, more than a dollar or more than 60 cents can make it into a local school, when we start combining all of those things and we can really get some dynamic or exciting form in all of our schools for all of our kids to make sure our kids are the best-educated kids in the world, that is the goal that we should have.

Until we reach that goal and that objective, we should not stop working.

Mr. SCHAFFER. I spoke to a group of different organizations just this morning about this issue of education tax credits. There were taxpayer organizations there, family organizations, church groups, synagogues represented. It was just a number of organizations that care about education, and they are here in Washington. There must have been about 100 people in the room. They were all very enthusiastic about the proposal. They want to help. They are writing letters to congressmen and making phone calls to the people that they know here.

I think it is important for our colleagues and anyone else who may be monitoring tonight's proceedings to know that this is a very real proposal. It is in play. We do need the voices of Americans to raise up and rally around this education tax credit bill. It is not introduced yet; it will be introduced in a couple of weeks.

I think it is really important for all of us to contact our colleagues here in the Congress, particularly those who serve on the Committee on Ways and Means and in our leadership, and voice in the strongest terms possible support for this freedom-based tax credit proposal to help children and to get it passed.

We need that kind of support and that kind of a campaign around this proposal now, and this special order is just one part of trying to accomplish that. For that, Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for your indulgence in recognizing us tonight. We will be back in 2 weeks to talk about the same topic again.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to:

Mr. LIPINSKI (at the request of Mr. GEPHARDT) for today after 6:00 p.m. on account of a family matter.

Mr. BURTON of Indiana (at the request of Mr. ARMEY) for the week of May 20 on account of personal reasons.

Mrs. EMERSON (at the request of Mr. ARMEY) for today on account of a death in the family.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION REFERRED

A concurrent resolution of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. Con. Res. 115. Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that all workers deserve fair treatment and safe working conditions, and honoring Dolores Huerta for her commitment to the improvement of working conditions for children women, and farm worker families; to the Committee on Education and the Workforce.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. SCHAFFER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 40 minutes p.m.), the House adjourned until Thursday, May 23, 2002, at 10 a.m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 8 of rule XII, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

6981. A letter from the Administrator, Department of Agriculture, transmitting the Department's final rule—Adjustment of Appendices to the Dairy Tariff-Rate Import Quota Licensing Regulation for the 2002 Tariff-Rate Quota Year—received May 9, 2002, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 801(a)(1)(A); to the Committee on Agriculture.

6982. A letter from the Chief, Forest Service, Department of Agriculture, transmitting the Department's final rule—National Forest System Land and Resource Management Planning; Extension of Compliance Deadline (RIN: 0596–AB87) received May 17, 2002, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 801(a)(1)(A); to the Committee on Agriculture.

6983. A letter from the Congressional Review Coordinator, Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, Department of Agriculture, transmitting the Department's final rule—Change in Disease Status of Portugal Because of African Swine Fever [Docket No. 01–026–2] received May 2, 2002, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 801(a)(1)(A); to the Committee on Agriculture.

6984. A letter from the Congressional Review Coordinator, Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, Department of Agriculture, transmitting the Department's final rule—Karnal Bunt; Restrictions on the Use of Grain Originating in a Regulated Area [Docket No. 01–118–1] received May 2, 2002, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 801(a)(1)(A); to the Committee on Agriculture.

6985. EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

REMEMBERING THOSE WHO SERVED

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, every year on Memorial Day, we recognize those who fought for our nation and gave their lives in the name of democracy and freedom. It is a time for us to remember the patriotism they showed as they went into battle, the courage with which they fought, and the ultimate sacrifice they made for our country.

My home state of Michigan has lost many good men and women to war. We lost 18,906 people in World War I, World War II, the Korean War, and the Gulf War. We lost over 2,600 men and women in Vietnam—more people per capita than any other state in the nation. We understand the honor in answering a nation's call to serve, and we know what it means to lose parents, brothers, sisters, and children to battle. As a Vietnam-era veteran, and the son of a WWII veteran, I know in my heart the value of this service.

Our lost soldiers have earned parades, memorial services, and events in their honor. But they have also earned a commitment from their nation that we will never forget their service and will treat all who fight for our country with dignity and respect. We should remember our lost soldiers not just in words, but deeds. We should honor their sacrifices by providing good health care, benefits, and compensation to our veterans who fought alongside them and the current members of our Armed Forces. We should honor them by fulfilling all the promises that we made to them and their families when they answered the call of duty.

As we observe Memorial Day, let us not be content with honoring our soldiers just this one day each year. Let us remember in our hearts the ultimate gift these men and women gave to us. And let us keep in our prayers those men and women who are serving our nation overseas today. In their courage and strength, they set an example for all of us and remind us of what it means to be an American.

VETERANS' AND SURVIVORS' BENEFITS EXPANSION ACT OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. SHEILA JACKSON-LEE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 20, 2002

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise to voice my support for H.R. 4085, the Veterans' Compensation Cost-of-Living Adjustment Act of 2002. Our federal policy towards veterans recognizes the importance of their service to our nation. The Department of Veterans Affairs administers, directly or in conjunction with other federal agencies, programs that provide compensation for disabilities sustained or worsened as a result of active duty in military service. The VA also provides pensions for totally disabled, poor war veterans. Furthermore, the VA offers cash payments for certain categories of dependents and/or survivors. The VA gives free medical care for conditions sustained during military service, and medical care for other conditions, much of which is provided free to low income veterans.

In addition, the Department of Veteran Affairs supplies education, training, rehabilitation, and job placement services to assist veterans upon their return to civilian life. The VA also administers loan guarantees to help them obtain homes. Moreover, the VA provides life insurance to enhance the veteran's financial security for their dependents, and burial assistance to the families of veterans when they die. Thus, the VA does a lot to enhance the lives of our veterans.

The responsibility to care for veterans, their spouses, their survivors and their dependents can last a long time. An example of this is that the last dependent of a Revolutionary War veteran died in 1911, and the last dependent of a veteran of the War of 1812 died in 1946, and the last dependent of a veteran of the Mexican War in 1962. Subsequently, about 650 children and widows of Spanish-American War veterans still receive VA compensation or pensions.

This bill contains provisions that would affect a wide range of veterans' programs, including disability compensation, dependency and indemnity compensation, housing, insurance, and readjustment benefits. This bill also provides an annual cost-of-living increase for veterans' benefits, and expands certain benefits for veterans and their survivors.

Accordingly, this bill directs the Secretary of Veterans Affairs to increase the rates of veterans' disability compensation, as of December 1, 2002. This cost of living increase gives veterans a 2.6% increase. This matches the automatic increases received by most federal benefit programs. This is important, because we should not burden our veterans financially.

The bill also adds additional compensation for dependents, the clothing allowance for certain disabled adult children, and dependency and indemnity compensation for surviving spouses and children.

The CBO estimates that enacting this bill would increase direct spending by $25 million in 2003, $123 million over the 2003–2007 period, and $260 million over the 2003–2012 period, but the CBO estimates that any such outlays would be insignificant because it takes the Department of Veterans Affairs several months to process most benefit claims.

Therefore, I support our veterans and strongly support this bill to increase compensation to our veterans.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO ELE'S PLACE

HON. MIKE ROGERS

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. ROGERS of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor the accomplishments of Ele's Place in Lansing, Michigan, and the caring volunteers and community leaders who have built a remarkable non-profit program for children grieving the loss of a loved one.

Beginning in 1991 with volunteer help and a dream, Ele's Place has worked in borrowed space in a Lansing church basement to reach out to grieving children in a compassionate and caring setting. Today, Ele's Place is a haven where children can learn to heal in trying times.

Ele's Place also offers guidance to parents and adults helping children through the loss of a family member, friends, classmate or other loved one. By helping children and their significant adults deal with grief, Ele's Place has an immeasurable and extended impact on the entire community.

As Ele's Place launches the construction of its very own facility this month, this group of caring professionals and volunteers are poised to expand their enormous impact on the grieving families of the Lansing, Michigan region.

Mr. Speaker, we wish Ele's Place well and congratulate them on this major accomplishment. We are honored to support the work of the dedicated team that makes Ele's Place possible.

HONORING THE DISTINGUISHED PUBLIC SERVICE OF TOMMY MARLIN

HON. BART GORDON

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the outstanding public service of a good friend of mine, Tommy Marlin. Tommy is retiring as the Sumner County executive at the end of his current term, which ends on August 31. He has served as the county's chief executive since 1994, but has served the residents of Sumner County, Tennessee, for 26 years.

Tommy began his career in public service in 1976 after being elected the county's assessor of property. He might have chosen a different career path in light of the fact his brother and nephew were wrestlers in the National Wrestling Association. But Tommy was looking for a more combative arena to showcase his talents, so he chose politics.

I'm glad Tommy entered the field of public service because he has helped me in my own career. He has been a longtime friend and advisor from my very first days in Congress.

In 1988, Tommy was named Overall Outstanding County Official of the Year by the state of Tennessee. As county executive, his door is always open, and his card reads, "It's a pleasure to serve you." One peek around his office and it's evident that his blood runs orange because he is an avid University of Tennessee football fan.

The people of Sumner County could not have asked for a better public servant. His leadership and work ethic will be sorely missed. I cordially congratulate Tommy on his distinguished career as a public servant and wish him and his wife, Nancy, well in their future endeavors.

IN HONOR OF THE HAMTRAMCK FIREFIGHTERS AND THE 5TH ANNUAL ST. FLORIAN MARCH

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, as members of the Hamtramck Firefighters gathered together to celebrate the patron saint of firefighters, St. Florian, they celebrated a feast day cherished by firefighters everywhere. Honoring the patron saint of firefighters, brewers, chimney-sweeps and others, St. Florian is remembered in the Catholic tradition for many miracles, including the extinguishing of a huge fire with a pitcher of water and stopping a town from burning by throwing a single bucket of water on the blaze. Celebrating their fifth consecutive march on Saturday, May 4, 2002, the Hamtramck Firefighters continued the tradition of celebrating and honoring the miracles of St. Florian.

As the city of Hamtramck, Michigan is home to the St. Florian Catholic Church, each year the Hamtramck Firefighters celebrate this feast day by marching from the Hamtramck Firehouse to the St. Florian church for a special celebration of mass. Inviting departments from across the state of Michigan and Ontario, Canada, communities everywhere choose this day to recognize their firefighters and the countless contributions they have made to their communities.

Our great state of Michigan is home to patriotic citizens who give so much to this country everyday. This year is no exception for the Hamtramck Firefighters, who continue to stand together ready to offer relief and assistance to fellow Americans in this time of greatest need. The Hamtramck Firefighters have also chosen this day to celebrate the unity and brotherhood of firefighters, a brotherhood that reaches far beyond religious and ethnic barriers. Their actions reflect the unity and strength of Americans.

Firefighters are an integral part of every community in this nation. As the Hamtramck Firefighters and firefighters everywhere celebrate the holiday commemorating St. Florian, we join them in their tribute and honor the contributions firefighters have made to our great country.

JOBS FOR VETERANS ACT

SPEECH OF

HON. SHEILA JACKSON-LEE

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 20, 2002

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4015, the Jobs for Veterans Act. This bill would provide funds for a new performance incentive awards program to encourage employment, training, and placement programs for veterans. This incentive program would reward those states that excel in aiding our veterans. It would also provide awards to states that made significant progress in this area, even if they were not among the highest performers. The awards would take the form of new contracts for veterans employment programs.

Furthermore, It authorizes $1 million for a Labor Department study of the economic benefit to the United States attributable to providing employment and training services to veterans.

Mr. Speaker, we have all seen the stories of those who have lost their lives so we can live ours. The tragic events of September 11th and the ensuing War on Terror that our brave armed forces are currently fighting should inspire this body to secure the future of our armed forces.

Job training is of paramount importance to our veterans. We ought to provide them with adequate resources so that they may succeed in their future endeavors.

HONORING THE DISTINGUISHED PUBLIC SERVICE OF DOYLE GAINES

HON. BART GORDON

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the outstanding public service of a good friend of mine, Doyle Gaines. Doyle is retiring as the Macon County executive at the end of his current term, which ends on August 31.

Before being elected as the county executive in 1990, he was the Macon County school superintendent for 16 years and spent more than 38 years in the education field as a teacher, coach and administrator. During his impressive career, Doyle received numerous awards and honors for his commitment and leadership.

He has always been an active member of the community, serving on various civic boards and organizations. Doyle's leadership was also instrumental in forming the Cordell Hull Economic Opportunity Corporation, a regional agency in Tennessee dedicated to fighting poverty by helping people be self-sufficient.

Always striving to be well informed and at the forefront of creative initiatives, Doyle has served his community, state and nation with distinction. The people of Macon County and the mid-state region could not have asked for a better public servant. His leadership and work ethic will be sorely missed by the Macon County government. I cordially congratulate Doyle on his distinguished career as a public servant and wish him well in future endeavors.

DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS RESEARCH, EDUCATION, AND BIOTERRORISM PREVENTION ACT OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. CIRO D. RODRIGUEZ

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 20, 2002

Mr. RODRIGUEZ. Mr. Speaker, the events of September 11th and the subsequent anthrax attacks have forced us as a country to reevaluate our ability to respond to chemical, biological, and radiological contingencies. As a member of the House Veterans Affairs Committee (HVAC) Subcommittee on Health, I participated in a hearing to assess the readiness of the Department of Veterans Affairs (DVA) to be a third line responder in the event of a threat of this sort. The news was not good. This is why I am an original co-sponsor of HR 3253, the Emergency Preparedness Research, Education, and Bio-Terrorism Prevention Act of 2002. Through the establishment of National Medical Emergency Preparedness Centers, we would enhance the work that the DVA is already engaged in, and strengthen our national homeland defense efforts.

In recognizing that the DVA is the nation's largest health care system and engages in some of the most promising research, and provides first-rate medical training and education should signal to us all that herein lies an opportunity. Considering all that the DVA already does successfully, I see no reason why they cannot be positioned as a first responder in the event of a biological or chemical attack. With the proper allocation of resources and support, those provided by the passage of HR 3253, many DVA medical centers will be well positioned to provide our country with the necessary support in these crisis situations.

In my district, the 28th Congressional District of Texas, the South Texas Veterans Health Care System, Audie L. Murphy Division, already engages in shared teaching and research arrangements with medical schools and has been able to attract several high-level scientists in fields relevant to bio-chemical and radiological threats. This facility is among the top ten research and development facilities within the DVA and is a tribute to the rewards of collaborative research efforts like those suggested by this legislation.

I am excited about the prospect of National Emergency Preparedness Centers, which would not only engage in research to develop methods of detection, inoculation, and treatment, but also coordinate research with universities and federal agencies in the dissemination of the latest information to healthcare workers at public and private hospitals across the country.

Through the passage and enactment of this measure the DVA will become a key partner in our nation's homeland defense efforts.

RECOGNIZING MIKE MARTEL FOR HIS SERVICE TO NEW HAMPSHIRE RADIO

HON. JOHN E. SUNUNU

OF NEW HAMPSHIRE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. SUNUNU. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize a familiar New Hampshire voice that will soon be absent from Northern New England's airwaves. Dover, New Hampshire's Mike Martel, a member of WOKQ's "Morning Waking Crew," will be retiring on May 31 after making his start in local, New Hampshire radio 30 years ago.

For the past 28 years, Mike has been employed at WOKQ, a 50,000 watt radio station located in Dover, New Hampshire. There, he often began his day well before most of us had even stirred from bed preparing to hit the airwaves at 5 a.m.

Whether hearing Mike from their homes or while making the drive to work, listeners in New Hampshire, Maine, Vermont, Massachusetts, and Canada were sure to have their day brightened with his infectious laugh and "Joke of the day."

Mike's consistent service to his profession and his community stands out as a positive contribution to the field of radio, and is one in which he and his family can certainly take pride. For the rest of us, he will be sadly missed. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to please join me in thanking Mike for his dedication and wishing him the best.

TRIBUTE TO REVEREND DR. ARTHUR J. POINTER, 35TH PASTORAL ANNIVERSARY, METROPOLITAN BAPTIST TABERNACLE

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, as the congregation of the Metropolitan Baptist Tabernacle Church gathered together on Saturday, May 18, 2002, they celebrated the 35th Pastoral Anniversary of Reverend Dr. Arthur J. Pointer. A lifelong leader and devoted pastor, Dr. Pointer has truly demonstrated his commitment to advancing the mission of Metropolitan Baptist Tabernacle across the state of Michigan. As the members and friends of Dr. Pointer gathered to celebrate this special anniversary, they paid tribute to his outstanding years of activism, leadership, and faith.

Dr. Pointer has been preaching the Gospel to the congregation of Metropolitan Baptist Tabernacle, located in Flint, Michigan, since 1967. As his message and ministry has been received, he has shown a special dedication to making a positive difference in the lives of others. Dr. Pointer, a father, grandfather, and great-grandfather, has truly become a leader to all those who know him. "A leader who dared to dream great dreams", Dr. Pointer has truly led his family, congregation, and community to greatness.

Dr. Pointer has been an active force in his community, working with Metropolitan Baptist Tabernacle in organizing several programs and ministries as well as working with many organizations around the state of Michigan. As the former chairman of the Metropolitan Detroit Housing Development Corporation, the Michigan State O.I.C., and the Board for Urban Community Outreach Program, which was initiated at Metropolitan Baptist Tabernacle, his involvement with church and beyond has been an inspiration to all. Even today, Dr. Pointer continues to serve his community well as the President of the Wolverine State Missionary Baptist Convention and as Chairman of the Political Action Committee of Concerned Pastors and the Christian Evangelical Broadcasting Association, Inc. Dr. Pointer's distinguished service and outstanding dedication to improving the lives of people through faith will continue to serve as an example to communities across this nation.

I applaud Dr. Pointer for his leadership, commitment, and service, and I urge my colleagues to join me in saluting him for his exemplary years of faith and service.

IN HONOR OF MR. BERNARD C. WATSON

CHAKA FATTAH

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. FATTAH. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize a truly remarkable man, a person who genuinely exemplifies what it means to be a teacher, mentor, and scholar.

Mr. Bernard C. Watson, a longtime educational and civic leader in Philadelphia, will be this year's recipient of the Philadelphia Award for 2001. The award, which will be presented June 11, honors a resident of the Philadelphia region who does the most to "advance the best and largest interest of the community." The award is complimented with a cash prize of $25,000. Prior recipients of this distinguished award include people such as Sister Mary Scullion, co-founder of Project H.O.M.E., former Mayor Edward Rendell, former City Council President and current mayor John Street, and Rev. Leon Sullivan, a social activist, and educator responsible for leading international efforts to promote nonviolent social and economic change.

Originally from Gary, Indiana, Mr. Watson quickly rose to prominence by becoming a deputy superintendent to Philadelphia public schools in 1967. He was also president of the William Penn Foundation, vice president for academic affairs at Temple University, and vice president of the Pennsylvania Council of the Arts. Considered an expert in his field, Mr. Watson was appointed to a number of educational advisory councils by three different U.S. presidents. He also authored several books, including a memoir, "Colored, Negro, Black: Chasing the American Dream."

Chairman of the Philadelphia Award Trustees, William J. Marrazzo, indicated Mr. Watson was selected from dozens of highly qualified nominees. Chairman Marrazzo commented that Mr. Watson "has been a tireless fighter of ignorance and injustice, a determined advocate for educational excellence, and an energetic supporter of the arts. He is truly one of Philadelphia's treasures."

Mr. Speaker, I couldn't agree more with the Chairman's comments. Mr. Watson's selflessness is evidenced in his words and actions. Educating others, Mr. Watson recently reflected, is the most rewarding aspect of his work. Mr. Watson commented, "Education is how you give people control of their lives. It is a way of giving someone the notion of what you can be as a human being."

TRIBUTE TO HALF HOLLOW HILLS HIGH SCHOOL EAST

HON. STEVE ISRAEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. ISRAEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate the outstanding performance of Half Hollow Hills High School East from Dix Hills, New York in the "We the People . . . The Citizen and the Constitution" competition.

A select group of 24 students from Half Hollow Hills High School East represented the State of New York at the national finals competition in Washington, D.C., May 4–6, 2002. These young people competed with 50 classes from across the nation and demonstrated a remarkable understanding of the ideas and values of American constitutional government.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to recognize the efforts of the student participants. They are: Beth Bernstein, Jacqueline Borgia, Sherri Cohen, Katelyn Del Priore, Lindsey Forur, Brian Ginsberg, Sarah Givner, Seth Glodowski, Jamie Golden, Emily Gustafson, Dustin Kreltzberg, Megan Meagher, Michal Meiler, Jacquelyn O'Neil, Gabriella Pinto, Lindsay Posner, Sarah Rasheed, Inger Reres, Steven Savella, Dennis Schmelzer, Persis Singh, Megan Spector, Stanley Voigt, and Matthew Witko.

These young scholars are taking the Advanced Placement American Government class. Part of their learning experience includes participation in the "We the People" program. These students, through teamwork and dedication, captured the New York State championship after advancing from district and regional levels.

Mr. Speaker, I commend them for balancing this demanding extracurricular activity with the rigors of their daily course work. Furthermore, I commend them for working together as a team to accomplish the goals they set forth.

Mr. Speaker, I also stand to recognize the efforts of the coaches, faculty, parents, and facilitators involved. Specifically, Scott Edwards, the group's coach and AP American Government teacher, who prepared these students through intensive classroom instruction and numerous study sessions after regular school hours. James McCaffrey, the school's principal, contributed to the students' success by providing adequate resources and administrative support. Jane Weber, the district coordinator, made logistical arrangements and directed the group's fundraising efforts. Laura Parker also helped by serving as an assistant coach and chaperone.

Mr. Speaker, I commend these individuals for their unselfish commitment to these students' education.

It is with great pride, Mr. Speaker, that I recognize the efforts and achievements of these outstanding students and individuals and bring their achievements to the attention of this Congress.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. BOB RILEY

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. RILEY. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained for Rollcall No. 171, H. Con. Res. 314, Recognizing the members of AMVETS for their service to the Nation and supporting the goal of AMVETS National Charter Day. Had I been present I would have voted yea.

I was also unavoidably detained for Rollcall No. 172, H. Con. Res. 165, Expressing the sense of the Congress that continual research and education into the cause and cure for fibroid cancer be addressed. Had I been present I would have voted yea.

I was also unavoidably detained for Rollcall No. 173, H. Con. Res. 309, Recognizing the importance of good cervical health and of detecting cervical cancer during its earliest stages. Had I been present I would have voted yea.

CONGRATULATING 46 HIGH SCHOOL ARTISTS

HON. RODNEY P. FRELINGHUYSEN

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to congratulate and honor 46 outstanding high school artists from the 11th Congressional District of New Jersey. Each of these talented students participated in the Annual Congressional Arts Competition, "An Artistic Discovery," and they were recently honored at a reception and exhibition at the Schering Plough Corporation in Madison, New Jersey and their works are exceptional!

Mr. Speaker, I would like to list each of them, their high school, and their contest entries for the official RECORD.

We had 46 students participate. That is a tremendous response and we would very much like to build on that for next year's competition.

This year, Mr. Speaker, the winner of "An Artistic Discovery" was Victor Coghlan from Boonton High School for the work entitled "My Friend Joseph." Second place went to Audrey Kruse from West Morris Mendham High School for "Just Call Me Doty." Third place also from West Morris Mendham High School went to Kelsey Dahlin Dugan for "Three." The Viewer's Choice Award was given to Michael Mule of Boonton High School for "Doorway."

Honorable mentions were awarded to Meredith Klein of Livingston High School for "Tin Foil Study," Christina Tammera from Madison High School for "Soda Shop," Kara Kasch from Morristown High School for "Narcissus," Andres Rivera from Mount Olive High School for "Can I Change Myself If I Try?," Megan Bornstein from Randolph High School for "You Are What You Eat," and a self portrait by Dana Kalfas of Montville High School.

Excellent art work was also submitted by Boonton High School with "Ryan Bradely" by Laura Schafnict, Milissa DiSalvo with "My Sneakers," Michael Mule with "Doorway." Dover High School contributed "Nature at its Best" by Shirley Velasquez, "Ode to Monet" by Megan Franchak, "Falling Into Being" by Leah Huss." Livingston High School submitted a self-portrait by Amy Heuer, Tiffany Wong with "Beware" and "Forbidden Passage" by Johnathan Lee. Madison High School contributed "Travel Photo #46" by James Weber, "City at Sunset" by Adrienne Heller, and "Sunflowers" by Lorriane Ewan. Montville High School submitted, "Italian Breakfast" by Kristina Pennetta, "Laura" by Laura Croce, "The Raven" by Marissa Herrmann and a self-portrait by Dana Kalfas. Morris Knolls High School entered "Appearances can be Deceiving," by Kyle Schuster, "The Devil in Me" by Benjamin Kurfverst, "The Transformation" by Daniel Murphy, and "My Wonderland" by Mercedes Irisarri. Morristown High School offered a self-portrait by Michelle Miller, "Afternoon Light" by Triana Collins, and "Dusk" by Gary Reinhard. Mount Olive High School contributed "Turning Leaves" by Andres Rivera, and untitled works by Timothy Quirino and Ariel Hahn. Randolph High School entered "Digital" by Michel Sun and "Pulsating Time" by Anthony Lee. Ridge High School submitted an untitled work by Seung Eun Lee, "Four Square" by Emily Slapin, "Reflect" by Meghan Musso, and "Genesis" by Gina Caruso. West Essex High School offered "Illuminated" by Sherry Lewkewicz, "Tropical Island" by Julian Osis and untitled works by Elyse Agnello and Francesca Barcia. West Morris Mendham High School entered "The Blue Blowl" and "The self" by Robert Douglas Fritz, III.

Each year the winner of the competition will have an opportunity to travel to our nation's capital to meet Congressional leaders and to mount his or her art work in a special corridor here at the U.S. Capitol, with winners from across the country. Members of Congress and thousands of visitors to the Capitol have a chance to view these works of art firsthand. It is a fantastic reminder that there is vast talent in our young men and women.

Indeed, all of these young artists are winners, and we should be proud of their achievements so early in life.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to join me in congratulating these talented young people from New Jersey's 11th Congressional District.

A TRIBUTE TO MONTEREY COUNTY SUPERIOR COURT JUDGE RICHARD SILVER

HON. SAM FARR

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. FARR of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the life's work of Monterey County Superior Court Judge Richard Silver, 60, whose outstanding legal acumen has enriched society on the Central Coast for more than a quarter of a century.

A graduate of the University of California's Boalt Hall School of Law, Judge Silver began his legal career as a defense lawyer with the Francis Heisler law firm. Among the cases that fueled his rise to prominence in the late 1960s was the Soledad Brothers prison-murder trial.

At my urging, Gov. Jerry Brown appointed Judge Silver to the bench in 1977. Judge Silver became known for his expertise and efficiency in handling civil cases. He developed a case management system that makes civil justice more swift in Monterey County than in almost any other California county.

He also built a reputation for settling tough cases before they went to trial. And he became known for tackling contentious issues ranging from land use disputes to struggles between teachers and school districts.

Among those who founded the Monterey College of Law, Judge Silver remains on its board of directors.

Although he is stepping down from the bench, Judge Silver is likely to remain highly active in the local legal community, by settling disputes out of court as a private judge and arbitrator. For this, all of us who have come to know him over the years on the Central Coast will be very grateful.

TRIBUTE TO REVEREND D. CHARLES HILDRETH, 8TH PASTORAL ANNIVERSARY, GREATER HARVEST MISSIONARY BAPTIST CHURCH

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, as the congregation of Greater Harvest Missionary Baptist Church gathered together on Sunday, May 5, 2002, they celebrated the 8th Pastoral Anniversary of Reverend D. Charles Hildreth. A lifelong leader and devoted pastor, Reverend Hildreth has truly demonstrated his commitment to advancing the mission of the Greater Harvest Church across the state of Michigan. As the members and friends of Reverend Hildreth gathered to celebrate this special anniversary, they paid tribute to his outstanding years of activism, leadership, and faith.

Joining the Greater Harvest Missionary Baptist Church, located in Muskegon Heights, Michigan, Reverend Hildreth has been preaching the Gospel to its congregation since June 10, 1994. As his message and ministry has been received, he has shown a special dedication to making a positive difference in the lives of others. To those who know Reverend Hildreth best, he is "a promoter and student of the blessings that accompany the sacrifices of continuing Christian Education."

With a passion for his community, Reverend Jones has been an active force in educating his community as well as working with the Greater Harvest Church in organizing several programs and ministries. As the First Vice President of the Congress Christian Education of the General Baptist State Convention of Michigan, a member of the Board of Directors of the Urban League of Greater Muskegon, and a lifetime member of the NAACP, his involvement within the church and beyond has been an inspiration to all. Reverend Hildreth's distinguished service and outstanding dedication to improving the lives of people through faith will continue to serve as an example to communities across this nation.

I applaud Reverend Hildreth for his leadership, commitment, and service, and I urge my colleagues to join me in saluting him for his exemplary years of faith and service.

TESTIMONY OF LYDIA LEWIS

HON. PATRICK J. KENNEDY

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island. Mr. Speaker, I wish to insert into the RECORD the testimony of Lydia Lewis of the National Depressive and Manic-Depressive Association before the House Labor-HHS-Education Appropriations Subcommittee.

TESTIMONY OF LYDIA LEWIS, ON BEHALF OF THE NATIONAL DEPRESSIVE AND MANIC-DEPRESSIVE ASSOCIATION—MAY 9, 2002

Good morning Mr. Chairman and members of the Subcommittee. Thank you for the opportunity to testify on federal funding for mental health research for the next fiscal year. My name is Lydia Lewis and I serve as Executive Director of the National Depressive and Manic-Depressive Association (National DMDA).

National DMDA is the nation's largest illness-specific, patient-directed organization. We represent the 20 million American adults living with depression and the additional 2.5 million adults living with bipolar disorder. Part of the mission of National DMDA is to educate the public concerning the nature of depression and bipolar disorder as treatable medical diseases and to advocate for research to eliminate these diseases.

Mr. Chairman, National DMDA is pleased with the Subcommittee's strong commitment to biomedical research. We are grateful for the progress toward doubling the overall NIH budget and we encourage the Subcommittee to complete the doubling plan in this fiscal year. We support the Administration's request for $27.3 billion for the National Institutes of Health (NIH). As you know, this increase of $3.7 billion would complete the final phase of the NIH doubling plan.

Our nation's investment in extramural biomedical research, led by the NIH, yields countless discoveries that facilitate our understanding of the biological basis of disease. This knowledge will help develop improved techniques to prevent, diagnose, treat, cure and eliminate diseases.

RESEARCH

Although bipolar disorder is a biochemical imbalance in the brain, like many mental illnesses, it cannot be identified physiologically. There is no blood test or brain scan, yet. Funding for the NIH, and funding for mental illness in particular, promises great rewards for both individuals who suffer from mental illness and for our nation as a whole.

Evidence underscores the effectiveness of treatment for mental illnesses. Treatment for bipolar disorders has a 65% success rate and major depression has an 80% success rate. Comparatively, a surgical procedure for angioplasty has a 41% success rate. As research yields greater advancements in treating mood disorders and other mental illnesses, we hope to see the treatment success rate soar.

We applaud efforts to advance research on postpartum mental illness through legislative means. The "Melanie Stokes Postpartum Depression Research and Care Act" (H.R. 2380/S. 1535) would direct funds for the specific purpose of NIH research on postpartum depression and postpartum psychosis.

It is estimated that 10 to 20 percent of new mothers experience postpartum depression (PPD). Postpartum psychosis (PPP) affects less than 1 percent of new mothers. While there may be indicators or predispositions for these disorders, researchers do not have sufficient information about the cause and effective treatment.

Employers, employees, the mental health system and the federal government will all benefit from the long term economic savings of early detection and treatment of mental illness. Our nation's investment in increased biomedical research for mental illness will advance this cause.

CO-OCCURRING MENTAL ILLNESS AND SUBSTANCE ABUSE

A high percentage of patients with mental illness also have alcohol and substance abuse problems. Conversely, many individuals with alcohol and substance abuse problems suffer from mental illness. The State mental health systems separate block grant funding for these treatments, one treatment for traditional mental illness and another for alcohol and substance abuse.

More than half of individuals with bipolar disorder or schizophrenia may be alcohol/substance abusers. The rate of alcohol and drug abuse in the general population is approximately 20%; it is 50–60% in people with bipolar disorder. For individuals with mood disorders, drugs of abuse interact differently, potentially causing exponential damage greater than the abusive substance alone.

Medical experts understand it is critical that new patients in treatment for mental illness address any alcohol or substance abuse issues in collaboration with their mental health needs. Integrated treatment by dually trained professionals is critical to the success of either program.

We are encouraged by the Substance Abuse and Mental Health Services Administration (SAMHSA) efforts to study this issue. It is our understanding that SAMHSA will issue a report to Congress by October 17, 2002. We believe it is imperative that SAMHSA integrate treatment programs for these individuals. In addition to an improved quality of life, streamlining the system will eliminate unnecessary and redundant paperwork, saving critical funds for more successful treatment programs.

THE STIGMA OF MENTAL ILLNESS AND HEALTH INSURANCE PARITY

We are delighted with the President's recent commitment to help end the stigma associated with mental illnesses. For far too long, individuals with mental illness have avoided seeking appropriate and critical treatment for fear of the stigmatizing label of mentally ill or have needed to make a choice between food, rent and treatment. For many individuals this is a choice between life and death.

In 1999, suicide was the 11th leading cause of death in the United States. For males, it was the eighth leading cause of death and for young people age 15 to 24, suicide was the third leading cause of death. Suicide outnumbered homicides by 5 to 3 and there were twice as many deaths due to suicide than deaths due to HIV/AIDS.

While these statistics are sobering, we are hopeful that with increased availability of treatment, those numbers can change. While we support essential research on the causes of mental illness, we also support increased access to already existing treatment by passing the "Mental Health Equitable Treatment Act" (H.R. 4066/S. 543).

Individuals who suffer from mental illness should not be required to bear an additional financial burden to treat their illnesses. The discriminatory practice of setting different limits, hospital stays, and deductibles for mental illness is arbitrary, cruel and without medical basis.

We believe that providing mental health coverage is cost effective for all employers. The Congressional Budget Office (CBO) estimated that providing mental health parity as outlined in the Domenici-Wellstone Mental Health Equitable Treatment Act would increase health care costs by less than 1%. Increasing ease and access to treatment will yield healthier, more productive employees. Passing the Mental Health Equitable Treatment Act is a step toward ending discriminatory practices that seek to separate the body from the mind.

Thank you again Mr. Chairman for the opportunity to testify.

IN MEMORY OF JOHN M. McGEE

HON. GENE TAYLOR

OF MISSISSIPPI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. TAYLOR of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to remember the patriotic actions of Mr. John M. McGee, a resident of Pass Christian, Mississippi who passed away on February 23, 2002. As the Korean War unfolded, he enlisted with the U.S Navy and served on the destroyer tender Shenandoah and the destroyer Willard Keith. He was a veteran of the decisive Inchon invasion commanded by General Douglas MacArthur. Mr. McGee earned his college degree in engineering from the Armed Forces Institute. After an honorable discharge from the U.S. Navy, he was certified as a Professional Engineer specializing in petroleum engineering. He then worked for a petroleum-engineering firm in Wyoming, ultimately becoming the petroleum engineer in charge of a five-state office.

In 1966, he accepted a job with the Department of Defense, and conducted operations in Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos, and Thailand until 1969. During his tour of duty in Vietnam, Mr. McGee discovered and exposed extensive corruption in American military operations. His courageous exposure of a million gallons of fuel destined for U.S. Military forces that had been redirected and used by the enemy led to the saving of many American lives. A Senate Sub-Committee chaired by the Honorable Senator William Proxmire of Wisconsin ultimately investigated this conspiracy. This incident and others are memorialized as part of the U.S. CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and in the books, Report from Wasteland—America's Military Industrial Complex, by Senator William Proxmire and The Pentagonists, by A. Earnest Fitzgerald. It is for these devoted actions that we remember Mr. John M. McGee.

ROBERT J. DOLE DEPARTMENT OF VETERANS AFFAIRS MEDICAL AND REGIONAL CENTER

SPEECH OF

HON. TODD TIAHRT

OF KANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 20, 2002

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Speaker, Bob Dole personifies Kansas. He is synonymous with the values that Kansans hold in the highest regard—integrity, respect for community, public service, sacrifice, and patriotism. It is only fitting to name the Wichita VA Center after a man so closely identified with Kansas, American veterans, and the values they share. I rise in support of H.R. 4608 and urge my colleagues to join me in voting for the "Robert J. Dole Department of Veterans Affairs Medical and Regional Office Center Designation Act."

Most Americans know Senator Dole's heroic story: He was born and raised in the Heartland of Russell, Kansas. In 1942, he faithfully responded to his country's call to war, and was critically injured in combat. It took three years and nine operations for him to rehabilitate. He strengthened his injured arm, but had to learn how to write again with his left hand, as the doctors could not rebuild the excessive damage done by the Nazi machine gun fire. After the war and while still completing his law degree at Washburn Municipal University, he began his long and distinguished career in public service. He served as a Kansas state legislator, Russell County attorney, four-time member of the U.S. House of Representatives, a five-time U.S. Senator, the Republican National Committee Chairman, the 1976 Vice-Presidential nominee, and culminated his career as the 1996 Republican Presidential nominee.

But Bob Dole's political achievements provide only a partial measure of the man. Twice elected Majority Leader, Senator Dole served for twelve years, the longest serving Senate leader of the Republican Party. He epitomized President Reagan's immortal words, "The title of Leader is not just a job title; it's a description of the man." Even after he ended his public service, he remains a community leader, engaged in projects such as National World War II Memorial, co-chairing a scholarship fund to aid families of heroes and victims of the 9/11 terrorist attacks, and campaigns for Republican candidates across the country.

I have had the distinct honor of working with and getting to know Bob Dole. In fact, he was one of my best supporters in my first race for Congress against an 18-year incumbent. Not many people other than my family and friends thought we had a chance to win that race—but Senator Dole did. Or at least he did a good job of pretending. I wouldn't have had enough money for television ads in the crucial last week of our successful 1994 campaign were it not for then soon to be Majority leader Bob Dole. When I did get to Congress in 1995, Senator Dole was a mentor and an outstanding example of how a member of Congress should fight for his state while working in the best interests of the country.

It is due to Bob Dole's extraordinary contributions as a leader, a veteran, public servant, and staunch defender of national defense that the designation of the Wichita VA Center as the Robert J. Dole Department of Veterans Affairs Medical and Regional Center is so appropriate. Please join me in a congressional salute to this great American patriot.

TRIBUTE TO REV. DR. STERLING LEE JONES 32ND PASTORAL ANNIVERSARY MOUNT ZION MISSIONARY BAPTIST CHURCH

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, as the congregation of Mount Zion Missionary Baptist Church gathered together on Sunday, April 28, 2002, they celebrated the 32nd Pastoral Anniversary of Rev. Dr. Sterling Lee Jones. A lifelong leader and devoted pastor, Rev. Jones has truly demonstrated his commitment to advancing the mission of Mount Zion across southeastern Michigan. As the members and friends of Rev. Jones gathered to celebrate this special anniversary, they paid tribute to his outstanding years of activism, leadership, and faith.

Preaching the Gospel for over 37 years, Rev. Jones has led the congregation of Mount Zion Missionary Baptist Church for 32 glorious years. As his message and ministry has been received throughout the United States, he has shown a special dedication to making a positive difference in the lives of others. To those who know Rev. Jones best, "to hear Pastor Jones preach the gospel of Christ, to hear him teach the gospel of Christ and to hear him sing the gospel of Christ, is to know that he is chosen by Christ and is anointed by Him to do his will."

With a passion for learning and the firm belief in education, and as the key to advancement, Rev. Jones has been an active force in educating his community as well as providing outreach services for those in need. Working on projects like the Youth Department, and the "Artie Lee Bins-Jones Honor Roll", Rev. Jones has organized many programs for the youth and implemented a program encouraging higher education through annual tours to colleges and universities throughout the South. Building a multi-million dollar edifice and with plans to build a senior citizens complex and a gym for the youth, Rev. Jones's distinguished service and outstanding dedication to improving the lives of people through faith will continue to serve as an example to communities across this nation.

I applaud Rev. Jones for his leadership, commitment, and service, and I urge my colleagues to join me in saluting him for his exemplary years of faith and service.

GULFSTREAM GOODWILL INDUSTRIES 35TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. MARK FOLEY

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a special organization that helps disabled and other disadvantaged members of our community.

In 1902, a Methodist minister from Boston, Reverend Edgar J. Helms, started a movement to help people with disabilities and other barriers to employment become working members of our community.

Throughout 2002, Goodwill Industries is celebrating its 100th anniversary making amazing progress by helping those in need.

As a former board member and President of the Gulfstream Goodwill, which is celebrating its 35th anniversary, I was able to witness first hand the great work Goodwill does for our community.

Like the national organization, Gulfstream Goodwill Industries serves disabled members of our community by helping them become integral and productive working members. Gulfstream's mission—to empower people through work—ensures those in need are offered working opportunities and the possibility of self-sufficiency and independence.

Mr. Speaker, I wish Goodwill and Gulfstream Goodwill the happiest of anniversaries. May its success continue and strive for perfection like it has over the past century.

IN HONOR OF THE RECIPIENTS OF DELAWARE'S FOSTER PARENTS OF THE YEAR AWARD, LAWRENCE AND NORISA JACOBS

HON. MICHAEL N. CASTLE

OF DELAWARE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the Delaware Foster Parents of the Year, Lawrence and Norisa Jacobs of Georgetown, Delaware. Through their commitment to caring for children, they have welcomed eleven foster children into their home since 1997. Along with their two birth children and six current foster children, their home is a welcome, and active, atmosphere for the challenges of a family of ten.

Foster parents add stability to a child's life which leads to fewer emotional, behavioral and social problems for children that may not have otherwise had the necessary family love and direction. These children deserve the best chance we can give them, and the Jacobs have proven their dedication to giving all of their children the optimal chance to develop into emotionally healthy adults.

Mr. Speaker, through the years, the Jacobs have lovingly and unselfishly contributed every day to the lives of their children. It is appropriate that we take a moment to honor them.

The contributions of Mr. and Mrs. Jacobs are undeniably worthy of recognition and cannot be commended enough. I am proud to stand here today recognizing them as not only Delaware's Foster Parents of the Year, but also as nominees for National Foster Parents of the Year.

VETERANS' MAJOR MEDICAL FACILITIES CONSTRUCTION ACT OF 2002

SPEECH OF

HON. NICK SMITH

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Monday, May 20, 2002

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 4514, the Veterans' Major Medical Facility Construction Act, H.R. 4015, the Jobs for Veterans Act, and H.R. 4085, the Veterans Compensation Cost-of-Living Adjustment Act.

Next week, millions of Americans will take off and gather together with family and friends to pay tribute to the men and women of our armed forces and their loved ones who sacrificed so much to defend our precious liberties. Well over 1 million men and women have given their lives in service to our country. These people answered their country's call to serve—in the Civil War, the Spanish-American War, the First and Second World Wars, Korea, Vietnam, Desert Storm, Bosnia, Operation Enduring Freedom, and in many small, but important military actions around the globe. For their sacrifice, they deserve our most profound respect and gratitude.

It is the willingness of citizens then and now taking individual responsibility in our Nation's defense that is the ultimate guarantee of our security and freedom. The terrorists who perpetrated the attacks of September 11 underestimated us. Since September 11, the Nation has not fallen apart, it has pulled together, confident in our traditions of freedom, tolerance, and democracy.

Today, our armed forces are in the field defending our liberties against the terrorist threat. We have the finest fighting force in the world, and they are doing a tremendous job. At home our first responders—firefighters, emergency medical and ambulance services, law enforcement, and National Guard—are being called upon for more homeland security. I am confident that we will prevail and become even stronger as a Nation.

This Memorial Day, as we celebrate those who gave their lives, we should also pause to consider the veterans among us who have contributed so much and who are such an important part of our communities. As one who had a brother killed in the line of duty in Asia and as a former Air Force officer myself, I understand the sacrifices that our service men and women and their families make.

The bills we are voting on today are designed to increase employment opportunities for veterans, improve VA facilities, and provide needed cost-of-living increases for disability compensation. There is more that we need to do to improve the way the VA does business. We need to ensure that veterans' disability claims are processed quickly and accurately, that health care delivery is improved by coordinating the medical care systems of VA and the Department of Defense, and that resources are focused on treating disabled and low-income veterans. Under the leadership of President Bush and VA Secretary Principi, I believe we are going to make significant improvements in the delivery of veterans benefits.

Over the years, our military veterans have kept faith with their country in times of need. With these bills, we will be helping to keep faith with them. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

HONORING MR. JARRED M. LINDLEY

HON. SAM GRAVES

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. GRAVES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize the dedication and commitment of Mr. Jarred M. Lindley.

Mr. Lindley is a recent graduate of Savannah High School in Savannah, Missouri, who had perfect attendance throughout his 13 Years of public education. Remarkably, Mr. Lindley also was not tardy from any event, even once, in those 13 years. Mr. Lindley, set this goal when he was an elementary student and would not take credit for his accomplishment until the final day of his senior year was complete. I am honored to have Mr. Lindley living in the Sixth Congressional District of Missouri.

Along with Jarred Lindley's parents, Sherry and Michael, family, and friends, I take pride in what he has accomplished.

I commend Mr. Lindley for his dedication in reaching his perfect attendence record. Additionally, he is graduating in the top five percent of his class, and is a member of the gold team, honor society, band, as well as holding down a part time job after school.

I again want to congratulate Mr. Jarred Lindley for his accomplishment. He makes the Sixth District and All Americans very proud.

TRIBUTE TO THE 30TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE INTERNATIONAL VISITORS COUNCIL

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, the International Visitors Council of Metropolitan Detroit is a non-profit organization whose purpose is to present the unique culture of Metro Detroit to distinguished visitors from around the world through its social, economic, and educational diversity. This year, as the International Visitors Council held their annual Gala Celebration, they also celebrated their 30th Anniversary on May 17, 2002.

Since 1972, the International Visitors Council of Metropolitan Detroit has demonstrated distinguished service and leadership in establishing cross-culture relations and building solid networks of communication at the personal and professional level. As "citizen diplomats" faithfully committed to the mission of the International Visitors Council, volunteers dedicate their time and talents to hosting meetings, fundraisers and receptions for Detroit citizens and honorable guests from around the world. Opening their homes and hearts to international visitors from Europe, Asia and Africa, they take it upon themselves to ensure that visitors leave Detroit with a positive impression of the city and its citizenry.

Creating dialogue and building bridges of understanding is the only way to ensure the advancement of communities built on respect and justice. Today the International Visitors Council of Metropolitan Detroit is one of 96 councils in the nationwide network of the National Council of International Visitors, welcoming over 12,000 international visitors during the last three decades. The hard work and dedication of the International Visitors Council of Detroit to achieving its mission of building solid friendships and improving relations between the United States and other countries is truly exceptional, and encourages others to reach their level of activism and understanding.

I applaud the International Visitors Council of Metropolitan Detroit on their leadership and commitment, and I congratulate them on 30 outstanding years of dedication and service. I urge my colleagues to join me in saluting them for their exemplary years of public service.

KENT CITY QUIZ BOWL WINS STATE CHAMPIONSHIP

HON. VERNON J. EHLERS

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to honor the 2002 Kent City Community High School Quiz Bowl team for winning the 2002 Michigan Class "C & D" Quiz Bowl Championship with a perfect 6–0 record during the two-day state tournament. This marks the second time in three years that the Kent City Eagles have claimed the championship.

Members of the 2002 State Championship team include: Mike Cheyne, Jerry Urban, John Hersey, A. J. DeGroot, Josh Whitehead, Joe Postema, Jared Brown, Andy Lerch, Matt Nixon, Brandon Stout, Robert Nyblad, Justin Waller, Dan Ondersma and Isaac Owens. Government teacher Sid Smith, who serves as the coach of this talented squad, should also be commended for his outstanding work in preparing the students for competition.

On the way to their second championship, the Eagles compiled a remarkable 46–7 record, often against much larger schools. To illustrate how much the Eagles dominated most of their competition throughout the year, I note that six of their seven losses were to Class "A" Quiz Bowl Champion Detroit Catholic Central, Class "B" Champion Detroit Country Day and Class "A" runner-up, Hartland.

The team will now compete on the national level as they take part in the National Academic Quiz Tournament in Austin, Texas on June 8 and 9 and the Partnership for Academic Excellence Nationals in Washington, D.C., on June 15 and 16. I have no doubt that these outstanding young men will serve as wonderful representatives for Kent City, the State of Michigan, and the Third Congressional District.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in honoring these students who have put Kent City, Michigan on the Quiz Bowl map. Congratulations on an outstanding season, and I wish you continued success in the upcoming national competitions!

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. MAURICE D. HINCHEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. HINCHEY. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained in New York on May 20, 2002, and missed rollcall votes 171, 172, and 173. Had I been present, I would have voted "aye" on rollcall 171, "aye" on rollcall 172, and "aye" on rollcall 173.

COMMENDING HON. RAFE HEATH CLOE FOR PUBLIC SERVICE

HON. ROBERT B. ADERHOLT

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. ADERHOLT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commemorate the distinguished career of the Honorable Rafe Heath Cloe, United States Administrative Law Judge for the Office of Hearings and Appeals, Social Security Administration, Birmingham, AL. Judge Cloe served for more than 15 years as a senior trial attorney for the Federal Trade Commission in Washington, D.C. He has served in the United States Air Force, active and reserve duty, retiring as Colonel with the Office of the Judge Advocate General, and also serving as an instructor at the Air Force Law School at Maxwell Air Force Base in Montgomery, Alabama. On February 22,1982, he was appointed as the United States Administrative Law Judge for the Office of Hearings and Appeals of the Social Security Administration and has served in that capacity in Birmingham, AL since 1982.

On June 3, 2002, Judge Cloe will retire after 42 years of distinguished service to the people of the United States. His commitment to protecting the Constitutional rights of the citizens of this country is exemplary and unquestioned. He is worthy of commendation for his commitment to public service.

EXPRESSING GRATITUDE FOR THE EFFORTS TO RESTORE THE WOLF HOUSE IN MOUNTAIN HOME, ARKANSAS

HON. JOHN BOOZMAN

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. BOOZMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my gratitude for the efforts of all those involved in restoring the historic Wolf House in Mountain Home, Arkansas.

The newly restored Wolf House will have its grand reopening on May 18th. Built in 1829 by Jacob Wolf, the building served as the county courthouse for what was then Izard County, Arkansas and now provides a good glimpse into how life was in that era.

Nearly two years ago, architect Tommy Jameson led a team of craftsmen in the restoration of the 180 year-old structure. Working closely with Preservation Consultant Joan Gould, they strove to maintain historical accuracy of the project, restoring the oldest public building in Arkansas to its original form.

The restoration effort leaves the state with a building that purely interprets how structures might have appeared in the early 19th century Ozarks.

The Wolf House is now open for self-directed walking tours and I encourage my colleagues to visit this historic site if they are ever in Baxter County.

Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to praise the hard work of everyone involved in the restoration of the Wolf House.

IN HONOR OF THE 2002 DRAGON BOAT FESTIVAL

HON. JAMES P. MORAN

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. MORAN of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to shine a spotlight on the 2002 Washington, D.C. Dragon Boat Festival, being held this upcoming Memorial Day weekend.

Beginning 2000 years ago in China, dragon boat racing continues to be popular in many parts of the world, especially in Taiwan. Dragon boat racing displays a unique aspect of Taiwanese history, culture and tradition. This colorful and exciting event showcases one aspect in the vast array of the region's cultural diversity and will attract a multitude of spectators to the Washington area.

Over forty teams will participate in the race, held on the Potomac River Saturday May 25th and Sunday May 26th, including those from the D.C. Police Department, the Harbor Patrol Officers, and even one for Congressional Staff. Through the efforts of numerous Taiwanese organizations, eight magnificently painted 45-foot long dragon boats were donated to be used in the competition.

I send my congratulations to the distinguished members of the 2002 Washington D.C. Dragon Boat Festival Committee, especially to the three honorary chairpersons: Mayor Anthony A. Williams, Chairwoman Linda Cropp and Representative C.J. Chen of the Taipei Economic Council. Also many special thanks should be given to Mrs. Yolanda Chen and all the cosponsors under her leadership. They have spent a lot of time and effort to bring this spectacular event to the Greater Washington area.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to announce what a great source of pride this event will provide to the local Taiwanese community. They are an integral part of our society and I am pleased that the 2002 Washington, D.C. Dragon Boat Festival helps to highlight the contributions they have continuously brought to the region over the years.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. FRANK MASCARA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. MASCARA. Mr. Speaker, on May 16, 2002, I was absent for personal reasons and missed rollcall votes numbered 167, 168, 169, and 170. For the record, had I been present I would have voted yea, yea, yea, and nay, respectively.

RECOGNITION OF EILEEN KAVANAGH

HON. VITO FOSSELLA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I hereby request that these comments be placed in the appropriate part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

This past fall, the Staten Island Advance, the Staten Island Children's Campaign and my office joined together to raise money for families of victims of the World Trade Center tragedy. We established a non-profit named The Staten Island September 11th Fund and were successful in raising more than $1.2 million for families of victims from Staten Island.

The person who made the whole program work, the one who dealt with every family and every single application received, was Eileen Kavanagh.

Without relinquishing or compromising any of her myriad daily duties serving as executive secretary to the editor of the Staten Island Advance, she took on for six months the tremendous amount of work associated with The Staten Island September 11th Fund. That work included reviewing and processing the more than 200 applications received, handling all inquiries concerning benefits and donations and serving as the liaison between the Fund and the bank handling the account. This work included receiving and creating computerized records of thousands of donations totaling almost $1.3 million, sending written acknowledgments to all donors, making necessary bank deposits and, in the end, writing the almost 200 checks that the fund dispensed.

Perhaps most importantly, she showed the ability to balance both the sensitivity needed to deal with families of the September 11th attacks and the objectivity needed to reflect the strict requirements established for the administration of the Fund. From trying to explain the fund to a widow who lost her firefighter husband and who is struggling to raise their children alone and at the same time consoling and empathizing with her to explaining it to a woman who lost her father and is doing everything she can to help her mother to accepting thousands of donations from

To sum it all up, Eileen Kavanagh was able to do all of this with accuracy, understanding and compassion. She made the very difficult situation for many family members seeking financial assistance a lot easier for them because of that compassion. Sometimes, a family member of a victim just wants to hear a friendly voice on the other end—to talk—to be understood and listened to—Eileen did this gracefully. She did not do it for any monetary compensation, or for public attention, but simply to help her friends, neighbors—fellow Staten Islanders who were so devastated by the tragic events of September 11th. She provides us with an excellent example of the goodness that truly does exist in people—a goodness that we should all strive to share and attain.

Staten Island suffered a great loss on September 11th. Hundreds of men and women were lost—husbands, wives, mothers, fathers, sons, daughters, aunts, uncles, grandparents, cousins, friends, neighbors and loved ones. All of our lives were forever changed—but the deeds of people like Eileen have eased the burden a bit—and have given us all a little more strength to carry on and hope for the future.

RECOGNIZING THE 100TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ATHELSTANE LODGE #839 FREE AND ACCEPTED MASONS

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call to the attention of our colleagues and the American people the achievements of the Brothers of the Athelstane Lodge #839 Free and Accepted Masons of Pearl River, New York, on their 100th anniversary of fraternity and service to their community. The Athelstane Lodge has continued the Masonic tradition of promoting "morality in which all men agree, that is, to be good men and true."

The Masons, officially titled the Free and Accepted Masons, are one of the world's oldest and largest fraternal organizations, dating back to its foundation in England in the early 1700's. Throughout history the Masons have sought to bring men together of all race, religions and political ideology under the ideas of charity, equality, morality and service to God. Today the Masons have millions of members worldwide, including more than 2.5 million in the United States. They have earned a reputation as highly respected businessmen, ministers and politicians. Such distinguished men as American statesman Benjamin Franklin, Composer Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, French philosopher Voltaire and U.S. President George Washington have all been Brothers in the Masonic order.

My own association as a Brother with my fellow Masons has been a great influence on me throughout my career and in public life. Their moral values and ethical code have been an immeasurable help to guide me in making fair and just decisions in my responsibilities as a Member of this chamber.

Mr. Speaker, hopefully the Athelstane Lodge will continue its good works as a model organization and will continue to help those in need as well as continue to be an exemplary example of fraternal service to our communities for another 100 years.

TRIBUTE TO CAPTAIN DARRYL A. KELLY

HON. JAMES E. CLYBURN

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. CLYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Captain Darryl A. Kelly of Society Hill, South Carolina, whose dedication to his duties as a national guardsman earned him the honor of being the first African American from South Carolina to receive the General Douglas MacArthur Leadership Award.

A Society Hill native, Captain Kelly received a Bachelor of Arts in Business Administration from Coker College and a Master's degree in Public Administration from Troy State University. He joined the National Guard in 1989, after seven years active duty in the Army, and commands Company "A", 151st Signal Battalion in Laurens, South Carolina. Captain Kelly is also a South Carolina Highway Patrol sergeant with thirteen years experience.

Captain Kelly will receive the General Douglas MacArthur Leadership Award on May 22, 2002, a distinction bestowed upon only seven Army National Guardsmen in the nation each year. He automatically qualified last month when he won the General James C. Dozier award, which recognizes the South Carolina National Guard's most outstanding company officer for leadership and quality of service. Captain Kelly is not only the first African American from South Carolina to receive the MacArthur Leadership award, but only the second South Carolinian to have this honor bestowed upon him.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that you and my colleagues join me in honoring Captain Darryl A. Kelly, a dedicated guardsman whose service and leadership should be commended. I congratulate him on his receipt of the General Douglas MacArthur Leadership Award and wish him good luck and Godspeed in his future endeavors.

IN RECOGNITION OF MICHAEL LAHEY

HON. JAMES P. McGOVERN

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize IRS Special Agent in Charge of Criminal Investigation, Michael Lahey, for his promotion to Director of the Review and Program Evaluation Section at IRS Headquarters in Washington, D.C.

Mr. Lahey began his career with the Internal Revenue Service in 1982 as a Special Agent in Miami, Florida. Through his dedication and hard work, Mr. Lahey was selected as the Branch Chief in Boston in 1997. He held that position until his selection as Special Agent in Charge for the Boston Field office in 2000.

As Special Agent in Charge for New England, his team of 140 IRS employees followed the money trail through a wide range of financial investigations. His team has examined cases involving tax evasion, narcotics trafficking, money laundering, public corruption, as well as healthcare and insurance fraud. As a direct result of asset forfeitures from IRS drug trafficking and organized crime cases, the people of Massachusetts have benefited greatly from the substantial sums that have been reinvested in state and local police departments during his tenure in the Boston office.

Mr. Lahey, a resident of Shrewsbury, Massachusetts, has been a strong supporter of sports programs for youngsters in his community. He has served as the Director of Minor League Baseball for the Little League and has coached for several years.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that you join me in congratulating Michael Lahey for his outstanding service with the Internal Revenue Service. I wish him the best of luck in his new position.

BOB STUMP NATIONAL DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 2003

SPEECH OF

HON. PETER A. DeFAZIO

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, May 16, 2002

The House in Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union had under consideration the bill (H.R. 4546) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 2003 for military activities of the Department of Defense, and for military construction, to prescribe military personnel strengths for fiscal year 2003, and for other purposes;

Mr. DEFAZIO. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to continue my remarks about H.R. 4546, the fiscal year 2003 Department of Defense authorization act. In my previous remarks, I criticized the House Rules Committee for blocking all amendments, including five I drafted, that would have allowed the House to debate the wisdom of various weapons systems. I also detailed the rationale for my amendments to eliminate the Crusader artillery system.

In my remarks today, I want to discuss another weapons system—the Army's Comanche helicopter—that is behind schedule, over budget, and unable to meet critical performance requirements.

In at least eight reports since 1986, the GAO has raised concerns about the Army's effort to develop its next generation light helicopter, now known as the Comanche.

Further, the Army itself has recognized problems with the Comanche program, which has been restructured five times since its inception. Previous restructurings have significantly delayed the development schedule, extended the production schedule, and reduced planned quantities.

I personally have been raising red flags about the Comanche program since the late 1990s. The first GAO report I requested on the Comanche was released in August 1999. This report identified a number of cost, quality control, and performance concerns about the Comanche program.

An updated report I requested from the GAO was released in June 2001. This report concluded that the concerns raised in the August 1999 report had only gotten worse.

It is not just the GAO that has raised concerns. The Director of Operational Test and Evaluation has also been critical of the Comanche.

I was pleased to see the House Armed Services Committee imposed a few conditions on the Army's Comanche helicopter program in H.R. 4546.

One of the conditions, a requirement that the Army reassess the cost and timeline of the Comanche program, is similar to what I proposed in an amendment last year.

The other condition, an annual report by the DOD Inspector General, is a useful step in providing for constant, independent oversight of the program.

However, I am concerned that the Committee did not go quite far enough in protecting taxpayers from runaway costs for a program GAO and others have consistently identified as failing to meet testing and performance goals.

The amendment I offered would have prohibited the Pentagon from awarding contracts for low rate initial production (LRIP) until the Secretary of Defense, in consultation with the Director of Operational Test and Evaluation, certified that the testing program has been rigorous enough to determine the program performs as expected in an operational environment, in other words, not just in computer simulation or laboratory tests. The amendment also required that the Comanche achieve key performance standards before contracts for LRIP could be awarded.

According to the June 2001 GAO report, a decision on whether to move forward with low rate initial production was expected in June 2005.

It is my understanding that in the year since the GAO report, the Comanche program has fallen even further behind schedule, and a LRIP decision now may not occur until 2008.

Some might argue that my amendment, therefore, was premature. I would argue that given the repeated mismanagement of the Comanche program, Congress must send the unmistakable message that the program will not advance toward production until timing, cost, quality, and performance concerns are all addressed to our satisfaction. My amendment would have sent that message.

Defense contractors push hard to get to LRIP decisions because, once they are over that hump, they know it is nearly impossible to kill the program. That is why Congress needed to signal now that we have no intention of allowing the LRIP decision from being made until we are fully satisfied the Comanche will work as advertised and will be built within reasonable cost and time constraints.

I'd like to run down a few of the specific problems with the Comanche.

In August 1999, the GAO warned the Comanche faced significant risks of cost overruns, scheduling delays, and degraded performance primarily because the Army decided to (1) begin engineering and manufacturing development before key technologies had matured, (2) compress the flight-testing schedule, which increases concurrency between development and operational testing, and (3) begin initial production before completing operational testing.

In its most recent report, issued in June 2001, the GAO noted the problems identified in the August 1999 report have gotten worse. The GAO cites a range of concerns including understated acquisition program cost estimates; ambitious flight test schedules with substantial concurrency in test events; delays in another DOD program, the Joint Strike Fighter (JSF), which had been counted on to develop a critical component of the aircraft; inadequate facilities to fully test and integrate system hardware and software; and considerable growth in aircraft weight.

The program's total development and production cost estimate has increased by almost $4.8 billion—from $43.3 billion to $48.1 billion. This includes a $75 million increase in development costs and a nearly $4.8 billion increase in production costs. As the GAO notes, these costs are likely to further escalate.

DOD's most recent cost estimate for the Comanche was done in April 2000. At that time, DOD's Cost Analysis Improvement Group estimated the Comanche would need an additional $180 million for its engineering and manufacturing development phase. However, this money was not included in the April 2000 baseline.

Further, in January 2001, DOD added about $504 million in funding to the Comanche program over the next few years. About $84 million was earmarked for RDT&E, the remaining $420 million was for production. These additional funds have not yet been reflected in the program's official cost estimates.

The Comanche program office also maintains a list of unfunded requirements that total $68 million. According to the GAO, "The program office acknowledges that, unless additional funds are obtained, some yet-to-be-determined program performance requirements could be impacted."

The Comanche is also missing testing and production targets.

The GAO is particularly critical of the Comanche development and testing schedule, in which many crucial events come close together or concurrently in the late stages. The GAO specifically writes, "We have reported that when development work and low-rate initial production (LRIP) are done concurrently, significant schedule delays that cause cost increases and other problems are not uncommon in early production. Also, production processes are often not able to consistently yield output of high quality when full-rate production begins."

Before entering the LRIP stage, previous GAO work has shown successful commercial firms already know that (1) technologies match customer requirements; that is, they can fit onto a product and function as expected, (2) the product's design meets performance requirements, and (3) the product can be produced within cost, schedule, and quality targets. According to GAO, "It is unlikely the Army will have this level of knowledge about Comanche" by the June 2005 LRIP decision date.

Specifically, the GAO notes "several critical subsystems—to be included in the mission equipment package—may not be available until development flight-testing is well underway. These subsystems are very complex state-of-the-art systems that have not been demonstrated on a helicopter platform like Comanche." The GAO goes on to warn "the Army's schedule for developing and testing software for the Comanche may not be completed prior to the full-rate production decision."

Failure to correct deficiencies prior to LRIP could lead to costly retrofits and repairs to aircraft already produced. As GAO wrote "To produce that many aircraft during low-rate initial production, the Army will have to ramp up its production capabilities rapidly and at a time when the aircraft design is still evolving as new subsystems are introduced and test results are evaluated."

The Comanche is also failing to meet performance requirements.

GAO says the Comanche is at risk of not achieving its rate of vertical climb requirement. The Comanche's ability to climb at a rate of 500 feet per minute is a key performance requirement as identified by the DOD itself. The Comanche's weight was a concern in the GAO's August 1999 report. The problem had only gotten worse by the time of the June 2001 report. The Comanche's empty weight had increased by 653 pounds—from 8,822 to 9,475—which threatens the vertical climb requirement.

GAO also says the Comanche is unlikely to complete the development and integration of its mission equipment package, which is needed to support a range of important functions including early warning, target acquisition, piloting, navigation, and communications.

GAO also warns the program is not successfully completing development of the system for detecting equipment problems. A critical component of the Comanche is its onboard fault detection system that can rapidly and accurately provide information about equipment problems. Without this system, the cost of maintaining the aircraft would increase. According to the Army, this system needs to be 75 to 95 percent accurate—75 percent for mechanical and electrical equipment and 95 percent for avionics and electronics equipment. However, the Comanche program office has concluded this requirement will be difficult to achieve within the current cost, weight, and packaging constraints and does not expect to achieve a mature fault detection and fault isolation capability until two years after initial fielding.

Finally, the GAO warns the Comanche is failing to achieve the "beyond-line-of-sight" communications capability needed to perform its mission. Satellite communications are essential to this reconnaissance capability. The Army was planning to rely on satellite communication technology that was being developed and miniaturized as part of the Joint Strike Fighter program. However, the JSF has been delayed. The Comanche program office now believes it must develop its own satellite communication technology. GAO warns the development schedule "remains high-risk for the timely inclusion of this capability on the initially fielded Comanche helicopters."

Finally, the Pentagon's Director of Operational Test and Evaluation raised significant concerns about the Comanche in a 2000 report. Among the criticisms, the report said:

"It is highly unlikely that the Service can deliver the expected system performance within the current budget and schedule. Lacking an operational assessment of an integrated system, it is difficult to predict with any degree of confidence whether the individual subsystems can be successfully integrated, whether the subsystems will function properly in an operational environment, or whether, in concert, they will provide the anticipated benefits in operational performance."

"DOT&E's assessment of the Comanche's weight projections found several questionable areas, including overly optimistic expected weight reductions and questionable estimates of future weight growth."

"Overall, the Comanche has a risky test and evaluation strategy for integrating the MEP (mission equipment package) on the aircraft ... The resulting schedule compression allows little reserve in the timetable, thereby increasing the impact of unforeseen events/delays."

As the aforementioned warnings I've outlined from the GAO and the Pentagon's own Director of Operational Test and Evaluation make clear, Congress should not continue to pour money into the Comanche without regard to results.

Unfortunately, H.R. 4546 continues to sink billions of taxpayer dollars into weapons system of dubious utility and questionable performance.

RECOGNIZING OLDER AMERICANS MONTH IN MAY

HON. RON KIND

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. KIND. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Older Americans Month, May 2002. The theme this year is America: A Community for All Ages, recognizing the national community in which we live, and paying tribute to the multi-generational family that is the strength of America.

Older members of our families and communities provide us with a historical perspective and contribute to our nation's greatness and prosperity. The experiences, stories, and knowledge of our senior citizens are integral to our understanding of our country and our world. To help preserve their stories I am proud to have authored legislation during the 106th Congress that created the Veterans History Project. The Veterans History Project is run by the Library of Congress, which coordinates a collection of video and audio recordings of the personal histories of American war veterans, as well as copies of their letters, diaries, and photographs. The library will also establish a publicly accessible archive for these recordings and documents.

Beyond this project, I have always strongly advocated for legislation that supports our Nation's seniors. Two of the most important issues facing older Americans today are Social Security and prescription drug coverage under medicare.

The solvency of Social Security is a serious concern for all Americans. I have consistently supported legislation that shores up and secures Social Security benefits for our older Americans. For example, I am an original cosponsor of H.R. 4671, the Social Security Widow's Benefit Guarantee Act. This bill would increase widows' and widowers' Social Security Benefits to 75 percent of the combined amount the couple had been receiving prior to the death of the spouse. In a typical case, a widow's benefit would increase by 12 percent, or more than $100/month. The House just passed the Republican version of this bill, which is a good first step toward ensuring these benefits.

Similarly, the rising cost of prescription drugs is one of our most important health care challenges. Currently, senior citizens who pay for their own prescription medication pay more than twice as much for drugs than do the pharmaceutical companies' most favored customers. Exacerbating this problem is the fact that even though seniors use the most prescriptions, over 75 percent of seniors on Medicare lack reliable drug coverage.

Recently, both Republicans and Democrats have talked about introducing and passing legislation that provides prescription drug benefit under Medicare. I am working with my colleagues to craft legislation that would provide a voluntary Medicare prescription drug benefit, providing access for every senior no matter where they live or what their income.

Easy solutions to the high cost of prescription drugs and the solvency of Social Security do not exist. It is my hope that as the 107th Congress progresses, my colleagues will not forget about the needs of our older Americans, and will continue to work for legislation that preserves the benefits our Nation's seniors richly deserve.

HONORING DR. THOMAS MADDEN ON HIS RETIREMENT AS SUPERINTENDENT OF LEMONT TOWNSHIP HIGH SCHOOL DISTRICT 210

HON. JUDY BIGGERT

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to recognize and honor Dr. Thomas Madden on his retirement as Superintendent of Lemont Township High School District 210. Since 1970, Dr. Madden has given his extraordinary talents and leadership as an educator to the students, faculty, and parents served by Lemont District 210. He has served with great distinction, and I am proud to highlight his outstanding record of accomplishments.

Under Dr. Madden's leadership, Lemont District 210 has witnessed dramatic growth and maintained an outstanding, quality education for students. Through his legislative initiatives and work with the National Association of Federally Impacted Schools, Dr. Madden has helped to secure a ten-fold increase in federal impact aid—money that has gone to the direct benefit of his students and schools. He also has led the effort to secure $26 million in construction bonds, allowing Lemont District 210 to build new schools and facilities to accommodate significant increases in enrollment and staff.

Dr. Madden is an active participant in all aspects of the community. He serves on several local and national boards, including the Lemont Chamber of Commerce, the Lemont Area Development Council, and the National Association of Federally Impacted Schools. Dr. Madden has helped to promote a community and region that is supportive of families and local business, making our part of Illinois one of the fastest growing suburban areas in the nation. Most importantly, Dr. Madden has helped to build an education system that ensures that today's students will meet the challenges of tomorrow's global economy.

Dr. Madden embodies the values we as a nation applaud in our educators—commitment, quality, strength of character, and skill—and he serves as an excellent example to the students throughout the 13th Congressional District. I have valued his thoughts and advice on meeting the challenges of public education. I know that Lemont School District 210 is better for his leadership and I join with the students, faculty, and community in thanking him for his service and wishing him a happy and productive retirement.

HONORING GERALDINE (JERRY) HENDERSON

HON. SHELLEY MOORE CAPITO

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mrs. CAPITO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Geraldine (Jerry) Henderson, owner of Henderson Training and Consulting, in the Second Congressional District of West Virginia. She also owns and operates "A Governor's Inn," which is a bed and breakfast, in Buckhannon, West Virginia. Ms. Henderson has achieved the title of Women in Business Advocate of the Year. The West Virginia District of the United States Small Business Administration, a leader in the promotion and growth of our, state, gives this award annually.

Ms. Henderson began Henderson Training and Consulting of West Virginia to give advice to business people. She leads classes throughout the state dealing with small business issues such as staff development, supervisory techniques and placing emphasis on hospitality and responsibility to the community. Ms. Henderson embodies the values that created the American success story: self-reliance, hard work, perseverance and optimism. I commend her for her contributions to the West Virginia economy.

Successful small businesses not only serve as the backbone of the economy, they anchor communities and promote civic pride. I urge my colleagues to join me in celebrating Ms. Henderson's tremendous achievement as the West Virginia Small Business Administration's Women in Business Advocate of the Year.

TRIBUTE TO STEN ERIC WILLIAM CARLSON ON THE OCCASION OF HIS 90TH BIRTHDAY

HON. ANNA G. ESHOO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Ms. ESHOO. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an extraordinary American and a distinguished Californian, Sten Eric William Carlson, who is celebrating his ninetieth birthday.

Born on June 27, 1912, in Fort William, Ontario, Canada, Sten Carlson is the son of Johanna and Pers, who migrated from Sweden to Canada in the late 1800s, settling on a farm in Saskatchewan. Sten left Canada for the United States in 1951 where he met Elizabeth, his wife of forty-five years. They are the proud parents of Eric, 44, and Frank, who died tragically at an early age.

An employee of United Airlines for more than twenty-five years, Sten Carlson retired in 1977. He also worked for MacDonald Aircraft, building the Mosquito aircraft, a premier low flying plane used in some of our nation's most critical missions.

Sten Carlson has always given generously of his time and his multitude of talents to the community, focusing much of his volunteer work on victim support groups. He is a lifetime member of Lodge 1781, IAM, and continues to serve as a member of the Board of Directors of the Retirees. A volunteer at Peninsula Medical Center for more than fifteen years, Sten has devoted many years of service to KQED.

Sten Carlson is a devoted husband and father with a strong moral sense of right and wrong. His lifetime of activities has centered on his family and his community. His is a life based on the most celebrated of American values . . . honesty, dependability, courage, loyalty, and love of family, friends and country.

Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in wishing Sten Carlson a happy 90th birthday. We are a better community, a better country and a better people because of him and all he has done.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. MAJOR R. OWENS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I was unavoidably absent and missed rollcall votes 171, 172, 173. If present I would have voted "yea."

NATIONAL CORRECTIONAL OFFICERS' WEEK

HON. DAVID E. BONIOR

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I rise today, during National Correctional Officers and Employees Week, to honor our correctional officers for the work they do to keep our families safe. We do not thank these men and women enough for their service to our communities.

Day after day, week after week, our correctional officers work one of the most dangerous patrols in the country. They devote themselves to keeping violent felons behind bars, ensuring that our families can feel safe in our homes and on our streets. We know from the number of correctional officers who die in the line of duty each year that this is a dangerous profession that requires courage, hard work, and professionalism.

Our correctional officers are people like Bonnie Johnson, a mother of six, who works over 50 hours a week in a prison in Jackson, Michigan. For almost 20 years, Bonnie has put her heart and soul into her job. Or Rodney Olsson—a correctional officer with the Michigan prison system for roughly 14 years. Rodney drives over 60 miles to get to and from work. These fine men and women work holidays, weekends, and double shifts. They deserve our support.

We need to do our part in the weeks and months ahead to pass legislation that will protect the safety and working conditions of correctional officers. We should act to prevent further privatization of our prisons, which puts both our officers and inmate populations at risk. We need to ensure that our correctional officers receive meaningful, reliable pensions, good benefits, and decent wages. And we should invest adequate resources in prison programs that provide constructive activities for inmates that reduce recidivism and prevent violence. The work of our correctional officers gets more and more difficult with each passing day. In my home state of Michigan, the prison population has grown 38 times faster than our general population. And records show our inmate population is getting more violent. I commend Michigan's correctional officers for staying committed to the job despite these additional challenges.

I urge my colleagues to support the resolution offered by Representatives Strickland, Sweeney, Horn, and Holden that officially recognizes National Correctional Officers and Employees Week. This resolution also requests that our President issue a proclamation urging citizens to honor our correctional officers and the work they do to protect us. We should pass this resolution without delay and give our correctional officers the respect they deserve for their service.

CONGRATULATING COLONEL DENNIS L. VIA

HON. CHET EDWARDS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. EDWARDS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to recognize a great Army officer and soldier, Colonel Dennis L. Via, and to thank him for his contributions to the United States Army and to our country. On Thursday, June 13, Colonel Via will relinquish command of the 3rd Signal Brigade at Fort Hood, Texas for assignment to the Department of the Army's Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Programs, here in Washington, DC.

Colonel Via began his career in 1980, graduating from Virginia State University as a Distinguished Military Graduate and earning a commission as a 2nd Lieutenant in the U.S. Army Signal Corps. He commanded troops as a Signal Platoon Leader, Company Commander, and Battalion Commander before taking command of the 3rd Signal Brigade. Dennis has also served in staff positions from battalion level to the Department of the Army at numerous posts in the United States and Europe, and along the way found time to earn a Master's Degree at Boston University.

Dennis Via is a consummate professional whose performance personifies those traits of courage, competency and commitment that our nation expects and demands from its military leaders. It is with both regret and pride that we wish him Godspeed and good luck as he leaves Fort Hood for his new assignment.

It is important to note that every accolade to Dennis must also be considered a tribute to his family, his wife Linda and their two sons, Brian and Bradley. As a wife and mother, Linda has been a true partner in all of is accomplishments.

Dennis' career has reflected his deep commitment to our nation, and has been characterized by dedicated service, a profound respect for our soldiers and their families, and an absolute commitment to excellence. I ask Members to join me in offering our heartfelt appreciation for a job well done and best wishes for continued success to an outstanding soldier and a good friend—Colonel Dennis L. Via.

TRIBUTE TO ROBERT S. KIEVE

HON. ZOE LOFGREN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Ms. LOFGREN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to recognize the achievements of San Jose broadcaster Robert S. Kieve. I would like to recognize his efforts as a radio pioneer deeply dedicated to the idea of the media providing a community service. He will be honored with the Spirit of San Jose Award on Monday, May 20, 2002.

Since 1967, Kieve had been one of the "mom and pop" owners holding out against large conglomerates, demonstrating the value of local ownership through his editorials, community involvement and loyalty to employees—who own 25 percent of his broadcasting company, Empire Broadcasting. In recently selling one of his radio stations, Kieve shared those profits with his employees in an usual and caring move for the business . . . but not for him.

Kieve, a former Eisenhower speechwriter, has been a pioneer in hiring women in an industry that women are dramatically underrepresented.

He has, for thirty years, been an outspoken, committed and vital force in San Jose, always willing to offer his opinions and provide a forum for others to share theirs.

Always willing to try something new, Kieve recently started three Internet radio stations featuring Beethoven, traditional country and big band.

Kieve will continue to operate two stations, KRTY–FM and KLIV–AM after his recent sale of KARA–FM, a San Jose institution, and will use a portion of the profits to help create a charitable foundation.

I am proud and grateful to thank Robert S. Kieve for reminding us all that one person can truly make a difference in the lives of many.

MONSIGNOR GEORGE C. HIGGINS: AMERICA'S LABOR PRIEST

HON. JOHN J. LaFALCE

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, America lost its preeminent "labor priest" on May 1st when Monsignor George C. Higgins died at the age of 86 after a half-century career in the Nation's Capital devoted to the cause of social justice and the rights of labor. As head of the Catholic Bishop's Social Action Department for 35 years, Msgr. Higgins was an influential church figure and respected authority on the labor movement who dedicated his life to promoting the rights of workers around the world.

No one did more to advance the church's social teachings on a just economy and the rights of working people. Msgr. Higgins brought the church and labor closer together by showing working men and women that the church's social teaching was on their side—that work must be valued and workers honored, and that a just society demands that workers have the right to organize and bargain collectively.

Generations of American workers—who never knew his name—owe Monsignor Higgins a debt of gratitude for devoting his life to fighting injustice and defending their rights.

I would like to insert in the RECORD for the benefit of my colleagues the following statements by the US Conference of Catholic Bishops and by AFL–CIO President John Sweeney on Msgr. Higgins death, and an essay by E.J. Dionne entitled "The Great Monsignor."

MSGR. GEORGE HIGGINS, DEAN OF CHURCH SOCIAL ACTION MOVEMENT, DIES

WASHINGTON (May 1, 2002).—Msgr. George G. Higgins, the "labor priest" who was generally regarded as the dean of the U.S. Church's social action ministry for the last half century, died May 1 at the age of 86.

After a long illness, Msgr. Higgins died at the home of his sister, Bridget Doonan, in LaGrange, Illinois, his native city. He had returned to LaGrange in January to speak at St. Francis Xavier Church, the parish in which he was raised. After delivering the talk on January 19, he fell ill with a severe infection and was hospitalized for a period of three months.

"Msgr. George Higgins was without parallel the authority on the Church's social teaching and on labor-management issues," said Bishop Wilton D. Gregory, President of the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB). "He was a forceful and articulate figure in the Church and a major influence on the lives of several generations of Catholics dedicated to the cause of social justice. He was, above all, a good and dedicated priest. I pray for the repose of his soul and for the consolation of his family and the many persons in all walks of life to whom he will always be a vibrant and lasting inspiration."

A priest of the Archdiocese of Chicago, who spent 60 years of his life working in the nation's capital, Msgr. Higgins was probably the best known and most influential priest in the United States. He was widely admired within the Church and in the secular realm for his knowledge of the labor movement, ecumenism, Catholic-Jewish relations and many other fields, and for his talents as a skillful negotiator.

"The best informed priest in the United States," as U.S. Church historian John Tracy Ellis once described him, Msgr. Higgins was an advisor to labor leaders and presidential commissions, a friend to bishops and to everyday Catholic people. Above all, he was a champion of ordinary men and women and of the workers' right to organize.

He headed the Social Action Department of the Catholic Bishops' Conference for 35 years, and his syndicated column, "The Yardstick," appeared in Catholic papers from 1945 until he penned his last piece in September, 2001, by which time macular degeneration had seriously impeded his vision. By then he had written nearly 3,000 columns. Most were on some aspect of the labor movement but his range of topics was vast. He had a special interest in Catholic-Jewish relations.

Msgr. Higgins was ordained a priest of the Archdiocese of Chicago in 1940. He came to Washington to study at the Catholic University of America, where he earned a doctorate in economics and political science, and took on a supposedly temporary position with the Social Action Department of the National Catholic Welfare Conference, as the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB) was then known. The following year he became assistant director of the department and, in 1956, its director.

While guiding that office, he used his column to teach on a wide variety of topics important to the Church, while using his personality and old-fashioned political skills to mediate labor disputes from coast to coast. He counseled Cesar Chavez and the United Farm Workers, and was a mediator between workers and growers in California and the Midwest. For 35 years he was chairman of the United Auto Workers' Public Review Board, an agency that handles grievances between rank and file workers and the union.

Msgr. Higgins was a peritus (expert) at all four sessions of the Second Vatican Council (1962–1965) and was on the preparatory commission which drafted the council's laity document, the first U.S. priest to receive such an assignment. He became one of the best known interpreters of the Council to the English-speaking world as a daily member of the U.S. Bishops' press panel. After retiring from the Bishops' Conference in 1980, Msgr. Higgins was an adjunct lecturer in the Theology Department of the Catholic University of America, 1980–1994, and later professor emeritus.

Msgr. Higgins received the Presidential Medal of Freedom in White House ceremonies in 2000. The previous year he was awarded the Laetare Medal, the highest honor given by the University of Notre Dame.

In June, 2001, the International Catholic-Jewish Liaison Committee (sponsored by the Holy See and the International Jewish Committee for Interregiligous Consultations) honored Msgr. Higgins as one of the great pioneers of the dialogue worldwide.

A dinner planned as a tribute to Msgr. Higgins last September 11 was postponed, but a reception in his honor was held two months later at the time of the U.S. Bishops' fall meeting. It was co-hosted by Bishop Joseph A. Fiorenza, then President of the Bishops' Conference, and Mr. John Sweeney, President of the AFL–CIO.

The Mass of Christina Burial will be celebrated on Tuesday, May 7, at Holy Name Cathedral in Chicago. A visitation and Liturgy of the Eucharist will be celebrated at St. Francis Xavier, La Grante, May 6.

STATEMENT BY AFL–CIO PRESIDENT JOHN J. SWEENEY UPON THE PASSING OF MSGR. GEORGE HIGGINS

How like Msgr. George Higgins for his last day on earth to have been on the Feast of St. Joseph the Worker—and International Worker's Day!

Throughout his entire life, this "labor priest," as we fondly and admiringly referred to him, fought for and lifted the lives of working men and women—hundreds of thousands of them. Wherever working people were joining together to build a better life, George Higgins was there. He prayed with striking miners in Wyoming, celebrated an organizing victory with meat cutters in Texas, stood with hospital workers and mediated between farm workers and grape growers in California, and testified on Catholic social teaching in a case before the Education Labor Relations Board in Illinois.

More than any other American in the 20th century, Msgr. Higgins argued that Christian beliefs must prominently include the notion that work must be valued and workers honored. His preaching on Catholic social teaching educated generations of leaders within his church and helped them apply the justice Gospel in their own areas.

And for more than 60 years, Msgr. Higgins championed the right of working men and women to join freely in unions to improve their lives, giving unremitting energy and effort and vision and wisdom to American's unions, in good as well as challenging years.

One venue for his inspiration was AFL–CIO conventions, at which he delivered invocations for more than 20 years. In 1999, in the opening invocation at the community convocation preceding our Los Angeles convention, he spoke of his belief in organizing as a path of justice:

"We will not have a decent society in the United States until a much larger percentage of the workers are organized into unions," he said.

Msgr. Higgins was a certain force in bringing labor and the church closer together, and his efforts over many years laid the ground work for the strong and growing partnership between the union movement and the National Interfaith Committee for Worker Justice.

And while his preaching of the justice Gospel won him well-deserved praise, his pastoral attention to working families was also remarkable: many who suffered disappointment or disillusion were uplifted by his resolute faith in the reign of God and hopefulness in God's ultimate triumph over injustice. When I visited with him last Saturday I was struck by the gifts Msgr. Higgins had given to so many of us who were privileged to know him.

All workers—whether they are farm workers, health care workers, poultry workers, steel workers, immigrants, people of color, whites, Catholic, Jewish, Muslim or Protestant—owe a debt of gratitude to Msgr. Higgins.

So while we are saddened by his passing, we are—even more so—ever mindful of and deeply grateful for the conscience, courage, intellect and love that Msgr. George Higgins committed to America's workers and America's unions.

THE GREAT MONSIGNOR

(By E.J. Dionne Jr.)

There is no such thing as a timely death. But just when you thought all the stories on American priests were destined to be about evil committed and covered up, one of the truly great priests was called to his eternal reward.

Monsignor George G. Higgins was the sort of Catholic clergyman regularly cast as a hero in movies of the 1940s and '50s. He was an uncompromising pro-labor priest who walked picket lines, fought anti-Semitism, supported civil rights and wrote and wrote and wrote in the hope that some of his arguments about social justice might penetrate somewhere.

He got attached to causes before they became fashionable, and stuck with them after the fashionable people moved on. Cesar Chavez once said that no one had done more for American farm workers than Monsignor Higgins. In the 1980s, he traveled regularly to Poland in support of Solidarity's struggle against communism and became an important link between American union leaders and their Polish brethren.

As it happens, even the day of Monsignor Higgins's death, at the age of 86, was appropriate. He passed from this world on May 1, the day that many countries set aside to honor labor and that the Catholic Church designates as the Feast of St. Joseph the Worker.

If Higgins had been there when that famous carpenter was looking for a place to spend the night with his pregnant wife, the monsignor would certainly have taken the family in. He would also have handed Joseph a union card, told him he deserved better pay and benefits, and insisted that no working person should ever have to beg for shelter.

Yes, Higgins sounds so old-fashioned—and in ever good sense he was—that you might wonder about his relevance to our moment. Let us count the ways.

One of the most astonishing and disturbing aspects of the Catholic Church's current scandal is the profound disjunction—that's a charitable word—between what the church preaches about sexuality and compassion toward the young and how its leaders reacted to the flagrant violation of these norms by priests.

Higgins, who spent decades as the Catholic Church's point man on labor and social-justice issues, hated the idea of preachers' exhorting people to do one thing and then doing the opposite. And so he made himself into a true pain for any administrator of any Catholic institution who resisted the demands of workers for fair pay and union representation.

"These men and women mop the floors of Catholic schools, work in Catholic hospital kitchens and perform other sometimes menial tasks in various institutions," he once wrote. "They have not volunteered to serve the church for less than proportionate compensation."

"The church has a long history of speaking out on justice and peace issues," he said. "Yet only in more recent times has the church made it clear that these teachings apply as well to the workings of its own institutions."

Where some religious leaders complain that they get caught up in scandal because they are unfairly held to higher standards, Higgins believed that higher standards were exactly the calling of those who claim the authority to tell others what to do.

It bothered Higgins to the end of his life that the cause of trade unionism had become so unfashionable, especially among well-educated and well-paid elites. For 56 years, he wrote a column for the Catholic press, and he returned to union issues so often that he once felt obligated to headline one of his offerings: "Why There's So Much Ado About Labor in My Column."

His answer was simple: "I am convinced that we are not likely to have a fully free or democratic society over the long haul without a strong and effective labor movement."

To those who saw collective bargaining as outdated in a new economy involving choice, mobility and entrepreneurship, Higgins would thunder back about the rights of those for whom such a glittering world was still, at best, a distant possibility: hospital workers, farm workers, fast-food workers and others who need higher wages to help their children reach their dreams. He could not abide well-paid intellectuals who regularly derided unions as dinosaurs, and he told them so, over and over.

It is one of the highest callings of spiritual leaders to force those who live happy and comfortable lives to consider their obligations to those heavily burdened by injustice and deprivation. It is a great loss when such prophetic voices are stilled by scandal and the cynicism it breeds. Fortunately, that never happened to Higgins. He never had to shut up about injustice and, God bless him, he never did.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO DAVE SARTON

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002—

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is my honor today to recognize Dave Sarton for his contributions to the State of Colorado. As a member of the Board of Directors of the Southeastern Colorado Water Conservancy District for sixteen years, he is moving his talents and experience to other endeavors. Dave has been an integral part of securing and distributing Colorado's most precious resource, water. As he reflects on his service to a grateful board, community, and state, I would like to commend him for his efforts to improve the lives of his fellow Coloradans.

Dave has proven himself a valuable community, business, and governmental leader over the years and has served on countless committees in support of his community and state. He has served on the Colorado Springs City Council, on the Energy and Environment Committee of the National Association of Regional Councils, as director of the Colorado Springs Department of Public Utilities, as director and chairman of the Pikes Peak Area Council of Government, as president of Sunset Sertoma Club, as chairman of the El Paso Task Force on Alcoholism, as chair of the ARK Board of Directors, and as vice-chair of the Colorado Springs Chamber of Commerce. In addition to his community duties, he is a proud business owner and operates a quality service for Colorado Springs as the president of Sperry & Mock/The Floor Store, Inc.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to bring the accomplishments and achievements of David Sarton before this body today. His leadership, hard work, and dedication to improving the lives of his fellow Coloradans is an example for all aspiring community leaders and it is for this reason that I wish to bring his accomplishments before this body of Congress, and nation. Thank you for all your hard work Dave, I wish you all the best, and good luck in your future endeavors.

TRIBUTE TO MARY ANN KIRK

HON. CONSTANCE A. MORELLA

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, as Mary Ann Kirk prepares to leave Maryland to join her family in Colorado, I salute her lasting contribution of public service to our State during the past fifty years.

Standing side by side with her children throughout their educational process, she also provided top leadership in the Montgomery County Heart Association; chaired numerous political and charitable fund raisers; and tutored elementary school children and political refugees in the ways of freedom in American democracy.

In 1978, she spearheaded landmark legislation in the Maryland General Assembly which created the Maryland Values Education Commission, and, as Vice Chairwoman, chaired its subcommittee work for four years. This Commission devised a list of 18 Character and Citizenship values affirmed by the Maryland Attorney General as Constitutionally sound for teaching in our schools, and served as a foundation, an impetus, for character/citizenship education efforts across our Nation. Today, there is an Office of Character Education within the Maryland State Department of Education and flourishing, growing, programs throughout the State—a direct result of Mary Ann Kirk's visionary work.

In 1978, when the Maryland General Assembly passed this landmark legislation, Senator Jennings Randolph (DWP) noted its passage in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. He ended his remarks with these words: "The State of Maryland will be the first to create a Values Education Commission. The flame of faith is now aglow in 'The Free State.' May other States see the light and feel its warmth."

In 1986, she organized and coordinated Maryland's observance of the Bicentennial of the U.S. Constitution with the establishment of the FEDERALIST Foundation. This private/public partnership with Maryland State Archives recreated the beautiful, seaworthy Federalist, a 15-foot ship built in 1788 to honor Maryland's role as the seventh state to ratify the Constitution, and later sailed to Mount Vernon as a gift to George Washington. Two hundred years later, a horse drawn Federalist represented Maryland in Philadelphia's national Bicentennial parade; and, today, when not traveling to communities across the State to teach about the Constitution, resides under the dome of our State capitol in Annapolis—ever ready to convey our rich history to this and future generations.

In 1997, Mary Ann Kirk was honored by Governor Parris Glendening and the Maryland General Assembly as Maryland's Mother of the Year. She leaves Maryland as immediate past president of the Maryland Association of American Mothers, Inc., the official sponsor of Mothers Day.

We will miss her and wish her well. Maryland's loss is Colorado's gain.

INTRODUCING A BILL TO PROVIDE IMPACT AID FUNDING FOR MICRONESIAN CHILDREN

HON. PATSY T. MINK

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mrs. MINK of Hawaii. Mr. Speaker, today I introduce a bill to provide Impact Aid funding for Micronesian children living in the United States. You might ask why should we? What is their special status that justifies this payment?

The Compact of Free Association negotiated by the DoD and the State Department with the Republic of the Marshall Islands and the Federated States of Micronesia in 1985, and with the Republic of Palau in 1986, enhanced the security of our nation. The Compact of Free Association gives the United States authority over security and defense matters in this region. It prevents other countries from entering into military alliances with the Republic of the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, and the Republic of Palau. Such military alliances could threaten the security of our nation.

In the period between 1918 and 1941, foreign powers did occupy these islands. And as history will recall, many WWII battles were fought in the islands fortified and occupied by Japan. After WWII the United States took over jurisdiction, and we inflicted grave harm to many of the islands' residents when the U.S. military tested 66 atomic and hydrogen bombs between 1946 and 1958. The long lasting effects of these tests are still felt by people living at Bikini, Enewetok, and other atolls, and many have moved to the United States to live and to find health care.

In exchange for the sacrifices they have made in the Compact of Free Association, the United States allows citizens of the Republic of the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, and the Republic of Palau to freely enter the United States without visas as nonimmigrant residents within the parameters laid out in the Compact of Free Association. Their status is as "habitual" residents which places them in limbo and for example, they can not qualify for food stamps.

According to the 2000 Census, 115,247 Micronesians are living in the United States. Many of these families live in low income or public housing, which does not provide local schools with the funds they need to educate Micronesian children. Our public schools accept the financial burden for educating Micronesian children, even though the federal government created this obligation and should pay for it.

Our nation is responsible for the education of these children in exchange for the military benefits our nation currently receives from Micronesia. Our government must take a more active role and help pay for these children's education. It's unfair to make these innocent children unwelcome pawns of our national defense policy.

My bill will treat Micronesian children living in the United States as military dependents and consequently allow schools to count them for the purpose of obtaining Impact Aid funding. It will give local schools the extra funds needed to ensure other children in their district do not pay for the cost of our defense strategy.

I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this bill and fulfill the obligation created by the Compact of Free Association.

THE 121ST ANNIVERSARY OF THE AMERICAN RED CROSS

HON. STENY H. HOYER

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, Clara Barton, a true visionary in American history, once stated: "I have an almost complete disregard of precedent, and a faith in the possibility of something better. It irritates me to be told how things have always been done. I defy the tyranny of precedent. I go for anything new that might improve the past." Her motivation as well as her devotion to humanity led Clara Barton to found the American Red Cross in 1881.

Today we celebrate the 121st anniversary of the American Red Cross, which is one of the most renowned charitable organizations in our nation. It is made up of over a million Red Cross volunteers who provide much needed relief services to families, communities and countries around the world in times of crisis.

When unexpected disasters hit, the Red Cross is prepared. For example, the American Red Cross coordinates the collection of blood and ensures that the safest blood is available to save the lives of our armed service members and lives in over 5,000 hospitals across the country.

Internationally, the Red Cross has been active in helping millions of people fight malnutrition and communities gain access to such basic and vital needs as safe drinking water.

Each year, the American Red Cross quickly responds to more than 67,000 disasters, including transportation accidents, house fires, hurricanes, floods, earthquakes, and tornadoes.

One instance of the Red Cross's exemplary and timely response to a disaster was after a lethal tornado tore through my District in Southern Maryland on April 28th. Without delay, the Red Cross was on the scene to provide help after one of the fiercest tornado disasters ever on the East Coast.

Approximately 230 Red Cross volunteers poured in from across the nation to join 100 local volunteers. They worked tirelessly to help community members in their time of need by quickly erecting shelters and administering food, clothing, emergency medication and grief counseling.

As I walked through the streets of La Plata, stepping over the wires, rubble and debris of the once vibrant community, it was evident that there was a lot of work ahead for residents to overcome this tragedy. Fortunately, as a result of help from service organizations like the Red Cross, government officials and agencies, and citizens, it is clear that La Plata will rebuild and come back stronger than ever.

The Charles County Red Cross Chapter is a shining example of the dedication of the Red Cross, and why La Plata will persevere and once again thrive. The same evening that the tornado completely wiped out the Chapter building and all of their resources in La Plata, the Red Cross leaders and volunteers set up a temporary Disaster Operation Center in a vacant store building in Waldorf.

Since 1917, the county's Chapter has been instrumental in providing disaster preparation and care services. The Chapter plans to rebuild, just like the La Plata community will rebuild, and continue to dedicate time and energy to the citizens of La Plata.

The American Red Cross, since it was founded, has been instrumental in relieving the suffering and the saving lives of our local, national and international communities.

And thus it's with great gratitude and honor that I commend the American Red Cross today on its 121st anniversary. On behalf of the citizens of the 5th Congressional District of Maryland, who were affected by this most recent natural disaster, as well as the millions of Americans whose lives have been bettered by this wonderful organization, I wish it only the best in the years to come.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO ST. JOHN NEUMANN CATHOLIC SCHOOL

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is with great honor I take this opportunity to recognize St. John Neumann as an institute of education, dedicated to providing a firm foundation for its community's youth. Established in 1977 in Pueblo Colorado, St. John became the new beacon of light for all who sought to provide their children with the option of a private education. It is with highest praise that I recognize St. John's 25th year of operation.

Each day, 230 students convene to mature and study in an atmosphere which embraces every child's eagerness to learn. Instructors provide a one-on-one relationship with students, tailoring the instructor's dexterity to the child's ability. Additionally, St. John promotes parental involvement in their child's education, and seeks to provide an atmosphere comparable to that of a family gathering.

Marking St. John Neumann's 25th anniversary of operation, this year's graduating class will be prepared for the journey ahead, confidently supported by a firm education at an extraordinary school. Many senior administrators have watched St. John grow and develop into a distinguished, highly acclaimed establishment within its community.

Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I applaud an institution which provides its community with the groundwork to build a better future. St. John Neumann strengthens the integrity and character of each of its students. I commend the hard work and diligence which the faculty, community, and students have contributed to place St. John Neumann Catholic School amongst the leaders in education today.

VETERANS APPRECIATION MONTH

HON. EDWARD R. ROYCE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. ROYCE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my sincere gratitude and appreciation to the hundreds of thousands of men and women who have bravely served their country in the Armed Forces, protecting freedom for all Americans.

Veterans earn a great number of positive qualities through their service, including experience, maturity, leadership and loyalty, which make them valuable and competitive candidates for employment.

The residents of the State of California and I are committed to ensuring that our nation's Veterans are treated with the respect that they deserve, and to promoting employer interest in hiring those individuals who have selflessly given their time in service of their country.

In my home state, May 2002 is "Veterans Appreciation Month," and I would like to take this opportunity to bring the benefits of hiring veterans to the attention of all American employers.

I thank our country's veterans for their sacrifices, applaud employers who hire these courageous men and women, and I yield back the balance of my time.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. XAVIER BECERRA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. BECERRA. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, May 20, 2002 I was unable to cast my floor vote on rollcall Nos. 171, 172, and 173. The votes I missed include rollcall vote 171 on Suspending the Rules and Agreeing to H. Con. Res. 314; rollcall vote 172 on Suspending the Rules and Agreeing to H. Con. Res. 165; and rollcall vote 173 on Suspending the Rules and Agreeing to H. Con. Res. 309.

Had I been present for the votes, I would have voted "aye" on rollcall votes 171, 172, and 173.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. ANTHONY D. WEINER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. WEINER. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained in my District on Tuesday, May 20, 2002, and I would like the record to indicate how I would have voted had I been present.

For rollcall vote No. 171, the resolution recognizing the members of AMVETS for their service to the Nation and supporting the goal of AMVETS National Charter Day, I would have voted "aye."

For rollcall vote No. 172, the resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that continual research and education into the cause and cure for fibroid cancer be addressed, I would have voted "aye."

For rollcall vote No. 173, the resolution Recognizing the Importance of Good Cervical Health and of Detecting Cervical Cancer During its Earliest Stages, I would have voted "aye."

PAYING TRIBUTE TO FRUITA MONUMENT HIGH SCHOOL

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is with great honor I take this opportunity to pay tribute to Fruita Monument High School in Fruita, Colorado for their incredible acts of patriotism and loyalty. After the tragic events of September 11, 2001, Monument High honored the bravery of our American citizens by creating a beautiful, patriotic mosaic. Today I applaud the spirit and dedication of the students and faculty of Monument High, and I recognize the efforts and achievements of such artists.

Standing eight feet tall, by eight feet wide, and weighing 500 pounds, "United We Stand" encompasses the ideals of America's freedoms and liberties. The finished mosaic illustrates the talent and hard work supplied by each student and it serves as a marvelous addition to any art display. Near Ground Zero in New York City will be its final destination, and its new home will be in Desoto Elementary School. Earning its creators numerous awards, "United We Stand" has touched all who have the privilege of viewing its meaningful message.

Mr. Speaker, I honor Fruita Monument High School with sincerity because they have taken the time to honor the true heroes of our nation. Today, I recognize "United We Stand" as an inspiring work of art before this body of Congress and this nation. Additionally, I recognize its nine incredible artists as esteemed patriots to our nation. It is my hope that all may some day admire this mosaic and remember it as a memorial, created to honor those who gave their life for our country.

DRAGON BOAT RACING

HON. CONSTANCE A. MORELLA

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mrs. MORELLA. Mr. Speaker, this Memorial Day weekend Washington will see the traditional Taiwanese sport of dragon boat racing right here on the Potomac River, featuring eight magnificent Taiwan-built dragon boats. Each boat is fully equipped with dragonhead and tail, paddles, steering oar and drum, and holds a crew of 23. Some 40 teams, including those from the D.C. Police Department, Harbor Patrol Officers, and congressional staff members will compete in the race on Saturday, May 25, and on Sunday, May 26, 2002. Prior to the start of the race, there will be a traditional opening ceremony at 11 a.m., on Saturday, May 25, at Georgetown's Thompson Boat Center. The opening ceremony will be highlighted by the dotting of the dragon's eye. Mayor Anthony Williams, Chairwoman Linda Cropp of the D.C. City Council, Representative C.J. Chen of the Taipei Economic and Cultural Representative Office and other community leaders will dot the dragon's eye, a ceremony to ensure good luck and fortune.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see the Dragon Boat Festival Committee has put together such a wonderful dragon boat-racing program this Memorial Day weekend. Dragon boat races are held around the world, particularly in Taiwan, Singapore, Hong Kong, and many other Asian countries. The race demonstrates wonderful team spirit, pageantry, and fun for people young and old. Coincidentally, this event celebrates Taiwanese American Heritage Week in the month of May. Furthermore, this event also shows the friendship of Taiwanese Americans for the people not only of Washington, DC, but of the entire Metropolitan area. Their sincere desire to introduce Taiwanese culture to American society must be acknowledged and appreciated. It is my hope that this dragon boat race will attract many more tourists to the Washington, DC, area.

My congratulations to the Dragon Boat Festival Committee. This is a unique opportunity for all of us to celebrate the Dragon Boat Festival and to learn about the many distinguishing aspects of Taiwanese culture and heritage.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO LYLE NICHOLS

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to Lyle Nichols of Clifton, Colorado. Lyle is an extraordinary individual who devotes countless hours to admiring and preserving life's beauties. Lyle is an exceptionally talented artist, and today I applaud the talents he adds to our community.

Lyle is an individual who collects assorted bird nests, and scrap debris he discovers. He is also an artist of many sculptures that are admirable in their magnificence. His collection is substantial in size and it grows continuously with every sculpture. These self-created masterpieces sit, kneel, and stand in and around his home, in particular a 14-ton statuette arching over his front lawn. Lyle is truly a talented individual, whose amazing talents have connected his passion for art to every individual who comes to admire his work.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my appreciation towards Lyle for allowing us the pleasure to admire his beautiful creations. It is with great honor I proudly recognize Lyle Nichols as an artist before this body of Congress and this nation. I commend Lyle's artistic abilities, and praise his contributions, which assist in enhancing his community's future.

PAYING TRIBUTE TO PETER COORS

HON. SCOTT McINNIS

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, May 21, 2002

Mr. McINNIS. Mr. Speaker, it is an honor to recognize the contributions and achievements of Peter H. Coors. As chairman of Coors Brewing Company and the President/CEO of Adolph Coors, he is a shining example of personal success and civic responsibility.

A native resident of Golden, Colorado, Peter, known as Pete, has continued to lead his family's brewery in a manner befitting its fine reputation. As the head of this company, Pete provides the leadership and vision needed to bring this family tradition into the twenty-first century. His positions on the boards of directors of companies like U.S. Bancorp, Inc., H.J. Heinz Company, and the Energy Corporation of America are a reflection of the respect that Pete has earned from his colleagues. Pete is also a member of the International Chapter of the Young Presidents Organization. Pete is a true Coloradan is his business and in his nature: he can often be found outdoors appreciating the beauty and splendor of Colorado.

In addition to Pete's contributions to Colorado's economy, he has also given his time and energy to humanitarian causes as well. He is on the executive board of the Denver Area Council of the Boy Scouts of America, a member of the National Western Stock Show Association executive committee, and a trustee for the Seeds of Hope Foundation. Pete, who has a MBA degree, knows the value of higher education and remains active as a trustee of the University of Northern Colorado and a member of Denver University Daniels School of Business' Advisory Board. Most importantly Pete is the husband of his wife Marilyn and is a father to his six children.

Mr. Speaker, it is an honor and privilege to bring to light the excellence of Pete Coors to this body of Congress and this nation. In every aspect of his life Pete has excelled to the highest level of achievement. He has no doubt touched many lives through his civic work and leadership in our country and will continue to do so in the future. On behalf of this nation, thank you Pete for all that you have done and good luck in your future endeavors.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Meetings scheduled for Thursday, May 23, 2002 may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.
